

0 2007 0376430 4
California State Library
RY.
C172045
Accession No. 169365
Call No. 9c 051 C153
10

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 1 | Los Angeles, California, December 31, 1910 | 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

CALIFORNIA STATE

LAST CALL FOR DINNER

The American people are about to give the Democratic party one more try-out, probably the last chance, if it results in failure, that will ever be afforded that organization to redeem itself.

Before the Civil war, political conditions were graphically described by the orator who said that "the Democratic party owned the country, and the Whigs merely had a tinker's lien on it for repairs." In the 60 years between the inauguration of Jefferson and that of Lincoln, the Whigs had only one full term of the presidency—that of J. Q. Adams—and two small fragments of terms—Harrison's and Taylor's—when, by a grim twist of fate, both vice-presidents deserted and went over to the Democrats. In the 50 years since the war, these conditions have been almost exactly reversed; the Democrats have had only two presidential terms and only two years of complete possession of the government. Thus, the party has no administrative record to which it can "point with pride." Its leaders are largely without constructive experience, and even the fundamental policies of the organization have lost the virile force that comes with action, and have disintegrated into vagueness and theory by the long habit of opposition.

All these disabilities showed very plainly when Grover Cleveland, an administrator of exceptional faculties and a far-sighted party leader, struggled for eight years with the problems of government and of party reorganization. For his best help he went back to ante-bellum days, for men like Bayard, Garland and Lamar. And in the end the party went to pieces under his feet, and left him stranded and marooned, all because there was necessity for action on the tariff and on silver coinage, issues which the Democracy had up to that time handled with great success—in debate.

The situation today is more difficult even than it was in the time of Cleveland. In the first place there is no one, big, acknowledged leader, such as Cleveland was, although there may be any number of them in embryo. The demoralization of inaction has continued fourteen years longer, and the party has been banged about between Bryan in the West and Parker in the East, until it no longer knows where it stands on any of the big issues. It is not the only party in that fix, however.

Now comes its great chance and every patriotic citizen, without regard to party, will hope it may rise to the opportunity. We are not particularly interested in any party as such. A party is a means to an end. The end is honest and efficient government, and it makes very little difference where it comes from—if it comes.

The process of rising to the opportunity consists in doing whatever is best for the country. That seems perfectly simple, and yet in the minds of most party men it gets a curious twist, and becomes an effort to do what is best for the party. It will not do, so they think, to follow a course of admitted advantage to the country if it "plays into the hands of the other fellow."

There is no evidence yet that any of the Democratic chiefs, with the possible exception of Wilson, have really sensed the situation. By their utterances they all seem to regard the recent victory as Democratic in the old partisan sense. They think that the voter has at last returned to his ancient love, and that the government is to be turned over to them to play with as they see fit. And they are tickled to death to find themselves at last in favor with Wall street and the "conservative elements" and the big ones with money. This is all very delightful, but——.

The next thing will be the great voice of the American people shouting to them: "Wake up! This is your station. Get off here."

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager
C. D. WILLARD Editorial Contributor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

* * *

BREAKING THE FENCE

The decision of the State Railway Commission on the San Joaquin Valley freight rates does not actually fix a schedule but indicates the lines within which a tariff must be framed. The terms used, however, are in the highest degree favorable to Los Angeles, and if a tariff can be made in accordance, it will be satisfactory to our shippers and will constitute a victory in the long fight.

This is an ancient cause of war between our people and the Southern Pacific road, a campaign in which there have been many battles and not a few victories prior to this one. When the Southern Pacific road came through from the north in 1877, Los Angeles had considerable wholesale business transacted by wagon route with Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Southern California, and the San Joaquin valley. Naturally the railroad could put the teams out of business when it entered their territory, and it became, therefore, entirely optional with the S. P. whether or not our people should be allowed to ship into the San Joaquin. For some reason, either because they wished to encourage the growth of this community, or because they were unwilling to give San Francisco too much power, they made the rates for our people to have a fighting chance in the valley, and as much trade developed as could be expected with a city no larger than Los Angeles was in the 80's and early '90's—the time of which we write.

In 1895 the people of San Francisco decided to strike a few blows for commercial freedom, and part of their programme, the chief feature of which was a clipper line around the Horn, was the building of a railway down into the San Joaquin. Several million dollars were subscribed in San Francisco, and plenty of additional funds were forthcoming from some unknown source, and the road started and worked south at a rapid rate. As it overtook various towns in its progress, it put into effect a tariff less than that of the Southern Pacific. By the time it got to Bakersfield, San Francisco had secured, through this lowering of rates, a decided advantage all along the line over Los Angeles. An attempt was made to equalize on the north-bound tariff by some cutting, but it did not go beyond Bakersfield, and even there the northern city was given some advantage over us.

In the succeeding five years, frequent demands were made by the Los Angeles merchants for a readjustment that would "break the fence," but without result. At last, in 1900, the Jobbers' Association was formed for the purpose of extending this city's commercial territory. Five men constituted its executive committee and did nearly all the work, and their names should have a place of honor in the city's history. They were M. H. Newmark, who was and still is president of the association, L. C. Scheller, J. O. Koepfli, C. C. Reynolds and F. W. Braun. They received legal guiding and advice from H. W. O'Melveny, Esq. These gentlemen made many trips to San Francisco and carried on a great deal of lively negotiation with the Southern Pacific authorities, beginning with Mr. Stubbs, who repeatedly declared that the north-bound tariff was never to be reduced one cent, and ending with Mr. Hayes, who was president of the road just long enough for the "main guys" to find out that he was a pestiferous reformer.

Curious things happened. A new tariff giving Los Angeles about one-third of what we were asking was put into circulation and ruled for one day, and then was whisked away. Changes were promised by Mr. Hayes and contemptuously turned down by Mr. Stubbs, with the declaration that the president had no power to make freight rates. Then there were mysterious negotiations carried on by a special representative of the freight department, which said representative was afterwards repudiated by his principals because he conceded too much in the compromise. At last, after two years of rebuffs and trickery, the people of Los Angeles got sore and angry and ugly, and the Southern Pacific began to think it had better give in. The result was a compromise which gave us Bakersfield and the lower end of the valley, and made the central part fighting ground. It was about three-fourths of all we had asked.

Again in 1907 the fight was renewed and the road seemed to yield gracefully, for without much negotiation it granted a new tariff which closed up half the remaining gap between justice and the existing rate. This was accepted as well enough for the time being; but, strange to say, the new tariff, like that of 1900, remained in force only one day, and then was whisked away on the "demand" of the San Francisco people.

In 1908 the Jobbers organized a traffic bureau with F. P. Gregson in charge, and suit was brought before the State Railway Commission, a body which had been galvanized into something like real existence by the rising tide of progressive public sentiment.

Mr. Gregson and the attorneys, Kuster and Loeb, put up a clever fight against the great array of legal and traffic talent drawn up on the other side, which included not only the two roads, Southern Pacific and Santa Fe, but the big commercial interests of San Francisco as well. If the decision is all that it seems to be, it will give the Los Angeles merchant an even break with his northern rival in proportion to distance—and that is all that we have ever asked—justice and nothing more.

What child's play this has all been, and what a commentary on railway methods in California! Speaking without animus and merely in the light of actual history, we may say this was a regular old-fashioned Southern Pacific kind of a performance. The Santa Fe was in the scrape, too, but only in the capacity of second fiddle, as the rate was originally made by the other road, and the latter with its vastly shorter mileage from Los Angeles to the valley was in a position to control the situation. The desperate effort of the Santa Fe people to make us believe that they wished Los Angeles to have fair treatment and at the same time to save their face with the San Francisco crowd was another interesting phase of the game of railroading—as it is played in these days. In fact, both the roads were pretty well satisfied to have the issue go up to the Railway Commission, their attitude toward Los Angeles being very like that of the maiden in the Limerick:

"You can kiss me, of course,
But you'll have to use force,
And God knows you are stronger than I am."

The whole business, after one dug into it, turned out to be little more than a series of unholy bluffs, and the biggest bluff of the lot was the proposition that local traffic should be made to pay the expenses of operation over local grades. This wild-eyed theory, cooked up and applied for our special benefit in this one case, was calculated to bring a wink to the eye of the most hardened pirate in the business. Think of it! A railroad runs from A to Z through the 26 towns of the alphabet. Between P and Q there is a tremendous mountain pass. So the rate from P to Q must be something gigantic to pay for all the fuel burned, extra men and engines needed and interest on cost of construction. Hear the railway men all over the country saying, "Wha-a-t!" This was the chef d' oeuvre of the Stubbs administration in California.

BREAK UP THE NESTS

The advent of a new hand at the helm of police affairs will be hailed with satisfaction by citizens generally. The present administration has up to date been handicapped by two successive mistakes in this position. The first appointee, Dishman, had had no practical experience in police work and his political and newspaper affiliations had been dubious, but in a spirit of fairness he was given a trial, largely on the strength of promises and an agreeable personality. His doubtful connections proved too strong, and much against their wills the Mayor and Commission were forced to make a change. The Times says the removal was made for political reasons, and affects to believe that if he had remained in the position of chief the season of crime through which we are passing would not have taken place—which is amusing in view of Mr. Dishman's utter lack of experience and his extraordinary choice of companionship in the police business. By the way, what has become of all those libel suits and suits for reinstatement that Captain Broadhead (who was the rock on which Dishman got broken) was going to bring against the Police Commission and others?

The next chief was not connected with the Parker machine but was an able railway man, endowed with everybody's good wishes but with no experience in police affairs. He had nearly a year of trial, but it was evident that he did not and never would understand the game. We say that without charging against him or his administration any of the crimes that have terrified our people by their frequency and violence. Mr. Galloway is entitled to sympathy for having gotten into the wrong place. He is entitled to respect as a man and a good citizen, even though he failed to make a record as chief.

The Commission has now done the wisest thing possible, by advancing one of the captains to the head of the department. Under the charter it is impossible to get an expert from another city, and the pay is not large enough to prove attractive if such a move could be attempted. New charter amendments will correct that, if they are adopted, and if the place should again become vacant, it will be possible to fill it under more favorable terms.

There is some connection between conditions in the police department and the number of misdemeanors and small crimes that are committed, but practically no connection whatever with the large crimes of violence. The popular theory which is always ardently supported by the press that is against the administration is that professional criminals learn of the weakness of a chief and flock thither in consequence. It sounds plausible; but it merely serves to demonstrate that while we do not know much about police matters in our own town, we know nothing at all with respect to other places. There is scarcely a city in the United States where there are not two or three newspapers fighting the chief of police and demanding his retirement for incompetency. At such times it is always customary to allege that an unusual amount of crime exists, attracted to the city by the chief's lack of reputation as a thief-catcher. It is true that slackness and good nature on the part of the police toward the tramps is likely to increase the number of these unbidden guests, and where incompetency takes that form it may prove somewhat dangerous. As a rule, however, the inexperienced chief shows it in his failure to get the respect and support of his men, and in his failure to handle the detail work of the office.

In the last few years there has been a big increase in the number and seriousness of crimes of violence, and the outlook for the future is none too favorable. Robbery, murder and certain lines of burglary—those where the line of stuff stolen can be readily sold—are not only more frequent but punishment is less often inflicted because the criminals are so rarely caught. The amount of street robbery that goes on in most of the big cities is most appalling. To put on patrolmen enough to protect every pedestrian would require several to the block, which is impractical even in the big, solidly-built eastern cities. Los Angeles seems especially designed for the convenience of burglars in the enormously spread out residence district. No doubt more patrolmen are needed—they always are—but what is the difference, in actual protection to the citizen out at night, between having one policeman to the square mile and one to half a square mile?

We have had these so-called epidemics of crime every winter and for a period of years. They occur at the season when the town is full of visitors and of tramps. The former attract criminals, because visitors are supposed to have plenty of money for robbing, and the latter, the tramps, protect criminals by affording them a convenient form of disguise and a place to hide.

It is absolutely necessary that this country should tackle the tramp problem in earnest. It is a sad thing to say, but there is no profit in treating these people gently and kindly. We may be sorry for them in the mass but individually they are a menace and should be treated accordingly. We must break up their nests and drive them out.

✣ ✣ ✣

PAY-AS-YOU-EXIT

The trouble with the pay-as-you-enter car is with the last word. It should be changed as shown in the headline above: Pay-as-you exit. Then everybody might be happy even including the company.

These are the objections to the new type of car: First, that it sends passengers entering to the rear end of the car, where there is a crowd of automobiles, horses and wagons. This is due to the near-side stop which we have found so valuable that it should not be abandoned. Second, people are delayed in getting on by the process of paying and making change, and the car itself is held back on its schedule by the piling up of a long queue of people at every down-town corner. The delay is increased frequently by people asking the conductor as to the route of the car, and turning back when they find they have the wrong car. Third, the great inconvenience to the public in digging up the fare as they climb into the car—frequently with arms full of bundles, and, in the case of women, skirts to hold up and little children to care for.

Now, reverse the entrance and exit plan and practically all these difficulties are instantly abolished. People would enter at the point of the car where the crossing and where they are less likely to be interfered with by vehicles. True, people leaving the car would still have to meet vehicles as they passed out at the rear end, but it is much easier to get from the car to the curb than from the curb to the car. There would delay in getting in, for no fares would be collected then, and people could hurry right along to their seats. A man would know he was to get out at a certain corner, and would start for the door of the car in ample time. If it was raining he would be under shelter while he got his money ready. Women could more easily keep an eye on the children and take care of bundles. People get on in mobs, but they get off a few at a time—at least this is true at the crowded time of the day—in the evening on the trip out to the residence section.

Probably the railway people would object on the ground that people might attempt to beat their fare. If a man attempted that game he could be refused an exit until the end of the line was reached, when he could be kicked out into the country.

In due course of time it will occur to some railway manager that pay-as-you-exit cars will remove all the annoyances of the pay-as-you-enter plan, and after a hard fight with his stockholders he will get a few cars of that type constructed. Gradually the idea will spread and in the end all street cars will be thus equipped. It will take about five years, however, for the light to break in. Just like the matter of the fenders. We used to kill 40 people a year, where now, with a population one-third larger, we kill only five or six; but the railways denounced the law for fenders as a high-handed outrage. There was Dr. Haynes, who made the fight. What was he after? Was he agent for some special device? Must be some kind of an anarchist to wish to interfere with business. Anyhow a Socialist. That was the way they talked about it, and the corporation newspapers fairly frothed at the mouth. However, that was a matter of life and death and was very properly a subject for legislation. This is merely a matter of convenience to the people, and it can just as well wait good naturedly until the railways get around to it. They will in time.

✣ ✣ ✣

PEOPLE AND VOTERS

A woman reader writes to us in impassioned words to ask how we venture to use the words, "the people," with respect to political matters, when half the people, to wit, the women, are not allowed to vote. As a matter of language and logic the good lady certainly has the best of us, although we feel a little of her ferocious acerbity might have been spared in view of our repeated declaration in these columns that, in our opinion, women have a right to the ballot. We are reminded of an incident in the last city campaign. One of the candidates for the nomination for Mayor was to make a public speech. Came a delegation of suffragettes to yell "Votes for Women" and demand the speaker's views. It happened he was an ardent suffragist, and he said so in the most unequivocal language. This satisfied all the ladies save one who had come to yell "Votes for Women" and who went right on yelling it, and was only with great difficulty suppressed by her companions.

But does our correspondent think that even after women are allowed to vote the use of the word "people" will be open to us? Alas! no. Then we may have a savage letter from Tommy Gumdrops of the fifth grade, reminding us that children who constitute half the people of this country, are not allowed to vote, and warning us never to use that word again. Also there will be the foreigners, the Indians and the criminals —all people just the same—who are not allowed to vote and who must be considered in the true logic of the situation.

You see politics and etymology do not mix very satisfactorily, the best we can make of it.

✣ ✣ ✣

SAMPLE TRUST MEANNESS

The furniture business is not covered by a trust as the oil or meat business is, but a chain of big concerns operating chiefly from Grand Rapids controls 75 per cent of the output and practically dominates the market. If they are met by troublesome competition from any source they lower prices against it until the insurgent yields and comes into the trade agreement, or else retires, crippled and broken-spirited.

Nothing bears a closer relation to the development of good or bad taste in a people than the character of the artifects by which they are surrounded in their homes. In the colonial period and the few decades immediately following, furniture making in this country was a sacred craft into which each individual workman put the best that was in him, for the sake of beauty and durability. Then came the era of factories and of the excessive use of the funereal black walnut (vice the kindly mahogany), and an overwhelming product of the cheap and ugly. Good taste in home making flickered and almost went out, preserved only in the old manor houses of the South and the simple farm dwellings of New England. The former were mostly destroyed in the war, and the latter have since been ransacked to the uttermost garret for treasures which only the rich or the lucky could secure.

Now there is no particular advantage about old furniture merely in its age, and modern workmen are just as clever and can be just as thorough as those of colonial days. Furthermore they have all these good models at hand to copy—and to improve upon, if that be possible. There is no intrinsic reason, therefore, why people of very limited means should not today have just as beautiful and just as lasting furniture as their ancestors enjoyed—and even people of small means may have had ancestors; such things have happened. No reason, we say, except the greed of the furniture trust. Mahogany, while it is, par excellence, the wood for furniture making, by reason of its tensile strength and freedom for checking, is very little more expensive than other hard woods, and it is just as easy to copy a beautiful pattern as an ugly one. In the minds of many people elaborateness and beauty are symonymous, but that is an error.

Now when people of small means go to buy furniture they find the same conditions almost universal, viz: that the cheap pieces are done in atrocious models and that the well-shaped pieces are all expensive. There is no intrinsic reason for that, the dealer himself will tell you, except the meanness and rapacity of the trust. Good taste, which ought, for the development of the people, to be the cheapest thing on earth, is, with respect to the furniture business, made the most expensive. If any house starts in making good models at low prices, the trust gets after them and soon forces a trade understanding. And thus the public is made to pay—pay—pay; pay-as-you-enter for the cradle, pay-as-you-exit for the coffin, and pay-as-you-go all the time in between. We do not mind paying, if we are allowed to get our money's worth, but why should we be compeled to live in squalid ugliness when beauty and good taste cost no more?

PRESS COMMENT

The Supreme Court of California has handed down a decision upholding big industrial concerns in compelling employes to patronize company stores and even company hospitals. The decision holds that the employer may discharge his employe for refusing to comply with the company rule compelling the men to buy their bread and meat and coffee of the company. Judge Henshaw says in the opinion that in such case no wrong is done by the corporation. This may be good law. "Good law" that tyrannizes over the man who is helpless to resist injustice is the kind of law that encourages and compels disrespect for law.—Pasadena News.

The Government's dream—a pulverized sugar trust.—Boston Transcript.

Nobody questions the barograph on the cost of living.—Philadelphia North American.

There never was a time that Reno's divorce mill was an infant industry.—Washington Post.

Some people won't be satisfied until the corporations have a death rate of 100 per cent.—Washington Post.

Dr. Cook has discovered that the way of the transgressor may be paved with gold.—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Morganite is the name of a new gem, named after J. P. Morgan. It wouldn't be a bad name for gold.—New York American.

Some statesmen when they are divorced from the Government payroll act as if they were entitled to alimony.—Washington Post.

Thus far Doctor Cook's repentance has not taken the form of rebating the $5,000 which Kansas City paid him for a lecture.—Kansas City Star.

Mr. Hitchcock, the Postmaster General, seems to favor a parcels post wherever the express companies have not made other arrangements.—Kansas City Star.

Government activity is now directed to breaking the glass trust, sinking the ship trust, waking the sleeping-car trust, tanning the shoe trust, and bottling the milk trust. Never a dull moment at Washington.—Wall Street Journal.

The Harvard expert who says that women are becoming more mannish all the time claims to have arrived at this conclusion after profound study, but it seems more likely he has been reading the British newspapers. —Emporia Gazette.

Another reduction of running time between New York and Philadelphia indicates the progress which this city is making in the improvement of its suburban traffic.—New York Tribune.

This was not a Republican year, neither was it a Democratic year. It was not a Taft year, a Cannon year, a Roosevelt year. It was the people's year. It was a year of rebuke to the things that are. A year of protest against present day conditions.—Denver Post.

169365

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

THE DATA for this department is supplied from the statistical bureau of the Municipal League of Los Angeles, but neither that organization nor any other has any control over, or is in any way responsible for, the general policy of PACIFIC OUTLOOK.

What Competition Can Do. New York City has just been given a striking example of what competition can do in the matter of street railway construction and operation. The Public Service Commission has planned a new subway system, crossing Manhattan over to Brooklyn at the upper end and dipping down with two lines, one on the east and one on the west side of the island. Bids were asked for the construction and operation of this system, but at first none were received. The company operating the present subway system under a grant from the city, objected to the construction of a new system except as an adjunct to the old, and it grudgingly offered to undertake the work provided the city conceded them similar terms to those under which they now operate, which may be briefly described as everything for the company and nothing for the city. This was one of the last contracts made under the old regime, before the people woke up to the possibilities of municipal ownership or control. The company, known as the Interborough, is a Belmont-Ryan Morgan concern. At this stage of the proceedings when the effort for a new system looked like a failure there appeared on the scene William G. McAdoo, the greatest living engineer-contractor-financier, the man who built the Interborough system and the Hudson tunnels of the Pennsylvania, with an offer to equip and operate the new lines if the city would construct them, and to divide the profits equally with the city. Instantly the Interborough Company woke up and came through with a most astonishing offer, better than McAdoo's, and, so extremely liberal to the city as to make their first proposition sound like some sort of an impudent joke. They propose to spend $75,000,000 to the city's $53,000,000 in the construction and equipment of the lines (McAdoo's offer was $50,000,000 to the city's $100,000,000) and to give the city the total profits for the first five years and after that to share and share alike. Some modifications have been made in the McAdoo offer which put it on about the same basis, so that New York is now in the agreeable position of one who is sure to get the full value of his money through the ancient power of competition.

Interest on City Deposits. Ohio has much the same law with respect to public deposits as California. During the years of complete control in Cincinnati by the Cox machine the law was coolly ignored, and the treasurer, or his maker, absorbed whatever profits came from the use of the money. When the reform administration came on in 1906, largely as a result of Taft's repudiation of Cox, the out-going treasurer was made to disgorge over a hundred thousand dollars of money that could be traced directly to him. Although Cox presently returned to power, the canny people of Cincinnati would not turn him loose on the treasury again. This year in 11 months the city has had over $170,000 on its deposits. In the three years preceding, the city received over $400,000 from this source.

State Utilities Law. The resolution adopted by the League of California Municipalities at San Diego on the subject of a state utilities commission defines the powers of such a commission to cover the following points: 1, To compel publicity of accounts of utility corporations; 2, To regulate issuance and sale of securities of such companies; 3, To authorize and require capital expenditures; 4, To compel adequate service; 5, To make valuation of the properties; 6, To fix rates when municipalities do not by charter enjoy that right, and if they do enjoy the right to assist and advise with them in carrying it out. Under this last provision the work of the state commission would dove-tail in with that of the local commissions.

Chicago's Great Park. By a vote of 120,000 for and 40,000 against, the people of Chicago voted bonds for $7,500,000, the money to be used in acquiring large areas of land, for the most part already wooded, running in a wide belt all around the boundaries of Chicago. This will make it one of the best parked cities in the world. At a cost of $4,000,000, Chicago is to widen Twelfth street to 118 feet from Ashland boulevard to Michigan, two miles, making a broad connecting link between the Lake and the West side.

Historic Slum to Go. This Congress will be asked for an appropriation of $125,000 to purchase several blocks of land surrounding Willow Tree Alley, which is an ancient slum of Washington, full of fire traps and rotten tumble-down structures, chiefly occupied by colored people. The land will then be transformed into a children's playground for the improvement of the surrounding district. In due course of time Society will get around to the point of asking who are the people that own tracts of this sort and what is their responsibility in such matters.

The George Idea. The mayor of Boston is a single-taxer and has proposed a new method of working toward that system which meets the approval of Robert Treat Paine, who calls it the British Columbia method. It consists in a gradual year to year reduction of the percentage of assessment placed on improvements, while the percentage on land remains the same. Thus, supposing both were taxed on a 50 per cent basis, as in California, next year improvements would be on a 40 per cent basis, and next year after that 30 per cent, and so on until they should receive no valuation whatever. Thus it could be done without shock or jar, and in the end the unearned increment could be made to pay all expenses of government.

Using Waste Labor. Fire horses need to be exercised each day, and the men are better for some employment that requires physical condition; so the Mayor of Denver has put the firemen and fire teams at work on the city streets to help out the highway department. This plan has been tried in many cities, but, as a rule, it has not been successful, violent objection coming from the fire authorities and from citizens who feel that the men should be ready for quick service when needed.

News of Commission Government. The Short Ballot Organization publishes a list of 95 American cities that have adopted the commission form of government. Eau Claire, Wisconsin, reports success with the new system, particularly as regards finances. Jersey City proposes to have a commission, if the legislature will allow it. Savannah, Georgia, is petitioning for a new commission charter and Decatur, Illinois, and Traverse City, Michigan, are negotiating for the change.

Effieient Commission Government. As an example of the gain in efficiency of city government under the commission plan a Haverhill, Massachusetts paper gives these figures: In 1909, spending for street construction work 1¾ times as much as the old government of 1908, the present administration got 3½ times as many yards of streets built, and in 1910, spending three times as much as in 1908, the present administration got 6½ times as many yards of new streets.

Cleveland Three Cent Fare. Although the result of the three cent fare in Cleveland is not satisfactory to the company with respect to allowances made for betterments, it has been decided to continue the present arrangement for a few months more.

Municipal Dances. The new administration of Milwaukee believes good times for the "common people" A series of dances have been arranged to take place at the big auditorium. At the second of the series 5000 were present and 1000 were turned away. The price was 15 cents and the management of the affair was in the hands of the superintendent of schools and his deputies. Every girl present was given a chance to dance.

Fool-hardy Scheme Frustrated. To demonstrate the merit of a life-saving device a fireman of the town of Newcastle, Indiana, proposed to jump from the pinnacle of the Court House. Permission was refused by the city authorities, however, on the ground that if anything happened to the jumper the city might be liable for damages.

Maps of Contagion. The Board of Health of South Bend, Indiana, has hanging in the city hall large maps of the city, and whenever cases of contagion occur, little flags of various colors and sizes indicating the various diseases are stuck in to mark the place.

Improving River Bank. Fort Wayne, Indiana, is another of the middle western cities that has awakened to the scenic possibilities of river bank. A strip of land on each side of the stream that runs through the town will be made into park.

Passing of the Horse. The fire commission of Buffalo announces that is done with the horse; all future vehicles purchased will be of the motor type. The experience of several years has settled the matters of expense and efficiency, and the horse is out of Glendale's Municipal Light. Our small neighbor to the north has a very successful lighting plant with 550 subscribers, low rates, and a small profit to its credit at the end of the first year of operation.

Garbage for Back Yards. St. Louis has adopted the rule that all garbage must be taken by the collector from back yards and alleys.

BEKINS

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rates. Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

IMPRESSIONS OF A PLAIN CITIZEN

By AUTOGENESIS

Organizing Public Opinion J. and D. Barry, editor, critic and playwright, who is now writing for the San Francisco Bulletin while investigating political and social conditions in that city, recently took for his text a shrewd remark once made by Patrick Calhoun:

"Public opinion can be organized like a trust or anything else."

"I know a man," wrote Mr. Barry, "who built up a highly successful business as an organizer of public opinion. He went to the president of a great university and said: 'Now that competition for students is so strong among universities, you ought to advertise.' The president smiled. 'Our name is sufficient advertisement,' he replied. 'If we were to try to exploit ourselves by means of advertisements we should simply impair our dignity and in the end do ourselves harm.' The writer shook his head. 'You don't understand what I mean. My plan is not to exploit your university in advertising columns. I agree that that would be a poor way. I will simply keep the work you are doing before the public by means of entertaining and instructive articles. These will be published as reading matter in newspapers and magazines.'

"The president was impressed. He was a highly moral man. He would not consciously do wrong even to help his university. He thougnt he saw only good in the proposition. So he agreed to give that young man a large fee each year for the sake of having the fine work in the various departments of his university made known to the public. He would himself make sure that everything appearing in these articles was the exact truth, that is, what he believed to be the exact truth. He forgot that even truth may be a means of corrupting public opinion.

"The wrong lay, of course, in printing of these articles as reading matter instead of what it really was, advertising matter. In other words, biased matter was presented to the public as though it were unbiased matter."

If the moral to this little story is not obvious, I will add that within a short time after having been started upon his career in this manner by the university president this young man secured so many clients that he could not perform the service demanded of him. He was compelled to organize a staff of special writers, including young men of exceptional ability, some of them devoted to high ideals, who were assigned to the task of exploiting various special interests. Some of these clients desired to secure at the minimum of expense, or at no expense at all, valuable privileges from the people. The articles these young men wrote were instructive. They were eagerly read by tens and perhaps hundreds of thousands of people. Public opinion was being organized. Mr Barry says it was being deceived, degraded, insulted. I quite agree with him.

Such exploitation bureaus work in the most subtle way. They are as insidious as the purchased press until the people recognize it as such. We have them in Los Angeles. They are apparently doing some good, but are they not doing greater harm by stealthily corrupting public opinion? Is it right that the masses of people should have insinuated upon them something which they would not welcome in a frame of mind not hysterical or softened by the application of oily words?

Encourage Competition I have been a constant reader of the Pacific Outlook since Number 1 of Volume I was issued in 1906. I recall that this paper was the first to suggest the establishment of a line of first-class modern passenger steamships to ply between Los Angeles and San Francisco. I recall, also, that within a month or so after the first editorials urging such a venture appeared in this paper, the railroad put on some second-class boats, obviously for the purpose of discouraging the competition which swift modern vessels would mean. As a supporter of the Pacific Outlook and the policies for which it stands, I therefore rejoice that it has lived to see its ideas in this respect put into execution by the promoters of the Yale-Harvard line. There is no doubt whatever that this line will become immensely popular, provided it does not fall into the hands of the railroad-steamship trust and allowed to lapse into a second-rate institution. It should be encouraged in every possible way.

The Dust on the Books If half that I hear in regard to the activities of Purd Wright, the new city librarian, is true, Los Angeles certainly has a great "find." Mr. Wright is going to make the library a great public utility, there is no doubt of that. He is brushing away the mildew and the dust. He is injecting life and vigor and a spirit of helpfulness into every department of the institution. We have suffered so long from what most of us have believed to be incompetency in the conduct of the city's bookshelf that we are prepared to welcome almost any sort of change in its affairs.

No one can come in contact with the new librarian without instantly realizing that he is what, in modern parlance, is known as a "live wire." He has but one hobby, thank goodness, and that is that a library should be not simply a collection of books, to be seen and read if one actually needs to see and read, but that it shall be a living, daily, hourly invitation to every man, woman and child to get more intimately acquainted with it. If any reader of the Pacific Outlook doubts that Mr. Wright can transform the library into exactly that sort of an institution, all that is needed to remove the last trace of skepticism is a half-hour talk with the new acquisition on the subject nearest to his heart.

Plaint of a Strap Hanger Unless certain residents of the Garvanza-Highland Park district are monumental prevaricators the business men and women residing in that section are doing considerably more than their share toward furnishing the Los Angeles railway with dividends. "I seldom get a seat any more," complained one of these the other evening. "As a matter of fact I do not remember having ridden home in comfort for two months. I have kept track of the number of passengers bound north on these cars between 4:30 and 5:15, and they almost invariably run up into three figures. The old cars seat 42 passengers—the P. A. Y. E. cars seat eight more. One night the conductor rung up 151 fares. Seldom does the indicator show fewer than 90. The average probably is about 100. If I could always find a strap to hang to it would not be so bad, but half the time I am jammed up into one corner near the motorman or the conductor, where I can do nothing but play the part of a bolster or buffer for some other unfortunate dividend payer. As I tip the scales at 226 you may imagine how weary I am after riding thirty-five minutes or more in this position."

Perhaps the railroad people are doing the best they can with the rolling stock in hand, but if that be true they ought to get more cars. In the long run the policy of affording patrons every convenience pays best. If the citizens of Los Angeles ever decide to take possession of this and kindred public utilities and operate

MAIN 3040 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY SPRING ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

ANNUAL SALE OF Undermuslins
Opens
TUESDAY
January 3rd

MONTHS of careful preparation for this great sale, and advantageous buying, enables us to offer high class lingerie at low prices --- without sacrificing quality, or workmanship.

Our large assortment contains garments of dainty simplicity, or elaborate creations.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS
MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET
RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
Harris & Frank (INC.)
Leading Clothiers
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

them to suit themselves the railroads will have nobody but themselves to blame. They certainly have been "tipped off" frequently enough.

What About OUR Musical Spirit? What has become of our public concerts? What has happened to the municipal band? What about our love of music, anyway? Is it to be allowed to go unrequited? Can it be possible that a city of upwards of three hundred thousand inhabitants, a city which boasts of its progressive spirit, of its desire to co-operate with the promoters of all movements inspired by the hope of accomplishing something worth while in the finer things in life as well as those of a purely commercial nature, is going to permit the musical talent of its young to develop to the point of capability and then accumulate moss? Are we going to teach our children to sing and beat the tom-tom and toot the horn and draw the bow and then leave them to shift for themselves? Or are we going to deem it wise to offer them an opportunity, and to encourage them to embrace that opportunity, to organize themselves, under competent and zealous leadership, so that we, as a city, may enjoy the fruits of the seed we have sown?

A city like Los Angeles without a great orchestra encouraged by the holders of the municipal purse strings and a well-trained vocal chorus big enough and elastic enough to tempt every amateur musician to try for membership therein is almost an anomaly. Let us have done with smallness and short-sightedness in the matter. We ask the whole world to come out here and be entertained; and when the world sends delegations galore to investigate us, what have we to offer in the way of wholesome entertainment? It is well to look after the commercial and industrial development of the city, but how about the municipal soul? Is the big Auditorium fit only for religious services and grand opera with Moulin Rouges as a sort of sideshow, or shall we make it a home for home music as well?

Must We Stand for It? I bought a fine new hat the other day. It was of grey felt. Today it is the color of a concrete sidewalk about six minutes after the wet mud has been removed from it. I am just narrow enough and suspicious enough to believe that the transformation was brought about by too intimate contact with the soot particles falling from the dense clouds of smoke which are vomited forth from some of the office buildings in town. This is only a complaint. I freely confess I have no remedy. But there must be one.

Would Cause Less Trouble

A fond mother in Valparaiso, hearing that an earthquake was coming, sent her boys to a friend in the country so that they might escape it. In a few days' time she received a note from the friend, saying:

"Take your boys away and send along the earthquake."—Judge.

City Club Christmas Jinks

Fun and Frolic at Luncheon

The annual Christmas Jinks of the City Club were held last Saturday at the Westminster Hotel. There was an exceptionally large crowd present and the program was listened to with keen enjoyment.

Frank S. Forbes, who has acted in the capacity of Santa Claus for several seasons past, was there in his usual character minus the picturesque costume. His distribution of the gifts, accompanied by many good natured jokes at the expense of the recipients, was a feature of the occasion. The recipients of the different gifts took in good part shafts launched at their foibles.

Marshall Stimson was presented with a doll in tin mail astride a miniature court house with an appreciation, from Santa, of his work in leading the Good Government forces, "On to the Court House."

Russ Avery, whose work in harmonizing the different factions of the Republican party in Los Angeles county in the late elections, was of a strenuous character, was given a large box of "Frederick's" pills to tone up his system, which pills proved to be lemons.

Judge Works received a purple toga in anticipation of his election to the United States senatorship, which gift he remarked, was rather premature. Congressman-elect Stephens was given a toy cannon very much battered, and Santa Claus told him that was what would happen to a certain Cannon in the house of representatives when the new congressman got into action.

Lieutenant-Governor-elect Wallace was presented with a bartender's uniform and a bung-starter, a reminiscence of the campaign waged against him by the liquor interests of the state. There was some difficulty in getting the apron tied properly and the expert services of Henry Lyon were called in. Mr. Wallace said that though he had largely been elected by a certain element it was his duty to give all the people a fair bargain regardless of the factions which opposed him.

Senator-elect Leslie R. Hewitt received a little donkey bearing the label, "Consolidated City and County of Watts," and it was explained that represented Hewitt's idea of the "burro" form of government.

Senator-elect Lee C. Gates was the recipient of a combination hobble skirt and trousers and it was given to Senator Gates because he is an ardent champion of equal suffrage. The dignified senator was hoisted to the top of a table and made to don them, or it. Mr. Gates entertained the club members with a speech both eloquent and witty. Mr. Gates thought that before he put the garment on it should pass Mr. Guy Eddie's inspection as to the proper length.

Assemblymen-elect Dr. W. A. Lamb and Henry Lyon were called up together and received a toy couch with a lion and a lamb lying down together.

A wooden box painted to represent a safe and with a large "3" on the front was given to Supervisors Pridham, Manning and Butler. Santa Claus explained that it was the first time in the history of the county when there had been a safe "solid three" for the people.

They were also given a miniature Hall of Records, full of furniture.

President Finlayson of the club received a toy bench as a token of his election as a Superior Judge, and also a book in which to record his decisions.

A toy duck was given to Dr. Sherwin Gibbons. Santa Claus told him he was to hold an inquest on the duck and find out if it was a dead duck, and if it was, what was good for it. This was a reminder of Dr. Gibbons' race for coroner, in which he was defeated by a narrow margin.

William Mulholland got a bottle of mucilage to mix his tufa cement; also a letter from Joe Simons urging that the aqueduct be built of brick.

T. E. Gibbons received a life membership in the Democratic party, provided he would stand on some absurdly humorous planks to be put in the platform.

Dr. Gibbon and Henry Lyon were requested to escort to the hall W. F. Herrin who was waiting in the lobby. They brought in Willie Wing excellently disguised as the Southern Pacific chief and the make-believe Herrin was presented with a brick to put in his pocket so as to prevent mishaps when Johnson kicks him out.

Thomas Lee Woolwine's gift was the ideal platform on which to stand when running for district attorney, which consisted of two toy horses with a rider trying to manage both. One was black and labeled "Royal Arch," the other was white and labeled "Anti-Saloon League." Under the Anti-Saloon League horse was a little blind pig.

Meyer Lissner was presented with the earth, represented by a globe, and a silver crown and scepter. He replied to the witticisms of Santa Claus with some excellent stories.

The closing hit was the unveiling of a statute of Mayor Alexander, which, when the veil was drawn proved to a whiskered mannikin with bobbing head. "Uncle George" appreciated the joke and replied suitably. Charles Farwell Edson sang a number of fitting parodies, assisted by a very harmonious male quartette.

MR. HERRIN'S CUNNING POLITICS

Hiram W. Johnson, in spite of all the Southern Pacific's Mr. Herrin's vigorous and expensive efforts, was nominated for Governor by the Republican party last August.

In spite, also, of Mr. Herrin's vigorous and expensive efforts to prevent it, the people of California elected Johnson Governor last month.

The Southern Pacific is not pleased with the outlook.

It sees that, if things go as they will go if the forces of good government are not broken up and disorganized, its long-time suzerainty over the people of California will be shattered at Sacramento this coming winter, that laws will be passed in the interests of the people, and that laws, put on the statute book by it, will be repealed.

Therefore, the Southern Pacific's astute Mr. Herrin is very busy, and, no doubt, expensively busy, these days trying to breed trouble between Governor-elect Johnson and those who supported him.

All the Herrinic press, like the Oakland Tribune, the Los Angeles Times and the Argonaut, to say nothing of the other "gutter weeklies," are, therefore, busily engaged in trying to breed a quarrel between the Governor-elect and the men, like Chairman of the Republican State Committee Lissner, Chester H. Rowell and others who were prominent in nominating and electing Johnson.

The same Southern Pacific-Herrinic influences are also industriously engaged in attempting to engender suspicion and distrust in the minds of Legislators-elect toward Governor-elect Johnson and the head of the State Committee.

Only the easily-fooled and those who are looking for excuses to favor Herrin will be deceived by the transparent attempts of Herrin and the Herrinites to breed trouble in the anti-Southern Pacific camp.

Mr. Herrin is noted for his cunning. But he will not be cunning enough, it is hoped, to disrupt the anti-Southern Pacific forces in California.—Oakland Enquirer.

Voice over Phone—Hello, is that you, darling? Miss Coquette—Yes: who is talking?—Life.

"Do you tell your wife everything you do while she is away?" "No, the neighbors attend to that."—Houston Post.

REMOVAL SALE

Pianos and Player Pianos

Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player Piano this is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.

Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers
345-347 S. Spring St.

The National Municipal League

By Clinton Rogers Woodruff, Secretary

The day of weeping and wailing in the consideration of municipal affairs is past, gone for ever all hope, and most who are deeply interested believe this change has come about during the past dozen years. Definite constructive work for the improvement of municipal conditions has taken the place of lamentation, and the results are beginning to manifest themselves in a new municipal spirit, which is leavening the lump of our citizenship.

From the beginning the National Municipal League has fostered this new spirit. It has not closed its eyes to existing evils, any more than a wise physician would close his eyes to body sores; but it has studied them not only to cure them, but to make their recurrence difficult, if not impossible. As a Westerner has remarked, municipal reformers of the present day are not mere theorists; they are progressive and up-to-date men. They work to reform certain evils by proposing better methods and plans for the management of public business. It is not only necessary to have good laws and good men to administer them, but the modern municipal worker stands for something better yet when he desires to create a public sentiment that will be satisfied with nothing short of the best laws and the best officials. It is to this end that the National Municipal League is working, and it is for this enlightened public sentiment that it preeminently stands.

The question is often asked why a national body should consider local questions; but as the editor of the Wilmington News has said, whatever of good is accomplished in municipal reform here and there will in time result in good in a general way. One city has a good system along one line and another along a different line. That is all gain. When each city has a good system for every branch of its government, then reform will have been accomplished. Such meetings as the National Municipal League's are to be encouraged. It induces those who read the reports of the proceedings to think on the subject. When men begin to think, there is hope. The absence of real and serious thought is what is responsible for municipal abuses everywhere.

Hon. Charles J. Bonaparte, the president of the league, in writing a reply to a critic, had contended that each city must solve its own problems, which in a large measure is true, pointing out that "to have good city government we must, first of all and before all else, have good citizens." And he adds: "How to secure honesty in the administration of public affairs in Greater New York, or Philadelphia, is already, in every sense, a problem of urgency for the patriotic citizen of New York State or Pennsylvania. It grows daily more and more a problem of urgency for the patriotic citizen of the United States."

One of the problems of cities is the question of municipal ownership, and on this point the former Attorney-General writes:

"How far any government shall assume functions not inherent to sovereignty is essentially a question of expediency; historical and legal reasons and the influence of political and social tendencies will usually determine it in the case of each community. It is not, and perhaps it cannot be determined by any fixed general rule or be subject to principles of universal application.

"It would be hard to find any very good reason why the United States should monopolize the business of sending messages by post which would not justify a similar monopoly as to messages by telegraph; and, in fact, in most European countries the state takes charge of this business as it does of the other.

"There will be naturally, and there is in fact, a wide and also an honest difference of opinion of the subject; and, while this remains true, that subject will be one highly suitable for discussion before the league, but, to my mind at least, altogether inappropriate for determination by the league or action in pursuance of such determination."

Mr. Bonaparte then goes on to discuss other points as follows:

"Whatever the number, names, and powers of our elective officers, we cannot have good government without fair elections. Whatever the duties and compensations of our public servants, to fulfill the former and fairly earn the latter they must be chosen for merit, not from favoritism, and removed for the public good, not to benefit any party, faction, or person. However we may distribute authority among city officials, in a government of public opinion responsibility for every public act or omission must be made clear, certain, and individual, to afford a reasonable hope of effective and beneficent control by public opinion.

"These three requisites, at least, are so evidently indispensable to a satisfactory government for an American city that we may fairly count an honest election law a thoroughgoing application of civil service reform, and such simplification of duties and concentration of powers among municipal officers as will give the public some one man certainly to blame whenever there is any reason to blame anybody ends of effort for municipal reformers."

The following committees of the National Municipal League are, or have been, engaged in carrying on important lines of study and investigation: Municipal Taxation, City Finances, Municipal Franchises, Nomination Reform, Instruction in Municipal Government, Charter Reform, Health and Sanitation, City Budgets, Police, College Men, Uniform Municipal Accounting and Statistics, Research Work in Colleges and Universities.

Thus the league is fulfilling its declared object: "To promote the thorough investigation and discussion of the conditions and details of civic administration and of the methods for selecting and appointing officials in American cities, and of laws and ordinances relating to such subjects."

The league continuously carries on an active propaganda "to multiply the numbers, harmonize the methods, and combine the forces of all who realize that it is only by united action and organization that good citizens can secure the adoption of good laws and the selection of men of trained ability and proved integrity for all municipal positions, or prevent the success of incompetent or corrupt candidates for public office."

Many of its leaflets and pamphlets have gone into four or five editions, and the demand for them continues unliminished. One series of articles (twelve in number) reached 3,000,000 readers.

Moreover, the league serves as a clearing-house for active municipal workers, putting them in touch with each other and with alluminating experiences, and affording them information they desire.

Another object of the league is "to provide for such meetings and conferences and for the preparation and circulation of such addresses and other literature as may seem likely to advance the cause of good city government."

This has been carried out by a series of annual conferences which have become notable alike for their personnel, the value of their discussions, and the good which has resulted from personal exchange of views and experiences. At one meeting, for instance, thirty-five representatives and executives of local municipal bodies engaged in a round table conference on methods, which lasted a whole afternoon.

The discussions as to improvement in municipal governments which are going on before the National Municipal League conferences are of exceptional importance, the editor of the Los Angeles Express on one occasion pointed out. Carefully matured plans for the improvement of our methods of city government were reported and were acted upon by the conference.

At the first meeting, as another editor declared, there was much enthusiasm and a very earnest feeling that something must be done; but the talk was largely in the air. At the later meetings there is very little attempt at eloquence: the papers and debates grapple with the toughest problems of municipal organization, and there is a scientific thoroughness in the treatment and a firm grasp on the facts.

That the National Municial League is fulfilling its objects may be determined from its membership, now nearly 1900, included in which are 200 organizations, business and civic, with an enrolled membership of over 190,000 men and women—a great field for working for higher municipal standards and greater efficiency in administration. It may be determined also by the use of its proceedings in colleges, schools, and libraries, by the student, publicist, and public official, by the utilization of the league's resources by officials; but that is another story which I hope to tell another time.

The frames of government of our cities need readjustment to modern conditions. The movement for charter reform is the result. What should our cities do to meet the new conditions and eliminate the existing evils? The Municipal Programme is the answer. It is a substantial volume of 246 pages, published by the Macmillan Company. It represents two years' hard and persistent effort on the part of experts in municipal work. It has been praised by discriminating critics and used by every constitutional convention and charter convention which has been held since it was published. Engineering News, Dec. 17, 1902, calls it "the most important contribution to the literature of charter reform."

Dr. Delos F. Wilcox, author of "The American City," in an article on the Programme, thus reviews its use.:

"It has nowhere been enacted into law as a whole, but its influence has been felt practically everywhere 'under the flag' that charters have been framed, constitutions revised, or municipal reform agitated. It was published in full in Honolulu for the benefit of the Hawaiian Legislature. It was used by the Havana Charter Commission and by the Porto Rican and Philippine Commissions. It has left marked traces in the new constitution of Virginia and Alabama, and has formed the basis for a sweeping amendment to the Colorado constitution. The Charter Commission of Portland, Ore., used it. The Charter Revision Commission of New York adopted some of its provisions. The Duluth and St. Paul charters are in line with it in important respects. It has formed the basis for agitation for charter reform in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Delaware, and doubtless many other States."

The accounts of American cities are, as a rule, as hopelessly complicated and involved as are their charters. As the Boston Transcript has said: "The satisfactory comparisons of the expenditures for the various departments of government in the different cities are impossible."

In 1900, at Milwaukee, a committee was authorized to "report such methods or systems of municipal accounting and collection of municipal statistics as it may find to be most advisable." How well this committee has discharged the duties thus assigned to it may be gathered from the following statement by Prof. F. A. Cleveland of Haskins & Sells and of the University of the city of New York:

"So useful were the schedules of classification thus formulated that from the date of their first publication they have been utilized by cities attempting to restate their reports. In fact, the progress of the work of the committee may be traced in the new classification from time to time adopted by municipalities. Today there are no less than eighty cities whose financial statements bear the stamp of the work of the League, and the United States census officers have made use of them in the collection and classification of municipal statistics. At the last conference of the league it was thought the success of this part of the work of the committee warranted an enlargement of the scope of its labor. The committee was therefore continued, and instructed to report in outline a complete system of municipal accounts and reports."

Through its active committees the league has brought together groups of acknowledged experts and public men, who have formulated reports of

(Continued on Page 15)

Somebody had to Build a Great American Piano

Jonas Chickering Did It

We are sole agents for the Chickering in this territory. Call or write for prices, terms and art catalog.

Southern California Music Co.

The House of Musical Quality

332-4 South Broadway Los Angeles

By M. N. F. BRIDGHAM

TO READERS of the Pacific Outlook, "Happy New Year, and a pleasant Tournament of Roses!" Good luck to you, every one!

While our uncles and our cousins and our aunts in the effete east have been wrestling with the snow and deadly cold incident to the reign of the ice king, Southern California, and Los Angeles in particular, has been gaily struggling in a vortex of out of door pleasures made possible only by that monarch to whom we all make obeisance—Southern California Winter. Hail to the king!

There have been motoring parties galore. Everybody and his wife have been to Dominguez field to watch the birdmen, interest was keen in the automobile exhibit, there was tennis, and golf, and then many of us took long walks—out to the Baldwin hills, or to Griffith park, or perhaps to Mt. Wilson. All that beside the Christmas hospitality crowning the holiday season, and now we are looking forward to New Year's day and the Tournament at Pasadena, which, because there has been no frost, promises such a show of poinsettias as has never been seen before, and will forever locally distinguish January 1, 1911, as "Poinsettia Day."

The first of the subscription dances occupied the attention of society last night, and the occasion, for which most elaborate plans had been made, promised to be one of the most brilliant events of the season. Patronesses for this function were Mrs. Alfred Solano, Mrs. Ernest A. Bryant, Mrs. Edwin T. Earl, Mrs. Michael J. Connell, Mrs. Allan Balch, Mrs. William May Garland, Mrs. I. N. Van Nuys, Mrs. Walter Scott Newhall, Mrs. George J. Denis, Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. Granville MacGowan and Mrs. Walter Jarvis Barlow.

Mrs. L. M. Brunswig will be at home to friends tomorrow afternoon at her home in West Adams street, receiving in compliment to her niece, Miss Mina Bernard of New Orleans, who is her guest for the winter. Assisting the hostess in receiving will be Mrs. Mary Longstreet, Mrs. Randolph H. Miner, Mrs. Ernest A. Bryant, Mrs. Erskine Ross, Mrs. Adna R. Chaffee, Mrs. William Workman, Mrs. Dan Murphy Mrs. P. G. Cotter, Mrs. D. K. Edwards, Mrs. Michael J. Connell, Mrs. Walter Scott Newhall, Mrs. Wesley Clark, Mrs. Edwin T. Earl, Mrs. Frederick Wann, Mrs. Eugene S. Ives, Miss Lynch, Miss Sinnot, Miss Echo Allen. A group of young women who will assist in the dining room will include Miss Ives, Miss Cora Ives, Miss Sallie McFarland, Miss Marjorie Utley, Miss Lucile Clark and Miss Emma Conroy.

Mrs. Malone Joyce and Mrs. Lillian Reynoldson gave one of the delightful affairs of the week yesterday at their South Alvarado street home, entertaining with afternoon bridge. There were about fifty guests in attendance and the rooms were gay with English holly and scarlet poinsettias. The hostesses were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Philip Wilson, Mrs. J. T. Spencer, Mrs. F. J. McKain, Mrs. Frank Nichols, Mrs. J. C. Brown, Mrs. Percy Lane, Mrs. Carl Doran and Mrs. J. C. Ferrall.

Of special interest to members of the younger set was Mrs. Cornelius C. Desmond's dance Thursday night at the California Club, when she entertained in compliment to Miss Ruth Kays, Miss Anna McDermott and Miss Catherine Mullen. Many poinsettias and ferns were used throughout the rooms, and gave the Christmas touch to the festivities. The company numbered about 200, and the hostess was assisted in her pleasant duties by Mr. Desmond, Miss Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Kays, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Mullen, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Hancock, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Grant and Mrs. Mary Schallert.

In honor of the season's debutants —quite the largest and most charming group that has graced local society in years—Mrs. Edwin Tobias Earl will entertain members of the unmarried set at a reception this afternoon at her beautiful home in Wilshire boulevard. A gracious hostess and a great favorite with the young folks, Mrs. Earl will be assisted by Miss Jane Rollins, Miss Amy Marie Norton, Miss Mildred Burnett, Miss Wood, Miss Florence Wood, Miss Ives, Miss Cora Ives, Miss Lucile Clark, Miss Clarisse Stevens, Miss Sallie Bonner, Miss Katherine Banning, Miss Bernard, Miss Sallie McFarland, Miss Juliet Borden, Miss Emma Conroy, Miss Elizabeth Helm and Miss Marguerite Hughes.

Debutants and other members of the younger set are reserving January 20 for the dinner dance for which Mrs. W. D. Woolwine has issued invitations, a company of about seventy having been bidden to meet a group of young women who are seeing their first social season. Mrs. Woolwine will entertain at her North Broadway residence in compliment to Miss Lucile Clark, Miss Jane Rollins, Miss Elizabeth Helm, Miss Mary Goodrich Reed and Miss Katherine Banning.

A family gathering and Christmas dinner were enjoyed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James A. White in Pasadena Monday. Covers were also laid for Mr. and Mrs. Horace White, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin White, Rev. and Mrs. Harry W. White, Dr. and Mrs. J. Strathord White, Dr. Roy White, Mr. and Mrs. Park Upton, Miss Emily White, Dorothy Upton, Francis White, Reginald White, Horace White, Merritt White, Celestine White and Joseph Beek. The evening was devoted to a musicale.

Judge and Madame Erskine Mayo Ross will be at home to friends at their residence in Wilshire boulevard the afternoon of January 7. Guests will be received from 4 until 7 o'clock.

The reception given by Mrs. Philip Forve and Mrs. Laura Rieger Wednesday at the Forve home in Westlake avenue was one of the enjoyable events of the Yule-tide. In receiving the hostesses were assisted by Mrs. Simon Maier, Mrs. Harry E. Andrews, Mrs. W. W. Neuer, Mrs. Secondo Guasti, Mrs. Frank Larned, Mrs. J. W. McAllister, Mrs. Brenton Lee Vickrey, Mrs. J. C. Goodrich, Mrs. Charles L. Whipple, Mrs. George Fusenot, Miss Suzanne Lynch, Miss Anna McDermott, Miss Florence Bowden, Miss Mamie Maier, Miss Hazel Ball, Miss Josephine McAllister, Miss Ruth Larned, Miss Jean Lines, Miss Margaret Goodrich, Miss Hildreth Maier, Miss Felt of Chicago, Miss Dorothy Schaefer and Miss Forve.

One of the interesting engagements of the season was made known a few days since, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Chamberlain announcing the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Lois, and Stuart M. Salisbury, son of Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Salisbury of this city. The young people have many friends, and their wide acquaintance combined with the social prominence of the two families makes the news of more than passing interest.

Among the parties occupying boxes this week at the Belasco was one entertained by James Slauson in compliment to Miss Elizabeth McMechen and her fiance, Royden Vosburg, who is Mr. Slauson's nephew. The engagement was announced only last week, and as yet no date has been set for the wedding. Miss Mechen is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benson G. Mechen of Pasadena, and the pleasant news was told by the bride's mother at a luncheon given at her home, where there were covers for Mrs. Kate Vosburg, mother of the bridegroom to be, with Miss Margaret Briggs and Miss Dorothy McLeish of Los Angeles. Pasadena guests were Mrs. Benjamin Douglas, Miss Anson Lisk, Mrs. Allen Stelle, Mrs. Jonothan Scott, Miss Florence Thompson, Miss Wadsworth, Miss Mary Wadsworth, Miss Margaret Sherk, Miss Margaret Percey, Miss Adeline Wright, Miss Edith Edminson, Miss Geraldine Barry, Miss Margaret Mears, Miss Grace Vedder, Miss Bessie Mattison, Miss Anita Hertel, Miss Marion Hamilton, Miss Gladys McLaughlin, Miss Jane Rowland, Miss Marion Toedt, Miss Louise Sherman, Miss Marjorie Mhoon and Miss Louise Hawkins.

On the eve of departure for a visit of two months to Atlantic coast cities, Miss Wood and Miss Florence Wood were hostesses Monday night at a delightful affair at the family residence in St. James Park, entertaining with a dinner dance for more than thirty young people. Place and dancing cards were monogrammed with the initials of the young hostesses, and the decorations represented a snow scene, significant of the winter joys that await them during their stay in Chicago, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and other places of interest on their itinerary. There were covers for Miss Wood, Miss Florence Wood, Miss Juliet Bordon, Miss Katherine Stearns, Miss Emma Conroy, Miss Amy Marie Norton, Miss Mildred Burnett, Miss Letts, Miss Edna Letts, Miss May Rhodes, Miss May of San Francisco, Miss Kate Van Nuys, Miss Lucille Clark, Miss Sallie McFarland, Miss Sallie Bonner, Miss Jane Rollins, Jack Somers, Tim Horan, Neil Brown, Harry Blackmore, Henry Daly, Arden Day, Nat Head, Maynard McFie, Jack Leadley, Morgan Adams, Charles Grimm, Neil Pendleton, George Zimmer, Charles Sheedy, Chester Moore, Harold Janss, Dr. Swift.

Among the large affairs distinguishing the week was one of the two formal social events of the Press Club's year—the mid-winter reception, which took place Tuesday evening in the Woman's club house, where between three and four hundred members and invited guests gathered to enjoy the musicale with which the evening opened. Harry Girard's song cycle, "The Trend of Time," was presented under the composer's direction by Agnes Cain Brown-Girard, soprano; Miss Hazel Runge, mezzo-soprano; Leroy Jepson, tenor; Harry Girard, baritone, and Earl Couch, basso. Laura Seymour Wheeler was at the piano except in Mr. Girard's compositions. The composition was delightfully sung and proved of great interest and beauty. Solo numbers given by the musicians were greatly enjoyed. Following the program the guests were formally received by Mrs. David Chambers McCan, president of the club, Mrs. Samuel T. Clover and Mrs. Elizabeth Dejeans Budgett, and Mr. and Mrs. Girard. Among the assisting women were Mrs. Emma L.

Public Stenographers
Multigraphers, Phonographers, Notaries, Accountants, Translators.

Office Help
Higgins Bldg., 2nd & Main Sts.
Main 290; A 5914.
Employment Dept. 417 W. 5th.
Main 9580; F 2196.

Furniture Repair Works
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

[illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Miss Martha M [illegible], Mrs. Arthur B Dodge, Mrs. M N [illegible], Mrs. George Dale Reedy, Mrs. Harvey [illegible], Mrs. Hermon D. Ryus, Mrs. Drew Pruett, Mrs. [illegible] Meacham Stanbridge, Mrs. D M Riordan, Mrs. [illegible] Twitchell Kempton, Mrs. [illegible] Gertz, Dr. Evangeline Jordan, Mrs. Bessie Thew Miller, Mrs. D K Foster, Mrs. Mary Bowman, Mrs. H. Blumenthal, Mrs. Hector Mast, Mrs. Ada Henry Van Pelt, Mrs. Edmund Burton, Mrs. Herbert Peery, Miss Ruth Stery, Miss Jean Bridgham, Miss Laura Zerbe, Miss Bess Munn, Miss Elsie Smith, Miss Ruth Burke, Miss Flora Jones, Miss Alma May Cook, Miss Ethel M. Dolson, Miss Alice May Chapin, Miss Jeannette Converse, Miss Myrtle Garrison. The evening was concluded with dancing.

In compliment to Miss Laura Clayton King, who with her mother, Mrs. King, left Thursday for the east where they will pass the winter, Miss Ruth Martin of West Eighth street entertained informally Tuesday evening. Guests asked to meet Miss King were Miss Pauline Busch, Miss Cornelia Briggs, Miss Olive Moore, Ernest Thomas, Charles Barnett, Morton Colliday, Earl Mathis and Percey Martin.

Mr. and Mrs. William Scholl of San Diego are passing the holiday season in Los Angeles, and are being cordially welcomed by old time friends.

Mrs. J. Torrey Connor, a sister of Eugene Torry of this city, came from San Francisco for the holidays, and was the guest of Mrs. J. Hamilton Gridley of South Olive street.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Coulter in West Twentieth street was solemnized Wednesday afternoon the marriage of Miss Beth Coulter and Dr. Lawrence L. Lindsey, Rev. W. H. Fishburn of Grand View Presbyterian church officiating. The bride, who was unattended, wore her going away suit of blue cloth, and the ceremony was witnessed by relatives and intimate friends only. Dr. and Mrs. Lindsey went directly to their home in Braly.

Invitation rehearsals of the Women's Symphony orchestra this winter are a delightful innovation in the musical world, and that of Tuesday acquired a distinctly society flavor by reason of the tea and cakes which served as an excuse for the delightful half hour over the teacups with which the afternoon closed. Hostesses were Mrs. Hampton L. Story, Mrs. Kate Vosburg and Mrs. Ernest A. Bryant.

Combining all the delights incident to a debutant function and the holiday season was the dance given Tuesday night by Senator and Mrs. Eugene Ives at their home in Shorb, when they formally introduced their charming daughters, Miss Annette [illegible] and Miss Cora, to a large number of their friends. Special cars conveyed the Los Angeles guests who did not go in their own machines, and the affair in all respects was among the most notable of the season. Among the matrons and maids assisting were Mrs. Edwin T. Earl, Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, Mrs. L. M. Brunswig, Mrs. Wesley Clark, Mrs. E. J. Marshall, Mrs. Will E. Dunn, Mrs. Wesley Roberts, Mrs. Ernest A. Bryant, Mrs. Guy Barham, Mrs. T. E. Gibbon, Miss Susanne Lynch, Miss Inez Clark, Miss Lucile Clark, Miss Allen, Miss Patton, Miss Kate Van Nuys, Miss Mary Addison Walker, Miss Marjorie Utley, Miss Emma Conroy, Miss Katherine Stearns, Miss Anna McDermott.

Among the young hostesses entertaining at the week end were Miss Wood and her sister, Miss Florence, whose luncheon Thursday for Miss Gretchen Stevens of New York was as daintily appointed as possible. No home in Los Angeles is more perfectly adapted to entertaining than the Wood residence in St. James park, and in addition to the rarely beautiful table appointments there was a center piece of sweet peas where hovered numerous butterflies, and birds, a tiny gold basket with butterfly handle was by each place with its burden of sweet peas; there were places for the special guest and hostesses, Miss Patton, Miss Katherine Banning, Miss Katherine Stearns, Miss Evangeline Duque, Miss Virginia Walsh, Miss Jane Rollins, Miss Emma Conroy, Miss Elizabeth Helm, Miss Mary Reed, Miss Marie Bobrick, Miss Marjorie Utley, Miss Ives, Miss Cora Ives and Miss Rae Belle Morlan.

Miss Rebecca Howard and William C. Hay, whose engagement was made known a few weeks ago, have chosen January 24 as the date for their marriage, which is to be an evening affair at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Howard in West Adams street. Miss Howard has selected as her attendants, Miss Alva Will of Redlands, and Miss Louise Taylor and Helen Updegraff of this city. Burpee Hay will serve his brother as best man, and Hugh K. Walker, Jr., and Louis B. Howard of Pittsburg, Pa., as groomsmen. Mr. Hay, who is in business in Portland, Ore., will make a home for his bride in that city.

Mr. and Mrs. William I. Hollingsworth of Lake street will leave soon after the holidays for a trip of three weeks to Mexico.

Immediately following the morning service at St. John's Monday, Rev. Lewis G. Morris read the marriage office of the Episcopal church for Miss Emily Rutherford and Ralph F. Mocine in the presence of a few friends and relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Mocine, well known members of the local artist colony, on their return from a brief trip to Santa Barbara, will be at home to friends at their new bungalow studio in Ellendale Heights.

Lillian Russell, in her "Search of A Sinner," has been a potent attraction this week at the Mason, Monday night's audience being especially representative of the society circles of the city. Among those for whom reservations were made on this opening night were Mr. and Mrs. William May Garland, Mr. and Mrs. Don M. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Mines, Mrs. Barrow-French and a party of five; Dr. and Mrs. Guy Cochran, Mr. and Mrs. Michael J. Connell, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Danziger, Judge and Mrs. J. W. McKinley, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. Burton E. Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Jacoby, Mr. and Mrs. A. Brownstein, Walter G. Van Pelt, Mr. and Mrs. George Lichtenberger, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Barham, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. Boyle Workman, Dr. and Mrs. Titian Coffey, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Letts, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Anthony, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Sale, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Fairchilds, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Cheney, Mr. and Mrs. H. Mackey, Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Hellman, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel W. Myrick, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Doran and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Cowan.

That "sport of kings," otherwise denominated flying, as demonstrated at Dominguez field during the holidays, was of interest to many, among well known persons occupying boxes being Major and Mrs. John H. Norton, Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Doran, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Sartori, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Rowley, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Stimson, Dr. and Mrs. Granville MacGowan, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Merwin, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Cline, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Danziger, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Ihmsen, Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Clover, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Hook, Jr., Mr. and Mrs Homer Laughlin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Holliday, Dr. and Mrs. Robert J. Burdette, Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard Jess, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Milbank Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hixon, E. B. Tufts, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Millar, Mr. and Mrs. Gail B. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. George I. Cochran, Mr. and Mrs. William W. Mines, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Milbank, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Motley H. Flint, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Kerckhoff, Mr. and Mrs. Howard E. Huntington, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Garland, Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Hicks, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Gibbon, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Doheny, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Flint, Mr. and Mrs. Michael J. Connell, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Graves.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Balfour and Mrs. Irene Rowland are located for the winter at 661 Rampart street, where they are at home to friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard E. Huntington have as house guests at their Oak Knoll home Mr. Huntington's mother and sister, Mrs. Huntington, Mrs. J. B. Metcalf and Miss Marion Huntington of San Francisco.

Mrs. Asa Kelly of Spokane, Wash., and little daughter, Virginia, are passing the holidays with Mrs. Kelly's parents, Judge and Mrs. J. F. Conroy in West Thirtieth street, where Mr. Kelly is expected to join them for the return trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Young of Chicago are occupying the Francis Murphy residence in Wilton place. Mrs. Murphy is in Long Beach, where she has opened her cottage, the "Sea Shell."

Is there anything better worth while than to have put the Christmas spirit into the heart of a little child? Yes, there is just one other possibility infinitely better—to have taught 300 children the meaning of the day, as did Mrs. Robert Marsh and her little daughters, Martha and Florence, when Sunday their handsome Westchester place home was the scene of one of the most elaborately planned Christmas parties ever given in honor of Saint Nicholas, and the guests were children from the poorer quarter of the city, from 5 to 12 years old; as did also Mrs. Dick Ferris, who opened her home in West Adams street to little people from the same neighborhood, making their hearts glad with a real Christmas dinner and a tree whose boughs were laden with gifts. Children of Ebell members also had a large share in the distribution of Christmas joy Thursday, bringing gifts to decorate the beautiful tree which, according to annual Ebell usage, the following day was dispoiled of its treasures in behalf of several hundred happy youngsters who live in a quarter of the city that in times past has been overlooked sometimes by Santa Claus. Santa Claus Flint and his staff were busy as usual, there were other emissaries of the good saint busy both in public and private, and it does seem as if there could be no child in this good city of the Angels so hidden away that some one did not seek him out with gifts and good wishes.

DANA W. BARTLETT ON CIVIC IMPROVEMENT

The C. M. Clark Publishing Co. of Boston will put before the public on January first a new book by Dana W. Bartlett on subjects relating to civic improvement. "The Better Country" deals with such subjects as "Social Service," "Public Ownership," "Individualism," "The Prevention of Poverty, Crime, etc.," "Votes for Women," "Irrigation," "Public Schools" and "Workingmen's Homes." Mr. Bartlett has had wide experience in dealing with these vital problems, and his book can not fail to be of interest to those seeking light on subjects related to civic betterment.

Theatre

"A Man's World"

Many theatre-goers will dispute Rachel Crothers' handling of the main theme in her new play, "A Man's World," and many more will doubt her wisdom and marvel at her fearlessness in assailing an evil over which centuries of condonation have thrown a veil of tolerance, but none can question her earnest purpose and scholarly technique who have followed the play to its consistent close and given it after thought. The company which presents "A Man's World" at the Majestic this week is one in which talent and study combine with the advantage of congenial roles to form an almost perfect production The cast, in fact, might be termed "all-star" without exaggeration. The settings are peculiarly well-chosen, and the atmosphere of the true Bohemia—not the cheap, tinsel imitation but the environment where genius loves best to thrive—is carried out with true artistry.

Adeline Dunlap as Jacqueline in "Madame X," Majestic Theatre Next Week

The argument is the eternal one of a noble woman's rebellion against the double moral standard whose tragic consequences have been brought home to her through observation of life's seamy side. The idea is not new, but it is treated so sincerely and powerfully and naturally that it is quickened into deeper meaning, and the play's ending, when Frank Ware, the woman novelist, sends away her lover because she has discovered that he fails to measure up to the perfect standard he demands of her, is a triumph of consistency.

Miss Mary Mannering has never given the public anything equal to her Frank Ware in force and intelligence, and she effects this increase in strength without the least sacrifice of her feminine charm and sweetness. Alphonze Ethier plays the difficult role of the lover capitally. Charles Wyngate is at once amusing, winning and powerful as the German violinist, Fritz Bohn, and his scenes with the little adopted son of the woman he loves are charming. Miss Ellen Ormsbee gives a character study of a spineless young girl ambitious for Bohemianism and an artist's career, and does it with a sense of humor and pathos which enriches it into real life. Every other member of the cast plays with spirit, accomplishing a well-balanced dramatic whole seldom equalled on the local stage.

"A Man's World" should be seen by everyone who appreciates good acting and wholesome ethics.

Dorothy Russell Lewis.

Lillian Russell

The current week's offering at the Mason is remarkable chiefly as an example of how a determined and good natured woman may spite time. In the little comedy, "In Search of a Sinner," Lillian Russell cannot but be admired, if for no other reason than for that pulsing spirit which has preserved to her so goodly a portion of her famous natural charm under a weight of years which is, at any rate, not as light as a feather.

But her hold on old characteristics is not the only reason for enjoying Miss Russell on the stage at this late hour.

Added to the natural liveliness of the woman herself, which trait seems to have diminished hardly at all, though its expression is a bit more ponderous than of yore, is an actress of pleasing talent, much developed of later years.

As Georgiana Chadbourne, the widow so long married to a saint that sheer reaction has sent her forth in search of a sinner, Miss Russell acts with ease and intelligence, although there is little enough in the role, or in the play as a whole. "In Search of a Sinner" is a foolish sort of a little composition, with the unconvincing traits of most other plays deliberately built to fit certain stage personalities. Here and there are good lines, with some rather clever repartee which Miss Russell uses with fine effect, but the interest is not well sustained and it would be difficult to imagine the three acts holding together without a central figure of general public interest, such as Lillian Russell, to focus attention.

The best bits in the cast, after Miss Russell's part, are the ex-prize fighter, done by Joseph Tuohy, and McIntyre, the Scotch maid, done by Jessie Ralph.

A familiar face to Los Angeles theatre-goers is that of Hayward Ginn, formerly of the Burbank stock company, who takes the part of Jeffry Chadbourne in Miss Russell's present play.

Lanier Bartlett.

William Farnum at the Orpheum

The headliner of the Orpheum bill for the past week was Mr. William Farnum in his one-act drama "The Mallet's Masterpiece." The story of the play centers around that most famous of ancient marbles, the Venus de Milo, and the plot is Mr. Edward Peple's conception of how she arrived at her present armless condition. The situation is the old three-cornered one of one woman and two men, a situation presumably as common to human nature in the year 200 B. C. as at the later stages of the world's history. Philotias (Mr. William Farnum) a Greek sculptor has just completed his masterpiece of sculpture, a statue designed to compete in a contest which would establish his reputation and gain for him the King's daughter, Adonia. Vesta, his rival both in art and love, comes to his home and seeing Philotias in the garden with Adonia, in mad rage and jealousy seizes a mallet and breaks the arms, with the babe which they hold, from the statue. The despair of Philotias can be imagined and the strongest and most convincing moment in the playlet comes when the sculptor realizes that instead of his work being destroyed it is now more beautiful than ever before. Mr. Farnum gave a sincere interpretation of the role of Philotias and made a splendid appearance in his Grecian dress. Miss Olive White as Adonia was gracefully robed.

Next in order of merit on the bill were the Duffin-Redcay acrobats, whose act was clever in the highest degree as well as being somewhat unusual and decidedly thrilling.

Another number of a high order was a motion picture showing the New York police force, particularly the mounted division, in conventional drills and sensational special work such as stopping runaway horses and speeding automobiles.

The Sisters Meredith were chiefly remarkable for their numerous and gorgeous costumes, while "Radiant" Radie Furman gave a clever bit of German character acting and singing. Held over from last week were the Temple Quartette, Callahan and St. George, D. J. Audree's "studies in China and Ivory" and the Musical Cuttys.

M. R. T.

"The Man of the Hour"

Like the year of 1910, "The Man of the Hour" is almost done. It has reached the point where it is but the hope of a surviving few.

As played at the Auditorium this week its lines rang like corridors of a deserted castle. All of the possibilities were there but it lacked life and vim. There was little in the acting of the company to make it the really great play that it is, and what applause it drew, was on account of the lines, not the acting.

"The Man of the Hour" as originally played some years ago made a great sensation and deserved the long run which has been accorded it. Then and now, and probably in many years to come it will depict political life of the city. The grafters and scheming financiers we will have with us for many years to come, although the ward bosses may go.

So I do not mean that the play will not live. It should from time to time be revived but only by capable companies. The company at the Auditorium presenting "The Man of the Hour" is hard working and means well, but I venture to say that there are two stock companies in this city that with a week's rehearsal could play it better.

The Shuberts send us many fine attractions and of course cannot be expected to always hit the mark, so we hope for the better.

J. L. Barnard.

"The Battle"

"The Battle," Wilton Lackaye's strong play, is given a fine presentation at the Burbank this week. In the comparison with the regular company, which is still on the road, it suffers but very little and that only in the lights and shades of the play which would naturally be better brought out by long acquaintance with the characterizations.

The story of the play is centered around John J. Haggleton, a captain of finance, whose son has been taken from him in infancy and grows to [illegible] a [illegible] community [illegible] without revealing his identity, goes to the slums, where [illegible] in an endeavor to win [illegible]'s respect for himself and his business methods.

Byron Beasley has a strong part [illegible] and gives a splendid [illegible] of the type of the old money king, his acting in this part being one of the best things he has done for a long time.

Mark Smith as "Bob Blake," in "The Traveling Salesman," Mason Opera House Next Week.

David Landau, in the character of Philip Ames, the lost son, has a splendid opportunity to show his ability and makes the best of it. Howard Scott is especially good in his role.

Marjorie Rambeau in the part of Margaret Lawrence gives us one of her strongest female characters since "The Test."

Charles Ruggles, as Joe Caffrey, the sport, makes his first appearance with the Burbank company and has a part which fits him handsomely.

Taken altogether, "The Battle" is one of the most entertaining and best acted plays that this company has put on in many months.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Henry B. Harris will present at the Mason Opera House for the week beginning Monday, Jan. 2nd, "The Traveling Salesman," the latest comedy by James Forbes, author of "The Chorus Lady" and "The Commuters."

The locale of the play is Grand Crossing, a Middle West village. The story opens on Christmas Day, and in the first act is shown the interior of the railway station, where Bob Blake, the traveling salesman, and Beth Elliott, the pretty ticket agent, meet and are speedily attracted to each other.

Beth owns a plot of seemingly worthless land that suddenly acquires value because it is necessary to a scheme of improvement planned by the railroad company. Martin Drury, Blake's employer, becomes cognizant of the corporation's plans through a "leak" at headquarters, and attempts to defraud the girl of her property by a perversion of the laws governing the sale of lands by the township for unpaid taxes. It is Blake's aim to frustrate the scheme and the predicament in which he finds himself through his impetuous and misguided efforts, supplies the necessary dramatic thread of the comedy, which aims chiefly at a humorous exposition of the characteristics of the present day drummer.

The second act which takes place in Blake's room in the Elite Hotel, is said to be novel in its depiction of "life on the road."

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," a dramatization of the novel of the same name by Charles Felton Pidgin, will be the offering by the Burbank stock company for the week beginning with the matinee New Year's day. This rural comedy never has been seen in Los Angeles, either by a traveling company or a stock company.

The play gets its name from Quincy Adams Sawyer, a young man of aristocratic New Enland lineage, who, while visiting a little town in the country of the Pilgrim Fathers, buys a little grocery and general store to circumvent the machinations of the village villain, a man of considerable wealth but no scruples as to the manner of adding to it. The young man who buys the store falls in love with a beautiful blind girl, and complications set in which threaten the peace of mind of all concerned. It is all straightened out in the end, however, to the satisfaction of everyone.

The full strength of the Burbank company is required with the aid of a number of accessory players, to present this play, so long is the cast. One of the features is an old time husking bee, with its dances and general merry-making.

The new drama by Lee Arthur, "The Fox," is now nearing its final stages and will soon be ready for presentation.

New Year's week, and the Orpheum programme are synonymous, in that both represent "something new."

Heading the new list comes "Marvelous" Griffith, the human arithmetic machine. Griffith is a man who thinks, eats, drinks, sleeps and walks in numbers. He sees figures and problems in the rays of the sun and in the brilliance of the stars. He can raise a number to its sixth power in the time than an ordinary man takes to state a problem; he can multiply nine figures by nine figures while you are lighting a cigarette. Groups of figures to his mind represent the same as groups of letters (words) do to anyone else. That is, he sees them auto-suggestively. He has his own system for working out his problems, and all the figures one may string out to him fit into his system at some angle, giving him absolute mastery of his art.

But Griffith is not alone on the bill, though by far the predominant feature of it. There are John Cook and James Lorenz, the "gentlemen tramps" who have deserted "The Motor Girl" for vaudeville. Quigley brothers, as their names indicate, do an Irish comedy team stunt, and songs and dances come from them in rapid succession. Their jokes are of the 1911 vintage and they with the Cook and Lorenz team will keep the amusement high. Sheda, the Polish violinist, is another newcomer. He presents a weird but musical act called "Paganini's Ghost." Remaining another week are William Farnum & Co. in the drama, "The Mallet's Masterpiece"; The Duffin-Redcays, the Sisters Meredith, and Radie Furman, and new pictures will make up the bill.

The Orpheum Road show is due here Jan. 23. The second week of the show here, Alice Lloyd will join it.

In addition to being thrilling and tear-compelling, "Madame X" is likewise regarded by the metropolitan critics as a most entertaining drama. In writing this play, Monsieur Alexandre Bisson, the Parisian dramatist, has evinced the characteristic skill of the French playwrights. He has realized that it would be impossible for any audience to endure the strain upon the sympathies and emotions that this work calls for, unless there were adequate humorous relief. He also understands human nature well enough to comprehend that there is humor in even the most tragic moments of any one's life.

Thus "Madame X" possesses great deal of the lighter and more amusing characteristics; features that make for laughter, as well as those things made for tears. In the figures of the three rascally fellows who try so desperately to make capital out of the misfortunes of the woman there is much to entertain and amuse; there is a very charming and life-like love romance involving the son of the luckless Madame X, while even the pathetic little porter, Victor, has moments in which he arouses shouts of laughter, as for example when he so drolly misconstrues the questions of the judge in the thrilling trial scene.

Henry W. Savage will offer this drama of mother-love at Hamburger's Majestic theatre for the week beginning Sunday night, Jan. 1, with a special matinee Monday, Jan. 2.

Ida St. Leon will be seen here at the Mason during the week of Jan. 9, in Frederic Thompson's production of "Polly of the Circus."

The Earlier the Better

Irate Pa—Did you tell that young man who calls on you every night that I was going to have the gas turned off promptly at 10 p. m.?

Daughter—Yes, papa.

Irate Pa—And what did he say to that?

Daughter—He said he would consider it a great personal favor if you would have it turned off at 8:30.—Tit-Bits.

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d 1447 Mat. Every Day Both Phones Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c

Beginning Monday Matinee Jan. 2, 1911

"Marvelous" Griffith
Human Adding Machine
Cook & Lorenz
"The Gentlemen Tramps"
Quigley Brothers
Irish Impersonators
Scheda
"Paganini's Ghost"
Wm. Farnum & Co.
"The Mallet's Masterpiece"
Duffin-Redcay Troupe Wonderful Athletes
Sisters Meredith
Song Successes
Radiant Radie Furman
American Comedienne

Orpheum Motion Pictures

MASON OPERA HOUSE W. T. WYATT Manager

Week Commencing Monday, Jan. 2: Usual Matinee Saturday.
Extra Matinee Monday.

HENRY B. HARRIS Presents The Traveling Salesman

By James Forbes, author of "The Chorus Lady," and "The Commuters"
Prices: 50c to $1.50. Seats Now on Sale.
Coming: "Polly of the Circus."

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Beginning Sunday Night, Jan. 1. Special Matinee Monday, Jan. 2
HENRY W. SAVAGE Offers the Supreme Dramatic Sensation
MADAME X
Nights and Saturday and Monday matinees: 50c to $2. Bargain Matinee Wednesday.
Coming—"The Gentleman From Mississippi"

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
..Beginning Sunday Matinee, Jan. 1.. Special Matinee Monday, Jan. 2..
First Time in Los Angeles
QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER
The great drama of New England Life and Humor
Nights: 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees Saturdays, Sundays, Holidays: 10c 25c, 50c.

Prominent music teachers of Southern California have formed an organization known as the "Southern California Music Teachers' Association." While no constitution has as yet been drawn up, it is understood that the association will work along the lines of the best national and state societies, with the object in view of bettering teaching conditions in this section of the country. The organization meeting, held last Tuesday, had an attendance of over sixty, all of whom joined the association.

Charles Farwell Edson was elected president, Miss Jean Winston- vice-president and A. D. Hunter, secretary-treasurer. M. F. Johnson of Pasadena, was elected chairman of the program committee, with Gertrude B. Parsons of the Polytechnic High School, and Stanley B. Widener as his associates.

The committee on constitution and by-laws consists of Mr. Jaroslav de Zielinski, chairman, Miss Arley G. Mott of Santa Paula and Mr. Wismer of Los Angeles.

Eligible members must be music teachers of good standing and must have taught a certain number of years.

Kocian, the violinist, comes to Los Angeles as the fourth entertainer in the Philharmonic Course at Simpson Auditorium next Thursday evening, Jan. 5th.

He is known to the American public and to Los Angeles from his visit here eight years ago.

But one recital will be given in this city. The program numbers follow:

1. Concerto G Minor.D'Ambrosio
   1. Grandiso molto moderata e sostenuto.
   2. Andante.
   3. Allegro.

   J. Kocian.
2. (a) Gavotte .....Gluck-Brahms
   (b) Bowree ..Bach-Saint Saens

   M. Eisner.
3. Cioconna (1665-1750) J. A. Bach

   J. Kocian.
4. (a) Hymne au Printemps .....Kocian
   (b) Covatine .....Cui
   (c) Moto Perpetuo .....Ries

   J. Kocian.
5. Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 3 .....Liszt

   M. Eisner.
6. Faust Fantasia.....Wieniawsky

   J. Kocian.

When one considers the range of artistic work as presented by Mme. Gerville-Reache, and realizes that she has obtained the position of prima donna contralto at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, that she has held the same position at the Opera Comique in Paris, Covent Garden, London, Theatre de la Monnaie, Brussels, and under Manager Hammerstein at the Manhattan Opera House in New York City, they will realize the value of an evening program as presented by this talented woman.

Mme. Gerville-Reache will be heard at Simpson Auditorium January 17.

Harry Clifford Lott is announcing a duo of recitals to be given at Cumnock hall on Thursday evening, January 26, and Thursday evening, February 23. The first program will be a miscellaneous one; the majority of the songs to be in English. A group of German numbers and one from the French are to be given; also three Browning poems. The second program will be devoted exclusively to the musical setting of poems by Ruyyard Kipling.

Last Wednesday evening the second "world premiere" of the present season took place when Humperdinck's new opera, "Konigskinder," was produced in New York. The reviews are not yet to hand, but will be summarized in our next issue.

The rights to the English version of Pucinni's new opera, "The Girl of the Golden West," are owned by Henry W. Savage and he is planning to produce it in the near future, which event will mark his re-entry into the field of grand opera. It is Mr. Savage's intention to duplicate the scenic equipment employed in the Metropolitan production and assemble a cast of artists in keeping with the rank, dignity and artistic requirements of Belasco's drama and Pucinni's score. The dramatic values of "The Girl of the Golden West" are familiar to nearly every theatregoer and Mr. Savage's production of the opera in English will be awaited with anticipation among all discriminating lovers of music.

Mr. Savage secured the option on the English rights to the opera from Signor Pucinni long before it was written, basing his judgment on the success attained with "Madame Butterfly" in English.

In the current number of Musical America Mme. Lillian Nordica voices the already frequently expressed opinion that Puccini's American opera should have been interpreted first by American singers and should if possible have been sung inthe English language. It does seem strange that on an occasion which marked so conspicuously an advance step in America's musical life, the famous American opera stars should have been omitted from the cast.

Woggs—"So young Saphead and his father are carrying on the business?"

Boggs—"Yes. The old man does the business while young Saphead does the carrying on.—Puck.

The Jester's Bells

Mrs. Guzler—Aren't you ashamed to come home in this condition.

Mr. Guzzler—Mortified to death, my dear. I find that my capacity isn't what it used to be.—Philadelphia Record.

"The directors of the road were a precious lot of grafters."

"You, don't say so?"

"Yes, every last man of them had his appendix removed, and charged the cost to operating expenses."—Puck.

"Is the first edition of your novel exhausted yet?"

"No. Why?"

"I thought it might be from standing so long on the counters."—Boston Transcript.

"That's queer." "What is?" "Eighteen people waited on me and urged me to run for office this year, and only eleven voted for me."—Detroit Free Press.

Stopping for Repairs

The rumbling and groaning train had been toiling along from Memphis, Tenn., toward Bald Knob, Ark., all through the hot afternoon. The stops had been frequent, but at last came one of unusual duration. After a tiresome interval, the conductor walked back through the mosquito punctuated aisles until his glance met a sympathetic face. He bent over the kindly looking passenger, and whispered:

"Stranger, have you a bit of string about you? The engine's broke."—Everybody's.

"My son," remarked the stern parent, "when I was your age I had very little time for frivolous diversions."

"Well," replied the young man, "you didn't miss much. Believe me, this gay life isn't what it looks to be."—Washington Star.

Unwitting Slander

A western bookseller wrote to a house in Chicago asking that a dozen copies of Canon Farrar's "Seekers After God" be shipped to him at once.

Within two days he received this reply by telegraph:

"No seekers after God in Chicago or New York.; try Philadelphia."—Everybody's.

"Is it genuine Chippendale?"

"Absolutely, sir—"

"But this looks like a crack right across—"

"Done by Chippendale himself, sir, in a fit of rage when he heard the union had called the men out."—Punch.

Mr. Murray, irritable from long confinement to a sickbed, cocked up his ears and listened.

"Phat's all that piano-hungin' in th' parlor?" he then demanded, glaring at his wife.

"'Tis our daughter Mary takin' her first steps in piano-playing," rejoined his wife.

"Her first steps! Phat's she doin' walkin' on the kayboard?"—Lippincott's.

Saved

Ashley—Swaggler fell out of a twentieth-story window of the Skyler apartment and wasn't even bruised.

Seymour—How did he escape?

Ashley—He alighted on the roof of the nineteen-story building next door.—Chicago News.

One Way of Killing Them.—He had besought the pharmaccutical chemist to give him something with which he might kill moths, and the pharmaceutical chemist had supplied him with camphor balls; but the next day he was back again, holding some of the fragments of the balls in his hand.

"Are yez the same young man phwat sold them things to me yisterday?" he roared.

"I am," replied the pharmaceutical chemist, composedly. "What's wrong with them?"

"Phwat's wrong with thim?" repeated the irate purchaser. "The idea av sellin' thim things to kill moths or anything else! See here! If yez can show me the man that can hit a moth wid a single wan av thim, I'll say nuthin' about the ornimints an' lookin' glass me an' the missus broke."—Answers.

It Always Beats

The minister was addressing the Sunday school. "Children, I want to talk to you for a few moments about one of the most wonderful, one of the most important organs in the whole world," he said. "What is it that throbs away, beats away, never stopping, never ceasing, whether you wake or sleep, night or day, week in and week out, month in and month out, year in and year out, without any volition on your part, hidden away in the depths, as it were, unseen by you, throbbing, throbbing, throbbing rythmically all your life long?" During this pause for oratorical effect a small voice was heard: "I know. It's the gas-meter."—Tit Bits.

"Some are so intensely modern that they prefer a Corot to a Rembrandt!"

"If it's a better hill-climber I don't blame 'em. Me for that car every time!"—Puck.

One of the Strikers—I've lost me best hat-pin, Lizzie! Another—Where did you leave it last? The First—Oh, I remember, now! I left it sticking in that scab, Rachel Lispinsky!—Puck.

"The next event," said the announcer at the country fair, "will be a sack race for girls. Professionals barred."

"What do you mean by professionals?"

"Those who have been wearing hobble skirts."—Kansas City Journal.

"What was the happiest moment of your life?" asked the sweet girl. "The happiest moment of my life," answered the old bachelor, "was when the jeweler took back an engagement ring and gave me sleeve-links in exchange."—Canadian Courier.

Rusty Rufus—Say, Tom, wouldn't it be great ef youse could git all de eat an' drink youse wanted by jist pressin' a 'lectric button? Tired Thomas—It shore would—ef I hed somebody ter press de button fer me.—Chicago Daily News.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building

Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to

F. W. BLANCHARD

233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

LOS ANGELES CITY WORK AND LEGISLATION

An indexed review of all action by Council, Board of Public Works, Commissions and Officials, relating to property improvement or of general interest. Record closes Wednesday night.

PUBLIC WORK BY STREETS

1st St. Tunnel; pet. from the N., N. E. and N. W. Imp. Assn. submitting a resolution favoring the immediate construction of a tunnel on traffic grade from Broadway to Fremont Ave., the full width of First St. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

3rd St.; pet. from Frank E. Myers, et al, for sewer in E. 3rd St. from Pecan to Bodia Sts. Ref. to Bd. of Pub. Wks.

6th St.; ord. of intention for lighting Sixth St. between Main St. and Alameda St. and installing ornamental posts therefor. Adopted.

8th St.; ord. of intention to order the widening of Eighth St. bet. Central Ave. and the westerly line of the official bed of the Los Angeles river. Filed until the interested property owners file a petition with the Council representing 51 per cent frontage.

18th St.; ordinance authorizing property owners to construct a sewer under Private Contract, in 18th street between Naomi Ave. and Tennessee St. Adopted.

36th and McClintock; pet. from J. F. Macloskey, et al, for an electric light at corner of said streets. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

53rd St.; pet. from Albert Hoffman, et al, protesting against lowering of sidewalk on E. 53rd St. between McKinley and Central Aves. Set for hearing Jan. 3.

Third Ave; final ord. for the paving of Third Ave. from Pico St. to 935 feet northerly. Adopted.

Ave. 43; pet. from Katie H. Groene, for the improvement of Ave. 43, between Pasadena Ave. and 350 feet west of Pasadena Ave. to right of way of Santa Fe R. R., Bond Act. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Ave. 65; pet. from E. C. Kulli, for improvement of Ave. 65 between Pollard and Meridian Sts. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Adelaide St.; City Eng. instructed to present to the Council an ordinance changing the name of Adelaide St. between Ezra St. and Camulos St. to "Oregon St." instead of "Oregon Ave.," as petitioned for.

Adair St., between Washington and East 21st St.; sewer ordered constructed.

Adams St.; pet. from Percy H. Clark, for sewering, by private contract, of Adams St. between Arlington and 7th Ave. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Arlington St.; ord. establishing the name of Arlington St. between Pico St. and Twentieth St. Adopted.

This ordinance is adopted to clear up legal defects.

Bellevue Ave.; ord. establishing the grade of Bellevue Ave. from Coronado St. to Sonoma St. Adopted.

North Broadway; protest of C. E. Donnatin et al., against change in grade of North Broadway between Cottage Home and Buena Vista Sts. Continued to Jan. 3d.

North Broadway; ordinance establishing the lines of, changing and establishing the name of, and fixing and establishing the curb lines of North Broadway adjacent to the abutment of the proposed viaduct opposite the Fremont Gate entrance to Elysian Park, and fixing and establishing the name of that portion of North Broadway west of the Los Angeles River lying north of North Broadway; and changing and establishing the name as Carmella St. Adopted.

Boyd St.; ord. of intention to improve Boyd St. between Los Angeles St. and San Pedro St. Adopted.

Burlington Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Burlington Ave. between Miramar St. and Ocean View Ave. Adopted.

Commercial St.; ordinance fixing and establishing the curb line on each side of Commercial street between Main street and New High street. Adopted. Also establishing the grade of Commercial street from New High street to Main street. Adopted.

College St., from Ramona to N. Broadway; protests against change of grade. Set for hearing Jan. 10.

Cole Ave; ord. establishing the grade of Cole Ave. from Santa Monica blvd. to Melrose ave. Adopted.

Cosme St.; ord. establishing the grade of Cosme St. from Marengo St. to a point 100 feet southerly therefrom. Adopted.

Cypress Ave.; ord. establishing the grade of Cypress Ave. from the north boundary line of the city to Pepper Ave. Adopted.

Country Club Drive; pet. from Robert Marsh & Co., calling attention to the unsafe condition of the bridges on Country Club Drive and Mesa Ave. and requesting that the Council take some action for the safeguarding of these bridges. Granted. Bd. Pub. Wks. instructed accordingly.

Commercial St.; ord. establishing the name of Commercial St. between Main St. and New High St. Adopted.

Citrus Ave.; ord. fixing and establishing the curb line on each side of Citrus Ave. between Wilson Ave. and the south boundary line of the city. Adopted.

Denker Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Denker Ave. between Santa Barbara Ave. and a point 487.50 feet southerly. Adopted.

Dayton Ave.; ord. abandoning all proceedings for the opening and widening of Dayton Ave. from Ave. 20 to Pasadena Ave. Adopted.

Douglas St.; pet. from J. F. Jones, et al. for the improvement of Douglas St. between Court St. and Colton St., Bond Act. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Figueroa St., from Boston St. to 321 feet north of College St.; protests against change of grade. Set for hearing Jan. 10.

Florence Ave.; ord. fixing and establishing the curb line on each side of Florence Ave. between Sunset Boulevard and Wilson Ave. Adopted.

Hope St., between 37th and 38th Sts.; protests against opening of said street. Denied.

Hasse St.; ord. of intention to improve Hasse St. between Sierra St. and the east city boundary. Adopted.

Hoover St.; pet. from So. Hoover and W. Vernon Imp. Assn. requesting Council to make a deal with the Railway Co. whereby the Railway Co. shall deed its private right of way to the City and in return receive a franchise from Santa Barbara Ave. to the city limits, thus bringing Hoover St. into such a status that it may be improved and sewers laid and crossings at street grade established. Ref. to the City Atty. and Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Ivarene Ave.; ord. establishing the curb lines on Ivarene Ave. between Vine St. and Whittier Ave. Adopted.

Lillian Way; ord. establishing the grade of Lillian Way from Santa Monica Boulevard to Melrose Ave Adopted.

Lillian Way, Willoughby to Melrose; pet. from A. C. Parsons for permission to improve by priv. contract. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Lord St.; final ord. for the sewering of Lord St. from Arroyo de los Posos main sewer to Judson street. Adopted.

Long View Ave.; ord. establishing the curb line on each side of Long View Ave. between Vine St. and Roberts Ave. Adopted.

Main St.; ord. fixing and establishing the curb line on each side of Main St. between Slauson Ave. and Manchester Ave. Adopted.

Also ord. establishing the grade of Main St. from Slauson Ave. to Manchester Ave. Adopted.

Mesa St., San Pedro; final ord. ordering the construction of a sewer in Mesa St., from 22d to 20th Sts. Adopted.

Mateo St. Spur Track; ordinance extending the time for the completion of a railway spur track to cross Santa Fe Ave. and Mateo St., as provided by Ordinance No. 20,637 (New Series) for a period of six months from January 26th. Adopted.

Metzler Drive; pet. from Frank McDonnell, et al, asking the Council to take the necessary proceedings to erect all retaining walls necessary for the opening and excavating to grade, Metzler Drive from North Broadway north to the point where the road runs west, at the expense of the city. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

McKinley Ave.; ord. establishing the name of that certain street known as "McKinley Avenue" lying between Fortieth street and Slauson Ave. as "McKinley Ave." Adopted.

Mountain View Ave.; pet. of David Barry for change of name of Mount View or Mountain View Ave. from Wilshire Boulevard to the Mountain View Tract, to Crenshaw Boulevard. Granted.

Melrose Ave.; ord. establishing the grade of Melrose Ave. from Cole Ave. to Lillian Way. Adopted.

Melrose Ave. Cole Ave. to Lillian Way; pet. from A. C. Parsons for permission to improve by priv. contract. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Normandie Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Normandie Ave. from Sunset Blvd. to Hollywood Blvd. Adopted.

New Depot St., from Figueroa to College; protests against change of grade. Set for hearing Jan. 10.

Olive Ave.; pet. from C. G. Whittier, et al, for the improvement of Olive Ave. between Gower and Vine Sts., Bond Act. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Pico St.; ordinance of intention to improve Pico St. between Second Ave. and Alta Ave. Adopted

Sichel St.; pet. from Olson J. Ives, et al., for an arc lamp on Sichel St. bet. Aves. 26 and 28. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Stephenson Ave., bet. Avery St. and Santa Fe Ave.; Council ordered new sewer built on northerly side of said street.

Stephenson Ave.; pet. from City of Whittier, submitting resolution requesting the Council to repair Stephenson Ave. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Spence St.; final ord. for improving Spence St. from 7th St. to Venice Ave. Adopted.

San Pasqual Ave.; resolution authorizing condemnation proceedings to be brought in the name of the city to acquire for street and other municipal purposes lands between the southeasterly line of San Pasqual Ave. and a point 21 feet east of the east boundary line of the city. Adopted.

Stanford Ave.; final ord. for improving Stanford Ave. from 45th St. to 135 feet northerly. Adopted.

Tropico Road District; pet. from Minnie G. Brown, for the vacation of certain streets, etc., in Tropico Road District. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Terrace Drive; ord. abandoning all proceedings for vacation of a portion of Terrace Drive lying between Lots 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 69 and 70, Block E, of North Elysian Heights No. 2. Adopted.

Townsend St.; ord. establishing the grade of Townsend St. from Fountain Ave. to Santa Monica boulevard. Adopted.

Townsend St.; ord. establishing the grade of Townsend St. from Santa Monica Blvd. to Melrose Avenue Adopted.

Temple St.; in regard to the power of the Council to compel the Los Angeles Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge on Vermont Ave. across Temple St. or to compel the company to make a fill in Temple St. City Atty. reported that there can be no question as to the legal right of the Council so to do.

City Atty. also reported that he had conferred with said company and they will decide on a course of action within a week. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Townsend St., Willoughby to Melrose; pet. from A. C. Parsons for permission to improve by private contract. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Victorine St.; ord. establishing the name of Victorine St. extending from Sierra St. easterly. Adopted.

Vernon Ave. Bill Boards; pet. from J. P. Brett, complaining of the condition of Bulletin Boards at 1695 Vernon Ave. Ref. to Bd. of Health for immediatae attention.

Vermont and Western; report of the Board of Park Commissioners, requesting that the Council instruct the City Engineer to make surveys for the extension of Vermont and Western Aves. to a connection with Griffith Park, these entrances to connect with Vermont Ave. and Mocohuenga Canyon. Adopted.

Victor Ave.; pet. from C. W. Sylvester, et al, for the improvement of Victor Ave. and St. Andrews Place between Maplewood Ave. and Melrose Ave., Bond Act. Also for change of name of Victor Ave. to St. Andrews Place between Santa Monica St. and Melrose Ave. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Westmoreland Ave.; ord. abandoning all proceedings for the opening of Westmoreland Ave. from Ninth St. to San Marino St. Adopted.

Willoughby and Waring Aves.; pet. from A. C. Parsons for permission to improve, by privaate contract, Willoughby Ave. from Cole Ave. to Vine St. and Waring Ave., from Cole Ave. to Lillian Way. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Western Ave., Park Tract; pet. from J. W. Dolan Co. for vacation of portions of certain alleys in Block B, Western Ave. Park Tract. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Waring Ave.; ord. establishing the grade of Waring Ave. from Cole Ave. to Vine St. Adopted.

Alleys; ord. of intention to improve first Alley east of Los Angeles street between Third street and Boyd street. Adopted. Also, the first alley south of Third St. between the alley east of Los Angeles St. and San Pedro St.; also the first alley north of Boyd St. between Wall St. and San Pedro St. Adopted.

Alleys; pet. from A. I. Shapiro, asking for the changing and establishing of the grade of the first alley south of First St. from Witmer St. to Lucas Ave., and also of the first alley west of Lucas Ave. from Second St. to the alley north, and thereafter for the improvement of said alleys to the changed grade of said alleys. Denied.

Also, petition from W. S. Fullerton, et al, asking for the improvement of the first alley south of First St. from Witmer St. to the first alley west of Lucas Ave. and of the first alley west of Lucas Ave. from Second St. to the alley north, to the present established grade. Granted.

Alley; ordinance extending time with which to commence proceedings for condemnation of property for opening of alley to a width of 20 feet from 8th to 9th Sts. between Main and Los Angeles Sts. Adopted.

BIDS RECEIVED

3rd St.; for improving from Saratoga St. to 341 feet southeast of Saratoga St.; also a portion of Savannah St.

Buena Vista St.; for sewer construction from Temple St. to Fort Moore Place.

Cincinnati St.; for improving from Forest to Evergreen.

Francis Ave.; for improving from Vermont to 701 feet east.

Normandie Ave.; for improving from Washington to Jefferson.

North Broadway; for improving from Ave. 18 to 62 feet east of the L. A. River.

Westmoreland Ave.; for improving from 7th to 9th Sts.

Waterloo St.; for improving from Reservoir St. to 291 feet south of Elsinore St.

BIDS AWARDED

Ave. 18; for street improvement from N. Broadway to Mozart St.

Broadway; for sewer construction from Fort Moore Place to 89 feet northeast of California St.

Benita Place; for street improvement from Selma Ave. to Sunset Blvd.

Buena Vista St.; for sewer construction from Sunset Blvd. to Fort Moore Place.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

Bill Boards; City Atty. instructed to prepare an ordinance regulating bill boards.

Bonfires; ord. amending present ord. so that property owners and residents of the city formerly the City of Hollywood, can burn waste papers, shavings, etc. Adopted.

Charter Commission Thanked; Council extended to charter revision committee a vote of thanks for service rendered.

Charter Amendments; ordinance providing for amendments to charter and ordering same submitted to a vote of the people. Adopted.

New City Clerk; Lorin A. Handley appointed by Council for unexpired term of City Clerk.

City Clerk Investigation; investigation of office of City Clerk ordered carried on under direction of City Auditor.

Cow Limits; recommendation of Bd. of Health that cow limits be extended from 38th and Hooper to Vernon and west on Vernon to South Park. Ref. to Pub. Welfare Com.

City Engineer not to Go to Paving Conference; request of the Mayor that an appropriation of $250 be allowed the City Engineer for the purpose of attending the Convention of the Organization of City Officials for the Standardizing of Paving Specifications, to be held in New York. Denied.

Electric Signs; pet. from W. H. Clune, et al., asking for an amendment to ordinance with reference to electric signs on the tops of buildings. Ref. to Fire Com.

Eastlake Park; contract for merry-go-round privilege awarded to Louis Gahard for two years for $1,200.

Firemen's Pension Fund Wanted; Fire Com. recommended that Council provide by charter amendment a firemen's relief and pension fund, also a police relief and pension fund. Ref. to Charter Revision Com.

Ferry; petition for ferry franchise from Wilmington to Terminal Island. Denied. as city will probably establish a municipal ferry as promised prior to consolidation.

Fire Escapes; pet. of T. Wiesendanger, et al. asking an amendment to the building ordinance, relative to fire escapes. Ref. to a Com. of the Whole.

Howard Tract; ordinance accepting the offer of dedication for alley purposes of a certain private avenue shown in the Howard Tract. Adopted.

Industrial District; pet. from Edward Bell, et al, asking the council to establish an industrial dist. on both sides of Central Ave. bet. 50th and 51st streets, including the lot known as 1122 E. 50th St. so as to enable the establishment of shops that will have 10 h. p. motors in that district. Ref. to Pub. Welfare Com.

Industrial District; pet. from E. W. Foster recommending that Main St. from 11th to 36th Sts. be included in the Industrial district. Ref. to Pub. Welfare Com.

Liquor Ordinance; resolution from the Civic Righteousness Committee of the Church Federation, protesting against proposed amendment of the Liquor Ordinance. Filed.

Lights in Gardena; pet. from G. L. Leese for electric lights in Gardena. Ref. to Bd. of Pub. Wks. with instructions that they investigate and if possible that they install some lights immediately.

More Money For Civil Service; report of the Civil Service Commission requesting the appropriation of $1000, approximately $750 of which will be used for examination expenses and $250 in the publication of their annual report. Granted.

Municipal Ferry; resolution authorizing Bd. Pub. Wks. to advertise for bids and to award and enter into the necessary contract for a municipal ferry boat and landings. Adopted. This is intended for the municipal ferry between San Pedro, Wilmington and Terminal Island.

Metal Window Frames; pet. from the So. Cal. Window Co. asking for amendment to Ord. 19900, relating to metal frames. Ref. to Bldg. Insp.

Maternity Hospital; request of the Board of Health that the sum of $25 per month be appropriated to the maintenance of the Maternity Hospital on South Utah St. Granted.

New Subdivision; map of Tract No. 647 a new subdivision lying west of Western Avenue and north of Pico St. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Old Reservoir; message of the Mayor requesting that the Park Department be authorized to lay pipe connecting the old reservoir with Eastlake Park. Ref. to City Atty.

Picketing; pet. from Fred C. Wheeler, asking that no jail sentences be given for picketing. Filed.

Railway Extension Wanted; pet. from L. M. Story, et al., for extension of railway from Sunset blvd. past Griffith Park at Ivanhoe. Filed.

Safety Devices for Elevators; report of the Boiler Inspector, requesting an amendment to Ord. No. 19128, requesting each passenger elevator to be equipped with an automatic device, which will prevent the starting of the elevator while the door is open and which will also prevent the door being opened when the elevator is not level with the floor. Adopted and the City Atty. instructed to prepare ord.

Tract No. 1060; Map adopted.

Tract No. 269; Map adopted.

Traffic Ordinance; new ord. to regulate traffic on city sts. Adopted.

San Pedro Street Names; pet. from San Pedro Cham. of Com., suggesting certain changes in names of sts. in San Pedro. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Traffic Regulation; Council ordered an ordinance prepared regulating the opening of manholes and repairing of conduits in congested districts during busy hours of the day; also to regulate the repairing and laying of tracks during busy hours. Legislation Com. was requested to consider the erection of safety stations at Temple Block and junction of Main, Spring and 9th Sts

Violet St. Playground; request of the Playground Com. for authority to use approximately $1500 of its funds for improvements on the club house at Violet Street Playground. Granted.

BANK CLEARINGS

Los Angeles bank clearings from Dec. 21 to 27, inclusive, showing comparisons with corresponding weeks of 1909 and 1908:

	1910.	1909.	1908.
December 21	$ 3 200,733.14	$2,840,405.39	$1,460,038.14
December 22	2,633,357.63	2,101,896.54	1,405,596.93
December 23	2,342,673.67	2,067,167.50	1,525,725.62
December 24	2,374,222.28	2,670,070.55	1,640,339.79
December 26	Holiday	2,140,373.08	1,837,542.31
December 27	3,311,070.67	2,585,093.47	Holiday
Total	$13,862,057.39	$14,405,006.53	$7,869,242.79

BUILDING PERMITS

From Dec 1st to Dec 23rd, 1910, inclusive, J. J. Backus, Chief Inspector of Buildings, issued 684 permits amounting to $1,272,180, which are classed as follows:

Class A, Rfed Concrete	2	$169,185
Class C	17	126,388
Class D, 1 story frame	239	356,594
Class D, 1½ story	34	81,503
Class D, 2 story	50	271,626
Class D, 3 story	3	68,500
Class D, 4 story	1	25,000
Churches (all classes)	1	180
Public Buildings (city)	7	75,100
Sheds, Barns (frame)	128	20,103
Foundations only	1	1,200
Brick alterations	33	26,795
Frame alterations	166	48,906
Demolitions	1	100
Miscellaneous	1	1,000
Grand total	684	$1,272,180

Comparisons with last year:
From Dec. 1st to Dec. 23rd, 1909, inclusive... 546 $1,047,622

Compiled by Mark C. Cohn, Chief Clerk.

LET THE CANAL BE REALLY THE PEOPLE'S HIGHWAY

Congress will do well to act favorably upon President Taft's recommendation that the interstate railroads be prevented by law from engaging in the steamship business between eastern and western coast ports, via Panama, when the canal is completed.

If the railroads are permitted to establish steamship lines through the canal, it means that the history of the Southern Pacific's scandalous use of the Pacific Mail, to discourage sea traffic and divert it to its own lines, will be repeated. By some shrewd trick and manipulation under cover, the transcontinental systems, of which there are now three in California, will put themselves in a position to dominate the sea route again, thus rendering the canal of no great practical value, so far as water competition is concerned.

Congress undoubtedly has authority to carry out the President's wishes. Since it already has enacted a law which prohibits the ownership in a single company of parallel railroad lines, which should be competitive, it is apparent that it also has the Constitutional power to prevent a railroad from owning or controlling a steamship company that would be only a nominal competitor.

The Panama Canal should be what it was intended to be, the people's highway, a guarantee of cheap passenger and freight transportation, absolutely free from the taint of monopoly.—Sacramento Bee.

CHARTER AMENDMENTS TO BE EXPLAINED AT CITY CLUB LUNCHEON TODAY

At the regular weekly luncheon of the City Club to be held at the Westminster Hotel today (Saturday) at 12:15 p. m. Lewis R. Works will speak on "The Proposed Charter Amendments."

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM

New York dispatches have it that Wall Street is threatening that in the event of reform legislation being considered at the present session of Congress, direful financial happenings shall come upon the country.

But Secretary of the Treasury McVeagh announces that "So far as the financial situation of the country is concerned, it is absolutely sound. I have," he says, "absolutely no apprehension of any depression."

Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, adds his mite of comfort as follows:

"There is," he says, "no better exponent of the prosperity of our country than the fact that we have abundant crops and employment for labor along all lines, insuring a demand for those crops. All considerations justify the conclusion that the agricultural condition of the country is prosperous today and promising for the future."

The Nation's finances are sound; there are abundant crops. Why, then, should the country be in danger of depression?

There can be no depression unless it be deliberately brought about by Wall Street to intimidate Congress.

And if Wall Street takes such a course, there will be but one thing for the country to do, clip the claws of Wall Street; take away its dangerous power to work the whole Nation injury.—San Francisco Star.

A Vital Difference

Our political life is, and must always be, in the hands of three classes of men—bosses, demagogues and genuine leaders. And while it is certain that the day of bosses is passing, it is not equally certain that their places will always be taken by genuine leaders, rather than by demagogues. In any meeting of men, the meeting as a whole can not possibly take the initiative, and every one speak at once. Some individual must take the lead, be it only to declare the meeting open, or to nominate a temporary chairman. So, throughout the conduct of a meeting, every act, every resolution must proceed from some individual, even when it represents the will of the whole body, and is, in fact, indorsed and voted for by the whole body. All political action, must, therefore originate in individuals, no matter how democratic our political system may be. And the emergence of these individuals is determined rather by natural selection than by popular vote, which can not, indeed, be exercised until after they have emerged. It will remain to be seen whether these originating individuals are to be bosses, demagogues, or real leaders, men of wisdom and good-will. The bosses are those who, by bribes of various sorts, more or less corrupt as the case may be, have already got hold of the voters and can "swing them into line," as the phrase runs. But it is becoming evident, and daily more evident, that the American people are waking up to the evil of this system of corrupt consideration, whether on a small or a large scale, and are determined to get rid of it, root and branch.—Charles Johnston, in the Citizens' Bulletin, Cincinnati.

The Literary Digest, published weekly in New York, is quite the reverse of other periodicals. Instead of furnishing original items, articles or editorials, it gives an able digest of the news, opinions, thoughts, and reviews of important papers and magazines the world over.

OUR INDUSTRIAL MASSACRE

Half a million employees of the various industries throughout the United States are killed or incapacitated every year. Estimated at the low average of $500 apiece, this means a cash loss to the country of $250,000,000 annually. According to competent engineers half of this loss is unnecessary, and could be prevented if employers would adopt those safeguards which are being successfully used abroad. Through the failure of American employers to adopt these safeguards we are losing, unnecessarily, the service of 250,000 workers annually, which, at the lowest computation, are worth $125,000,000.

An industrial massacre of thousands of wage-earners took place last year and raised no outcry, perhaps because the killings and maimings were spread over twelve months throughout the entire country. That massacre is continuing today. Besides the money loss, think of the wives widowed and the children made fatherless; of the pain and the sorrow. Obviously, the wage earning capacity of the great majority of laborers is not enough to enable them to lay aside a sum sufficient for the emergency of accident, disease or old age. More particularly is this true when the rearing of a large family is in question, and during unproductive periods.

No workman should be forced by circumstances into accepting charity. The American laboring man's only capital is his ability to perform his daily work, and this he hazards against disease and accident. The Lord help him when he becomes old and is unable to work. There is nothing left for him but the poorhouse or the grave. Has the time not come when we should better such a condition? * * *—George F. Howell in The Boston Common.

THE NATIONAL MUNICIPAL LEAGUE

(Continued from Page 7)

great value to students and administrators. The constant and increasing use of these reports is the surest test of their value.

Through its executive officers the league is in constant touch with local and national movements concerned with municipal questions. Supplying literature, answering inquiries, suggesting plans, ways, and means, and coordinating the forces making for municipal improvement constitute their every-day duties and activities. The constantly increasing correspondence is a further indication of the usefulness of the league in this direction.

The president of the National Municipal League is the Hon. Charles J. Bonaparte of Baltimore, a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet, first as Secretary of the Navy and later as Attorney-General. The treasurer is George Burnham, Jr., of Philadelphia, who, until his retirement from business, was a member of the firm and treasurer of the Baldwin Locomotive Works. The secretary is Clinton Rogers Woodruff of Philadelphia.

The vice-presidents are A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University; George McAneny, the president of the borough of Manhattan; Charles Richardson of Philadelphia, one of the founders of the league; George W. Guthrie, for three years Mayor of Pittsburgh; Walter L. Fisher, the Chicago traction expert; Henry L. McCune, Kansas City, formerly judge of the Court of Common Pleas; and Thomas N. Strong of Portland, Oregon; Horace E. Deming of New York is chairman of the executive committee.

FOR SALE BY

Remington Olmsted

REAL ESTATE & INVESTMENTS

630 Security Bldg. Phone F 1703

San Rafael Heights

The most beautiful and picturesque residence section near Los Angeles and Pasadena. Unsurpassed mountain view. Convenient to cars with every city convenience. The following properties are considerably under value:

$2,500—Corner Nithsdale avenue near Annandale Country Club. Size 150x220.

$2,500—Adjoining the above. Size 225x150.

$6,000—Corner San Rafael avenue. 1¾ acres, with several large pines and fine scenic effects. Size 350x210.

$10,000—About 1¼ acres. Covered with live oaks. Large street frontage.

$15,000—San Rafael avenue. Eight-room modern house. About one acre well improved. A beautiful country home.

Several Arroyo bluff sites. Three acres and up. The finest residence sites in Southern California.

For sale or rent. The most artistic suburban home near Los Angeles.

Terminal Island (in Los Angeles city), seven-room cottage on 45 ft. lot. Well located with prospective business value. Price, $3,000.

Glendale. Two lots 50x150 each in the center of town. Unusual bargains. Price, $700 each.

REMINGTON OLMSTED

Real Estate and Investments, 630 Security Bldg. Phone F 1703

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms, bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38 on lower floor; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.
Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

. . . DIRECTORY . . .

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

APARTMENTS

THE ST. REGIS, Housekeeping 237 S. Flower. A7336; Main 2290

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DRY GOODS

VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

EXCURSIONS

BALLOON ROUTE, L. A. Pac. Co. Station, Hill St., bet. 4th and 5th. 10355: Broadway 4000.

MEN'S FURNISHINGS

HARRIS & FRANK, 437-43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS

UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

PIANOS AND ORGANS

GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

BARTLETT MUSIC CO., Autopiano Agents, 231 S. Broadway

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

REAL ESTATE

MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT

BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING

BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

311 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

Home A7336 Sunset Main 2290

The St. Regis
Housekeeping Apartments

FIVE MINUTES WALK to Third and Broadway. Modern Apartments and Single Rooms at moderate prices. Private Telephone in each Apartment or Single Room. 237 S. Flower St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with eachcar.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT - SPEED - SAFETY

Mt. Lowe

The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Cal State Library 7-26-11

Vol. X. No. 2 Los Angeles, California, January 7, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

HOUR-GLASS AND SCYTHE

Just as Nature has thoughtfully provided us with gold, silver, nickel and copper in convenient relative values for coinage, and with the foot and hand's breadth and the thousand steps (full swing of the leg) for measures, so she has arranged the movements of earth, sun and moon for a neat and orderly division of time. The stupidest savage could recognize the twenty-four hour period that we call a day. The barbarian could approximate the year, with its change of seasons and journeying of the sun; but it took all the wisdom of our best civilization to work out the true year of 365 days for three years, and then 366 for one, except that the century years are leap years only once in 400 years. Even that is not absolutely accurate, and when we get along to the year 10,000, eighty centuries hence, we must throw out one leap year every 10,000 years and make the divisor 4,000.

Thus we note that the year is a dignified, intricate and altogether remarkable thing—on the very summit of practical human wisdom.

No wonder then that we stand reverently uncovered and think great thoughts as one year comes to an end and another begins. We have not many of these precious beads on our string. At best there may be a hundred, but the most we expect is about 80. Life insurance tables will not give us any such figure, unless we are well advanced toward it. Real velvet begins about 60, and indeed the man who gets in fifty years of hard work, good times, growth of soul and a record of things done has no cause to rail at fortune—and that is the kind of man that does not whine, but is ready to face the finish—if he must—like a gentleman and a soldier. Better fifty years of real life than a cycle of monkey dinners.

Farewell to you, then, year 1910, thou piece of man's life—fragment of human destiny. We love to think of you not for what you gave nor for what you took away from any one of us—insignificant pigmies that we are, mere atomic units in the vast procession of the race—but for what measure of advance you have allotted to us in the mass, what the world has won, or maybe lost, as you turned the hour-glass back and over again twenty-four times three hundred and sixty-five. Let others make lists of the great ones who have passed beyond during this twelve month, the lords of finance and of industry, the wise, the lucky and perhaps even the good, and let others enter up the so-called chief events of the year, the disasters, inventions, enterprises, disputes, riots and political changes—all these matters have to do only with individuals, and they mean but little in the grand scheme of things—but for us there is the year as a whole and the world as a whole, and the great question: Was there progress—much or little?

As we see it, there was progress, vast, splendid and almost terrifying, in the year 1910. The world was better for man to live in at the end of the year than at the beginning. It was not only better materially—a form of progress that is insured to us by the ingenuity and energy of men—but it was also morally better, in the clearer understanding among men of their relations to one another, in the growth of the altruistic spirit, in the advance of democracy in governments and in the better comprehension of the practical problems that lie in the path of man's improvement.

The world never moves fast enough to satisfy the radical and it always moves too fast to satisfy the reactionary. The former, gifted with imagination and sympathy, sees the world as it ought to be, with poverty conquered and toil reduced to a minimum, and he will brook no delay in the forward march of events. The conservative, having enough of this world's goods to be comfortable himself, and blandly oblivious of the sufferings of others, is thrilled with fear at each threatened change, knowing that it may imperil his greasy contentment. Between these stands the rational progressivist, striving always for advance but wary of the haste that may precipitate wreckage. The extremes are stagnation on the one side and revolution on the other. The middle ground is normal, social evolution.

The year 1910 may fall far short of the hopes of the radical, and its significance may or may not be appreciated by the conservative. But the year contained enough on the side of moral advance to fill the heart of the practical reformer with new hope. To mention only a few out of the many: The Lloyd-George budget, shifting a great burden of taxation from the poor to the rich and opening up the unused lands of England; understanding by the American people of the special interest form of taxation in the tariff; complete overthrow of the stand-pat idea in American legislation; destruction of the corporation machine in California and in many other states; adoption of short ballot, direct legislation and commission system in 60 American cities, making a total of 100; acceptance of the doctrine that this government is and must be a democracy and the adoption of democratic institutions in many states; extension of sanitary work in the cities and through the states; city planning and the attacks on the slum; recognition of the fact that poverty is a crime of society as a whole and may be prevented; competitive merit system advances its lines; postal savings banks started; doctrine of "new nationalism," that the laws should be framed to give to every man, as far as practicable, the same opportunity in life, promulgated by Roosevelt and generally accepted throughout the middle states and the west.

Yes; it was a goodly year and a vast gain over any of its predecessors. It is one of the hopeful things about progress that it compounds on itself, that it makes the food it feeds on, that as it supplies one demand it creates a dozen others. Thus we may look for a still better year in 1911—

To the Patrons of the California Weekly

BY AUTHORITY OF our Board of Directors, I have turned over to the publishers of the Pacific Outlook the subscription list and whatever of good will attaches to the California Weekly. It will be necessary, under the postal regulations, for each subscriber to signify his willingness to receive the Pacific Outlook in lieu of the California Weekly and this may be done by letter or postal card addressed to the Pacific Outlook. I ask as a personal favor that this willingness be at once signified, chiefly because arrangements are making which seem likely to result in joining the forces which stand for Right Things — for the simultaneous publication at San Francisco and Los Angeles of a weekly paper that will be able to do what the California Weekly attempted to do and failed, through lack of advertising patronage.

It will require a little time to bring this about and the first step toward it will be for each subscriber for the California Weekly to notify the Pacific Outlook of his willingness to accept that paper in place of The Weekly.

On behalf of the Pacific Outlook, I wish to say that it has ever stood for what the California Weekly stood for and is a good paper, though not what it will speedily become if the friends of The Weekly join forces with the friends of the Pacific Outlook in striving to give California a State Weekly worthy of the State.

With great hopefulness for the enterprise, I am in entire sincerity,

A. J. Pillsbury, Ed. Mgr.
The California Weekly and as for 1912, we fairly hold our breadth as we think of the great things scheduled for that important piece of eternity.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE VACANT CHAIR

When Senator Dolliver, the big lion of Insurgency, died, it gave the Governor of Iowa a momentary chance of which he made the most possible. The Legislature meeting in January will elect Dolliver's successor, and that body is progressive. But the Governor is a masked reactionary, a type with which we are all familiar, the man who is not in favor of having factions in our dear old party, and after he is elected you find he belongs to the other side.

By this kind of a rear entrance process, the Senatorship of a day fell, to one "Lafe" Young, who edits a stand-pat, machine newspaper in the state of Iowa, and was perhaps entitled to some kind of compensation for the pursuit of journalism under hard conditions. He will sit in the Senate about a month with three weeks checked out for holiday vacation.

However, that was long enough for Lafe to show what sense of the fitness of things he does not possess. It was a chance for a live jackal to bark at a dead lion. Senator Cummins introduced a resolution calling for a revision of the tariff by separate schedules —a program now generally accepted by both parties—and the momentary occupant of Dolliver's seat made a speech, in which he lauded the Payne-Aldrich tariff as the best the country had ever seen, and declared that revision downwards was dangerous, and that the people of his state were more interested as producers in the raising of tariff, than as consumers in its reduction. This is exactly the reverse of the "Iowa idea" promulgated by Cummins and Dolliver, which gave that state a unique position in the first rank of Insurgency.

Inasmuch as the dead man, whom the people of Iowa loved and followed, had fought the Payne-Aldrich bill and had denounced it as an iniquitous measure, and as the voters of that state had shown repeatedly at the polls their agreement with that point of view, Mr. Young's declaration has rank only as a sublime piece of impertinence.

There was a story our grand-fathers used to tell about John Randolph of Roanoke, the satirist of the House of Representatives in the early years of the last century, that seems to fit the situation. One of Randolph's colleagues in the House from the state of Virginia, his nearest political friend and ally, died, and the people of that district elected in his place a young man of the variety now popularly known as "Smart Aleck," a youth with some gift of speech and a burning desire to get himself noticed. On the very first opportunity he secured the floor and delivered himself of a fierce attack on Randolph, evidently hoping to draw a reply that would give him a reflected fame. But Randolph sat through the whole of the speech, staring absently off into the distance, and at the end, when there was expectant silence, the old gladiator never moved. A day or two passed and Randolph spoke several times, but made no reference to the attack. At last, speaking on some topic in which the young man's predecessor had been especially interested, he chose a moment when the whole House was hanging with acute intentness on his words to refer to "our beloved colleague from the —— district, whose seat is now unhappily vacant."

And so might Cummins have spoken of the seat of Dolliver.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager
C. D. WILLARD Editorial Contributor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

✣ ✣ ✣

AGAINST CHARTER REFORM

The progressive and courageous reformers of our city have driven horses and wagons and steam rollers over the reactionary elements that have opposed them until the latter are reduced to a fine state of panic. In the language of the day, they are pretty well buffaloed. An amusing evidence of this appeared in their treatment of the proposition to amend the charter.

Everybody who possesses even the most elementary knowledge of city affairs knows that in a place growing as rapidly as Los Angeles and one entering upon so many new enterprises, changes in the organic law of the city are a frequent necessity. We amend our state constitution, more or less, every two years, and we pass quite a volume of legislation. The fact that some of the amendments adopted or the legislation passed may not be needed or may even be unwise does not affect the essential need for the amendment and legislation as a whole.

We can amend our charter only once in two years, and every time when that period comes around there is plenty that needs to be done. To be sure, it usually happens that at the same time, while we are about it, the people are given a chance to vote on a number of governmental reforms—but they are not compelled to adopt them unless they choose.

Usually, however, they do choose and hence these reactionary tears. No sooner was the suggestion made, nearly a year ago, by Council, for the appointment of a charter commission, than the stand-pat newspapers began to protest against any more "charter tinkering." They did not wait to find out what was to be done. They were "agin" it anyhow because it might have some reform mixed in. No use to explain that neither commission nor Council has any power to adopt these amendments. All those bodies can do is to lay them before the voters. If they are not what the people want, they will be voted down, and if they are what the people want, then everybody should be satisfied and happy; for the very object of a charter, under our system, is to provide the kind of government the people desire.

When the commission brought in its report these same newspapers instantly condemned the whole work, and in fact they had declared against it while still in the process of making and before any of its provisions were known. Their object was to prevent the amendments from going before the people. The usual anti-reform program is to smother things in committee and not allow them to get out in the open.

The cold fact that lies back of all these maneuvers is that these people have no use at all for the judgment of the voters. They look upon the general run of humanity as mighty poor stuff compared with their own august selves. Their conception of government is an oligarchy of beings of superior wisdom—they to be the said oligarchs. And they are in mortal terror of any kind of reform, having learned by experience that every change brings us nearer to the untrammeled rule of the people.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE HORRIBLE RUBBERNECK

When Hoxsey fell, the police and his professional comrades ran to the spot and formed a cordon to keep back the souve nir hunters. In other cities when a similar disaster took place, the fiends had not hesitated even to lay hands on the dead to secure the desired mementos.

So the reports tell us. It is gratifying to be able to record the fact that no such disgraceful scenes were enacted here. It may have been because the police prevented it, but we prefer to believe, and lacking evidence to the contrary will believe, that there was a different quality in this crowd from that displayed in other cities.

The rubberneck is one of the horrible by-products of the modern sensational newspaper. To be sure the genius itself is old as the race, Lot's wife, who turned to look, being the first example in written history; but the casual spectator and curious observer of former days bears only a distant relationship to the fierce, tireless and desperate rubberneck of the modern epoch. Of the same species, perhaps, they are as different as the cat and the tiger, the poodle and the wolf, the gentleman and the gorilla.

Mere curiosity is a venal sin, in which the best of us indulge at times. It contains a fair element of respect for the person or thing gazed at—it may even partake of reverence or veneration. Rubbernecking, on the other hand, is a vice, frenzied, reckless and terrible. It is not only lacking in reverence, it does not even respect the commonest decencies of life. It attends exhibitions in the hope of beholding sudden death. It contemplates agony with joy. It will rob the dead, even breaking open graves, if necessary, and would tear the clothes from the back of the bride. Is it a vice forsooth? A combination of all vices and crimes from murder to body snatching!

We say it is the newspapers that have made these wild beasts, these monsters of morbidity and turned them loose on society. Hearst has more of these unspeakable creatures put down to his discredit than any Frankenstein in the business. An inconceivable breed of women-things read and gorge themselves on his "sassiety" dope, and when Miss Kissie Maginnis marries the Duc de Scrofula, they descend on the Chapel of St. Bonbon like a swarm of African ants, and loot things to the bone. Good Bishop Twadley, who, assisted by a batch of subordinate dignitaries, was to perform the holy office on that occasion, is knocked down in the mad rush for a piece of the bride's clothing, and has been talking about the French Revolution ever since.

No; we have no remedy to propose. We have reforms for just about all the ills that flesh is heir to—a whole pharmacopoeia full of them—but nothing adequate to the rubberneck distemper (rubberitis neckelongia). If we had our own way about it, we would reform it with an axe, even though that might make things a bit messy about our great cities for a time. It might pay, as Dr. Johnson suggested with regard to the Scotchmen, to catch them young and tame them. Or we might take a short cut, as it were, by guillotining some of our too enterprising newspaper publishers. The reader might think it over for us.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE REVERSE ENGLISH

The amazing record of him
"Who stole the livery of Heaven
To serve the Devil in,"

is quite equalled by the modern newspaper writers who boldly "swipe" the language and phrases of progress and reform and put them to the uses of reactionary bad government.

It gives one a weird feeling of uncertainty and unreality to read machine politics, graft and corporation scheming adroitly done over into the very words that we have seen heralding the growth of the democratic spirit and the rousing of civic probity.

Every bona fida product of man's honest toil has its pinchbeck imitation. Broadway and the Bowery in New York run parallel for miles about a block apart, and all along the Bowery there are stores almost the exact counterpart of the Broadway concerns, and you may buy therein the most incredible imitations of the Broadway articles, cheap enough, but rotten and false.

Note some of these distortions. When it is proposed to reduce the number of elective officers, on the principle of the short ballot, now universally accepted by sincere thinkers on government issues, the machine, which has long hidden behind the confusion of the long ballot, protests against depriving the people of their inalienable political rights. When the initiative and referendum are discussed, we are told that they are intended for the overthrow of Republican institutions. When we go after the higher-up grafters, we are warned against these socialistic attacks on property and these labor union schemes to interfere with the work of our great captains of industry.

The political parties of this state adopt platforms calling for certain legislative reforms. In order to present these in tangible, workable form, and, furthermore, in order to make good on the party pledges, committees are appointed—openly and regularly through the proper party machinery—to put these reforms into shape for the legislature to act upon. These committees are made up of many of the best and ablest men of the state. Their meetings have been open to the general public, and suggestions have been welcomed from every quarter. It would seem that such a process should commend itself to every citizen, especially as a contrast to the secret work of the lobby of the Southern Pacific, the agency that formerly owned our legislative body.

But this the reactionary papers describe as an attempt to coerce the legislature, cracking the whip of the boss over the terrified heads of the members, and as the cooking up of fads and fakes with which to rob the people of their rights.

Again, here is conservation, which is a general plan, devised and advocated by Pinchot, Roosevelt and many other sincere and far-sighted men, to preserve what remains of the natural resources of the country for the benefit of all the people, through processes of lease, royalty or common use, rather than for the exploitation of individuals. It is true that among the individuals who have heretofore benefited in the miscellaneous looting of these resources there were not a few who were people of small means; but it is also true that the biggest areas of land, the most valuable water courses, and the most splendid mining opportunities either were acquired outright and at the start by big corporations, or very soon fell into their hands. Nevertheless, the opponents of conservation, who are chiefly these corporations and their political and journalistic tools, base their entire case on sympathy with the" hardy prospector," the home-seeker and the enterprising upbuilders of new country, who are all frozen out by this narrow and niggardly policy.

Words are the undisputed property of those who wish to use them, and there is no law against newspaper men and politicians telling lies either directly or indirectly by false epithets, innuendo and distortion. Fortunately, the people have had a good deal of practice in making distinctions between truth and imitations of truth. Some of the latter work well for a time but they will not wear, and in the end their real nature always comes out. As for Truth, she can wait. She is used to waiting.

✣ ✣ ✣

SIX-YEAR HIGH SCHOOLS

(Contributed)

The time is ripe for including under local high-school supervision the first two years of college studies. The faculties of both Stanford and California, and those of the high schools throughout the state, all desire the change. The public will be for it as soon as the educational advantage is understood. No legislation is needed to perfect the transition of the freshman and junior college years to the high schools of the state; no jolt or maladjustment will occur, for the change has been long contemplated by both Berkeley and Stanford, and provision has been made therefor.

The six-year high school would mean fewer boys dropping out of school at an untimely age; it is exactly adapted to those who stop just short of a professional career, and also for those that expect to study a profession. This we believe is its principal argument for adoption; it leaves no gap between real vocational study and the public school. And secondly it will itself directly lead to training for a vocation, since its last two years will be used for vocational study in the case of all students who either cannot or should not go to a university.

No better investment can be made by any city than the addition to the high school of two years vocational study for such students, combined with a carefully prescribed course in subjects generally pursued in college. Such a school would equip both boys and girls with trades, without neglecting the usual branches of the higher education. In some communities these two years would be similar to trade schools; in others the obvious thing would be agricultural training, preparing future superintendents and managers of ranches.

Fresno has already taken this forward step. Los Angeles ought to catch up as early as possible. The obvious thing at Fresno was the agricultural school, and accordingly next year the fifth and sixth years of high school will provide for training in fruit-growing and other features of ranch life. In Los Angeles the conditions are such as to permit all the industries to be represented since there are several high schools each already having its specialty. The emphasis however would no doubt be laid on commercial training, in a city that anticipates as great a commercial future as is before Los Angeles.

What is most urgent, after caring for our physical need for water, fuel, transportation, power and other indispensables, is suitable schooling, for the little children first and then for the big children. All this we have managed fairly well, except at one point—the point where the children drop out of school in such appalling numbers, to come to naught, or else to succeed at far greater cost than necessary. This point is the high school, which must be remodeled if it is to merit the money put into it. The judgment of the recent convention of teachers was decidedly in favor of the six-year plan; where such harmony exists among the pedagogues there surely must be an obvious truth. This assertion is not proof against the logicians we admit, but we merely mean that what the pedagogues agree on is worth investigating, and the Fresno high school should be of interest to all Californians.

✣ ✣ ✣

PRESS COMMENT

Nearly two hundred cases of bad eggs shipped from Dallas to a Kansas City candy factory were seized by officers and showed 150,000,000 bacteria to the cubic centimeter. This is probably the largest number of arrests ever made in a single raid by an American police squad.—Los Angeles Herald.

Chicago boasts that more twins are born in that city than in any other. But who would think of striking Chicago for the first time, alone?—Detroit Times.

It is quite a natural supposition that there is a good deal of water in the bath-tub trust.—Buffalo Enquirer.

Up to the present time Dr. Cook's high regard of the public's opinion of him has not extended to a refund of that $80,000 he got from them on his lecture tour.—Southern Lumberman.

Intrenchment, more than retrenchment, seems to be the problem before the dear old Democratic party.—Southern Lumberman.

One of those Eastern roads might strengthen its argument for rate increases by submitting figures to show the passenger traffic to Oyster Bay has declined greatly of late months.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By THE WATCHMAN

Under Bonds to Keep the Peace Word comes from Washington that the progressive Republicans are to be placed under bonds to the administration to keep the peace and be good. They are informed that everything depends on their behavior. If they will keep their traces taught and their breasts snug up to the collar, no matter how much the collar galls their hot necks, much will be accomplished during the short session of congress. If not it will be all off as to legislation, the administration will be betrayed and the fault will be laid at the doors of the progressives. To which is added, they must not mind the blind bridles. The duty of the team is to answer the rein and the whip. What goes on in the driver's box is none of the team's business. The effrontery of all this would bristle the back of the tamest cat that ever snoozed under a kitchen stove, but humiliation can be endured if patriotism requires it. Whether it does or not depends on what it is that is proposed to be accomplished and for whose benefit. The good intentions of the "large, good natured person entirely surrounded by men who know exactly what they want" is not to be questioned, as it has not been from the start. The suspicion has been entertained that several blocks of a certain undesirable locality have within less than two years, been paved with his good intentions that have gone into the scrap pile. The good intentions of those to whom he has mainly looked for the fruition of his hopes are subject to the gravest question and not one measure should be permitted to escape the closest scrutiny of insurgent eyes. Nor can the Presidential "O. K." be accepted as conclusive. Better an uninterrupted tug-of-war until the 4th of March than the infliction upon the country of anything analogous to the tariff iniquity or the enacting into law of such a measure as the railroad bill was when it left the hands of Attorney-General Wickersham bearing the countersign of the President. It were better to do nothing than the wrong thing.

May We Instance the Alaska Coal Lands? God Almighty wrapped Alaska in a mantle of snow and ice but with a kind providence underlaid a good portion of it with coal of fine quality. The coal of Alaska belongs to the people of Alaska, at least so much of it as they may need to keep them warm, to generate their steam power, smelt their ores and propel their ships and locomotives, and they should have it at such a price as the mining and transportation of it, at fair rates of interest and of wages may permit, attendant risks of investment being well covered. These and other legitimate elements entering into production and distribution, and not the urgency of Alaskan necessities, should be the measure of the cost to Alaskans of Alaskan coal. Alaskans are urging that these coal lands be opened to development. The President is likewise urgent. There is great urgency. To facilitate this much needed forward movement whom has the president called into consultation? Senator Knute Nelson, who honestly believes that the only hope for the poor lies in God's abounding largess to the rich; Secretary Ballinger, who is a conservationist nolens-volens and willy-nilly; Senator Smooth, the financial and political representative of the polygamous infamy of the century; Senator Flint, whose predilicitions and affiliations are so well known as to require no comment; Representative Mondell, of Wyoming, as open an enemy to the spirit of conservation as the nation possesses. What sort of a leasing system of mining development are we to look for from that group of representatives of special interests? It should be clearly understood that the principle at issue is that the cost of coal to the consumer shall not be determined by the poignancy of the consumer's distress, but that the price shall be determined by the reasonable value of the services rendered in taking the people's coal from where God put it to where the people need it for use. The danger is that we shall be given the semblance of a righteous measure without the substance; that it will be as it was with the Wickersham railroad regulation bill, at every crucial point a skewer driven in in the interests of The Interests. Rather than submit to any such wrong it were better that Alaska remain undeveloped for decades. The price of being good should be the making of legislative measures good. Let the progressives toe that line and the American people will toe it with them and from that line they shall not be moved.

A Fault With the Reformatory Plan California needs a reformatory for first offenders, but rather worse than it needs this it needs a reformation of the existing penal and reformatory institutions, and such reformation is out of the realm of reasonable probabilities under the existing constitutionally provided penal system. A first step should be the repealing of Article X of the State Constitution. In the place of a board of prison directors, expert in nothing but politics, and greatly solicitous for the distribution of prison patronage, there should be a Department of Prisons and Reformatories headed by a "Man Who Knows" as general superintendent, empowered to organize his department and given authority, not alone over the prisons and any new reformatory that may be constructed, but over the reform schools and, what is even more important still, over the county and city jail systems. Such a department, wisely headed and adequately manned, treating the problems of criminality and delinquency as a whole, might easily so depopulate the penal institutions we have as to render a new one superfluous, but any system that leaves out of account control of the county jails and city prisons will yield no better results than would fighting the bubonic plague without paying any attention to the rats. The prison should be a manufactory, the reformatory a school for handicrafts, the reform school a school and the busiest bureau in the whole department should be that of parole. Mr. Lissner's committee, constituted to consider the reformatory idea, has done good work but appears not to have arisen to the full requirements of the occasion.

The De-Merit System Should Go Anyhow We cannot expect to realize from the present legislature all the good things in the Republican platform, and it is possible that the merit system of filling minor offices may not pull through, although it should in some satisfactory form. At all events the de-merit system of allowing one state official to fill subordinate offices in offices other than his own should be penalized and put an end to. There are officials who make it their business to foist their friends upon such other officials as have not the moral courage to say no, with the result that insubordination and lack of responsibility are rife in all the institutions of the state. What chance has a warden, for instance, to make good when he must find places for all the incompetents sent him by other state officials whose opposition he cannot very well afford to provoke. It has been said of Mr. Charles F. Curry that he probably secured more appointments under the San Francisco harbor board than any member of the harbor board, and there is hardly an office in the state that has not a Curry man in it. While Mr. Curry has been especially diligent in this particular other state officers have not been inattentive to their opportunities. The whole system is as pernicious as any well can be.

What Will Retard Power Development? It is easy to foresee that regulation and conservation of California's power resources are not going to be easy. In the case of the conservation of Alaskan coal the necessities of the Alaskans afford the cue needed by The Interests, so, in conserving our state sources of water power, the cue seized upon will be the fear of retarding electrical development. California needs to have a great deal of electric energy developed, a little more in fact than it can presently use in order that new uses may be found for it, but what will retard development? Suppose that the unregulated acquisition and exploitation of a certain source of water power promises to yield 400 per cent on the investment, if regulation were to cut the profit down to 200 per cent would that retard development? Would it do so to cut the profit down to 100 per cent? to 50? to 25? Would it retard development to limit the income to a fair rate of interest on the investment, plus an insurance premium to cover the risk of failure? No friend to California wants such legislation as will retard needed development of electrical energy, but we can better afford to cultivate patience than to submit to exploitation. Our legislators should bear in mind that all the electric energy there is in The People's and that whoever generates it where he can find opportunity, and conducts it to where it is needed, leaving to the user only to press the button to make his lights burn or his wheels go round, is worthy of a generous, steady, generation-long recompense, but by no means to the net results of the application of that power to industry for ever and aye. Our legislators should, if they can, find the point where development will be retarded and stick their peg on the safe side of that point.

Where Home Rule Really Is Needed Recently Alameda county's legislative delegation held a session in their own county for considering such changes in the county government act as relates to the particular class to which Alameda belongs or, rather, the particular class which Alameda county constitutes. That such a session of the delegation should be held within the county itself may be regarded as a concession. Usually such sessions are held at Sacramento and are mainly attended by members of the court house ring who demand what they want and enforce their demands with the assurance that, unless complied with, the legislator will find it difficult to get back to the legislature at the next session, a prophecy not infrequently fulfilled. The bill is generally fixed up, not wholly without regard to what the people at home may say and do, but with a livelier solicitude as to what the ring may do and not say if the schedule of salaries is not to their liking. The whole scheme of county government, by legislative delegation, falls far short of being government by, of and for the people. If this kind of legislating is to be done by each county's delegation in the legislature it should be done at home, on a day certain, after full notice to all men to appear and have their say, but a better way would be to have a county board of freeholders frame a county charter, within certain constitutional or statutory limitations, and so give to each county that measure of home rule that cities enjoy. The existing method of governing counties departs about as far from home rule as anything to be found under a monarchy. In short, the citizens have practically not a word to say either about the form of government or the taxes attendant upon it.

Pre-Election Guesses That Missed the Mark Nothing appeared to be plainer last spring than that Charles F. Curry and Frank Jordan had made an offensive and defensive alliance, the first to help Jordan into his old shoes and the second to gladhand the state in Curry's interests for governor. But the list of Jordan's appointees in the office of Secretary of State tends to negative the theory of that alliance. Indeed, before the primary was half over there were indications that Curry was becoming restive under the implication that Jordan was his man, as he probably was not, if we may infer as much from the nearly clean sweep Jordan has made of Curry's men in office. Rumor has it, too, that Jordan's official wings are to be much clipped before the present session of the legislature is half over. They will stand considerable clipping. The office is too big for the man. Especially should Jordan be relieved of all ex-officio duties on the Board of Examiners and State Lunacy Commission. He has his faults, but laziness is not one of them. He will work early and late, whereas Curry, pretty uniformly "let George do it," and yet his was the brain that devised and the hand that guided, but then Curry has a brain at once clear and strong, also a hand that is strong as well as glad. If capacity were the whole story nothing could be said against Charles F. Curry. Jordan is not in Curry's class, but he will work harder.

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

THE DATA for this department is supplied from the statistical bureau of the Municipal League of Los Angeles, but neither that organization nor any other has any control over, or is in any way responsible for, the general policy of PACIFIC OUTLOOK.

Increasing Bond Issues: The New York "Financier" protests against the rapid increase in the volume of municipal securities now thrown on the market. In November of 1910 there were 150 cities, so it says, that issued bonds aggregating 110 millions. It expresses the fear that many cities are drawing too heavily against their futures, particularly when they "issue 40-year or 50-year bonds to pay for a street pavement that will last only 18 or 20 years." The last point is certainly well taken, although it is usually only the surface of street paving that wears out. The over-bonding of cities rarely occurs, difficulty in placing the securities usually intervening as an automatic governor on that. The most over-bonded city in the union is the richest—New York. But the large and sudden increase, which so disturbs the "Financier," is almost exclusively caused by the cities entering upon utilities that formerly were left to private enterprise. This is in reality not an increase of debt but an addition to capital account. Some of these utilities may even develop into debt lifters, not only paying for themselves but for other things—non-productive things—as well. This is a form of debt—if we are to call it that—that is likely to increase more and more as cities widen their sphere of activity. As a rule it does not involve an increase in the gross volume of such securities thrown on the market, for if the work were not done by the people for themselves it would be done by private individuals—utility corporations. City bonds always sell at par or above, and under modern conditions of careful city engineering all the value of the bond goes into the improvement. Corporation bonds, on the other hand, frequently sell below par and sometimes exceed in their face aggregate the actual value of the property, owing to underwriters' rake-off and little tricks by the promoters. Hence it follows that the total demand on the money market is likely to be less under municipal ownership than under corporate. This is a statement that will call out sneers and jeers from the stand-patter, but it is true never the less.

Not for Us, Thank You! While we can find more or less of interest in nearly all discussions of municipal problems appearing in eastern papers and magazines, there is one topic about which we cannot, somehow, get up the least bit of enthusiasm, and that is the question, apparently all-absorbing at this season of the year, of how to remove the great volume of snow and ice from the sidewalks and street pavements. Some times a whole city is all torn up over this matter, the administration gets raked over the coals, Veritas and Pax Vobiscum write fiery letters to the papers, mass meetings are called—all because the streets are blocked up with great billows of snow. Snow is this fine, white, cold stuff they have back East in the winter time—that is to say it is white at the start-off, but its appearance after it has lain about for a day or two needs profanity to do it justice in description. We have plenty of municipal troubles in Los Angeles, including stand-pat newspapers that snarl at every kind of reform and improvement, but we do not have this dirty white stuff in our streets.

One City in Earnest:: There are probably 300 cities in this country that have anti-spitting ordinances, and now there is one city that proposes to enforce that law. This city is Boston, which, after several days of warning, proceeded to arrest all offenders. About 500 people were arrested in the first week or two, and gradually the fact that the city was in earnest came to be understood and the nuisance came to an end.

Effect of State Utilities Tax: There is very general alarm among the cities of California, large and small, over the effect of Amendment Number 1 and the new system of taxation of utility corporations. In many cases the new plan cuts off very considerable revenue from the city, enough to embarrass its operations seriously. There may be a corresponding gain on the side of the county, through the reduction of state taxes, but that does not help out the municipality which still has its local duties to perform. The property of the utility corporation situated in any city is still a cause of expense to the city. It must be policed and protected from fire, and the streets about it must be cared for. Yet the people of the state voted for the change, and the new conditions must be met, even though city charters must be altered and tax limits raised.

People Mean Business: The new law in Illinois allowing cities to adopt the commission plan by vote of the people went into effect with the beginning of the year, and the capital of the state, Springfield, led off with a vote of 3800 for to 3100 against, a majority of 700. A terrible blizzard raged all day, but the people turned out in unexpected numbers. The brewing and saloon interests fought the plan, as they invariably do, evidently because it means an efficient government and that means enforcement of the law. The fight for the system was made by the Chamber of Commerce and citizens' organizations. These facts, just as given above, are all set forth in our corporation and saloon interest newspaper, the Times, under the head "Springfield, Ill., Adopts Freak Government."

Five Years' Test: Houston, Texas, has used the commission plan five years and is perfectly satisfied with it. Tax rate has been permanently reduced 10 per cent, and now that finances are in good order a large surplus accumulated in place of the debt that was carried along under the old system, still further reductions of the tax rate will be made. The deficit of $400 000 is replaced by a cash reserve of $900,000, and in the five years the city has purchased water works and new parks and done an enormous amount of paving out of the general funds and made extensive harbor improvements.

What About the Paupers? A report of the mayor of Worcester, Massachusetts, which feeds its garbage to pigs owned by the city, says: "We were received by the overseers of the poor and driven to the Poor Farm, where I saw 2500 as fine swine as I ever laid my eyes on. There was not a poor one in the lot." As one reads the description of the care devoted to these piggies, he instinctively wonders whether the poor people are equally well treated. If they are, and as Worcester is a well regulated place we assume it, they are better off than the great majority of dependents at county poor farms.

Bigger Than the People: The mayors of twelve Indiana cities met recently at Indianapolis and resolved to fight against the adoption of a law by the legislature allowing cities to adopt the commission system by vote of their citizens. These twelve wonderful, brainy men, having a monopoly of most of the political wisdom of Indiana, feel that they cannot take the chance of trusting the people to decide matters of this kind for themselves. Like the little birdies in their nests, the people should "wait a little longer, 'till their wings are stronger."

Pay-as-you-enter-Riot: The people of Toronto, Canada, have not taken kindly to the pay-as-you-enter cars. A mass meeting was called to protest against them, to which a vast crowd responded, and part of the overflow put in its time smashing all the cars it could lay its hands upon. Pay-as-you exit cars would do away with all the inconveniences and give all the advantages of the new plan.

Up-to-date: In making up its schedule of regulations governing the use of parks, Cleveland has found it necessary to include one that forbids aeroplanes from practicing after 7 o'clock in the morning and limits their operations to certain open spaces in the parks

Another Civil Service City. Detroit has joined the ranks of the civil service cities. When Los Angeles adopted civil service there were only five or six cities in the Union under that system; now two-thirds of the big cities have the system in one form or another.

Two New Destructors: San Francisco has let the contract for the construction of two new destructors or incinerators for garbage and refuse at a total cost of $255,000. One will be located at Islais Creek and the other at North Beach.

Reducing Water Tax: The Commissioner of Public Works of Chicago has notified the city council that the water business can be run successfully with half a million reduction in the people's rates.

Good Majority in Oakland: The vote on the new progressive charter of Oakland with initiative, referendum and recall was 9023 in favor to 3108 against. Evidently it is not a stand-patter town.

Four Cents for Health: The report of the Providence playgrounds shows that it costs four cents a day per child to maintain the system.

No Cats Allowed. Amsterdam, New York, has received a gift of a 100-acre park with a curious provision attached. No cats nor dogs, the donor says, are ever to be allowed in the park, nor are any of the birds to be molested.

MAIN 3340 CUTS F-1068 AND ILLUSTRATIONS FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES. WRITE FOR FREE BOOK OF SAMPLES. CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY 332 MAIN ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

ANNUAL SALE OF Undermuslins NOW OPEN

MONTHS of careful preparation for this great sale, and advantageous buying, enables us to offer high class lingerie at low prices --- without sacrificing quality, or workmanship.

Our large assortment contains garments of dainty simplicity, or elaborate creations.

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES HF
Harris & Frank (INC)
Leading Clothiers
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

IMPRESSIONS OF A PLAIN CITIZEN

By AUTOGENESIS

Arbitration a Near Solution Mayor Alexander wants a state board of arbitration. Every fair-minded man will stand with him on this proposition. Unfortunately such a thing as compulsory arbitration is out of the question, in view of a certain decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. A board of arbitration can not compel capital and labor to agree upon terms, but it can give publicity to the conditions leading to disputes between the two and come pretty near to inciting a public sentiment that will force a settlement of serious labor troubles. It can tell the public what the average wage in similar lines of industry under relatively the same conditions in other parts of the country is, and workingmen and the industry employing them will then occupy a battlefield that is in full view of the public, where their every maneuver can be seen. We need to know more about the relations between the employer and the employed in California. We need disinterested investigators and honest reports, and these are what will accompany the establishment of a state board of mediation and arbitration.

A Forum? Why Not? What has become of the movement for the opening of the public school buildings of the city to popular meetings for the discussion of matters of general public interest, for debates, for lectures, etc.? We have been talking a good deal about this project among ourselves, but nobody appears to have done anything yet. In the meantime San Francisco has taken the matter up, with the result that scores of meetings are held every evening in the week in various sections of the city.

In Los Angeles men and women who have ideas have, at the present time, small means of reaching their fellow men and women except through the press. No newspaper will print a hundredth part of views on more or less important public matters advanced by men and women who have thought deeply on such topics. Progressive, thoughtful people are naturally restless until they have had an opportunity for an interchange of ideas on matters of common interest. Agitation leads progress.

Too many flowers blush unseen. Too many ideas moulder because they never see the light. Too many men with ideas that should be known to all their fellowmen grow discouraged because they can find no way to reach the masses. If every public school building could be converted into a forum, ready for evening assemblages, the forward movement—moral, ethical, sociological, political, civic—would advance in tremendous strides. The school room should be made an educational center for adults as well as for the youth. I would like to hear from those who either agree or disagree with me.

New Form of Probation Maria Fernandez will not be permitted to "go shopping" for a whole year without taking the risk of going to prison. She pleaded guilty to a charge of shoplifting before Judge Davis a few days ago, and was released on probation. If she leads a righteous life during the next three years she will escape punishment for her offense, but in the meantime, for one year at least, she must do her shopping by proxy.

The idea is all right, but it should not be applied to the offense of shoplifting alone. I wonder what effect it would have upon automobile speeders, for instance, if, upon conviction for the second offense, they should be paroled and ordered to refrain from running a machine for one year.

Born Again "The great and glorious Republican party and the Stars and Stripes forever"—this has usually been the sum and substance of the talk of chairmen of partisan state committees. How edifying it is, then, to hear the chairman of the Republican state central committee of California switching off in this strain: "The state central committee is not bound to distribute jobs in order to carry out its plans. A new line has divided the political forces of the country. It is not between Republicans and Democrats, but it is between the insurgents and progressives on one hand and the reactionaries on the other. The will of the people must be the guiding star." We all know it, of course, but how refreshing it is to hear a party leader not only admit it but boast of it! Verily, verily, the Republican party in California has been born again. As a part of it I rejoice in the new birth.

Why So Prudish? I cannot comprehend why the police authorities felt called upon to annoy the gentleman who paraded the streets the other day dressed in a sort of reversed decollete. I understand all his body, excepting head and hands were covered. Nobody has heard of the guardians of the peace disturbing any grand opera performance or other function at which many of the ladies in attendance shuddered every time a door was opened, all because of their scant attire.

We are creatures of habit. We are enthralled by it. We grow so accustomed to seeing barefoot urchins selling newspapers on the streets in January that we think nothing of it; but let Madame Westlake or the Duchess of Hollywood walk out on her lawn to try the Kneipp treatment for her nerves and straightway we throw a fit.

We should rid ourselves of this bugaboo of ultra-conventionality. If a man wants to walk about in comfort and finds that it is agreeable to shed his shoes or a part of his clothing, why should we blush, so long as we permit the boys to run barefooted and barelegged on the streets and the ladies, bless 'em, to add to the lustre of certain illustrious occasions by inviting pneumonia and bronchitis?

An Interesting Sight We are soon to be afforded a spectacle in cement construction that relatively few have seen. It is going to be instructive. It will be well worth while to visit the scene of the big new concrete bridge under construction over the river just below Elysian park—the North Broadway bridge. The paraphernalia for pouring the concrete and the forms are nearly all in position. The framework itself is worth looking at. The time is rapidly approaching, by the way, when several such bridges must be built across the river at various points. Meantime take a look at the work on this structure. It is as interesting as a moving picture show.

The Old Spirit Still Lives Some men have a rather peculiar conception of what constitutes personal rights and privileges. Among these there is a class whose members insist that the slightest service in behalf of a political movement is sufficient basis for a demand that they share in the profits of office. Women are sometimes that way, too.

I heard the other day of a woman who was employed for two days in a certain political headquarters in this city during the late campaign who really believed that such employment, for which she was well remunerated, by the way, was ample title to a "good political office," as she expressed it. "Certainly, Gertie, after having worked so faithfully for those people you have a right to expect something handsome from them. You surely ought to be given one of those nice fat jobs up in Sacramento this winter," said one of her friends.

"Gertie" went after the nice fat job with a vim. She bothered the life out of one of the attaches at headquarters, insisting that she should have "one of them snaps." "If a girl who has worked as hard as I have gets nowhere when it comes to passing around the positions with money in 'em, how are you folks going to expect that we shall stand by you next time?" she demanded. "You can't turn me down. I want what's coming to me."

There are in Los Angeles scores, even hundreds of men, who rest their hopes of securing political jobs on the fact that during the campaign they were employed, under pay, to do clerical or other detail work. It is just simply impossible to divorce them from the spoils idea. And some of them are mighty sore because they have not been able to extract double pay—cash and a job—from the campaign managers.

BUILDING PERMITS FOR 1910

Classified Report and Statement for the Calendar Year 1910 from the Office of J. J. Backus, Chief Inspector of Buildings, City of Los Angeles

During the calendar year just closed, there have been issued 10,738 building permits, with an estimated valuation of $21,684,100, indicating an increase over the previous year (1909) of $8,423,397 in valuation, and 2167 in number of permits issued. This year (1910) was easily the "banner year" in the history of building operations in the city of Los Angeles, showing as it does the tremendous increase of $3,525,580 over the year 1906, which had previously been the banner year, with a valuation of $18,158,520.

An interesting feature of this year is the fact that nearly every month broke some previous record, either in number of permits issued or in valuation. A careful study of the tabulated report hereto attached will show a large gain in the number of business buildings which have been erected; also the fact that there was one building permit issued either for the erection, alteration or an addition to some building every fifteen minutes of every working day. Especially remarkable is the gain in the erection of residences, making it truly a "city of homes." In this respect it will be interesting to know that there have been more than two frame residences, with a valuation of over $2,000 each, erected every hour of every working day. These figures are based on an eight-hour working day.

The great increase in the money expended on new buildings also points out the very encouraging tendency on the part of owners, architects and builders toward the construction of buildings of a higher grade, and of fireproof structures.

The City's Growth

The volume of business transacted by this office serves to illustrate the extraordinary growth of the city. If all the buildings erected in this city during the past year were placed side by side, with no space between them, they would form a continuous row of over 40 miles in length, or would form a street built solidly on both sides extending from the City Hall in this city to the water front at San Pedro Harbor. But in this connection it must be remembered that if this same street were built on both sides in the customary way that buildings are erected, with yard spaces between, they would form a street built on both sides of over 40 miles in length.

Receipts and Expenditures

The receipts for the department during this same period amounted to $52,436.90, and its expenditures for the same time were $41,740.54, therefore it will be seen that the department has turned into the City Treasury the sum of $10,696.36 over all expenses.

Total Number and Valuation of the Various Classes of Buildings

	No. of Permits.	Valuation.
Class A steel fr struc	8	$ 2,620,717
Class A rein. con....	24	1,781,421
Class B brick bldgs..	4	290.000
Class C brick bldgs..	257	2,922.059
Class D frame bldgs	519	10,908 184
Churches	23	129,760
Public buildings.....	31	938,896
Sheds and barns.....1448		218.484
Foundations	22	84,205
Alterations, brick....	623	706,911
Alterations, frame...3016		947,343
Demolitions	89	11,120
Additional 3 stories Class A bldgs.....	1	125,000
Grand total for year	10,738	$21,684,100

Compiled by Mark C. Cohn, Chief Clerk.

CHESTER ROWELL TO ADDRESS CITY CLUB TODAY

At the regular weekly luncheon of the City Club to be held at the Westminster Hotel today (Saturday) at 12:15 p. m. Hon. Chester H. Rowell, editor of the Fresno California Republican, will speak on "The City."

"Katherine Shrewsbury is engaged to be married." "Who is the lucky man?" "Her father!"—Town Topics.

REMOVAL SALE

Pianos and Player Pianos

Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player Piano this is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.

Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers 345-347 S. Spring St.

Proposed Charter Amendments

Lewis R. Works Explains Important Provisions

Lewis R. Works, a member of the Charter Revision Commission, entertained the City Club last Saturday with an address on the proposed amendment to our city charter, which will be voted on by the people on March 6th next.

Mr. Works prefaced his address with a review of the personnel of the commission, emphasizing the peculiar fitness of each member for the very important work which has been accomplished. He said that they had brought to their task a sense of responsibility and a fund of patriotism that should insure a favorable reception of the amendments at the hands of the people.

If there are any questions which the voters cannot understand, the character of the men selected should give them sufficient faith to vote for the amendments suggested. Mr. Works spoke of the special fitness of men like James A. Anderson, W. B. Matthews and Leslie R. Hewitt to deal with municipal problems. All the members of the commission had been selected for their recognized ability and familiarity with the work in hand.

Attention was called to the fact that the city charter is simply being amended; a new charter was not drafted, as some supposed.

An important amendment will be that which broadens the power of the city by which the municipality is given the authority to operate lodging-houses, municipal farms and detention homes, for the punishment of young criminals and their segregation from the more hardened characters.

The city is given power to operate railways and all other forms of transportation, such as ferries, etc. This provision if adopted will give the city the broadest power in the transportation business and will allow of a municipally controlled interstate railway. This amendment will also give the city complete control of the harbor.

Purity of Elections

The city is given power to enact purity of election ordinances, similar to the laws now on the state books limiting the amount which a candidate may spend on an election campaign.

Council Work

One amendment specifies that city ordinances must lie over one week before being adopted, unless they are passed by unanimous vote of the full council.

Appointive Officers

It is proposed that offices such as city clerk, city tax collector, city treasurer, shall be appointive in place of elective, thus lessening the confusion which results from a multiplicity of names on the ballot. The only elective offices will be those of the mayor, city attorney, auditor, assessor, board of education and city council. These latter offices to a certain extent stand between the people and the corporate interests, and should therefore be elective. This innovation will pave the way for the short ballot which is gaining in favor all over the country. Elective officers will be elected for four years but general elections will be held every two years with but half the offices on the ballot; giving, under the new arrangement, only ten men to be voted for instead of twenty-three as formerly. This will also insure experienced men being retained at all times in the council and on the board of education.

Increasing the Mayor's Power

Another salient feature will be the turning over to the mayor the direct control of the executive branch of his office, and taking away such routine work as the signing of vouchers, etc., which work an office boy could perform as easily. The mayor will have the power to appoint the fire chief, police chief, and the health officer, without concurrence by the council. All other appointments, however, must have the council's confirmation. Another important provision is that appointive officers will be subject to recall.

Following the Oregon plan, one provision provides that on questions submitted to a vote of the people, arguments pro and con, written by the proponents and opponents of the measure, will be mailed to every voter by the city clerk in sufficient time to have them thoroughly understood.

Referendum and Recall

Referendum petitions, to be valid, will provide for ten per cent of the total vote instead of seven per cent. The percentage necessary for a recall petition is reduced from twenty-five per cent to twenty per cent. This provision was thought wise from the fact that the abolition of the ward system makes it necessary to recall an officer by a vote from the city at large. Expenses will be cut down by the sending of only one ballot for each voter in a precinct, with 10 per cent additional for spoiled ballots, which will result in quite a saving.

Under the new amendments no more vacancies will be filled by election; an appointment will be made to fill the office until a general election.

One amendment will allow a recount on primary elections. Another allows the auditor to install a complete system of accounting. The city prosecutor's and city attorney's offices will be separated; the former has to do almost entirely with criminal, and the latter with civil cases.

Provision is to be made for a purchasing agent and a city supply warehouse will be instituted.

Library

Certain positions in the library are to be taken from civil service. These positions will be those that require experts. This change is suggested owing to the fact that it is a difficult matter to induce such experts to come here on the understanding that they must pass a civil service examination before they will be accepted.

Removals Under Civil Service

It is proposed to allow heads of departments to discharge employes who are under civil service when they are found unsatisfactory. The discharged person may demand an investigation by the civil service commission, but the new method would obviate the necessity of a department head preferring formal charges and virtually being put upon the defensive by the attorney for the employe under fire.

Commissions

It is proposed to reduce this commission from five to three members, consisting of the mayor and two citizens. The chief will be given fuller powers and will be allowed to discharge unfit men from the service, thereby doing away with the necessity for trying every offender in the department by the police board, and taking up a great deal of time. The fire department will be put on a similar basis to that of the police department. The park commission will be reduced from five to three members, and the mayor will not be a member of this commission.

The board of health will be done away with and a health commissioner substituted who will be given full power over the department.

Public Utilities

An amendment will make the public utility commission Charter officer with the power to fix rates on public utilities operated by private individuals.

A department of public service to take the place of the water board is proposed, which department will handle the power question.

Water Distribution

Under the new amendments, provision is made for safeguarding the rights of the people, to the fullest extent, in supplying water to outside consumers. The city may distribute water outside of its limits for a period not exceeding fifteen years, which lease will be in the form of a license and revocable at any time; all such leases must be concurred in by a two-thirds vote of the City Council and a majority vote of the people. Contracts for water sold to public utility corporations, for resale, may be terminated by the city on a three years' written notice.

A Municipal Art Commission is created to have jurisdiction over the external appearance of municipal buildings.

Subway Franchises

Subway franchises are to be let for forty years, instead of twenty-one as at present. This is owing to the high cost of constructing subways, and as an inducement to the railway companies to construct tunnels, thereby relieving congestion.

Height of buildings, except monuments and non-business buildings, is to be restricted to 150 feet.

Sale of Franchises

Under the Broughton act valuable franchises are now often sold for $100. Under the new provisions Council will receive adequate compensation for franchises.

Power will be given the Council to operate a municipal newspaper.

In the matter of appointive officers, the restrictions now in force providing that such officer must be a citizen of Los Angeles or, in some cases, a resident of the State, have been removed and it will be possible to obtain experts for the various offices without being hampered by such restrictions.

Salary Increases

Salaries of executive heads will be increased generally, as the Commission believes that for the class of work performed the remuneration is entirely too low, as for instance in the case of the City Attorney, who has to argue cases for the city in opposition to the highly-paid attorneys for the utility companies. The salary amendment will provide for salaries as follows: Mayor, $5000; Councilmen, $2400; City Clerk, $3000; City Auditor, $4200; City Assessor, $4200; City Treasurer, $4000; City Attorney, $5000; Health Commissioner, $4000, Tax and License Collector, $3600.

President Finlayson thanked Mr. Works for his "clear-cut, incisive and luminous exposition of a most important subject" and hoped that the patriotism which prompted him to devote his capabilities to explaining these features of the Charter amendments would induce him to address other civic bodies and present the facts before the election is held at which the people will decide to adopt or reject the new provisions.

This Intensely Human Picture

STANDS FOR ALL THAT IS BEST IN MUSIC

It is the famous Victor trademark and it brings to you, no matter where you are, the very best music of every kind, sung and played in the very best way, by the best artists. "His Master's Voice" has helped to make grand opera popular. It has created in the hearts of the people a greater love for music.

Visit our Victor Department and we will gladly play any Victor music you want to hear.

And Be Sure to Hear the New Victor-Victrola at $75

Victors, $10, $17.50, $25, $32.50, $40, $50, $60, $100. Victor-Victrolas, $75, $100, $150, $200, $250. Victor Records, single and double-faced, 60 cents and up. Easy terms can be arranged.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO.

"The House of Musical Quality"

332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

For a Southern State University

Why the State of California Should Establish and Maintain a University in Southern California.

By Mark Keppel

Our two State Universities, Leland Stanford Jr., and California, are crowded to their limits in an effort to care for pupils seeking admission. The State University needs to be greatly enlarged if it is to give admission to an increased number of students.

The secretary of that institution, in his annual report, recently issued, declares that the State University needs $5,000,000 at once to properly care for its present student body, and the student body that will surely seek admission. The secretary of the University is correct in declaring that the University of California must be greatly enlarged if it is to care for the army of high school pupils steadily marching toward institutions of higher education in California. We challenge the claim that the needed $5,000,000 should be expended at Berkeley. We argue that a university of equal rank with Stanford and California, should be established in Southern California where such a school would be near to the great body of Southern California high school graduates who now must travel from 300 to 630 miles to reach the State University.

The distance by railroad from Los Angeles to Berkeley is 470 miles. When students are few in number, they may be sent long distances to a central school, but when students

(Continued on page 15)

CALIFORNIA'S PROGRESSIVE LEADERS COMMAND NATION-WIDE ATTENTION

In the Jan. 7 issue of the Saturday Evening Post is an illuminating and forceful article by Samuel G. Blythe entitled, "Putting the Rollers Under the S. P." In this story of political conditions in California which lead up to the recent triumph of the reform forces Mr. Blythe throws some interesting sidelights on the campaign and gives praise to such staunch leaders as Meyer Lissner and Hiram Johnson.

The author says in part:

It isn't likely any person with knowledge of the facts will dispute the statement that the Southern Pacific Railroad dominated the politics of California for many years. Indeed, that is a mild manner of putting it. The Southern Pacific Railroad not only dominated the politics for many years but owned the politics, owned part of the legislature, owned many of the officials—no matter what party was in power—and ran things to suit itself. Moreover, the Southern Pacific reached out of California and dealt in larger political commodities. It mixed in the politics in adjoining states and had a grasp on a good deal that happened at Washington.

Governor Johnson

It was a great political as well as a great commercial enterprise. It dictated nominations, carried elections, laid down policies, used money flagrantly, debauched not only individuals but whole communities. * * * * When competition became keener political control became more necessary. In addition to owning legislatures it was essential to own judges—courts, even—and the road developed into a vast, complex holding company for the politics of the state, bipartisan, dictating impartially to Republicans and Democrats so far as party lines were concerned, but always partially for the Southern Pacific. * * *

The Struggle for Independence Begins

The political history of California is full of stories of fights made against the Southern Pacific—fights that, in almost every instance, led up to demoralizing defeats. The Southern Pacific gripped the political system of the state. As always has been the case, it controlled by controlling the conventions, seeing to it that men of the kidney it wanted were nominated for the offices and after nomination were elected. * * * * * * * *

The genesis of the fight that finally culminated in the election of Hiram W. Johnson as governor last November was in Los Angeles. That city was a Southern Pacific stronghold. Walter Parker, the first lieutenant of Herrin, was the boss of the Republican party. He was and is a capable and skillful politician; and as Los Angeles is normally a Republican city, being settled largely by people from the Middle West, Parker operated principally through that party, although the Southern Pacific had its Democratic leaders, too, for use in case of emergency. Southern Pacific interests dominated in Los Angeles just as they dominated in San Francisco, not only in legislative and state matters but in city affairs as well.

There had been much discussion in Los Angeles of the part the road played in municipal matters and much dissatisfaction with the kind of government the city had. This culminated finally, in 1906 or at about that time, in a good-government movement that was non-partisan and that was headed by such men as Dr. John R. Haynes, Edwin T. Earl, Meyer Lissner, Harley Brundage, Edward Dickson and others who sought to give Los Angeles a good, clean city government. There were many details in the working out of the plan that need not be rehearsed here; but finally, after much labor and much arousing of public sentiment, a Non-Partisan City Central Committee was formed; various reforms and innovations—such as the referendum, the initiative and the recall—were put through and Los Angeles was taken bodily from the grasp of the old bosses. * * * * *

Naturally the men who had such great success in Los Angeles determined to try for the state. News of what had been done in Los Angeles had spread throughout California and in 1907 the first steps were taken. It was realized that so long as the state retained the old-time convention system the chances of eliminating the Southern Pacific were somewhat remote. The way to whip the railroad was plain enough. What was needed was a direct primary law, where the people could give an expression as to candidates, instead of conventions, where the bosses named the candidates. To this end Charles W. Hornick, manager of the San Francisco Call, and Ernest S. Simpson, managing editor of the same paper, brought from Minnesota a most capable young man named George A. Van Smith, who had made a study of direct primary laws and their methods of operation, and Van Smith began framing a direct primary law.

Then came weeks of conferences, of planning, of enlisting men; and out of it all came the Lincoln-Roosevelt Republican League. This organization had its real beginning at a luncheon in Oakland in 1907. This luncheon was attended by about eighty or ninety men, many of them editors from various parts of the state. There was a long discussion as to ways and means, but it was eventually determined to organize by districts, to name a state committee and to go into a campaign with the avowed intention of electing a legislature that would adopt a direct primary law and so wrest control of the state from the old machine.

Pledges were obtained from legislative candidates wherever pledges could be obtained; the newspapers enlisted in the movement kept up a vigorous campaign; and when convention-time came the Leaguers had about two-fifths of the delegates to the convention. The Southern Pacific crowd—the old machine—had three-fifths. This convention followed the Santa Cruz convention, where Abe Ruef, the San Francisco boss, made about his last political appearance before he was convicted of grafting. The old-machine men used the steam roller mercilessly. They rolled it back and forth over the Leaguers, nominated the men they had selected and gave the Leaguers nothing.

The League had its fighting spirit thoroughly aroused by this affair. Meyer Lissner, of Los Angeles, gave most of his time to the movement, and he had able lieutenants in all parts of the state. Meantime George Van Smith had completed his primary law and it was put before the legislature. Van Smith and his associates, backed by the powerful and growing sentiment aroused by the League, passed the primary law—not exactly the kind of a primary law they originally planned, because of various compromises that had to be made, but a fairly good one and sufficient, as will be shown.

The old machine fought the direct primary law, of course, but, at that, it believed the bosses could control even with a primary law in effect, thereby showing mighty poor political judgment. However, there had been so great a sentiment aroused for the law by the League, which had extended its organization rapidly into all parts of the state, that the opposition of the old machine, whether real or perfunctory, did not stop its passage. This was in 1909.

Johnson's Fight for the Governorship

With the powerful lever of direct primaries the Lincoln-Roosevelt League took on new strength and went into the work of organization more vigorously than ever. So far as possible the minute organization of Los Angeles was carried out. In that city the organization goes down to precincts and sections of precincts. It is a most comprehensive affair and it held to its full fighting force by constant attention to detail and by constant encouragement and work.

Time came for the League to select a candidate for governor to go before the primaries. Many names were canvassed. Finally it was decided to put up Hiram W. Johnson, a lawyer of San Francisco, who had taken up the work of prosecuting Ruef after Francis J. Heney was shot and had convicted Ruef. Johnson did not want to go into the fight. He wanted to practice law. He was forty-four years old and had a family to provide for. Johnson consented, but in consenting made his own platform. That was: "If I go into this fight I go in with the understanding that if I win the Southern Pacific will be kicked out of the politics of this state." The League leaders gave three cheers and in March, 1910, Johnson began his campaign for the nomination in the primaries, which were to be held on August sixteenth. * * * * * *

State campaigns, of course, always develop animosities, attacks and sneering comment. Johnson had his share of them in the campaign for nomination at the primaries—more than his share, in fact; but that did not feaze him any. He kept on hammering at the Southern Pacific and he received more than one hundred thousand votes in the primary, more votes than his two nearest competitors, and was made the nominee of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League for governor.

The Steam Roller in Good Working Order

The platform convention that followed was as securely in the control of the Lincoln-Roosevelt League as the previous convention had been in the control of the old machine, and the steam roller was operated with equal facility and efficiency. The only difference in the operation of the steam roller was that the League operated and the old machine men were rolled over. * * * * * * * *

Johnson made another state-long and state-wide campaign. He practically repeated his campaign for the primary nomination, making several speeches each day and traversing the entire state. The State Central Committee was reorganized and Meyer Lissner selected as chairman.

There was a good deal of mud-slinging in the campaign, but Johnson kept steadily on his one theme: "Kick out the Southern Pacific." The Hearst newspapers, which had bitterly opposed Bell when he ran before, finally came out for Bell and added to the excitement of the campaign materially. * * * * * * * * *

Meyer Lissner

The Men Who Won the Victory

Undoubtedly such disclosures as were made in the Ruef trial had a strong effect on the result in this campaign; but the fact is, if those men in Los Angeles had not decided to clean up that city and give it a good municipal government, and if the Lincoln-Roosevelt League had not been started, pushed through and built into a compact fighting organization the Southern Pacific would be as strong today as it was five years ago, when it dominated everything political in California.

In a movement like this, individuals are not to be singled out for credit, for it was an uprising; but, so far as I can learn, the initial steps and the first agitation that led to the formation of the League were taken at Sacramento by Edward Dickson, the legislative correspondent of the Los Angeles Express, and Chester H. Rowell, editor of the Fresno Republican—taken together, of course, with the great municipal fight made at Los Angeles by Lissner and his associates.

Still, wherever or whenever it began, the achievement stands out as one of the first magnitude in American politics. They cleaned up a city. They made a state-wide organization. They passed a direct primary law that enabled that state-wide organization to become effective. They made a fight that lasted four years; and one individual—Johnson—made a personal fight that lasted from March to November under the most trying conditions—no man but a physically perfect man could have done it—and they won the campaign. A most remarkable achievement. * * * * *

Patriotism in Municipal Affairs

From the Annual Address of the President, Delivered at the Sixteenth Annual Meeting of the National Municipal League, November 14, 1910, at Buffalo, N. Y.,
By CHARLES J. BONAPARTE

At our last annual meeting a very interesting paper was read by Miss Grace Abbott of Chicago on "The Immigrant and Municipal Politics," and a passage in this paper suggested to my mind what seemed to me a suitable subject for this, my last, annual address as your president. Speaking of immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, Miss Abbott said:

"Most of them are people in whom emotional patriotism is very strong. Fourth of July is more uproariously celebrated in Halsted street than in any other part of Chicago. Every Sunday the American and Italian flags precede the band that plays the funeral march of some Italian, and the Greek Church for great religious festivals is decorated on one side with the American and on the other with the Greek flag. There have been several election scandals in recent years in Chicago's Ghetto and yet the Russian Jews who live there are giving their evenings to academic discussions of the fundamental concepts of liberty and lamenting American indifference to government questions. Undoubtedly here, as in the so-called better districts of our cities, a great deal of moral steam is going to waste."

Need there be this waste? Can we not use the "moral steam," which now blows itself off in singing "America" or cheering "Old Glory," to turn the wheels of our municipal administrations and grind out as products the fruits of good city government? In less figurative language, may we not make of patriotism a most helpful ally in our fight for pure politics, for honesty and decency among public men, in the affairs of our great American municipalities?

In my childhood I witnessed the profoundly impressive spectacle of the American people awakening to the need and to the duty of saving by the sword our threatened national life; twelve years ago, we again saw our country respond promptly and cheerfully to another call to arms, although certainly to many, I think to a large majority, of our citizens the need for war seemed doubtful and the merits of our quarrel open to dispute. With this experience, no one can reasonably deny that patriotism has been and is today a living force among Americans; why is this force apparently so weak in the works of peace while it is so strong in the works of war? Why do thousands of men of whom every one would hasten to enlist should the need arise for soldiers, shirk or betray their duties as citizens, go a-fishing on election day, or vote for the Boss' candidate with no better reason to give their conscience or their country than was given by one of the worst of our politicians when he said: "I am a Democrat."

In my opinion, this is partly because some of us misconceive the nature of patriotism and therefore underrate its consequence and possible influence for good; partly because many more of us fail to see the necessity and intimate connection between the character of our government in all its branches—national, state and municipal—and the continued vitality of our patriotism. To my mind, a trace, although a trace only, of the confusion of ideas existing as to what patriotism means, is found in Miss Abbott's description of our immigrants' patriotism as "emotional," this adjective, whether so intended or not, will seem to some people as depreciatory; the Italians and Greeks and Russian Jews, to whom she refers, would furnish, so such people think, more promising raw material for good citizens were their patriotism of a different type. But surely, "unemotional patriotism" would be a contradiction in terms: one would as reasonably speak of "unemotional" love or hatred, friendship or enmity; all these things are, or at least imply, "emotions;" if the emotion isn't there, the thing itself isn't there. No doubt, merely emotional manifestations of patriotism, even when sincere and spontaneous, are of minor merit and minor utility; a good mother has more important duties to fulfil toward her children than to kiss them. But, as a matter of fact, she will kiss them if she loves them with her whole heart, and unless she loves them with her whole heart, she will not make them a really good mother. So there is no need and little use for us to indulge in mild hysterics over our country's flag; but unless, in very truth, our country's flag really is for us something more than a piece of parti-colored bunting, we have not that within us which would make us really patriots. * * *

It is important to remember that although superficial observers have often said, and still say sometimes, that a city is a "business corporation, to be run on business principles," this utterance combines a statement substantially true with another essentially false. The affairs of a city ought to be "run on business principles," just as the affairs of a church or a college or a hospital or an asylum ought to be "run on business principles;" that is to say, in all these cases, the institution's money ought to be made go as far as it will go and get all that it can get. A man who voluntarily works three days to do what he might do as well by working one is simply a fool; and, since money is, after all, merely past labor set aside for future use, like the electricity in a storage battery, that man is no less a fool who spends three dollars of his own money to get what he could get by spending one; if he shall thus spend money which is not his own, money given him to spend for the good of others, and such is the case of every improvident trustee, public or private, then he is something far worse than a fool. But it is wholly untrue that a municipality is a "business corporation" in the same sense as a bank or a railroad or a trading company. Like every other form of human government, it exists to make those subject to its sway happy through righteousness; and, to attain this great end, it needs the aid of all those agencies which preserve and strengthen and purify organized human society. One of these agencies, and one of the most potent, is patriotism.

As I have already intimated, I define patriotism as a form of affection, as love for our country; for our country, not, of course, in the sense of a part of the earth's physical surface, not even in the sense of the people dwelling within its limits, but pictured to the mind as a separate being, a being exercising the powers and fulfilling the duties of sovereignty. * * *

The conception of a nation as a living organism, distinct, not only from each individual dwelling under its rule, but from the aggregate of individuals who may so dwell at any particular moment, is no less true than profound; the American nation is not one today and another tomorrow, although within every twenty-four hours thousands of Americans are born and other thousands die, many foreigners become Americans and some Americans become foreigners; any more than I am another man at this instant from what I was five minutes since, although some atoms of matter have certainly entered into and some have no less certainly left my body while I spoke to you; the same nation whose baptismal certificate was singed on that summer morning one hundred and thirty-four years ago now overshadows the New World, just as surely as your President this evening is the same man who first drew breath,—we will not say how many years since. A nation is, in brief, a person, not a multitude of persons who, for certain purposes, are enabled in imagination or permitted by positive law to act and be dealt with as one; a real, living being, not a fiction of jurists or a conscious creation of the mind; and from the instinctive recognition of the truth and significance of its personality arises the sentiment which we call "patriotism."

For the great being, with and under whom we live, and of whom we, in some sense, form part, towers over each one of us as a source of incalculable good, a picture of extraordinary beauty. Almost everything which makes for happiness in our days and nights, material comfort, personal security, opportunities for fruitful toil and untroubled rest, possibilities of increased enlightenment, systematic beneficence, orderly freedom, all these things and, in, fact, all that makes a civilized man better and more fortunate than a savage, I had well-nigh said than a brute, depend for existence, in last resort, on that sword of sovereignty which is wielded by the strong arm of the nation. This rises between the spoiled and his prey, shelters the weak, gives a sanction to promises, makes justice real and peace more than another name for bondage; no man ever has owed, or can owe to any purely human institution the debt which every man in a civilized Christian nation owes to his country. * * *

No one truly doubts that we are a patriotic people; what ought such a people to think with due regard to consistency and common sense, of selfish and unscrupulous political intriguers who may perhaps themselves impudently pose as "patriots," but would make every public office and every function of our government, national, state and municipal, a source of illicit and disgraceful private gain?

The conception of a nation as a vast endless chain of humanity, coiled over the ages, with unnumbered links in heaven and other myriads among those yet to live, implies of necessity that public office is a trust in a wider, a more imperative, a more sacred sense than the word usually bears. The magistrate is a trustee, not merely for his countrymen of today, they are but a small fraction of his cestuex que trustent; authority is placed in his hands that he make fruitful the merits and sacrifices of the dead, that he safeguard the virtue and happiness of the unborn: nay, the whole people, in a free country, make up one great corporate trustee, holding for the moment all the vast heritage of the future from the past, * * * a trustee chosen and commissioned of God. For one who thus looks upon the dignity and duty of the people and of their officers the maxim: "to the victors belong the spoils," is monstrous to the verge of blasphemy, an abuse of public authority to promote paltry, selfish interests of the moment is a crime against mankind approaching to a sacrifice; he who would drug the people's conscience by inflaming partisan prejudices and awakening popular passions, to the end that he and his like may profit from the people by a breach of sacred trust and forgetfulness of divinely imposed duty, is an enemy to humanity a thousandfold worse than a poisoner.

If we suffer such as he to guide and rule us, it is nothing to the purpose that we may have free institutions; a government, like every other contrivance of man or production of nature, must be judged by its fruits. However we may talk about it, the world of American democracy will be gauged, in the irreversible judgment of history by a true answer to one question, namely:—To what manner of men does it entrust political power? The one thing essential to good government is good men to govern; where, as here, every citizen forms part of the government, if the government be bad, the citizens are unworthy. Let us study then the government of our city and state and country; let us recognize the shameful abuses that too often infest almost every branch of administration; let us make ourselves feel the degradation of our politics and the meanness and selfishness of our public men; and then let us see to it that all these wrongs are righted, by making sure that those who shall deal with them know and love the right.

Furniture Repair Works
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

HIGHCLASS INVESTMENTS
MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET
RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

THE PROGRESS AND NEEDS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

President Wheeler Reports to the Governor of the State.

The biennial report of the president of the university to the Governor of the state is issued this week. Dr. Wheeler summarizes at the outset the external evidences of the growth of the university, making special reference to increase in student enrollment, the Doe Library building, the Boalt Hall of Law, the agricultural building, foundations for which are now being laid, the zoological museum, the Sather gateway, the tennis courts, the swimming pool, the agricultural demonstration train, the affiliation with the Los Angeles medical department, the marine biological station at La Jolla, the extension of the university publications, the establishment of the seismological station at the university, the final taking over of the Kearney estate, and the reorganization of the administrative part of the university by the creation of salaried deanships.

Among the needs of the university, buildings take prominent place as the most urgent. The chemical laboratory, designed to accommodate 150 students, is now called upon to shelter 1000; North Hall, weakened by age and thoroughly outworn, is a standing fire menace to the magnificent Doe Library immediately on the left facing north; the department of drawing is being crowded out of East Hall by the expansion of physics and zoology; classes in botany have to be conducted in the ill-lighted garret, which was never designed to be used as a place of instruction. The professors of physics, geology, and mineralogy are crowded and cramped for room in South Hall. There should be an auditorium for great assembly days. The unprecedented increase in rents in Berkeley and the expense to which the students are put for room and board make dormitories and commons a pressing need. Among other needs enumerated by Dr. Wheeler are these: the demand for a properly manned and equipped medical department; money for the adequate maintenance and progress of work at the Lick Observatory, which the president says "ranks everywhere in the world as work of the highest order;" the desirability of establishing in the not distant future a school of forestry; further appropriations for the work of the extension department in agriculture, which is of vast and increasing importance to the farmers of the state; the advantages that would come from a purchase outright of a permanent site for the summer school of surveying, which, says Dr. Wheeler, "has no peer, or so far as I know, rival except in the same institution connected with Columbia University;" the urgency of a state high school, under control of the university, to be utilized in the training of teachers. To attract and hold teachers the President says our salary scale should be higher; at present it is quite decidedly below that of the leading institutions of the East. The result is that ambitious young teachers are attracted back toward the East, "where the stimulus arising from association is greater and the opportunities of scientific and educational assemblies, of libraries, and other equipments are superior." Reference is made to the first volume of publications of the Academy of Pacific Coast History. The Bancroft Library is under the direction and management of the curator of the academy, and it is of far more than ordinary importance to the state, containing as it does the body of birth certificates of California. The first volume of publications of the Academy including papers by members of the staff or the faculty is now printed. The provision by the Native Sons of the Golden West of a fellowship for the study of California history opens the way to further productive utilization of this library.

Great activity has prevailed during the biennium at the infirmary. Last year 2,272 students received dispensary treatment. At the beginning of the year, when the medical examinations are in progress, five physicians have been regularly occupied, and throughout the year three physicians give a considerable portion of their time to the work of the infirmary.

More general participation in college athletics is desirable. The great intercollegiate contests, says Dr. Wheeler, "should be only the outward and final tests representative of the normal athletic life of the student body at home. If they are not based upon such a life they are vain and hollow pageants. . . . The university does not propose to undertake the development of gladiators and other athletic specialists. It encourages athletic sports for the good of the whole student body to the end that the greatest possible number may share the full vigor of manhood." New tennis courts have therefore been provided,—nine so far, and the hope is to make it twenty. The old field west of California Hall is opened to intercollegiate teams. Another baseball field is being graded west of California Field. The swimming pool is nearing completion. A new running track will be built in the immediate future. Outdoor hand ball and basket ball courts should be provided.

Dr. Wheeler makes reference to the comparative scholarship records of the average student and the members of fraternities and clubs. Reports recently compiled show that the scholarship of men in the fraternities falls seriously below that of the average male student. The scholarship of club members is a little above that of the average male student. Eight of the ten clubs outstripped the general student average, whereas in the twenty-two fraternities only two accomplished this. Fraternities, however, are alive to the fact and are taking active steps looking toward more earnest attention to matters of scholarship among their members. Student self-government progresses steadily.

If extension courses be included, the number of persons enrolled under the university's management and in enjoyment of its income is at this date 5 824. In closing the report, Dr. Wheeler says of Professor Stringham, whose death occurred in October, 1909: "He was able and patient and wise, and all that he was he gave with a fullness of loyalty rarely equalled to the service of this University."

Subsidiary reports follow that of the President. These include reports from the Lick Observatory, San Francisco Institute of Art, Hastings College of Law, Medical Department in San Francisco, Medical Department in Los Angeles, Dental Department, Department of Pharmacy, Wilmerding School, Marine Biological Station, University Library, Academy of Pacific Coast History (the Bancroft Library), University Press, California Museum of Vertebrate Zoology, Infirmary, Dean of the Lower Division (Advisor), Dean of Women, Dean of the Summer Session, University Extension, Examiner of Schools, Alumni Secretary, Appointment Secretary.

The report of curator of the academy of Pacific Coast history, of the scientific director of the marine biological station, of the dean of the Los Angeles medical school, and the director of the California museum of vertebrate zoology appear of course for the first time, since these institutions were founded during the biennium. The report includes further a record of university meetings, public lectures and addresses, half-hours of music in the Greek Theatre, deaths of members of the university, published writings of the officers of the university, and lists of gifts, followed finally by certain statistical addenda. In all, the report is probably the largest which has appeared in the history of the university, numbering 396 pages.

It may be stated finally, as a matter likely to be of general interest to the people of the state, that the examiner of schools in reporting to the President calls attention to the increasing excellence of California high schools. Our students in the first half year of the college course appear to be doing distinctly abler work than they achieved in former years. It is also a matter of interest that tables prepared by the examiner suggest that students from California high schools attain in general decidedly higher scholarship records than those from non-California schools. This situation is a pride and honor to the state.

Where the Railroads Stand Now

In the railroad rate hearing at Washington, Mr. Brandeis demonstrated by witnesses that there is a science of efficiency, a science of reducing costs; that it has been applied in a large number of the most important industries of the United States and Europe, and that it has resulted in increased wages to the laborer, increased profit to the employer, and lower prices to the consumer. That the proof was complete and satisfactory is shown by the following utterances from the two members of the Interstate Commerce Commission who sat as judges in the matter:

"Commissioner Prouty—Mr. Brandeis, you can hardly add anything to your case by calling the representative of some other industry and showing that these same principles have been applied there. It is perfectly evident that if they have been applied in one case they can be applied in another analogous case. If the railroads were to show, in answer, some facts which tended to prove that they could not be applied to railroad operations, then you might desire to go further; but it seems to me you have made out your case now as far as it can be made out. . . . (Pages 3387-3388.)

"Commissioner Clements (sitting as chairman)—Of course this thing could be carried on and on almost indefinitely with respect to different lines of business.

"Mr. Brandeis—It could, indeed.

"Commissioner Clements—And when you have shown that fact and what you have done with respect to several kinds of business, and the details of it, so far as it may be helpful to any extent, does not that illustrate the possibilities in all lines of business just as well as if you were to call them in other cases?

"Mr. Brandeis—It does to my mind absolutely. . . ."

The significant point here is contained in the words of Commissioner Prouty:

"If the railroads were to show, in answer, some facts which tended to prove that they (the principles of efficiency) could not be applied to railroad operations. . . ."

That is precisely the point. The railroads have offered no evidence in rebuttal of Mr. Brandeis's proof. Obviously, if they continue to ask for higher rates, they must show either (1), that the railroads have already put the science of efficiency into practice, or (2), that there is something in the nature of railroading which makes the adoption of the science of efficiency impossible in that particular industry. The railroads do not claim the first; in the second lies their only opportunity. Before they can in good faith ask for higher rates, and before the Interstate Commerce Commission can in fairness grant them, the railroad managers must show that there is something inherent in their business which prevents them from doing what has already been done in the Bethlehem Steel Works, in the Panhard automobile factories, in making concrete in Mr. Frank Gilbreth's contracting business, in the manufacture of cotton, and in other similar industries.—Collier's.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S OPPORTUNITY

Gifford Pinchot believes that the protection of the public interest in the Alaska coal lands is not worrying the interior department.

The ex-chief forester fears that the interior department is planning to patent the Cunningham claims.

In which belief and fear the vast majority of those who have followed the Pinchot-Ballinger controversy and the subsequent antics of the majority of the investigating board will concur.

Pinchot would have the President look after the people's rights.

"It unfortunately is impossible to look with confidence to the officials of the interior department for an unbiased judgment in this matter, and it is clear the protection of the public interest in these Alaskan coal lands must depend directly upon the President himself"—he says.

And Pinchot is right, particularly in so far as he refers to the interior department.

Ballinger has shown conclusively that he wishes to hand over to his friends—the Guggenheims and Morgans—as much of the immensely valuable coal lands of Alaska as it is possible for him to do.

His attorney's brief contained the following statement:

"An examination of the record of the Cunningham hearings reveals . . . that the Cunningham claims are not fraudulent, but true."

As Pinchot says, "It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that these deliberate assertions made by the attorney for Mr. Ballinger do not represent the opinion of the latter that the claims are valid and should be patented."

The Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate owns at least a half interest in these claims, hence Ballinger in patenting them would be handing over to his friends that which belongs to the whole people.

No relief can be had among the subordinates in the interior department. It is true that Ballinger refused to act in behalf of the government on the ground that he formerly represented the Cunningham claimants, and accordingly has turned over all responsibility to those under him. Nevertheless, his unqualified endorsement of the validity of the claims cannot fail to have great weight with his subordinates.

All of which goes to show that it is time for President Taft to take a hand in the matter.

He has been advised to relieve Ballinger of his onerous duties, but so far has refused to do so. He is now advised to look after the interests of the people in the Alaska coal lands.

Immediate action is necessary, as once the claims are patented there is no appeal to the courts.

Will President Taft act?—Oakland Enquirer.

Theatre

"Madame X"

Probably the Majestic Theater has never offered a more remarkable production than the superb presentation of Alexandre Bisson's great melodrama, "Madame X," which this week's audiences have followed with the tense interest, the overflowing sympathy, the almost devotional attention which only a masterpiece can compel. The intense moving power of this notably successful play has been a matter of comment in every newspaper and magazine notice it has received, so that all who go to see it anticipate something of its influence, yet it is doubtful if anyone expects to be as profoundly stirred as he is. The courtroom scene especially is so striking in conception, so graphic and impressive in execution, that any description would be a poor one.

Hymack, "The Chameleon Comedian," Orpheum Next Week

The central idea, that of a wreck of a woman being defended in court for murder by her young son, who does not know her and whom she has not seen during her twenty years' existence in the underworld after being driven from her husband's home, is melodramatic enough, but the coincidence of it is not more fantastic, more relentless, than mortal life itself, and the heart-aches involved merely visualize realistically one phase of the great heartache of human love and sorrow. And finally, the faultless technique of it all bespeaks the master hand, even to the sharp flashes of humor which illumine the sordid pages of this universal drama just often enough to save the audience from too prolonged suffering.

Miss Adeline Dunlap in the name part achieves a remarkable creation, remarkable in the wide range and pulsating intensity of its emotions. From her first entrance in the polished gesture and bloom of lovely and beloved womanhood to her pathetic death scene after her acquittal, she keeps one's sympathy in a constant state of upheaval.

Howard Gould is excellent as Floriot, the husband, particularly in the later scenes, when his dignity appeared compatible with advancing years.

As the son, Raymond, Robert Ober does a fine piece of work, complete in all its youthful buoyancy, energy and keenness of feeling.

As the sleek rascal, Laroque, Edwin Forsberg is capital, while the character parts of the two confidence men are portrayed with magic touch by James Cooper and L. J. Loring.

Dorothy Russell Lewis.

Bob Blake at the Mason

There is a central character in "The Traveling Salesman" who is quite funny and natural and lovable "and all that," but this Bob Blake, the drummer hero, is a promontory of excellence on the face of an otherwise undistinguished production. If it were not for the aplomb and contagious jollility with which Mark Smith, in the role of Bob Blake, meets and defeats the stagey situations, this would seem quite below the standard of attractions which the public is accustomed to see at the Mason.

There is a wealth of the "slang of the road," heaped up in the four acts of "The Traveling Salesman," and some of the glimpses of the commercial traveler's hot-foot life are very good, as for instance, the poker game of the four disconsolate con artists in the bleak room of the "Elite Hotel" at Grand Crossing one certain Christmas night.

But in general the dramatic element of the composition is very much strained, and the same expression which has been used of late by aviators hereabouts to describe an uneven meteological condition—"the air is full of holes, like Swiss cheese"—might be employed to describe the dramatic atmosphere of "The Traveling Salesman." Certainly James Forbes' other comedies are more consistently sustained than this one.

As has been inferred, Mark Smith is just about as good as he possibly could be in the rollicking drummer role, and the more serious moments of the play he handles with the same well balanced self-confidence which makes his merry moments so infectious. The supporting company is an ordinary one.

L. B.

Varied Attractions at the Orpheum

The Orpheum bill of the past week carried the audience, in the short space of a couple of hours, all the way from classical music to ragtime and from serious drama to the most frivolous comedy.

Scheda, violinist, is a performer of decided ability and would be a drawing attraction even without the novel stage setting he adopts for his act. This stage setting is particularly good, the whole idea being original and the effect well worked out. The introductory orchestra measures, the gradual dawning of the ghostly light, the player's costume, all serve to enhance the effectiveness of the three solos played by Scheda. Whether his interpretation of the "Spring Song" was adapted to the supposed requirements of Orpheum audiences, or was the expression of the performer's own idea of how it should be played remains a mystery to the listener familiar with the number.

A second hearing of "The Mallet's Masterpiece" strengthened the good impression of the preceding week—it is a playlet of real worth.

Marvelous Griffith is all he is claimed to be—and more—while Cook and Lorenz supply some really funny nonsense. Another laugh-producer of fair quality is an act by the Quigley Brothers. Held over from last week were the Meredith Sisters, the Duffin-Redcay Troupe and Radie Furman.

M. R. T.

"Smiles and Tears"

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," the quaint rural comedy played at the Burbank Theater this week, was full of the genuine rural life and mirth which the name implies. From start to finish there was hardly a moment when the audience did not get a good laugh.

The Burbank stock company, equal to any occasion, entered into the spirit of the play and depicted the characters so cleverly that it was hard to realize it was merely acting.

Miss Marjorie Rambeau makes the most of an exceedingly hard part, that of the village bell, who looses and then regains her eyesight. Byron Beasley is well accepted as the city man who is the good angel of the village. David Hartford has a strong part and plays it so. Charles Ruggles in his part of the ignorant country youth gains the top notch of success and keeps the audience laughing when ever he is brought conspicuously into the firing line. He is certainly a happy addition to the company.

J. L. Barnard.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Frederic Thompson's production of "Polly of the Circus," with Miss Ida St. Leon in Margaret Mayo's American play, will be seen at the Mason Opera House for a week's engagement, opening Monday evening, Jan. 9. In the construction of this drama Miss Mayo went off the beaten path of playwrights and achieved a story as refreshing as it is original, the part of Polly showing with admirable fidelity the life of a pretty little circus rider and the doings in the mystic land behind the scenes in the big tent, as well as pictures of the daily events in a small village of the Middle West.

Polly, from whom the play derives its title, is the head of the circus, and having been severely injured by a fall from her horse, is carried to the par-

AUDITORIUM
Theatre Beautiful
L. E. BEHYMER Manager

NEXT FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, 3:00 O'CLOCK

L. A. Symphony Orchestra

HARLEY HAMILTON, Director

Soloist, Mme. Gerville-Reache, Contralto

Seat prices, 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50. Bartlett's Music Store.

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447 Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c

New Bill Starting Monday Matinee, Jan. 9

MR. HYMACK, The Chameleon Comedian.
HARLAN E. KNIGHT & CO. "The Chalk Line."
THE FOUR VANIS, Marvelous Wire Walkers.
THOMAS & HALL, "The Substitute."
"MARVELOUS" GRIFFITH, The Human Adding Machine.
COOK & LORENZ, The Gentlemen Tramps.
QUIGLEY BROS., Song and Dance Comedians.
SCHEDA, Paganini's Ghost.

Orpheum Motion Pictures

MASON OPERA HOUSE W. T. WYATT Manager

ALL NEXT WEEK—MATINEE SATURDAY. "Polly of the Circus"

Frederick Thompson's SPECIAL POPULAR PRICE MATINEE WEDNESDAY—50c, 75c and $1.00.

NOTE—After the Matinee Performance Wednesday all children will be invited to come on the stage and play and romp with "Polly" and ride the circus horses and trick Shetland Ponies.

REGULAR PRICES—50c to $1.50. SEATS NOW ON SALE.

COMING: "THE DOLLAR PRINCESS."

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse, Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth

Beginning Sunday Night, Jan. 8

Wm. A. Brady Presents the Great Comedy Hit "A Gentleman from Mississippi"

The play that made all America laugh. Now in its third triumphant year.

Prices—50c to $1.50 nights and Saturday Matinees. Popular Matinee Wednesday.

Coming—JEFFERSON DE ANGELIS in "The Beauty Spot."

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth

2ND WEEK BEGINS SUNDAY MATINEE, JAN. 8

The Most Entertaining Drama This Season—The Critics Agree.

"QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER"

Prices—25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees Saturdays, Sundays, Holidays, 10c, 25c, 50c. Coming—Running This Way Fast—"THE FOX."

sonage adjoining the circus lot. Her recovery of health under the supervision of the village preacher, forms the basis for a pretty love story.

The company engaged in its presentation is said to be competent. A feature of the engagement here will be the special children's matinee on Wednesday, when the little ones will be invited back of the scenes to pet the horses and play with and ride the little ponies.

Following "Polly of the Circus," at the Mason Opera House, Charles Frohman presents the musical success, "The Dollar Princess." The company includes one hundred people, with an augmented orchestra of thirty.

The attraction at the Majestic next week beginning Sunday night will be "A Gentleman from Mississippi," a comedy of Washington social and political life, by Harrison Rhodes and Thomas A. Wise. It is now in its third year and comes here under the management of Wm. A. Brady. The story of the play revolves around the advent into public life of a Mississippi planter, who had hitherto devoted more time to the development of his plantation than to the promotion of political jobs. Good fortune brings him and a clever young newspaper man, Bud Haines, together on the day of Senator Langdon's arrival in the national capital; and Bud, accepting the post of secretary to the new Senator, guides the latter through all the pitfalls of political life there without a single mishap. Langdon has two daughters whom he brings with him to Washington. The elder becomes engaged to a Congressman from his native state, who induces her to place the inheritance she has received from her mother's estate in a land company which has bought considerable property in a Gulf seaport, with the expectation that a bill will be passed making this place a naval base. Her brother is also induced to invest money belonging to his father and places the latter in the power of the politicians who are engineering the deal and who need the new Senator's cooperation. Senator Langdon adroitly outwits his enemies, saves his honor and his fortune, releases his elder daughter from her engagement with the scheming Congressman and suitably rewards the loyalty of Bud Haines by bestowing the younger daughter on him.

Scene from "Polly of the Circus," M ason Opera House Next Week

While the story would appear to have a serious strain, still the entire plot is worked out with a vein of comedy and there is one continuous laugh from beginning to end of the performance.

Mystery, skill and mirth are the three features of the new Orpheum bill that opens with the Monday matinee Jan. 9.

Mr. Hymack heads the list. Hymack is an Englishman who calls himself "the chameleon comedian," and his act consists mostly in fun. He makes rapid changes in his personal and sartorial appearance, yet does it all right before his audience, and defies anyone to say how it is done. The result is a baffling mystery that is none the less interesting because its mechanism cannot be probed.

The new sketch is by Una Clayton, and is presented by Harlan E. Knight & Co. It treats of two old grouches who live in one room divided by a chalk line, and neither dares cross this line. A girl enters into their scheme of enmity, and how she resolves all into pleasure and happiness is the real plot of the little play.

The four Vanis are experts on the tight wire and the quartette, two boys and two girls, is not excelled by many similar groups. They do spectacular stunts on a tight wire, and do them with an ease and grace that is captivating.

Lou Hall and Hilda Thomas have "The Substitute," but it is not to be taken seriously. It is merely a vehicle for clever foolery and fun, and in it Mr. Hall gives a representation of a rubel, the while he proves a fine foil for Miss Thomas.

"Marvelous" Griffith, the wonder in figures, Cook & Lorenz, Quigley brothers, and Scheda are held over on the new bill, and with motion pictures, they complete a bill of much variety.

The Orpheum Road show will be here Jan. 23 and 30, and Alice Lloyd will join it here the latter date. La Pia, the danseuse, and Rigoletto brothers, who do almost everything that is comprised in a stage repertoire, are the star features this season.

"The Bathing Girls," with Glenwood Hall and a bevy of pretty girls, will be along soon.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" will be repeated at the Burbank for the week beginning with the matinee Sunday. "Quincy Adams Sawyer" is entertaining because it does not pretend to do anything else. It is a lively picture of a community back in New England, where a number of incidents occur in quick succession, and give occasion for much merriment with an undertone of pathos which gives it human interest without allowing it at any time to become sad.

The cause of all the rumpus is the arrival of an energetic youth from Boston in a quiet village. It has about the same effect as putting a whale in a millpond. It is one of those neighborhoods where everyone knows everyone else's private affairs, so Quincy Adams Sawyer soon becomes tangled up in the lives of half of the natives. Then the fun begins. The city youth knocks out the village bully, buys the village store, straightens out the village romance which is going awry, outwits the village mischiefmaker, and finally marries the village belle after he has had her blindness cured. He is the busiest little person you ever saw, and yet it all happens quite naturally.

Following "Quincy Adams Sawyer," Lee Arthur's comedy drama, "The Fox," will be given its premiere. This is the play which Manager Morosco likes so well that he bought the rights for the entire world, and will give Los Angeles the first view of the production which he will stage in its same form in New York next season.

Wilton Lackaye is still fighting lustily in "The Battle" and telling "tall ones" between times. The other day he went into his club shivering.

"'The drear November days are here,'" he chanted dolefully, "or almost at any rate, and soon we'll all be frozen stiff as we are every winter in this beautiful climate. The only thing we have to be thankful for is that New York isn't as cold as Montana. I can recollect one winter while I was out there, when a sheep, jumping from a hillock, became suddenly frozen on the way, and stuck in the air like a mass of ice."

"But, man," exclaimed one of his interested listeners, "the law of gravity wouldn't allow that."

"I know that," replied Lackaye gravely. "But the law of gravity was frozen, too!"—Young's Magazine.

Unnecessary Howling

Inspector E. B. Helburg of the State Dairy and Food Department was talking about a certain restaurant in St. Paul.

"Why, it's as bad as the hotel up at ——," naming a middle-sized town in the iron range.

"The landlord up there does not come out and say 'Dinner is ready,' as they do at ordinary places," he said. "He comes out with a big hand bell and rings it so it can be heard all over town.

"I was sitting in the front room one day when he came out with the bell. The ringing made the dog set up a loud howl.

"'Shut up,' said the traveling man to the dog, 'you don't have to eat here!'"—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Precise.—A young Baltimore man has a habit of correcting carelessness in speech that comes to his notice. The other day he walked into a shop and asked for a comb. "Do you want a narrow man's comb?" asked the clerk. "No," said the customer, gravely. "I want a comb for a stout man with rubber teeth."—Baltimore American.

A JUDGE'S FEAR

Speaking before the Twin City Bankers' Association, December 15, Judge Charles F. Amidon of the United States District Court at Fargo, N. D., said the founders of our government were men who feared too large a measure of popular government. The United States, he declared, is the safest country in the world for property, and the federal courts, construing the constitution, are the bulwark of the people's rights. As reported in the Pioneer Press, he added:

"Put the people in direct control of government, give them primary reform, the initiative, referendum, recall, and their legislation will represent the passing passions, prejudices and fears of the people. Then the courts will have to declare many more laws unconstitutional."

In other words, Judge Amidon, like the framers of the constitution to whom he refers, fears democracy. When property rights interfere with human rights, then human rights must give way. Dollars are supreme; not Men. Therefore it is necessary to restrict the opportunities for voicing the popular will. Given the tools wherewith to carve their will into law, the people will give expression to their "passing passions, prejudices and fears," rather than to their intelligence, their patriotism, their good judgment. Let Judge Amidon, and those others who fear democracy and look to the courts to stand between the people and the expression of their will in legislation, examine the experiences of Oregon.—La Follettes.

PARTY LINES DISAPPEARING

The most pronounced feature of the political situation in the United States today is the independence of the voters of the Union.

Party lines are more merely nominal now, and party leaders find increasing diffieulty in controlling the eleetors through political organizations or political machines.

There is not a combine, a machine nor an organization in any state of the Union that can hold its ground or survive under attacks based upon abuses of public interests. Partisan politics is moribund in the United States.
—The Cincinnati Enquirer.

Restricting Office Holders. Richmond, Va., has passed an ordinance prohibiting city officers from receiving any compensation for services in relation to any proceedings in which the municipality may be interested. This legislation grew out of a vicious practice, and marks an era of public sentiment on an important subject.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

MUSIC

The symphony program for Friday afternoon, January 13, under the direction of Harley Hamilton is to be one of the best this season. It is the third concert and the soloist is to be Mme. Gerville-Reache, the contralto. A Sinding Symphony, a Goldmark overture, and a Busch prologue should be of sufficient consequence to invite a number to crowd the auditorium. In addition to these, a vocal solo from Orpheus and Eurydice, an aria from Gounod's "Queen of Sheba," with orchestral accompaniment, will be given. The program for Friday follows:

Mme. Gerville-Reache, Contralto, Simpson Auditorium Jan. 17

PART I

Symphony in D Minor, op. 21 (Sinding)
Allegro moderato
Andante
Vivace
Allegro maestoso

More Regal in His Low Estate... .....(Gounod)

PART II

Prologue to "The Passing of Arthur" .....(Carl Busch)

I Have Lost My Eurydice (Orpheus) .....(Gluck)

Overture "Sankuntala"...(Goldmark)

Soloist, Mme. Gerville-Reache.

A new artist will be introduced to the music loving public of Los Angeles at Simpson Auditorium Tuesday evening, January 17. It is no less a personage than Jeanne Gerville-Reache, whose work at the Manhattan and Metropolitan opera houses in the last three seasons has won her the united praise of musical critics in Boston, New York and Chicago. When one has youth, beauty of an unusual type one has indeed been richly endowed. Mme. Reache has a wonderful range. Her choice of songs is indicative of the highest art. This will be her only appearance in recital in Los Angeles, and the program numbers follow:

1. (a) Les Stances (Sapho) (Gounod)
   (b) "Mon coeur s'ouvre a ta voix (Samson et Delila) (Saint-Saens).
2. (a) Ich Grolle Nicht (Schumann)
   (b) Der Erlkonig .....(Schubert)
3. (a) "Addio" (Dedicated to Mme. Gerville-Reache) ...(Parelli)
   (m) Aria de la Cieca (La Gioconda) .....(Ponchielli)
   (c) "Stride la Vampa" (Il Trovatore) .....(Verdi)
4. (a) Hindu Slumber Song(H. Ware)
   (b) Love's Trinity...(R. deKoven)
5. (a) Sir de Lia (L'Enfant Prodigue) .....(Debussy)
   (b) L'Anneau d'argent (Chaminade).
   (c) Chanson Slave ...(Chaminade)
   (d) Plaisirs d'amour (1741-1816) (Martini).
   (e) D'une Prison.....(R. Hahn)

For the second time in a short period New York was last week the scene of an opera premiere of world-wide interest; the occasion was the production for the first time on any stage of Humperdinck's opera, "Konigskinder." The principal role was sung by Geraldine Farrar, who as "The Goose Girl," made a decided success. Quotations follow from Arthur Farwell's review of the music in Musical America:

"To come straightway upon the heart of the present issue, "Konigskinder as music, is the bread of life itself."

"From first to last it glows—with radiant joy, with humor, with lofty pathos—and, above all, with love—love touched and expressed with an exalted beauty and purity of emotion, and with a completeness of expression for which one must look in vain among the music-makers of the time.

"One comes away not merely or chiefly realizing the passions and affections of the characters through the visible action upon the stage; the orchestra breathes them out in incredible fulness and beauty. So rich is the orchestral score that it is quite conceivable that sections of 'Konigskinder' could be given upon the programs of symphony concerts with greatly satisfying musical effect.

"The opera, as a whole, is melodic rather than dramatic. It has some short expressive motives, such as the horn call which represents the Konigssohn (with which the prelude begins), but most of its melodies are longer breathed. The score is a most delicate and intricate web—though wholly lucid in its effect in performance—of these motives and melodies. They are interwoven with a dual devotion to beauty and skill that makes this score one of the most remarkable achievements of the time."

Senator "Bob" Taylor, of Tennessee, tells a story of how, when he was "Fiddling Bob," Governor of that State, an old negress came to him and said: "Massa Gov'na, we's mighty po' this winter, and Ah wishes you would pardon mah old man. He is a fiddler same as you is, and he's in the pen'tentry." "What was he put in for?" asked the Governor. "'Stead of working fo' it, that good-fo'-nothin' nigger done stole some bacon." "If he is good for nothing, what do you want him back for?" "Well, yo' see, we's all out of bacon ag'in," said the old negress innocently.—Cosmopolitan.

The Jester's Bells

Some Verse

Eminent Poet (to his betrothed)—"Darling, how did you like the poem I sent you? Did it seem too sweetly tender?"

She—"Oh, it was lovely. I got seven-fifty for it at the church fair."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Heredity

Richard Harding Davis at a football game in Philadelphia praised the voices of the young undergraduates shouting their weird college yells. "It makes me think of a Locust Street bride," said Mr. Davis, smiling. "She turned to her husband one night at dinner and remarked: 'My dear, the first time I saw you was at Franklin Field. Your head was thrown back, your mouth wide open, and your face was very red—you were yelling your college yell.' 'Yes, I remember,' said the young man. 'And I noticed,' she continued, 'what a remarkable voice you had.' 'Yes, you spoke of it at the time,' said he. 'But what makes you think of it now?' 'Oh, nothing,' said the bride. 'Only I wish the baby hadn't inherited it. That's all.'"—Argonaut.

That Trying Telephone

Several evenings ago a young man repaired to a telephone office and rang up his sweetheart at her residence.

"Is that you?"

"Yes, George, dear," came the reply.

"Are you alone?"

"I wish I was there."

"I wish so, too."

"If I was there do you know what I would do with my darling?"

"No George; I do not."

And then somehow the lines got mixed, and this is what she heard: "Well I'd pull her ears back till she opened her mouth, and then I'd put a lump of mud in it. If that didn't answer, I'd give her a sound thrashing."

And then Marion fainted.

Now they never speak as they pass by, and the man who was talking to his farrier about a balky mare says that anybody who will advise a man to put his arms around the neck of an obstreperous horse and whisper words of love in its ear ought to be hanged. —Tit-Bits.

Beyond Words

Doctor—Are you ill? Let me see your tongue.

Poet—Ah, it is no use, no tongue can tell how bad I feel.—Columbia Jester.

To Be Expected

"I'm afraid your son is going to be one of the world's dreamers."

"I'd be surprised if he wasn't," replied Mrs. McGudley. "The way he eats mince pie at night is something terrifyin'."—Washington Star.

Frenchman—Pleasant woman, that! Is she unmarried?

Chicagoan—Yes; twice.—Harper's Weekly.

Point of View

When Mrs. Langtry was at the summit of her beauty and her fame—where crowds followed her in Bond Street and the Row—she met, at a semi-royal dinner, an African king. Mrs. Langtry, dazzling in her beauty, sat beside this king. She was in good spirits, and she did her very best to amuse and please him. And she must have succeeded, for at the dinner's close he heaved a deep sigh and said to her: "Ah, madam, if heaven had only made you black and fat you would be irresistible!"—Argonaut.

All He Cared

Earnest Pilgrim—"Please send a large bunch of red roses to this address and charge it to me."

Clerk—"Yes, sir, and your name?"

Earnest Pilgrim—"Oh, never mind the name, she'll understand."—Harvard Lampoon.

"Has the doctor a large practice?" "So large that when people have nothing the matter with them he tells them so."—Pittsburg Post.

The Limit

Jesting about railways of the South is rather an overworked profession. Before mason-jarring the crop, however, let Senator Burton of Ohio have the floor.

"Speaking of railroads," he says, "the ultimate word, in my experience, was a 'limited' on which I traveled in Georgia last summer. At a point where we were making our greatest speed a man stood at the side of the track with a moving picture machine. I leaned out of the window and called to him, 'How are you getting on?'

"He stopped turning the crank, and spoke with an expression of deep disgust.

"'It don't seem to be no use,' he said. 'Hold your head still, please. I want to get a time exposure.'"—Everybody's.

All Right Otherwise

A Missouri darkey was endeavoring to sell a mule to a Jefferson City man, who, however, was in doubt as to the animal's age.

"If," said he, "this mule is as young as you claim, why is it that he bends so at the knees?"

"Oh, don't let dat little fact worry you, boss," the negro hastened to say. "Dat mule bend at de laigs, but it ain't due to no age dat he does. De hones' truth, boss, is dat I ain't had no money to look after dat mule de way he oughter been. My stable is kinder low an' dat mule he been 'bliged to stoop a little, dat's all."—Harper's Magazine.

Plain Speaking

"I believe in calling a spade a spade," said the emphatic person.

"That's right, friend," replied Broncho Bob. "There was a man who nearly lost his life here by gettin' into a game an' tryin' to call a spade a club."—Washington Star.

"My largest item of expense is on account of advertising." "Indeed! I was not aware that you were in business." "I'm not. But my wife reads the advertisements in the newspapers."—Boston Transcript.

"Tea or coffee?" demanded the bustling waitress. He smiled benignly. "Don't tell me; let me guess," he whispered.—Brooklyn Life.

"The captain told me they kept you alive for eight days on brandy and milk." "Just my luck; I was unconscious all the time."—M. A. P.

"An heirloom," explained the farmer's wife to her thirteen-year-oid boy, "is something that has been handed down from father to son, and in some instances is greatly prized." "I'd prize these heirlooms I'm wearing," remarked the youngster, "a good deal more if they wasn't so long in the legs."—Everybody's Magazine.

LOS ANGELES CITY WORK AND LEGISLATION

An indexed review of all action by Council, Board of Public Works, Commissions and Officials, relating to property improvement or of general interest. Record closes Wednesday night.

PUBLIC WORK BY STREETS

2nd St.; ord. fixing and establishing the curb line on each side of 2nd St. between Carondelet St. and Coronado St. Adopted.

Also, ord. establishing the grade of 2nd St. from Carondelet St. to Coronado St. Adopted.

3rd St.; pet. from Katherine Goodman, et al., asking that 3rd st. between Figueroa st. and the Third st. tunnel be declared to be in the conduit district and that all poles be removed therefrom. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

5th St.; final ord. changing and establishing grade of the south side of 5th St. from Crocker St. to Ruth Ave. Adopted.

6th St.; City Engineer instructed to present necessary ordinance for the sidewalking of 6th St. between Alameda and Los Angeles Sts. Adopted.

6th St.; final ord. for the sidewalking of Sixth st. from Central ave. to Alameda st. Adopted.

6th and Mill; pet. from Phillip Duvall, et al., protesting against the paving of East 6th and Mill sts. Set for hearing Jan. 10.

7th St.; final ord. changing and establishing the grade of 7th St. from Moss to Beacon Sts. Adopted.

11th St.; ord. establishing the grade of 11th St. from Hope to Figueroa Sts. Adopted.

16th St.; maps of the assessment district for the sewer work on 16th St. between Essex St. and Central Ave. Adopted.

16th St.; ord. establishing the name of that certain street heretofore known as "Blaine St." or "16th St." lying between the westerly boundary line of the city and the westerly line of Central Arlington Heights as 16th St. Adopted.

23rd St.; ord. of intention to improve 23rd St. from Figueroa St. to Union Ave. Adopted.

35th St.; maps of the assessment district for the improvement of 35th St. from Wesley Ave. to Figueroa St. Adopted.

35th St.; maps of the assessment district for the improvement of 35th St. from Central Ave. to Hooper Ave. Adopted.

36th St.; City Engineer has furnished the City Attorney the necessary descriptions for the opening of 36th St. between San Pedro St. and South Park Ave. to a width of 50 feet.

38th St.; maps of the assessment district for the improvement of 38th St. from Budlong Ave. to Wisconsin St. Adopted.

40th Place; pet. from Santa Barbara Imp. Assn., et al., for street light on West 40th place between Figueroa and Hoover sts. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

48th and Wall; pet. from Chas. W. Kunze, et al., for a street light at said st. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

52nd St.; ord. of intention to improve 52nd St. from Long Beach Ave. to the terminus east of Holmes Ave. Adopted.

53rd St., from Central to McKinley; protest from Albert Hoffman, et al., against sidewalking. Denied.

54th St.; ord. of intention to improve 54th st. between Compton ave. and Fortune st. Adopted.

90th St.; ord. establishing the grade of 90th St. from Vermont Ave. to Hoover St. Adopted.

91st St.; ord. establishing the grade of 91st St. from Vermont Ave. to the east line of Tracts No. 581 and No. 582. Adopted.

92nd St.; ord. establishing the grade of 92nd St. from Vermont Ave. to Hoover St. Adopted.

Ave. 20; City Atty. instructed to prepare ord. directing the execution of a quit claim deed to that certain piece of land lying in front of lots No. 16 and 17 of the Hamilton Tract and fronting on Avenue 20, as requested by F. F. Stetson.

Ave. 26; ord. of intention to improve Ave. 26 between Pasadena Ave. and Griffin Ave. and a portion of Griffin Ave. at its intersection with Ave. 26. Adopted.

Ave. 28; ord. of intention to improve Ave. 28 between Pasadena Ave. and Workman St. Adopted.

Ave. 53; ord. for the opening and widening of Avenue 53 between Monte Vista street and Pasadena avenue. Adopted.

Ave. 55; ord. for the opening and widening of Avenue 55 from Monte Vista street to Pasadena avenue. Adopted.

Ave. 56; ord. for the opening and widening of Avenue 56 between Monte Vista street and Pasadena avenue. Adopted.

Ave. 60; pet. from J. G. Cortelyou for removal of obstruction in sidewalk on the south side of East Avenue 60 between Echo st. and Hayes ave. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Alvarado St.; pet. from W. R. Logan, et al, asking that the grade be changed and established on Alvarado St. between Court and Dartmouth Sts. Denied.

Alvarado St.; pet. from M. D. L. Scott, et al., for improvement, under Bond Act, of said st. from Berkeley to Morcom. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Baring Cross St.; ord. establishing the grade of Baring Cross St. from the north line of Tract No. 923 to 92nd St. Adopted.

Berendo and 15th; pet. from T. H. Cullen, et al., for light at corner of said sts. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Bird St.; ord. of intention to improve Bird st. between St. Louis st. and Cornwell st. Adopted.

Bonsallo and Washington; pet. from E. J. Elson for street light at said corner. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Bouett and Solano; pet. from A. L. Bailey, et al., for a street light at or near Bouett st. and Solano ave. Ref to Bd. Pub. Wks.

North Broadway, from Buena Vista St. Bridge to Cottage Home St.; protest from C. E. Donnatin, et al., against change of grade. Deferred until Jan. 10.

Camerford Ave.; pet. from Ida Faber, et al., for the improvement of Camerford ave. between Gower and Vine sts., Bond Act. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Canal St., Wilmington; ord. of intention to change and establish the grade of Canal St. from E. 9th St. to W. 7th St. Adopted.

Carondelet St.; ord. fixing and establishing the curb line on each side of Carondelet St. between the Coronado Terrace Tract and a line perpendicular with Carondelet St. and 100 feet south of 1st St. Adopted.

Also, ord. establishing the grade of Carondelet St. from 1st St. to the first alley south of 2nd St. Adopted.

Central Ave.; ord. for the opening and widening of Central ave. between 58th st. and Slauson ave. Adopted.

Concord St.; pet. from L. A. Hughes, et al., appealing from the act of the Board of Public Works in accepting the improvement of Concord st. bet. 1st and 4th sts. Set for hearing Jan. 10.

Cornwell St.; final ord. changing and establishing the grade of Cornwell St. from Barlow St. to its north terminus. Adopted.

Cosme St.; ord. of intention to improve Cosme st; between Marengo st. and the alley southerly of Marengo st. Adopted.

Echo St.; final ord. changing and establishing the grade of a portion of Echo St. at Bertna St. Adopted.

Elmyra St.; ord. of intention to improve Elmyra St. from Magdalena to Main St. Adopted.

Figueroa St.; ord. for the opening and widening of Figueroa st. between 58th st. and Slauson ave. Adopted.

Figueroa St.; maps of the assessment district for the improvement of Figueroa St. at Pico, 16th and Washington Sts. intersection. Adopted.

Hobart Blvd.; maps of the assessment district for the sewer work along Hobart Blvd. between Leighton Ave. and its southerly terminus. Adopted.

Hooper and 58th; pet. from John W. Heath, et al., for an electric light at corner of said sts. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Hoover St.; ord. establishing the grade of Hoover St. from the north line of Tract No. 923 to 92nd St. Adopted.

Hope St.; final ord. for the opening of Hope st. to a width of 60 feet from its southerly terminus south of 37th to 38th street. Adopted.

Kern and Colton; pet. from John F. Blunt, et al., for an electric light at the intersection of Kern and Colton sts. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Linden Place; ord. establishing the curb line on Linden Place between Selma Ave. and Sunset Blvd. Adopted.

Long Beach Ave.; ord. establishing the name of that certain street known as "Long Beach Ave." lying between 20th St. and Slauson Ave. as "Long Beach Ave." Adopted.

Main St.; ord. for the opening and widening of Main st. between 58th st. and Slauson ave. Adopted.

Melrose Ave.; pet. from S. F. Zombro, for improvement, private contract, of north side of Melrose ave. between 97 ft. east of Windermere ave. and 97 ft. west of Wisteria drive. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Monroe St.; pet. from S. F. Zombro for improvement, private contract, of Monroe st. between 97 ft. east of Windermere ave. and west line of Wisteria drive. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Normandie Ave.; ord. for the opening and widening of Normandie ave. between 58th st. and Slauson ave. Adopted.

Orchard Ave.; ord. establishing the grade of Orchard Ave. from the north line of Tract No. 923 to 92nd St. Adopted.

Ocean View Ave.; ord. establishing the curb lines on Ocean View Ave. between Wilcox Ave. and Vine St. Adopted.

Opening New Alley; City Atty. and City Eng. instructed to prepare necessary ords. for the opening of alleys in actual and prospective business districts, as recommended by Fire Com.

Pasadena Ave. Bridge; City Engineer has furnished the City Attorney the necessary descriptions of the land to be condemned for the approach to the Pasadena Ave. bridge across the Arroyo Seco.

Pomona St.; ord. abandoning proceedings for improvement. Adopted.

San Pedro St.; ord. for the opening and widening of San Pedro street between 58th street and Slauson avenue. Adopted.

Sierra St.; ord. abandoning all proceedings for the improvement of Sierra St. Adopted.

Smith St.; ord. changing the name of Smith St. between Temple St. and Bellevue Ave. to "Reno St." Adopted.

South Park Ave.; ord. for the opening and widening of South Park ave. between 58th st. and Slauson ave. Adopted.

Sunset Blvd.; ord. for the improvement of Sunset Blvd. bet. Marion Ave. and Benefit St. Adopted.

Towne ave.; ord. for the opening and widening of Towne avenue between 58th street and Slauson avenue. Adopted.

Towne Ave.; final ord. changing and establishing the grade of Towne Ave. from 5th to 6th Sts. Adopted.

Vermont Ave.; ord. for the opening and widening of Vermont ave. between 58th st. and Slauson ave. Adopted.

Washington St.; maps of the assessment district for the improvement of Washington St. from Grand Ave. to Central Ave. Adopted.

Windermere Ave.; pet. from S. F. Zombro, trustee, for improvement under private contract of Windermere ave. between Monroe st. and Melrose ave. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Wisteria Drive; pet. from S. F. Zombro for improvement of Wisteria drive between Monroe st. and Melrose ave., private contract. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Workman St.; ord. of intention to improve Workman St. between Manitou Ave. and Pasadena Ave. Adopted.

BIDS RECEIVED

Blanchard St.; for improving said street from Evergreen to Mott.

Center St.; for improving said st. from Aliso to 50 feet southwest of Macy st.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

Annexation Promises; communication from V. C. Allen, et al, who were appointed a committee at a public mass meeting in San Pedro to protest and make a demand upon the city officials of Los Angeles that they be protected in the annexation promises. In this communication particular reference is made to promise No. 6 of the consolidation committee, that San Pedro was to have as soon as practicable a municipally owned and controlled supply of water, which was to be sold to the citizens at the same price as that enjoyed by the main city of Los Angeles, but stating that they are now compelled to pay $6000 more than when they were under the old San Pedro rate. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Utilities.

Charter Amendments; ord. providing for the submission to the electors of Los Angeles at a special election, to be held March 6, of certain proposals to amend the city charter. Adopted.

City Planning; committee on City Planning reported to Council and requested the committee be continued for a sufficient length of time to be able to create a practical plan for the city at the least possible expense. Also that an office be provided. Ref. to Finance Com.

Dice Shaking; request of Police Commission that question of dice shaking be submitted to the people at the next election. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Election Committee; three members of Council appointed an election committee to serve for balance of the year; first work will be to consider the consolidation of precincts for the Charter amendment election and name the officers of election in order that the data may be obtained so that the ordinances calling the election may be prepared in ample time.

Fire Protection in San Pedro; proposed agreement to be entered into between the city and the S. P. Ry. Co. relative to said company giving right of way over their property for the installation of an auxiliary salt water fire service line from the water front to the business portion of San Pedro. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Garvanza; quit claim deed executed by J. H. Smith to lots 16 and 17 of Rogers' Subdivision of part of block 3 in town of Garvanza. Accepted.

Griffith Park Fire Break; Park Com. requested appropriation of $1500 to be used in widening the fire break around Griffith Park from 30 feet, as at present, to 100 feet. Ref. to Finance Com.

Highway to Harbor; City Planning committee requested that highway leading to the harbor, promised under the bond issue, be completed at once and that streets in city connecting with same should be improved; and that portions of Figueroa st. and Vermont ave. connecting the harbor with the business center of the city should be put in a passable condition. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Industrial District; pet. from Eugene V. Griffes, et al., asking that the south side of Washington st. between Ellendale and Vermont ave. be set aside as an industrial district to extend 150 feet south. Ref. to Pub. Welfare Com.

Motor Driven Fire Apparatus; bid of Gramm Motor Truck Co. of $3387 for motor and chassis for combination chemical and hose wagon. Accepted.

Objections to Automatic Flagmen; pet. from Alex Davidson, et al., for the abolishment of bells used by the Pacific Electric Railway Co. at the crossings on their right of way between 9th st. and Slauson Junction, and that flagmen be placed at said crossings in lieu thereof. Ref. to Leg. Com.

Old City Cemetery; City Atty. instructed to commence necessary suit to acquire the title by condemnation, or otherwise, to the lots in said cemetery which have been conveyed, said land to be condemned for municipal purposes.

San Pedro Damage Suits; City Atty. reported: "Prior to the consolidation of the city of San Pedro with this city a number of damage suits were filed against the former city for damages sustained by reason of cuts and fills made in the streets of that city in pursuance of ordinances ordering their improvement. I therefore suggest that you permit me to refer all of said cases to a board of arbitrators to consist of three members, two to be chosen by the city and one by the attorney for the respective parties to the various suits; the award of the arbitrators in each case to be entered as a judgment of court." Report adopted by Council and City Atty. instructed accordingly.

Sanchez Tract; pet. from Michael Lynch for quit claim deed to lot 10, blk. 2, Sanchez tract. Ref. to City Atty.

Spence Tract; pet. from Myron T. Holcomb, et al, asking for the vacation of the alley through block 2, M. L. Wick's subdivision of the Spence Tract. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Taxicabs; ord. regulating taxicabs and fixing the rates to be charged and collected for taxicab service. Set for hearing Jan. 10.

Treasurer's Safe; instructions heretofore given City Clerk to advertise for bids for a safe for the City Treasurer's office rescinded. Bd. Pub. Wks. authorized to purchase a second-hand safe for $600 from Harring-Hall Marion Safe Co.

Tract No. 647; Map adopted.

Undertaking Establishments; City Atty. instructed to draft ord. making it unlawful to conduct an undertaking establishment or morgue within 100 feet of any residence, church or school house, without written consent of same, providing, however, that said ord. shall not apply to establishments already in existence.

FOR A SOUTHERN STATE UNIVERSITY

(Continued from page 7)

become numerous more centers of education are necessary. Our State has already recognized the logic of this statement by establishing six State Normal Schools.

There seems to be an idea in circulation that to establish several State Universities in one State would be an educational error. Such an idea comes to California from small States whose educational conditions can never serve as a precedent to guide California's action. California is so great in area, and so long from north to south, that its educational conditions are unique.

If California were placed with San Francisco at Boston, and with its coast line paralleling the Atlantic Coast line of the United States, California would cover 15 States wholly or in part as follows: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. Beneath its imperial domain would be found nine great universities, viz.: Virginia, Catholic, Johns Hopkins, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Columbia, Cornell, Yale and Harvard. Those nine universities are not able to serve the educational needs of a territory not larger than California, and are supported in their work by more than 100 smaller universities, colleges and normal schools.

If a circle were described with Chicago as a center and with the railroad distance from Los Angeles to Berkeley as a radius, that circle would wholly encompass Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, besides encompassing portions of eleven other States and a part of Canada. In the seven States wholly within the circle there are seven great universities, namely, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Chicago.

Seconding these seven great universities are nearly 100 smaller universities, colleges and normal schools.

The foregoing illustrations emphasize the immensity of California, a State with an area of 158,360 square miles; and emphasize equally the fact that portions of our country not larger than California, and portions where distances are not greater than in California, require and are served by many great universities.

At the present time there are two great centers of population in California, one adjacent to San Francisco, the other adjacent to Los Angeles. The San Francisco portion embracing 10 counties with approximately 1,000,000 people with 1340 high school graduates in 1910, is served by two great universities less than 100 miles away from the home of any pupil residing in those ten counties.

The territory adjacent to Los Angeles, embracing 8 counties with a population of 751,000, with 1698 high school graduates in 1910, is served by the same universities as is the San Francisco group of counties, but its pupils farthest away are more than 600 miles away, and the average distance of all its pupils is more than 400 miles. The 1698 high school graduates of Southern California in 1910 is the largest body of high school graduates in America compelled to travel even 300 miles to reach a State University.

The distance from the south to Berkeley is prohibitive upon the great body of our high school graduates. Less than 220 of our 1698 high school graduates in 1910, entered the State University at Berkeley this year. What became of the other 1478? Some went to Stanford, some to normal schools, some to private schools, and hundreds dropped out because they were too poor to pay the excessive cost due to traveling expenses and incidental expenses which would not exist if the university were near to the homes of its pupils.

These same high school graduates are shut out from our local higher institution of learning because those institutions must charge heavy tuition fees.

These excluded children come from homes poor in money but rich in character. The compulsory exclusion of these children is a great wrong to them, is a menace to the State and a crime against posterity.

California is growing rapidly, Southern California is growing even more rapidly than the remainder of the State, and its need for adequate university facilities will increase even faster in the next ten years than it has in the past.

The growth of high schools in California in the last ten years is the most marvelous part of our educational development. In 1901, 12,107 children were enrolled in California's high schools, while in 1910, 39,115 were enrolled.

In 1901, there were 1562 high school graduates, and in 1910 there were 4267.

From 1900 to 1910, the enrollment in the high schools of Southern California rose from 3167 to 16,042 children.

In 1910, 4247 children graduated from California's high schools. Of that number 1698 graduated from the high schools of the 8 counties of Southern California, and 2547 graduated from the 50 other counties of California.

A careful investigation of the increase in high school enrollment and in high school graduates for the past ten years shows a reasonably regular ratio of increase. The ratio both for enrollment and for graduates is a trifle over 11 per cent per year on the preceding year's totals.

Every sign and every reason indicates that the growth of California will increase rather than decrease in the next ten years. The higher education of our high school graduates will therefore become more and more a problem.

This is not a matter for next year. The problem is here now, and it will increase enormously from year to year.

Beyond all question the State must and will furnish additional university facilities for its high school graduates. The vital question then is this, where will those facilities be located? Will they be located at Berkeley, inaccessible to the bulk of Southern California's 40 per cent of the high school graduates of the State, or will they be located in Southern California, thus relieving the overcrowding at Berkeley, and affording the same fair and just chance to our children as is now afforded to those around the bay?

In any case we shall be compelled to pay more than a third of the cost of all that is done for university education in California. If a university be established at the south we shall receive our fair share of return for our payments; but if it be at Berkeley we shall suffer even more than we do now.

N. B.—The foregoing argument was read before those members of the California Legislature who were present at a meeting held in the Chamber of Commerce building at Los Angeles on December 16, 1910; and was ordered printed by the University Committee at its meeting held on December 21, 1910, at the Alexandria Hotel.

At this latter meeting Mrs. Rucinda Dodson of San Pedro offered a free site of 100 acres located at San Pedro; and Mr. Charles A. Elder, for the Los Angeles Investment Company, offered a free site of 100 acres on the Inglewood Highlands and $100,000 in cash for the improvement of the grounds. The offers were referred to the Executive Committee of the University Committee.

SELFISH INTEREST

That the one great obstacle to the development of our waterways is the opposition of the railroad companies, is the statement made by Commissioner of Corporations Herbert Knox Smith in his report to the President Says Commissioner Knox:

"Probably the greatest single deterrent to water terminal advance in the United States is the present adverse attitude of rail lines toward independent water traffic, in their exclusive control of frontage, in refusal or neglect to co-ordinate with general water traffic, and in refusal to pro-rate generally with water lines in through movement of traffic."

In some cities, says Mr. Knox, railroads own almost the entire water frontage and are able to stifle possible water competition.

Europe's rivers are busy arteries of commerce. Europe's great natural highways are used to carry commodities between producer and consumer as cheaply as possible. Europe looks upon her waterways as a resource to be developed in the interest of the people.

In the United States they are allowed to lie unused and undeveloped, because of the selfish interest of the rail transportation monopoly.—La Follette's.

BANK CLEARINGS

Bank clearings from Dec. 28 to 31, inclusive, showing comparisons with corresponding weeks of 1909 and 1908:

	1910	1909	1908
Dec. 28	$ 3,070,790.23	$2,585,093.47	$2,310,912.06
Dec. 29	2,374,854.80	1,975,745.22	1,429,167.79
Dec 30	2,415,962.38	1,956,578.58	Holiday
Dec. 31	2,335,183.86	Holiday	2,362,309.63
Total	$10,196,791.27	$6,517,417.27	$6,102,389.48

Also bank clearings for Jan. 2 and 3:

	1911	1910	1909
Jan. 2	Holiday	$3,140,945.45	$2,663,492.58
Jan. 3	$3,505,946.00	2,784,293.00	2,349,476.87
Total	$3,505,946.00	$5,925,238.46	$5,012,969.45

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.

Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

... DIRECTORY ...

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

APARTMENTS

THE ST. REGIS, Housekeeping 237 S. Flower. A7336; Main 2290

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DRY GOODS

VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

EXCURSIONS

BALLOON ROUTE, L. A. Pac. Co. Station, Hill St., bet. 4th and 5th. 10355: Broadway 4000.

MEN'S FURNISHINGS

HARRIS & FRANK, 437 43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS

UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

PIANOS AND ORGANS

GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

BARTLETT MUSIC CO., Autopiano Agents, 231 S. Broadway

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

REAL ESTATE

MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT

BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING

BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

311 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

Home A7336 Sunset Main 2290

The St. Regis

Housekeeping Apartments

FIVE MINUTES WALK to Third and Broadway. Modern Apartments and Single Rooms at moderate prices. Private Telephone in each Apartment or Single Room. 237 S. Flower St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company

Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions

One Whole Day for One Dollar

101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT-SPEED-SAFETY

Mt. Lowe

The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

IN THIS ISSUE "THE CITY" CHESTER H. ROWELL

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 3 Los Angeles, California, January 14, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Cal. State Library 12-31-08

SENATOR JOHN D. WORKS

A week before the Legislature met, Meyer Lissner, chairman of the State Republican Committee, announced the result of a canvass made among the members on their senatorial preference, which was that there were 75 votes ready to be cast for Judge John D. Works. It was entirely open to the opponents of Mr. Works to make the same kind of a canvass, and there is evidence enough that they did so, and that they got substantially the same result. In the final outcome, Judge Works had 92 votes out of 118, a majority so overwhelming as to leave no doubt it was a foregone conclusion from the beginning.

Why, then, did the reactionary publications tell their readers day after day that there was no chance of Works' election, that the Spalding campaign was winning, or that the whole Legislature was just aching to cast its vote for Flint or Willis Booth or John Smith or what not? Frankly we do not know the answer to that conundrum, unless it be that the reactionary contempt for the common people shows in their treatment of their readers, who are regarded as suckers to be deceived just for the fun of the thing.

The last Senator before Works—Perkins—was elected by Southern Pacific votes marshalled by George Hatton, a political Hessian, long in the service of the utility corporations. The last before that one—Flint—was elected by Walter Parker, hired lobbyist of the Southern Pacific, that is Flint said so himself, and he ought to be good authority. And so the story runs for nearly half a century, with only two exceptions—Bard, who was not the choice of the machine, and White, elected by the Democrats without the use of money. The election of Works after he had won a plurality of the votes of Republicans at the primary by the almost unanimous vote of a legislature not under Southern Pacific control marks a new epoch in the history of the senatorship of California. The Bard and White elections were episodes or accidents. The choosing of Judge Works was a direct act of the people.

What becomes now of the story that was long exploited in the Southern Pacific stand-pat press and was passed along in machine political circles, that Mr. Lissner was planning a dead-lock so that he might himself receive the senatorship? It goes to join a thousand other lies that have been sprung from time to time by the enemies of good government against Mr. Lissner, part of a deliberate effort to weaken his influence and break down his leadership by undermining the confidence of those who work with him. And in the face of these attacks he has every time proved his sincerity and has risen stronger for the calumny.

Pacific Outlook congratulates the people of California on at last securing a senator that represents them and not the corporate influences.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager

C. D. WILLARD, A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing Editors

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

✣ ✣ ✣

TO SAVE US FROM OURSELVES

A recent issue of the Reactionary organ, the Los Angeles Times, contains several columns "By Direct Wire" from some place in Nebraska of a paper read before a gathering of lawyers in that state by Lynn Helm, Esq., of the Los Angeles bar, setting forth his objections to the initiative, referendum and recall and other devices of that order, having for their purpose, as he sees it, the overthrow of "our republican form of government" and the "establishment of a democracy."

The "direct wire" feature of the story is readily understood by all who have any familiarity with the newspaper business. Mr. Helm's piece being entirely reactionary, and the Times being the last hope and the ark of the stand patters and Tories, the two things drifted together by some kind of irresistible magnetism before Mr. Helm took the train for Nebraska, and there was no need for the payment of telegraph tolls. When the date came around, a plug reporter was told to "boil this stuff down to a column and a half," Mr. Helm's picture was hunted up and dusted off, some puff headlines were written, and all hands felt that they had made a good job of it.

Thus presented to the public the views of Mr. Helm are, we take it, open to discussion and to criticism, even though criticism in such cases is usually called "abuse."

"Is not the intervention of the general government needed to preserve and guarantee a republican form of government to the states?" asks Mr. Helm—a question that has peculiar significance, as coming from one who is known to be a candidate for a place on the Federal bench.

"It is the duty," he says again, "of the Federal government to protect in each state a republican form of government." And later, "It seems to me that these innovations are so necessarily a democracy that they are easily distinguished from a republican form of government; they are anti-republican institutions." And in another place Mr. Helm makes clear what he means by a republican form of government: "It is the delegation of the government to a small number of citizens elected by the rest."

Here we have the framework of a large contention built up chiefly out of loose use of words and a failure to understand past history. Also there is a good deal of temperament mixed in with this point of view. Just as some people are pessimists and look always on the dark side, while others are optimists and full of hope, so some people are in terror of what they call innovation, while others welcome all change that promises improvement.

With all due respect to Article IV of the Constitution, "a republican form of government" is not scientific phraseology. It means, within certain limitations, whatever the speaker chooses to put into it. In Switzerland—a republic—it means pure democracy. In Mexico it means a military despotism. In Central America it means control by a business syndicate. What does it mean here and now in the United States? Well, that is the question before the house. Mr. Helm thinks it means a "representative" form of government in which the powers are "delegated to a small number of citizens elected by the rest." But he is not the only authority on this topic.

Without doubt, if anyone had asked the framers of the Constitution in 1787 what they meant by this phrase, they would have answered promptly: "A government by the people." To them, and for that matter to us, there are really only two forms of government: 1. In which the people rule; 2, In which they do not rule. The second form may be subdivided into monarchies, oligarchies, hierarchies and what not, and there are numerous hybrids, as of a monarch that rules part of the time or in some things, while his people rule the rest of the time in the rest of the things; but the only fundamental and significant distinction is that given above.

TO CALIFORNIA WEEKLY SUBSCRIBERS:

If you were a subscriber to the California Weekly at the time it suspended publication and will address a postal card to the Pacific Outlook, 311 E. 4th St., Los Angeles, requesting that it be substituted for the California Weekly, this publication will be sent to your address for the remainder of the unexpired subscription.

The question of how things are to be arranged so that the people may rule is incidental. It may be full of matters that change from year to year. The Athenians voted on bits of shell. Our grandfathers used irregular scraps of paper furnished by the candidates. We use an Australian ballot. The framers of the Constitution planned to have the will of the people exercised through representatives. They knew of no other good way. The country was sparsely settled—no railways, no telegraph, and practically no mail. Four months had to be allowed between election and inauguration, between the choice of congressmen and their assemblage in special session, or a whole year for the regular session. To exalt the tool—the representative—into place as the end and purpose of the government, or as a system of government in himself, is about like Tony Weller's idea that death was ordained so that undertakers should have a permanent job.

The people who study governments deeply and who write about them intelligently, people who use the language with due regard to the meaning of words, always speak of the United States as a democracy. De Tocqueville called his treatise "Democracy in America," Von Holst, in spite of his Hamiltonian, ultra-Federalist point of view recognizes everywhere that the intent and purpose of this government is to get a direct rule of the people. Bryce gives a number of chapters to discussions of democracy as embodied in our form of government. He uses the word democratic and republican interchangeably as applied to the system.

Initiative, referendum and recall are merely inventions to make government by the people a reality instead of an attempt. They bear the same relation to a republican or democratic form of government that a street car does to electricity or a locomotive to steam—mere practical applications of the principle to gain desired results. True, our forefathers said nothing about the initiative and referendum in the Constitution; neither did they mention the locomotive nor the electric street car at that time.

Mr. Helm's idea of the republic as a place where the people tie up the powers of government in a neat little parcel and hand them over to their representatives to keep until their successors are chosen, who then receive the bundle, and so on by a kind of apostolic succession indefinitely, sounds to us like a typographical error. It is an oligarchy he means. Now our idea of a republic (or democracy) is a place where the people own the whole business, lock, stock and barrel, where they never for a moment surrender any of the powers of government to anybody, where the people act directly for themselves as far as is practical, especially on large questions of policy, and where details of administration and lawmaking are carried on for the people by a set of representatives who are made truly representative by the automatic processes of direct legislation and the recall. It is a government by the people and not by an oligarchy of office-holders. And in the long run we shall have a much higher class of men in office under this plan than we ever had under the rule of the Southern Pacific and other special interests masquerading as a "representative system."

While the Times gloats over and makes much of Mr. Helm's attack on the "freak and fad" of allowing the people to win back some measure of their own government, we do not believe that the progressive elements of this state, who are seeking to put something of the spirit of democracy into the statute book, will regard it with much favor, especially as coming from a candidate for the Federal bench.

✣ ✣ ✣

TARIFF-MADE STATE

The most notable article in any of the January magazines is that on Rhode Island as a Tariff-made State, appearing in the "American" by Ida Tarbell. We urge our readers not to miss it, for it develops one vital point with respect to the tariff—that is to say the tariff under the ancient log-rolling special interest plan—viz. whether the subsidy that the consumer pays in increased cost of the protected article comes back to the worker producing the article.

The industries of Rhode Island, as Miss Tarbell shows, have been built up to huge proportions under the fostering care of the tariff. Here, if anywhere, we should find those ideal conditions of "prosperity" that Lodge, Smoot, Taft, Aldrich and Cannon tell us go with the system. Rhode Island, in short, ought to be a stand-patter's dream of an earthly paradise. Learn from Miss Tarbell's story, based on official documents and incontrovertible fact, the appalling conditions: that these "protected" working people are not American but foreign, that their pay is miserable and entirely inadequate to support them in decency and comfort, that children and mothers are compelled to work to keep families from starving, that they live in slums in hideous squalor while the owners of the mills live in palaces, that the mills are unsanitary fire traps without the common decencies, that workers injured in the mills have little or no recourse in the courts, that the state and local governments are under the control of a contemptible corporation machine, and that the crown and top-sheaf of the whole despicable system is Senator Aldrich in whose hands we have placed the making of our tariffs.

This Senator Aldrich is the gentleman who controlled the vote of our own Senator Flint through the whole of the present congress. We needed a tariff on lemons—most of which the railway promptly took away from us—and for that we traded everything else including woolen goods for Rhode Island. As a consequence, many thousand people shiver under cotton blankets this winter, and the mill owners—not the operatives—have more money to spend in Europe. We are not blaming Senator Flint. He did what his constituents seemed to wish him to do. It was the system of the day. When this paper—almost alone at the time—protested against the awful price we were paying for lemons, our friends by the score burst into remonstrance and criticism. "Give the other fellow what he wants so as to get what we want." There was no other way to do it. How public sentiment has cleared and changed since then! And plain facts like those presented by Miss Tarbell will help still further to make things clear.

C. D. W.

REVIVAL OF DISTRICT FAIR SYSTEM

A determined effort is to be made to induce the present legislature to revive the district fair system. It may not prove an easy thing to do, were legislature and administration never so willing, for the reason that only omniscience can surely foreknow what the new system of taxation, provided for in the adoption of constitutional amendment number one, is going to produce, and until that fact is known from experience appropriation will have to proceed cautiously.

But, no matter what the state of the state treasury nothing should be done with relation to reviving the district fair system without first giving the whole subject of fairs careful consideration. While there is still a good place for good fairs they are not as essential to agricultural prosperity as they were when fair days were the only market days there were, or when it was through fairs and their object lessons that farmers and stock raisers chiefly learned the value of new methods and new breeds.

What with government and state experiment stations, farmers' bulletins, pathological laboratories for the study of diseases of plants and animals; what with agricultural colleges, farming schools and short courses, demonstration trains and a great government devoting something like $20,000,000 a year to agricultural and kindred interests; what with agricultural journals and farmers' institutes with scientific lecturers laying before those who care to listen the ripest knowledge of the age, with all these the educational value of fairs is not what it once was, at least not relatively speaking although, absolutely, there may still be great gain from fairs if only people will attend them.

In some states they do. Both Iowa and Minnesota have had in excess of 200,000 persons in attendance upon their state fairs in a single season, although they are not of the wide-open variety. The state fairs of Michigan and Texas are the most largely attended of any state fairs, but they are wide-open, almost the only ones that are, inasmuch as, the whole country over, there has been a revulsion of public sentiment against those carnivals of gambling, drunkenness and crime that have gone under the name of fairs. It was once supposed that fairs could not be maintained without making them wide-open, but the time came when the thing that people thought that fairs could not get along without proved to be the thing that they could not get along with. With perhaps one exception there are no greatly successful state fairs that are not held within easy and inexpensive access from large centers of population, the exception being Illinois which holds successful state fairs at the state capital.

The district and county fair system is not what it was along in the 80's, but a number of Middle Western states hold many of them and they are esteemed successful, although after a moderate measure. Illinois has held more such fairs than perhaps any other state, more than 3,000 in number since 1870, paying out more than $7,000,000 in aggregate premiums, and yet the state has helped these smaller fairs only from five to eleven per cent of the premiums actually paid. Throughout the Middle West state aid to county and district fairs is usually extended in the form of a definite percentage, generally forty per cent, of each premium actually paid, with the further stipulation that no more than one-half of the premiums shall go to the speed ring, and with the added restriction that neither pool-selling nor the selling of liquors shall be permitted on the fair grounds nor within half a mile thereof.

When the district fair system first took form in California the state was divided into only eleven districts, but by the time the system was allowed to fall into its present comatose condition the number had increased to forty-five. It is worth while to note that these forty-five districts are not dead but sleeping. They are legally active and will become very much so the moment a complacent legislature manifest a tendency to extend them credit at the state treasury.

In 1890 the state fair received from the state $17,500, but the district fairs were given a total of $70,020. In 1892 the state fair was given $20,000, but the districts got $90,689. In 1894 the state fair again received a state bonus of $20,000, but the appropriations for the district fairs reached a total of $100,131. This large appropriation for district fairs seemed to jar the legislature for it proceeded ruthlessly to cut down appropriations for district fairs until 1902, when such appropriations ceased altogether.

If California were to hold one great fair at Oakland or San Francisco and another at Los Angeles the admission fees, etc., would make them self-sustaining after the plants had been set up, a third at Sacramento and a fourth at Fresno would reach about all the people in the state who would care to go to fairs, the cost would be less and such fairs would do more good than to have as many district fairs as counties. Whatever merit there may be in the district fair system consists mainly in having only a reasonable number of districts and in making appropriations in their aid, not in lump sums, but in a definite percentage of each premium actually paid. That device at once helps them up and holds them down.

Public sentiment is clearly shaping itself for a revival of the fair system. This time let us do it right.

✣ ✣ ✣

JUSTICE SLOSS ON JUSTICE

There is nothing radical in the mental makeup of Mr. Justice M. C. Sloss, but also there is nothing fogy. He would not change the old order without the greatest deliberation, but to propose to change it does not affect him as would a proposal to pull out every sound tooth he has in his head. Therefore there is hope in him, although not as much can be said for some of his associates. The attitude, for instance, of mind of the honored Chief Justice, toward the law as it is and was, is little short of worshipful, and the old judicial order will suffer small change with his consent. Howbeit, this is not the gravest objection to our present supreme court. Rather is it the kind of men who constitute it and the special interests who placed them there, a fault that can be remedied only by time and by the non-partisan nomination and election of judges.

Mr. Justice Sloss has declared in favor of a review on appeal of the essential facts as well as of the law in criminal cases; the right of the state, as well as of the defendant, to remove causes from one county to another; verdicts by three-fourths of a jury except in case of felony punishable with death or life imprisonment; power of the trial judge to charge the jury as to fact as well as to law; denial to defendant of right to challenge grand jury that indicted him; power in state to compel defendant to produce documents in his possession bearing on case; right of jury to consider failure of defendant to testify on his own behalf. Finally, prohibition of testimony of confessions obtained from persons under arrest as the result of "sweating" by peace officers.

All the judicial reforms suggested by Mr. Justice Sloss are good and profitable, except the final one, and that may become profitable when a proper substitute shall have been provided. The sweating system, like that of lynching, owes its existence mainly to the failure of the courts to establish justice. Society must and will, find some means for protecting itself. When the hair-splitting judiciary failed it, it was only natural that resort should be had to the non-judicial peace officers, and it is not too much to say that more convictions of common offenders are obtained through the extra-judicial services of the peace officers of this state than, without their services, through the entire judicial machinery of the commonwealth. Doubtless this sweating immediately upon arrest should be done publicly and before a magistrate, but doubtless it will have to be done somehow or few convictions of guilty persons will be obtained. It is through that process that the raveling end of the thread of guilt is usually obtained.

Justice fails in the trial courts chiefly because the hands of the trial judge are too much tied. The first reform, then, should be the re-endowing of trial courts with those powers necessary to the administration of justice of which they have been deprived in the interests of the guilty and not of the innocent. The recommendations made in that direction by Justice Sloss do not go far enough.

The next most serious interference with the administration of criminal justice comes from the appellate courts not uniformly composed of judges of higher character or sounder learning than occupy trial benches, and promoted for political rather than judicial reasons. The recommendations of Justice Sloss with reference to courts of appeal are sound, and yet if carried out can but poorly compensate the state for the evil of putting small men in large places. Give us bigger men for appellate judges and we shall have more justice under faulty laws than we may look for under ideal laws administered by small men occupying the seats of the mighty. It is to the non-partisan judicial ballot, reenforced by an unhesitating public discussion of the capabilities of judicial officers, that we must look for the reformation of this, our "disgrace to civilization," as the President has pertinently expressed it.

✣ ✣ ✣

IS HE A DEAD ONE?

It comes from inside sources that a concerted effort is making in New York, and working out from there to other financial and political centers, to whisper Theodore Roosevelt down, to treat it as a foregone conclusion that he is a "dead one," to assume that the wave which swept over half the states in the union last November engulfed no one but Roosevelt, that what to others was a mere incident in the shifting fortunes of politics was, so far as Roosevelt is concerned, a Waterloo and Saint Helena rolled into one. This campaign of whispering down is being re-enforced by the most scandalous canards touching the sobriety and behavior of Roosevelt on all occasions and, although often repeated with some reservations as to their truth, they are indefatigably passed along to work what injury they may. The controllable press will soon be found re-enforcing this campaign of mouth to mouth whispering. Will their combined efforts succeed? It is to be doubted. Although, during October, Colonel Roosevelt fought for the Republican cause in New York and Ohio, in Indiana and Massachusetts, when his utterances are considered and compared they will be found to be perfectly consistent with each other and not inconsistent with his Ossawattomie address. It was only the situations and not the speeches that were inconsistent. He sustained injury in that catastrophe, but he is no "dead one." It is more than a coincidence, too, that those who are thus engaged in whispering Theodore Roosevelt down are utilizing the remainder of their wind power in boosting the nomination of one William Howard Taft as Republican candidate for the presidency in 1912.

A. J. P.

✣ ✣ ✣

NEW EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTOR

The editorial staff of the Outlook is enlarged with this issue by the addition of A. J. Pillsbury, formerly editor of the California Weekly. Mr. Pillsbury has been in newspaper work for many years in this state, and has of late years been an active factor in political matters always on the side of good government and progress. Thoroughly posted on state affairs and of ripe experience and clear judgment, he will be cordially welcomed to the columns of the Outlook, and his work given keen appreciation by our readers.

PRESS COMMENT

"It seems a chasm is opening between the King of England and the people."

"Yes, and apparently he won't bridge it with new peers."—Baltimore American.

If that aviator really wanted President Taft to go up in his airship, why didn't he tell him it would help the party?—Detroit Times.

An English newspaper offered prizes for the best lists of twenty-five beautiful words. The politicians think the most beautiful word in the English language is "elected."—Houston Chronicle.

Ex-Congressman Hepburn of Iowa opposes any further tariff revision. This is one reason he is ex-Congressman Hepburn.—Kansas City Star.

It might be possible to find a worthy hope of the white race among those British suffragettes.—Emporia Gazette.

Nevada's population increased 93 per cent. The census must have been taken July 4 when Reno was full.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Possibly the colonel might be shaken out of his lethargy by having his attention called to the report that sedition is spreading in Egypt.—Richmond News Leader.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By THE WATCHMAN

The Case of Curry It may be doubted if Governor Johnson will have to deal with many problems more perplexing than the one of "What to Do With Curry." The consensus of political opinion is that Charles F. Curry is a poor man. No man about town in Sacramento will question that, during all of Curry's career at the State Capitol, unless we except the last two years during which official salaries have been more liberal he has expended as entertainer of town and out-of-town friends the full equivalent of his salary as Secretary of State. He offered his all upon the altar of his ambition to be governor of California and lost on it. Charles F. Curry needs a job, and he has hosts of friends all over the state who will not hold it lightly against anyone who stands between Curry and a political office that has a living in it for him. This Governor Johnson knows without being told of it. What can he do with Curry?

The Significance of His Appointment by Gillett How came James N. Gillett to send in the appointment of Chas. F. Curry to be Building and Loan Commissioner? The only possible reason why Mr. Curry was not a thoroughly acceptable gubernatorial candidate in the eyes of Mr. W. F. Herrin, was that Mr. Curry had his own political machine, that there is scarcely an office or institution in the state into which Mr. Curry has not tucked away Curry men in spite of Mr. Herrin's desire to have only Herrin men in such positions. In his own office Curry's men were all Curry men first and Herrin men afterward. The fear of Herrin, not at all ill grounded, is thought by many to have been that if Curry became governor every particle of political patronage in the state would go to Curry men, men who would be very friendly to Mr. Herrin, but after Curry's desires were first known and paid deference to. In short, Mr. Herrin is believed to have had visions of his lieutenants standing hat in hand in the ante-room of Governor Curry's office awaiting Curry's pleasure regarding Mr. Herrin's political desires. Hence the abortive effort to make Alden Anderson governor in place of Curry! Unless all students of political affairs in California went wild in their calculations this is the reason why Herrin was not for Curry—if Herrin was not for Curry. Then how comes it that the retiring governor, whom Mr. Herrin had made governor, sent in the nomination of Charles F. Curry to be Building and Loan Commissioner? Did Gillett, who had not been disobedient, revolt at the very last moment and become unmanageable? Or have Mohammed and the Mountain gotten together? Is it to be Curry in 1914?

A Sedentary Job Much Preferred A good place should be found for Mr. Curry if one can be, but the public interests require that it be as sedentary as possible with regular office hours six days in the week and a fixed habitation in some quiet nook far from the maddening crowd. Otherwise Mr. Curry will be doing politics with reference to his being nominated and elected governor of California in 1914. Wherever he may be he will be exceedingly busy to that end, for he is no quitter and so long as he has life he will have hope. He is a capable man and as conversant with the affairs of the state as any man in the state and it were well if a good place were found for him, but the less the vantage of such position for doing politics the more greatly will the public interests be subserved For, be it remembered, Charles F. Curry is, preeminently, not the kind of man who should be governor. It is hoped that California has forever turned its back upon the spoils of office system of state politics. Of any other system than that Mr. Curry has never dreamed. It was by that ladder that he climbed and it was from that ladder that he fell, the nosing around the foot of it by Mr. Herrin apparently making mischief for Curry. As Building and Loan Commissioner Mr. Curry will have no patronage to bestow, but he will be free to roam at will up and down the state fixing up his fences, seeing old friends and making new ones, and it will go hard with him if he fail, four years hence, of having every Curry man in the state—and their number is not few—on the firing line sharpshooting for Curry. A good place should be found for Mr. Curry. He needs it, but let it be as sedentary and sequestered as possible, devoid of patronage and with regular office hours requiring his official presence six days in the week.

Secretary Jordan Catches the Idea Whatever doubts may be entertained concerning Secretary of State Frank C. Jordan it can not be charged that he is slow in catching an idea. He is without doubt the most noted glad-hander California ever produced and indications are that his good right hand will stand him in as good stead in office as in getting into office. It is an open secret that legislators went up to Sacramento determined to strip the office of Secretary of State of as many responsibilities as possible and, among others, of the responsibility for holding license and corporation tax moneys as open bank accounts in banks for days, and even weeks, before settling with the state treasurer. There have been hundreds of thousands of dollars so held in years past without other security than the bond of the Secretary of State, only $10,000, and the good faith of the bank. One of the purposes of reform legislators was to require daily settlements with the State treasurer, but Mr Jordan appears to have forestalled action by himself requiring daily settlements to be made. However, it would not be amiss for the legislature to sanction Mr. Jordan's prompt action by enacting equally prompt legislation to the same effect to the end that the salutory order be not countermanded after the legislature shall have adjourned. The charge has not, to The Watchman's knowledge, been made that banks receiving these moneys, and passing them to the private account of the Secretary of State, have courteously allowed the Secretary the customary two per cent on average daily balances, but only that there was nothing to hinder if such an arrangement had been mutually agreeable. In the custody of the State Treasurer such moneys may be lent to the state's advantage. Let the law fix what Secretary Jordan has merely prefixed.

Not More Judges But a Redistribution The biennial effort to secure additional superior judges in certain counties is now being made at Sacramento. Doubtless certain of our superior judges are overworked and are behind with their calendars. Doubtless also certain other superior judges have time to pitch quoits, play pinochle and go fishing. There are ninety-eight superior judges in California, or one to every 24,000 inhabitants if they were averaged up right and made available where needed. The adoption of Senate Constitutional amendment No. 36, at the last election, opens the way for the utilization of judges from counties that do not give them enough to do in other counties where there is more work than the local judges can do. This should go far toward obviating the necessity for creating more judges, although there should be some equalizations of salaries where the more poorly paid judges are called to help out in the counties where judges are better paid. There should be legislation, for instance, to enable outside judges to draw the same pay, per diem, as the judges in the counties into which they are called draw while they sit in such counties. This would make outside judges the more willing to serve outside their own counties and, at the same time, help to clear the calendars in congested counties. California has superior judges enough and to spare. The only problem is that of distribution. In the working out of that problem the legislature now has full power to act.

A Reconstructed State Department of Justice The suggestion made in Governor Johnson's inaugural address looking to a reconstruction of the state's department of justice was timely and wise. A first step is to make the office of Attorney General appointive and not elective, to the end that the governor may have more complete authority over the administration of justice than he now has. As to the centralization of all the legal business of the institutions of the state into the one department of justice there is, of course, room for two opinions. On the score of efficiency and economy much may be said for it. On the score of placing the power and responsibility in the same hands arguments may be advanced against it very worthy of consideration. This subject came up in the United States senate while the railroad regulation bill was under consideration and was fully discussed. The Interstate Commerce Commission insisted upon the right and necessity for employing its own attorneys in prosecuting its cases before the Court of Commerce. The administration insisted upon the unification of all legal business in the hands of the Attorney General of the United States. A compromise was effected satisfactory to neither side. The State Department of Banking has an attorney who is paid $4,500 a year; the San Francisco Harbor Board has one who receives $2,400; the San Diego Harbor Board has one at $1,500; the State Board of Health an attorney at $3,000; the Regents of the State University one at $3,600 and the State Lunacy Commission an attorney who draws $3,000. These are all looked upon as soft snaps, the appointments to them are all turned over to the political powers that be and are made with more regard to political services rendered than because of exceptional fitness for the tasks to be performed. There is little doubt that the $18,000 thus expended could be made to go much farther and do much more if under the control of a Department of Justice. Doubtless two good attorneys could do all that all these special attorneys do, but what about the responsibility of these several boards for results if the legal proceedings are to be taken out of their hands and placed in a Department of Justice with discretionary powers to do or not to do what these several boards want done? Ought not the State Board of Railroad Commissioners, for instance, to have an attorney of their own selection?

Heads of Departments to Be Held Responsible Governor Johnson has made no better suggestion than that he shall give the heads of departments under him full power to select their own subordinates and then hold them to a rigid accountability for the conduct of their offices. This strikes at the root of one of the most vexatious little evils in our entire civil service system. Not a head of a department but has his subordinates furnished him and he must put up with them as best he may. Not being dependent upon their chief for tenure of office subordinates do as much or as little as they see fit, mindful only of the good opinion of the author of their appointment. A certain periodical drunkard was kept in one office for years against the protest of the head of the department and when at last he was withdrawn by his sponsor a place was found for him in another office. It is to be hoped that Governor Johnson will insist upon the inauguration of this system throughout and make other state officials keep hands off as well. It will impart to the state's service a new spirit.

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

BEKINS'
Fire-Proof Storage
1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY
Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

THE DATA for this department is supplied from the statistical bureau of the Municipal League of Los Angeles, but neither that organization nor any other has any control over, or is in any way responsible for, the general policy of PACIFIC OUTLOOK.

Unmitigated Mistatement: A. L. Mason of Indianapolis contributes an article to the January number of Municipal Engineering against the commission form of government, in which he has this to say about the recall: "Again, in several places where the recall is in use, as at Haverhill, Massachusetts, and at Los Angeles, the defeated candidate has used it to get another chance to win the office, by having a new trial. It is a dangerous instrument unless," etc. Where does Mr. Mason get his facts, we ask, and is all the rest of his paper just as accurate as this? The recall has been used only twice in Los Angeles. In 1904 Davenport, a councilman who had voted to give the Times the city printing on a bid $15,000 higher than the other papers—a contemptible bit of graft—was defeated by A. D. Houghton, a new-comer to the city, unknown in politics, who had never before been a candidate for anything. There were no other competitors at this election. In 1909 Mayor Harper was recalled, that is to say, a petition was filed, and he resigned and refused to run. The man who won the election, George Alexander, the present mayor, had never been a candidate for Mayor nor for any other city office. The only other man running was on the socialist ticket, and he had never before been a candidate for Mayor. That finishes the Los Angeles end of Mr. Mason's story. As for the Haverhill part, we recently read a detailed report of the working of the commission plan, and no mention was made of the use of the recall, which certainly would have been mentioned had it been used. We are not aware of a single case in any American city where the recall has been used as he describes.

Prostitution Law Unconstitutional: The Supreme Court of New York has ruled unconstitutional the provision of the Page law on the subject of prostitution that provided for medical examination and continuation of sentence during recovery. A woman arrested for prostitution was given a sentence on the merits of the case. A medical examination was then to be held, and if it was found that the woman was diseased she was kept in custody until cured, or for one year. The statute was attacked on two grounds, one that it made an unjust discrimination between the sexes—no such provision applying to men—and the other that it was an imprisonment without due process of law, based on the statement of a physician, without opportunity for inquiry into the facts by the court. The decision finds no merit in the first contention, but decides against the law on the second point.

Successful Organization: The Civic League of St. Louis is one of the three or four most successful organizations of that order in the United States and is in some ways distinctly unique. A large part of its effectiveness has been due to Mayo Fesler, long its secretary, who lately went to Cleveland to take charge of the civic work of the Chamber of Commerce of that city. The St. Louis League has a membership of 1000 and a yearly income of about $10,000. It is in no sense political, and does not work with or against the city government. Its theory seems to be that if the citizen is all right the city government will be all right, which is true enough although that path to improvement is long and laborious. The League's record of achievement, however, is highly creditable, and will furnish a good argument to those reactionaries who contend that good citizens should not mix up in politics.

Practical Men: The Postmaster General estimates that within the last five years the get-rich-quick concerns of New York have gathered in one hundred millions of money from suckers. The popular theory about these suckers is that they are very poor people. Some of them are, but the vast majority, whether we figure by number of individuals or by aggregate of money lost, are practical business men, small and large, who have accumulated a little surplus with which they are willing to take chances. Whenever there is a revelation, and the post office gets hold of the list of victims, there is general astonishment at the high commercial standing of many who have been "stung." The civic moral of all this is that the astuteness—even the commercial astuteness—of the average business man is not quite all that it is held up to be.

Housekeeping Schools: The Prussian government has established a system of housekeeping instruction with a large number of wagons sent from one neighborhood to another with teachers and apparatus to show housewives the latest and most scientific methods of cooking, house cleaning, etc. This includes sanitation, health and domestic economy generally. The Germans long ago discovered that a government was susceptable of other uses than providing jobs for successful politicians. Infinite possibilities for the good of the many lie in this institution for those who choose to avail themselves of it. Slowly the American people are awakening to this fact.

Sane Form of Commemoration: The people of Wales are raising a large fund for a memorial to Edward VII, a king whom they held in the highest personal esteem because of the long period he held title as the Prince of Wales. This memorial, however, is not to be in the form of a tomb, or monument, or other useless and sorrowful thing; it is to be an organized movement throughout the country for the suppression of tuberculosis. If this plan is carried out as designed, it may make Wales the first country of the world to drive out this terrible pest. The most important thing about Wales just at present is that it has given the world David Lloyd-George.

College City Government Clubs: Upper classmen of Yale have formed an organization for the study of city politics and civic problems. It is suggested by progressive newspapers that such organizations ought to be established in all colleges of the country. Students of the Los Angeles colleges, Occidental and Southern California, have proven very useful in practical political work for good government of late years.

Automobiles and Roads: Careful experiments carried on by the director of the National Office of Public Roads show that an automobile running at fifteen miles an hour or less does no damage whatever to a macadam road. Even at 20 miles the injury is very slight. From that on up to sixty the damage increases at a rapid rate until, so the director expresses it, it is like a circular saw going through a board. All the loose fine particles that make the binder holding the road together are sucked out and scattered over the landscape, and the road, weakened and crumbled, soon goes to pieces.

A City Architect: Vancouver, British Columbia, a place that has grown from 35,000 six years ago to 125,000 at present, has in the city government a functionary known as "City Architect" whose services are given free of charge to citizens for planning of grounds and gardens and for advice in choice of plants and trees. The purpose is to secure co-operation and harmony and to stimulate interest in such matters. This is a practical idea that would help to beautify American cities if followed generally.

A Missing Link: Secretary Wilson, discussing the high cost of living, declares that there is an average margin of 50 per cent between the price the consumer pays and the money the farmer gets, and suggests that they make a business of getting together. There is, however, a link missing in the connection, and that is a parcels post cheap delivery system. When we have that, the consumer in the city and the farmer in the adjoining country can get together on a reasonable basis.

Public Comfort Stations: Washington now has three public comfort stations, two of which have been in service for three years, and the third just completed. Last year there was an attendance at the two in service of 1,020,000 males and 377,000 females. That would seem to be a pretty good indication of the need these concerns fill. It is an average of nearly 4000 a day. Receipts amounted to $1700.

Democracy the True Purpose: Note this by Delos F. Wilcox: "Government in all ages has been in large measure diverted from its true, universal purpose into an institution devoted to the benefit of those who govern. But we hold that democracy was ordained from the beginning, that it is the normal purpose of the state toward which civilization tends."

New York City Club: The last report of the City Club of New York shows that it is prosperous and in good financial order as a club in spite of the large expense to which it is put in its civic work. The club has a large and comfortable home in the center of the down-town club region, has a large membership and is a popular rendezvous for the forces of civic progress.

Panama Rate and Time: Seth Mann, Esq., addressing a banquet of the Merchants' Association of San Francisco, says that the time from New York to this coast via the Canal will be 20 days, which is below the average now taken by the railway for freight, and that the rate will be $6.00 a ton as against the present railway average of $8.00 or $9.00.

Domestic Relations Court: Among the inferior or magistrates' courts of New York City, one has been established by a recent law, known as the Domestic Relations Court, wherein are tried, with something of the informal manner of the juvenile court, cases relating to desertion of wives and abandonment of poor relations and other matters of that kind.

Smoke Consuming: Every year witnesses the invention of a lot of new smoke consumers but there is still room for hope that sometime a smoke consumer will be invented that will consume smoke and that will mean an enormous saving of money and health in our big cities.

Bigger Than Los Angeles: Chicago stretches about 30 miles north and south along the Lake, and from 8 to 15 miles east and west.

Think It Over: A criminal is one who would rather take chances than see a lawyer.—Life.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway — 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

Semi-Annual Clearance

Now Going On

THIS sale is inaugurated to quickly dispose of all broken lines and odds and ends at greatly reduced prices before invoicing.

If you have been waiting for bargains, now is the time to secure them throughout the store. Especial mention is made of

Reduced Prices on Suits, Dresses and Coats

Savings range from ¼ to ½ less

FURS ⅓ LESS

MAIN 3040 CUTS -F- 1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
325 MUNICIPAL ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

The Legislature
From the Inside

Quiet efficiency—that phrase exactly reveals the impression made by the first week's work of the new administration in Sacramento. Business has been despatched with a promptness unparalleled in the memory of old observers of state government. The taunt that reformers are "long hairs" and hence, by implication, impractical people, has gone to the lumber room with a lot of other stock ideas and phrases of the "performers."

For example, the new legislature had, by Friday, advanced the business of organization and the introduction of bills to a point attained by the last legislature only at the end of two weeks or more. The reformers were in full control from the first moment. The defeat of "Jack" Stafford for sergeant-at-arms of the assembly in the Republican caucus was the first evidence of their power. Every movement made by either house since has been at the pleasure of the progressive forces. In fact, so obvious is the predominance of the reform wing that the old performers have made no effort whatever to oppose the present majority.

The most striking event of the first few days was, of course, the inaugural address of Governor Johnson. The scene was not gorgeous, as it has been in the past, but dramatic to a tense degree. Before the joint assembly of the Senate and Assembly, and in the presence of an earnest and profoundly attentive audience, Governor Johnson read his address in tones of sober but feeling dignity. His audience was prepared to hear an address that would be unusual; they heard an address that at times elicited gasps of admiring astonishment. Without equivocation, in the plainest terms and with unmistakeable determination, Governor Johnson placed himself officially on record as favoring the body of reforms advocated by him and the Republican party throughout the campaign. He adopted no artful circumlocutions of speech to express his meaning; where he meant the Southern Pacific Company he said the Southern Pacific Company; where he meant the representatives in office of Southern Pacific politics, he used those words to describe those men.

The address was splendidly constructive. In rough outline it can be sketched as follows: Governor Johnson's determination to remove from office Southern Pacific and other corporate henchmen, and to substitute for them men selected solely with reference to their ability; calling upon the legislature to enact by statute for the counties now, and to propose by legislative amendment for the whole state, laws putting into operation the initiative and referendum, and the recall, the last to apply to all elective officials; appropriation of $75,000 to enable the Railroad Commission to make a physical valuation of railroad properties as a basis for the fixing of rates, and asserting the power of the Commission to fix absolute (not merely maximum) rates; amendment of Direct Primary Law to conform with the Oregon plan, providing for statewide, non-partisan advisory vote on U. S. Senators; short ballot, involving the making appointive by the governor of the officers acting as clerk of Supreme Court, State Printer, Surveyor General, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Secretary of State and Attorney General, leaving as elective officers only the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Controller, legislature and judges; restoration of Australian ballot without party circle, and elimination of all partisan designation after names of judicial candidates; county home rule; civil service and the merit system; conservation, including the resumption by the state of title to misappropriated public resources; reformatory for first offenders, and employers' liability law

Lieutenant-Governor Wallace's address, which followed Governor Johnson's, placed him on record as endorsing all that had been said, and practically serving notice on the legislature that any failure to embody the reforms advocated in the Governor's address would be chargeable solely to the legislature and not at all to the chief executive or to the presiding officer of the Senate.

The Legislature seems to be heartily in the mood to carry out these platform pledges. The work of organizing both houses was quickly despatched, and by the week-end adjournment, taken Friday noon, the Senate standing committees had been named, both houses had adopted permanent rules, and 156 Senate bills and 159 Assembly bills had been read for the first time and referred to the appropriate committees. And at the time this is written (Monday night) there is every reason to believe and not the slightest reason to doubt that, by the time this paper is on the press, Judge John D. Works will have been elected United States Senator on the first ballot.

This achievement, by the way, is really a feat worth noting particularly. To bring out of the chaos produced by the hazy and irreconcilable district advisory plan of the late primary campaign, a prompt and complete victory for the candidate who represents the progressive idea is to get results in a brilliant fashion. That victory is especially due to the ability and persistence of four men: Chester H. Rowell, Meyer Lissner, E. A. Dickson and Marshall Stimson.

And this victory has another virtue than that it secures a progressive instead of a reactionary senator; it clears the decks of the legislature at once of that whole subject, leaving that body free to proceed with the state reforms pledged in the last campaign. The Senate committees are all safely for these reform measures, the Assembly committees will undoubtedly be likewise, and of course the Governor and President of the Senate are on record for them.

These two last-named officials, by the way, have made a deep impression here. Governor Johnson's inaugural address put expectation sharply on edge, and his rapid and efficient disposition of business since that address have stamped him as an executive of unusual decision and determination. His prompt withdrawal of the eleventh hour appointments made by Gillett is only the first step in a campaign that will be relentlessly pursued until the state service is cleared of servitors of private interests.

Lieutenant-Governor Wallace has made an equally favorable impression. Even the cynical San Francisco Chronicle was moved to admit, in the issue following the first session of the Senate over which Mr. Wallace presided, that he would evidently prove an effective and forceful presiding officer. Lieutenant-Governor Wallace's choice of committeemen, also, is very pleasing to the progressive leaders of the state and to the Senators themselves.

Altogether, the opening week of the new administration and of the Thirty-ninth Legislature is full of hopeful auguries for a complete redemption of California from corporation control and for the enactment and enforcement of a really prodigious body of reform legislation.

Sacramento, Jan. 9, 1911.

The Fairbanks
Player-Piano

Its patented devices for the control of tempo and phrasing lift this great Player Piano far above every other selling at its price. Three styles—In a beautifully finished Colonial case, at $600; in a pure Mission case, at $700, and in a Louis XV design, at $650. Fully guaranteed; plays all standard 65 and 88 note music on the double-tracked board. Sold on terms to suit.

Free use of our immense circulating library of music rolls goes with every Fairbanks Player-Piano.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO.

"The House of Musical Quality"

332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

ELECTION OF NATIONAL DELEGATES AND THE NOMINATION OF PRESIDENT BY DIRECT VOTE

To Wisconsin belongs the honor of enacting the first primary law for the election of delegates to a national convention by direct vote of the people. The Wisconsin delegates to the Republican National Convention of 1908 were elected under that law. They stood in that convention, a little band of fearless men fighting to the last ditch for platform pledges vital to the public interest. Their contest in the Chicago convention fixed the attention of the country and forced the candidate nominated for President to broaden the platform by declarations in his speech of acceptance in favor of several of the important Wisconsin propositions which the convention had impatiently rejected.

The lesson is obvious. Every state in the Union should adopt a primary law providing for the election of delegates to the National Conventions of 1912 by direct vote of the people. With such a law in each state, the delegates will be chosen by the voters instead of by machine managers, and the national platforms of both political parties will represent the interests of the people rather than the interests of the System.

And every state should take another advance step. Oregon has just pointed the way. Under the Initiative, the people of that state voted for and adopted a law at the late election in November, providing not only for the election of delegates to National Conventions, but also provides that each voter shall at the April primary in 1912 have the opportunity of expressing his choice for President and Vice-President.

Wall Street has already selected the Presidential candidates of both political parties. There is just time to defeat the Wall Street plan

Let the people organize and demand of every legislature the enactment of a primary law for the election of delegates to National Conventions by direct vote, embracing a provision that shall give to each voter the right to express upon his primary ballot his preference for President and Vice-President.

Such a primary law will beat the Wall Street game and nominate and elect a President for all the people of these United States.—La Follette's.

THE SUPREME COURT AND POLITICS

Before appointing two new members of the Supreme Court, President Taft consulted certain insurgent senators who might awkwardly oppose confirmation by the senate of appointments that were offensive to them. Probably the attitude of the insurgents was expressed by Senator La Follette when he said the new justices should not be men "whose legislative or judicial records showed bias toward special interests or whose legal connections would tend to prejudice them in favor of such interests."

But the Financial Chronicle, which consistently represents the most conservative Wall street opinion, finds it "extremely disturbing" that the President consulted the insurgents at all in this connection. "It is a shock to one's sense of propriety," it says, "to have him seriously confer with men of the La Follette type"; for when La Follette "speaks of 'special interests' he means the very interests which it was the purpose of the constitution to safeguard."

In short, the fact that a justice was acceptable to the insurgents would render him objectionable to the Chronicle clientele, and a justice whom the latter admired would be an object of suspicion to the former.

Here, of course, was no question of mere legal ability. Neither side supposed the President would appoint any one who was not a first-rate lawyer. The whole qestion was as to the record and attitude of the appointees upon a great political issue —what their personal feelings, leanings, or prepossessions were regarding the political issue upon which more and more the country tends to divide. This illustrates how much purely political power has, in the course of a century and a quarter, devolved upon the court. Possessing purely political power, it is bound to be an object of political solicitude and influence. We suppose the court's next evolution will be to divest itself of this purely political power by refusing to annual any legislative act unless it appears clearly, unequivocally, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the act runs counter to the constitution. Construing laws would then be simply a judicial function. The leanings and prepossessions that produce our five-to-four decision would have little place in it.—Saturday Evening Post.

FROZEN OUT

The Times had a cartoon in Friday's issue showing the statehouse at Sacramento storm bound, buried in snow, with no signs of life about the place save the very vivid pictures of the new governor and lieutenant governor in the windows. The picture is evidently intended to carry home the truth of how completely the Southern Pacific has been frozen out.—Los Angeles Financier.

"THE CITY"

Chester H. Rowell's Address Before The City Club . . .

Mr. Chester H. Rowell, editor of the Fresno Republican," entertained the City Club of Los Angeles, at its regular weekly luncheon at the Hotel Westminster, last Saturday, with an address on the subject of "The City." Pacific Outlook has obtained an exclusive stenographic report, in full, for the benefit of its readers, which is given below:

Cities Dominate the Country

"The City is the problem of the present; it is the problem of now and the immediate future, and as we solve the problem of the city, so shall we solve all our other problems.

"Most of the increase in population in the United States in the last few years has been in the city. The farming population has increased nothing like as fast as the city, and in the older farming states it has not increased at all. Only in the cities has there been a great increase and everywhere the city is beginning to dominate the country, by force of numbers, if nothing else. The time is very near us when the government and the social structure of this nation and of its states will be no better and no worse than the cities make it, and if it is no better than the city's part of it has been, it will fall.

Country Is the Balancing Force

"It is not too much to say that the contribution of San Francisco to the government of California, or of New York City to the government of New York, or the United States, has been a great deal less than nothing, and if it were not for the balancing force of the country and the small towns—and San Francisco regards Los Angeles as one of those small towns, differing from the other small towns only in size—if it had not been for the balancing influence of these parts of the United States, free government would not have lasted until now. Free government in the city has been, to a large extent, held up or propped up only by the fact that those cities were parts of states and a nation which had a form of free government.

Governments Fear the City

"There has been a little pessimism about the fact that the city has been held up as a bugaboo. You know how they have established colleges in small towns to keep their population from the cities and you know how states have passed constitutions to prevent them from having full representation in the legislatures. A good many European countries have done the same thing by indirect methods. In Germany they districted the representation in 1871 according to the population and they use these same districts today in sending their representatives and of course there has been an enormous growth and increase in the cities and no proportionate increase in their representatives.

"In England the same thing is true. They have reformed their representation two or three times there, always in the direction of equalizing the situation, but never doing it. They have been afraid of the city. Then too, you know of the music hall pathos and the moving picture pathos of the old mother dreaming 'Where is my wandering boy,' he is off in some city dive, or the country girl that goes away so innocent and pure and who comes back a jade,—appears to represent the country idea of the arrogance and corruption and danger of the city.

"It has been proven that no civilization founded on cities could exist. There has been a physical reason for it until recently. It is still true in France and it was, until this generation, true in all countries that the death rate in all cities was far greater than the death rate in the country, which means that no city could permanently exist by any process except immigration into it from the country. That is today no longer true. With modern sanitation, modern policing and fire protection, cities are physically safer places to live in than the country and the average excess of birth rate over the death rate is greater than in the country. It has then become physically possible for cities to exist and to grow, and they will continue to do it, provided it is made morally and politically possible, and the chief phenomenon of the last ten years is that it has become possible and that which people thought would never happen to a very large extent now has happened.

Restitution of Free Government in the Cities

"American institutions broke down first in the cities, and the problem of the last decade has been to restore in the cities free institutions.

"In all the ages the city has been the source and the inspiration of the upward trend of civilization. Away back in the pastoral ages Abraham tended his flock just as his ancestors for a thousand generations had tended them and just as his successors kept on tending their flocks, until the growth of cities and of war, and of commerce, began to pack men together and then they developed new problems and new ways of meeting them in the clash of the contest in the forum and the market place. Men began to think new thoughts and develop new institutions, because they were crowded together in cities, and those cities became the modern physical habitations of a multitude of men.

Pleasure Made Men Love the Cities

"All of you who have read the Old Testament—and I presume most of you have—know with what reverence the city of Jerusalem was regarded during the days of the civilization of Judea; you know how the Greek cities were great for their homes and their ideals. Among the ancient Greek cities there was no state and no nation, the city was the center of everything; there never was a Greek nation until Alexander founded more than a nation and made it a great world empire. The city was the object of all the loyalty and devotion and it had all the rights.

Individual Rights Unknown

The ancient world knew no such thing as individual right. That is the modern conception, and the American conception, of the right you have against the government,—the limit of the authority of the government over you. It never occurred to the men in the ancient world that there was any such limit. If it was best for such city that your first child should be murdered when born, or you should not eat in your own home, or live in your own home, or that you should be a soldier—even though you were a person who would make a good scholar but a poor soldier—or if it was best for that city that you should be poor in order to make you rugged, or that you should be rich at the expense of the robbery of other people in order to give you leadership, whatever was best for that city, or that would benefit it, was done with absolute ruthlessness; it never occurred to anybody that the individual had any rights.

"Those of you who have read Aristotle's works know of his treaties on city charters. It is a rather valuable treatis on city charters for the benefit of the modern reader, but there is not, in that whole book a single suggestion that there was any city in the ancient world that recognized an individual's right to anything,—not to life or the lives of the children, nor to freedom or anything that stood in the way of the glory or prosperity of his city.

"The same sort of an ideal began with Rome, Rome grew into a great empire; and yet that great empire always centered in the city. To the Roman the city was the center of all the pleasure in the world. Rome held the loyalty of its citizens by amusing them.

"In ancient Greece it was regarded a social disgrace to live in the country an the Romans spoke of the 'Homus rusticus' in the same way we speak of the 'rube.' Through the middle ages this condition was reversed. During that period the gentlemen lived in the country and looked down with social contempt on the towns and the cities. The towns were the homes of artisans, whose excuse for existence was manual labor. They were mostly cobblers, and shop keepers and tailors, etc., and the gentlemen looked down on the city as the habitation of that sort of people, and the city itself never regarded itself as a political or social unit, in the modern sense, at all.

Medieval Cities Were Business Corporations

"The medieval city was a business corporation. You know human rights were property in that day,—the property of the sovereign—and any one who owned a human right, even the right of liberty, owned it at the pleasure of the sovereign. Now these cities grew up by getting from the sovereigns certain business rights,—the right to engage in trade and manufacture, and those were in truth the rights, not of the citizens, but of the city. Accordingly they were formed into guilds, each of which owned the right to engage in a certain trade and nobody else could get that right unless they paid well for it. They were not labor unions and they were not merchants and manufacturers' associations but they were, if possible, both. That was a property right and the whole concern of the city was to preserve the property rights for the business class, the only class there was in the city. The common laborer lived in the country and the gentleman lived in the country, and there was no civic life, in the modern sense, or, in other words, no individual rights.

Recognition of Individual Rights

"Individual rights developed when the Reformation revived the Christian doctrine of the infinite value of the individual soul. If one soul is worth infinity it is worth so much that you cannot measure it against two souls or twenty souls simply because two times or twenty times infinity is still only infinity and one infinite value against any other number of values is worth just as much as twenty. That was the theological doctrine and out of that theology of the infinite value of the individual soul came the political doctrine of the inalienable rights of the one man against all men. (Applause).

The Growth of Individual Rights

"We have that doctrine now as a political doctrine. If all the men in the world would want to deprive you of a certain right you have the right to stand against the world and say, 'That is my right; not yours.' (Applause). That is the modern doctrine and the modern city has grown up, especially in this country, out of a civilization based on that doctrine and it is founded on the exercise of that doctrine.

"Our civilization was established and written down in the constitution during the eighteenth century under the hallucination that its temporary point of view and its problems were the only problems and its solution of those problems the only solution. It moulded it into our fundamental laws, it has written it into our fundamental consciousness and most of us still believe that the philosophers and the thinkers of the eighteenth century solved all the problems necessary to be solved and did all the thinking necessary to do, so most of us have not done any thinking since.

Declaration of Independence Is the Koran

"The Declaration of Independence is the Koran and you know what the Califf said when he burned the library at Alexandria: 'If these things are in the Koran, we don't need these books; and if they are not, we don't want the books.' Now, we have been inclined to think the first paragraph of the Declaration of Independence and the first ten articles of the Constitution of the United States has the Koran which contained all of truth; they do contain truth, they were true and are today true but they are not all of truth, and our cities have suffered in particular by not realizing that. We established a civilization and institutions on a basis of a country people and a pioneer people who wanted nothing for themselves except the right to make their own way,—each man for himself. No man wanted help from anybody; all he wanted was liberty, not to be interfered with by anybody. There was trade and plenty of room for anybody and if any man

REMOVAL SALE

Pianos and Player Pianos

Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player Piano this is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.

Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers
345-347 S. Spring St.

did not avail himself of these conditions it was his own fault. We have established our civilization upon that assumption and our civilization still works perfectly wherever that assumption is true and imperfectly wherever it is not. The cities, though, have made it cease to be true in a great many ways. We have begun to find out that in the cities we must restrict some liberties. It used to be that a man could keep a pig or a cow in his back yard. Every city now makes this a public offence though it might be said that this restriction is interference with a free man's right to raise his own pork or supply his own milk.

The City Creates a New Type

"We find, too, that the growth of cities developes a new sort of person. It is rather harder to realize that in Los Angeles than anywhere else because Los Angeles is the one large city which has predominantly maintained the American type of citizenship. That is your advantage, not necessarily your credit. That has been maintained by your peculiar social conditions, which you won't have always and which no other city has at all. But the city type of man,—the man who was born in the city and whose father, grandfather and great grandfather before him were born in cities, the man who knows no condition of life except city conditions, he is not an individualist. He does not want individual rights; he is afraid of individual rights. He has been born in the crowd and he feels a safety in crowds. He is not afraid of people; he is afraid of open places and is afraid of being alone. He would rather starve in the crowd of the city than make his own way in the country.

City Bred Man Will Not Help Himself

"It has been figured out that all of the great expenditures of the city of New York in the effort to make better tenements and decenter places to live in have not done for those people one-tenth as much as any one of them could have done for himself if he had moved out a little way into the country and worked out his own future; but the people of the city of New York won't do that. They are not that sort of people. They are accustomed to depend on their neighbors and feel the utter helplessness of the individual to do anything by himself in the lower walks of city life. That is a pathetic helplessness but it is a city condition we must reckon with as permanent. The thing to do is not to try to turn the individual citizen of the big city into the type of man that our pioneer countryman was, but, accepting the fact that he is distinctly of the city type, try to change him from that helpless and dependent condition and assist him into more intelligent co-operation with his fellow citizens.

"It is really astonishing, at times, for men raised in the country to go into the politics of a big city and find how few people there are there who have any ideas for themselves—and that is not all in the lower ranks of life either. You go into the city of San Francisco and you will find great hordes of men there who define their own political status by a certain peculiar phrase, such as, 'I am with the railroad,' or 'with the reformers,' or 'I am with Sullivan,' or Vaughn, or Kennedy, or Crimmins or whoever the men are, and that sentence, in the dialect of the lower classes of the city, means 'His cause is my cause; whatever he says for me to think I will think; whatever he says for me to do, I will do, because we must work together; we are helpless individually and the easiest way of working together is to turn over the job to one man and we will all pull together whatever way he pulls.' That is what they mean by that strange political word 'with.'

Dependence Not Confined to Poorer Sections

"But that condition is not confined entirely to Tom Finn's and below the south of Market. I don't know how many times I have heard from the best business men in San Francisco: 'Tell us what to do and we will do it.' They wanted good government and they wanted somebody to tell them what to do,—someone in whom they had confidence as believing in good government—and they would go and do it. They wanted a 'boss' too and felt perfectly helpless without a boss.

"It is the application of the principle of division of labor to the only thing to which it cannot be applied, and we are so accustomed to that principle that it is very hard to make this one and necessary exception.

To illustrate: I am going to Sacramento tonight on the 'Owl' train. It is none of my business who runs that train, or who its dispatcher is, or what manner of engineer it has, or who takes care of it, I pay my fare—and I do pay (laughter)—and for that money other people do the work. Modern life is worked out that way and we can run every modern institution that way except our politics. The tendency of the city man is to run his politics that way; that tendency we will have to combat.

Business of the City to Make Loyal Citizens

"Now the problem of the city is largely, I think, the making of citizens; that is, the developing of loyalty to the city, making each man feel that the city is his city and that its concern is his concern. That is not completely the case with American cities. It is much more the case with European cities, and the reason is that we are a home keeping people. We are a people of homes and each man's loyalty is to his own home and his interest in the city is in what it can do for his home. If the city can give him a good street, a good street car system, keep the burglars out of and fire from destroying that home, then he loves that city. All his working hours, he believes, shall be devoted to making money for that home and all his leisure hours shall be devoted to pleasure. He is intensely loyal to his home but the city is only an incidental part of his life.

European City Life Different

"That is not anything like so true in European cities. They tell us there is no word for 'home' in the continental languages. There are words that the dictionary gives as something of an equivalent, but, for instance, the German word 'heimat' generally means the town you live in, not necessarily the house you live in. They harbor an affection for that town as much as they do the home and it is largely because the social life of the individual and his pleasures are a part of the life of the town and are not so exclusively of the life of his own family as in this country. It is perhaps one reason why they possess the carnival spirit in Europe. They are accustomed to having their pleasures in the streets; they are accustomed to meeting each other in the streets and they are accustomed to having common life in the streets. I am not advocating this as an improvement on home life but merely mention that fact as showing a certain loyalty in people whose lives are bound up in the city, which does not exist in the people whose lives are only incidental parts of the city. You feel that particularly in a new town like Los Angeles where hardly anybody who lives there was born in it. The Easterner comes to live in Los Angeles, but the town he calls home is not Los Angeles. It is a place back East. That will last, of course, only for one generation, but in that generation this town ought to develop the loyalty of the individual citizen so that he will feel toward the city he lives in something of that affection that he feels toward his home city.

Municipal Amusements

"The chief object of the ancient Roman was to amuse himself and the city provided that amusement. Now the modern citizen has not as much leisure as the ancient Roman; he has a job. And he has a job for eight hours, if he belongs to the union; a little longer if he does not; and he has eight hours or less to do what he pleases, and the tremendous importance of those other eight hours we don't always seem to recognize. Those eight hours he may use for good or for harm. He may live them away in the saloon or he may spend them about his home. He may spend them with his children in the park, or he may spend them in the library, making of himself a liberally educated citizen, and every eight-hour laborer, who is man enough, has time and opportunity enough to give himself a liberal education if he wants to.

"Now, the city provides protection for the man's home; it provides him protection in his work. What is it doing for his leisure, and especially for the leisure of that large class of residents of every city—every other city than this—which does not have suitable homes; where the separate, individual pleasures of the home are impossible,—what are cities doing for them?

Los Angeles the City of Homes

"You are proud of Los Angeles, the City of Homes. In other large cities most of the population do not live in separate houses and do not have homes, in the American sense, but most of you have, and that means in this city you can solve old-fashioned problems for a little while in an old-fashioned way, but you cannot do it forever, and all other large cities can't do it at all. If in the homes and the tenement houses there is only room enough to eat in and sleep in, then all the leisure life must be spent somewhere outside of the home and there must be amusement provided. That amusement must be provided publicly or privately, but experience shows us that when it is provided privately it is too often provided viciously. (Applause).

Virtues of the Saloon and Dance Hall

"Why is it that the residents of the congested quarters of the cities fight for the saloon and dance hall? Is it because they are so base and wicked they stand for the defence of wickedness? It is not that at all. It is not for the vice of the saloon and dance hall, but for the virtue of them. In most of these congested districts the saloon is the laboring man's only club and the dance hall is the laboring girl's only social amusement. The laboring man has a right to his club and the laboring girl has a right to her social amusement, and they fight for that right in spite of the fact that it creates drunkenness and debauchery. Our cities have got to do something more than merely close up saloons and dance halls. (Applause).

"People like yourselves do not need saloons and dance halls. You have your homes; but every city containing a huge population must have either those things or something better. In other words, you must provide amusement for the people and you must provide it outside of the home, because the largest and most important class of your people have either no homes, in the proper sense of the word, or the sort of homes that are mere eating and sleeping places and are not equipped for amusement.

Moral Epidemics as Bad as Physical Epidemics

"If the city were the source of the amusement of the people—if the pleasure of the people in the eight hours of leisure were cared for by cities, don't you think those people would love the city? Don't you think they would stand for it and fight for it as the ancient people fought for it? We don't have to do it all at once, but sooner or later it must be done to prevent the city from moral epidemics, which are quite as bad as the physical epidemics from which we have protected ourselves by compulsory sanitation. We found out when we allowed poor people to provide private sanitation they would start epidemics that would spread among the rich, and the rich looked out for the sanitation of the poor. When they come to realize that moral epidemics among the poor, which come from misdirected amusement, spread moral epidemics among them, then the rich will look out for the amusements of the poor also. (Applause).

Class Opinion Rules

"Another thing our cities must look out for is that they remain democratic, and that is the hardest problem of all. The population of a city is so numerous that each man may associate with his own kind, and usually prefers to do so, and there is enough of his own kind to make it unnecessary to depend on the other kinds for his social acquaintance. In a village everybody is on terms of social acquaintance, to a certain extent, with everybody else. In the city one half does not know, and so does not care, how the other half lives. In a city most people do not associate with other people except people just like themselves. A city does not develop any public opinion, but a multitude of class opinions. I have sometimes watched the method. The barkeeper is the custodian of one sort of opinion. He is one organ of publicity because he meets more people every day than most men of his class meet. The bartender wants to know what public opinion is on a certain subject and he inquires of all the other bartenders and he jumps at the conclusion that their opinion is the unanimous opinion of the people. It is a curious thing, but when a banker wants to now public opinion he does the same thing and if he wants to know he inquires of other bankers and is entirely convinced that the whole

Furniture Repair Works
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS
MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET
RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

people think just as the barkers think.

I remember the president of a so-and-so once saying to me, if a certain law was passed that put some restriction on his association, 'public opinion will be unanimous' against it I said 'No, the opinion of your club will be unanimously against it because the members of your club are unanimously of the opinion they are entitled to certain privileges which other people are not entitled to, the remainder of the population is of an entirely contrary opinion.' He could not understand it, but I expect you do.

Who Are the People?

"Now, those opinions tend to become classified and each social class tends to regard itself as the people. You know how the labor unions rule San Francisco in the name of the people. They say, 'We are the people and whatever we say must be done.' I have heard it said that the business class in Los Angeles had the hallucination that the middle class and the business class are the people. It would be as dangerous for the business class of Los Angeles to have an absolute class rule over this city as it has been demonstrated it was dangerous in the city of San Francisco to have the laboring class have absolute class rule over that city. (Applause). I am glad to see that it is safe to say that in Los Angeles. (Applause). I have heard persons say that it is not. But it is a fundamental and universal fact, and not more true here than elsewhere, that no individual and no class can be trusted with unlimited power. (Applause). There is, in San Francisco, a terrible example of the unlimited and unrestricted rule of one class. It has given them vile social conditions, vile political conditions; it has bred crime and degeneracy and, particularly, bad business. It has almost ruined that city.

People of Today Must Look Farther Ahead

"I don't suppose that the unrestricted class rule of more intelligent classes would spread the same evils, or spread any evils so quickly, but the hallucination, which is a common one in America, that the middle class is the only class, is an hallucination which we inherited from the fathers of this nation. Those fathers were very wise in their generation, and it was a very wise generation, but we would be very foolish to think, if standing on their shoulders, we could not see any further than they did. The fathers of the Constitution, when they established a government by the people of this country, established a government by the middle class, and they took it for a matter of course that the middle class was the people. The 'upper class,' in the old days, comprised kings and the nobility, and establishing a government by the people was to throw out entirely that part of the people. On the other end was the laboring class, and the nation's fathers totally neglected them. It never occurred to them that that class was included in 'the people,' and it happened, of course, under the social conditions of early America, that nearly all of the people were of the middle class,—that class of people who were in business themselves or desired to get into business for themselves, or were engaged in some business in which that phraseology had some meaning. You can attach no significance to those words if you are in the railroad business, for instance, but you can if you are connected with the grocery business because one is in business for himself and the clerk who is working there hopes to be in business for himself some day. So that whole class, ranging from the clerk to the eminent lawyer, constitutes our middle class and it inherits from the fathers of the eighteenth century the hallucination that it is 'the people.' All of you, I suppose, belong to that class. And probably you are 'the people,' but I suspect you are merely the best of the people.

Must Lessen Class Feeling

"We are now engaged, like our ancestors, in deposing the upper class. The upper class now belongs to all those businesses that have risen beyond competition. This class wants one combination to do all of one line of its business of the country. Those businesses, or those who are running them, are our upper class, and they have been trying to run the government and we, like our predecessors of the middle class have been trying to take the government away from that class. In San Francisco our class got possession of the government and then the lower class proceeded to combine with the upper class against the middle class in order to take the government away from them again.

"You will find there is, if you draw these class lines sharp, always a partnership between the upper class and the lower class. They like each other. If you were ever acquainted with any proud millionaire who tried to pride himself on the democracy of his manner, you found that his democracy of manner was based entirely on his ability to get along with people so far below him that the chasm was perfectly conscious to both of them. Something like the baron in England who is on terms of personal intimacy with his tenants. Like the master and slave in the old South, those people like each other, and neither of them like you. They don't like your sort of people and you don't like them. But between them they have the power and the brains and the money and the organized resources on one side, and the numbers and the class loyalty and organized force on the other side; and they are very powerful between them and you can't depose them simply by trying to set up against that sort of class government another sort of class government. If there is a class combination that combination is stronger than you are.

Change Class Loyalty to City Loyalty

"The only way out is to establish some sort of democracy whereby the upper class, as I have called it, can be deposed by putting those big industries into public control—and eventually we will have to do that. (Applause.) We will have to do that first in the cities. We will have to establish such a sentiment on the part of the people—the working people and business people like ourselves—that they will both have sentiment and loyalty toward the city. (Applause.)

Working Class Does Not Want What the Middle Class Wants

"You must remember that the people of the working class—I am permitted to say 'working class' because they use it—do not want what you desire. What you want is individual right; the right to do as you please. They don't want that. It has to be forced on them and then they object to it. What they want is the right to act together, and sooner or later they will get it. And they can have it in safety, provided you too will learn to get together, not in hostility, but in co-operation. The upper class does not like individualism; it does not want competition in business. The working class is not an individualistic one. You do like individualism and you like each one to run his own business in his own way. Now, you cannot teach your ideas to the other classes; they won't learn it. In my mind you will have to learn the other way yourself. You will have to learn to organize and to deal with the other classes with no control by any one class but with a loyalty on the part of all to the commonwealth of which we are citizens.

Los Angeles the Suburb of the World

"I know the situation in Los Angeles is such that you will not have to come to a solution of that as quickly as other places because this city is above all cities of the middle class. This is a city in which you have deposed the upper class from power and up to the present time the other class has not attained political power. The reason is a social reason. You are a great big city but a city which is unique in its character. It is a city which has an enormous disproportion of your class of people over the other class and which, on account of its peculiar situation, is the suburb of the world. (Laughter.) You speak of the moral quality of the city of San Francisco, but a large part of the people who work in San Francisco live in Berkeley—a beautiful town that has all the virtues you have. San Francisco can develop virtues as well by this same principle of segregating one class of people into one place and another into another place. Now, nature has done that for you. You are a self-contained city in your industries, and to whatever extent you are, as I have called it, the suburb of the world, to that extent you have a suburban advantage like the city of Berkeley has and the solution of the old-fashioned problems is further away for you than any other city in the world. But that won't last forever. You will have to have some solution, as elsewhere, and that solution won't be in the old-fashioned notion that your class is the only class and that government by the people and economic control of the people means government and control by your class."

Improve the State Governments

There is much talk these days about a strong centralized government, much insistence on concentrating legislative and executive power at Washington. On the other hand, earnest protest that already we have gone too far in that direction and that we must quit trying to impose all our burdens on the federal government, is heard.

The states' rights argument comes largely from interests suspected to be opposed to conservation of our remaining resources in behalf of the whole people. It is inspired by the belief that if these resources are turned over to the states they can be gotten away from the states with less trouble than from our national government.

If we may be allowed to rise in our pew long enough to give utterance to a few observations, we would caution our conservation friends against rushing headlong in opposition to states' rights.

As a matter of fact, it all comes down to the question of whether by giving the state governments more power and responsibilities they can be saved and made useful or whether by taking away their powers and responsibilities they shall be allowed to fall into complete atrophy.

Our state governments have broken down. They never were any too sturdy, and the strain to which they have been subjected by exploiters of public-service franchises has been too much for them. For thirty years the grabbing of railroad, street railway, gas, electric, water, and other franchises has been so profitable a business that strong men have seized upon the state governments in order to control those privileges. The result is that no state in the union has a business machine that compares for efficiency with almost any large commercial corporation within its borders. The same situation prevails in the large cities.

Beyond question the federal government does some things more effectively than the city or state governments. That is the principal argument in favor of turning over more and yet more of our public business to the federal power.

Not so quickly. Let us acknowledge that our state and city governments have failed. Let us acknowledge that they have failed because the franchise grabbers have corrupted them. If we will concede this much we will be well on the way to rehabilitation of state and city government. We will need merely to remove from state and city officials the temptations which are involved in their control of public franchises.

Let the cities take over their street railways, gas, electric, and other public utilities. Let the states take over those functions and facilities which operate throughout the state at large. Let the federal government take over the railways, telegraph and telephone, and establish a parcels post that will put the express companies out of business.

This is the way to take Big Business out of politics, and it is Big Business in politics that breeds corruption and inefficiency. We cannot reform the state governments without first improving city governments, because the cities are responsible for much of the corruption, and most of the incentive to corruption, in the states. Therefore we must bring about better city government, and the way to it has been pointed, in the experience of cities with the Des Moines plan of government by commission directly responsible to the people through its provisions for the initiative, referendum, protest and recall.

With good city government thus established, reform of the state governments will be much easier. Legislatures should be composed of fewer members. For the same reason that a city council of five is more efficient than one of twenty-five, so a state legislature of fifty members would be more efficient than one of two hundred members. For the same reason that city councils are more likely to remain honest when the people have those powers of ultimate control which the initiative, referendum, protest, and recall give them, so state legislatures would similarly be more trustworthy and reliable if back of their powers stood the people, armed with the ballot and the privilege of exercising it through the referendum.

The commission plan of government has opened the way to municipal efficiency and honesty. Adapted as we have suggested to state purposes, it would do as much for the state government. It is doing it today in Oregon. In fifteen years it ought to be doing it in every state.

Thus relieved of burdens which ought not to be imposed upon it, the federal government in its turn could be restricted to a narrower sphere of truly national activities, and by application of the same principles could be made more efficient. An honest tariff system administered by a great tariff commission, and government ownership of the railways, the telegraph, and the express and mail facilities, would relieve the federal government in turn of those temptations which constantly invite Big Business into the effort to control the federal government.

There is plenty of work for all of our governments—city, state, and national. Let us make each of them efficient first; then there will be time to discuss the necessity and desirability of a "strong, centralized government" which might prove an easy and convenient vehicle for a dictatorship.

Hampton's

"You say the elopement was sort of forced upon you?" "Yes; after she came down the rope ladder her dad pulled it up."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Where Senator Works Stands

Senator-Elect Defines His Attitude On Questions of the Day

Following is the address delivered by Senator John D. Works to the Legislature, immediately following his election on Tuesday last:

"Members of the legislature of the state of California:

"I thank you sincerely for the honor you have done me in electing me United States senator.

"I am glad to be able to say to you and to the people of California that I accept the office absolutely free and independent. Free to do my duty; independent of any domination, control or influence of any man, corporation or private interest of any kind.

"In a broader sense, I am not independent. I hope I appreciate the grave responsibilities you have imposed upon me by electing me to this great office. In meeting those responsibilities, I need the help, advice and support of all good citizens who have the welfare of the state and nation at heart.

"I have lived in the southern part of the state for nearly 28 years. I think I know its conditions and needs fairly well. But the North is entitled to my services in its behalf, as senator, equally, and as fully as is the South, and I shall endeavor to inform myself of its needs so that I may the better serve the whole state without discrimination or favor.

"I desire particularly to express my thanks to the Democratic members of this body who have given me their support. It is a hopeful and encouraging sign of the times, an evidence of the fact that good men in office are no longer ruled by blind partisanship, but are seeking to serve the interests of the people through the best medium that is available at the time. I am not going to the United States senate to serve the Republican party alone, but to serve the whole people of the state and nation.

"I am very much gratified that the legislature has seen fit to send a progressive to the United States Senate, and in the progressive they selected I have the fullest confidence.

"One feature of the election was the attitude of many Democrats in the assembly and senate. Those Democrats evidently when they had determined upon a course they believed right, disregarded their partisanship.

"To me this is the essence of patriotism, and I congratulate the Democrats who took this position. I trust our party will always be sufficiently broad to do likewise."

Governor Johnson.

"I believe in political parties, but only as instruments to carry out the will of the people. When a party ceases to serve this purpose, it becomes a menace to the public welfare and a danger to our free institutions.

"This is not the time or place to discuss political questions and I am not going to detain you for any such purpose. But there are certain important, fundamental principles of government, principles that affect every man, woman and child in this country irrespective of their political ties or affiliations.

"I desire in this presence to declare my adherence to those principles and my determination to labor, as a public official, to establish and maintain them. They are set forth in the state platform of both of the leading parties of California. Therefore, they are not partisan in their nature.

"Among these may be mentioned: "The election of United States senators by direct vote of the people; the conservation of our natural resources; the elimination of boss rule, dictation or influence from our politics, and the removal of all private

"A progressive legislature, representing a progressive people, have triumphantly elected a progressive senator to support progressive legislation and progressive senators at Washington. Undue influence was not used to elect Senator Works."

Meyer Lissner.

privilege seeking interests from public office and the restoration of our government, state and national, to the people; a protective tariff measured by the difference between the cost of manufacture or production here and abroad, and the establishment of a permanent nonpartisan commission to adjust such rates; the establishment and maintenance of a government owned or controlled line of steamers, connecting the Pacific ports with the Panama railroad, and a government owned or controlled line of steamers between Pacific and Atlantic ports through the Panama canal, when completed; direct legislation, including the initiative, referendum and recall, and the granting of the right of suffrage to women. To accomplish these reforms and establish our government as a government of the people, we must maintain the freedom and independence of the individual voter, and make his vote his own, exclude from public office any and every man that owes or acknowledges allegiance to the Southern Pacific Railroad company or any other corporation or private interests, adverse to the interests of the state or nation.

"One of the greatest and most important perils to this country is the power of the corporations, the trusts, the private interests, in our politics and public offices, seeking special privileges and obtaining and holding them by corrupt and illegal means. The governor of this state has declared his intention of casting out all of these interests and influences from offices of this state. He means to do just what he says he will do. In this laudable and patriotic purpose he should have the earnest support of every good citizen of this state without regard to his political affiliations or beliefs.

"Precisely the same thing should be done with respect to the federal offices in this state. They are infested and corrupted by the servants of the interests. They come and go at the beck and call of their masters without regard to the interests of the people.

"For one, it is my purpose to aid Governor Johnson in his efforts to redeem this great state of ours from corrupt politics and to make merit and competency alone the basis of appointments to office; and I will do everything in my power to establish this same standard that he has raised, in the making of federal appointments, and to root out of the public service men who have secured their places as a reward for helping to degrade and pollute the politics of the state.

"I am a progressive republican. I believe in the principles that the insurgents in congress are struggling to maintain in the interests of the people. It is my purpose to stand for progressive principles in legislation, no matter what may be its origin, and without partisan bias. The people are crying out for justice and not for partisanship; for establishment of the rights of the people and not for the preservation or perpetuation of political parties. The party that fails to respond to this cry will be swept out of existence. I shall enter upon my duties as your senator with a full understanding of this sentiment of the people of this state, and the nation, and act accordingly."

"The election of Judge Works was the ratification by the legislature of the expressed will of the people of California and the realization of the hopes of the progressive element of both parties. It was the culmination of forty-four years of effort by the people to free themselves from the control of the political machine dominated and financed by the Southern Pacific railroad."

Chester H. Rowell.

181ST MONTHLY REPORT, JANUARY 1, 1911

LOS ANGELES INVESTMENT CO.

333-335-337 SOUTH HILL STREET

Founded in 1866 — Established in Los Angeles 1895

Incorporated under the Laws of California, May 29, 1899

RESOURCES:

Balance due on houses being sold on monthly installments, mortgages, secured loans and houses under construction	$2,784,129.27
Building Material Co. stock, including two lumber yards, lumber and planing mills, warehouses, shops, factories, wagons, etc.	164,740.00
Stock in "Home Makers"	39,925.50
Stock in Globe Savings Bank at par (market value $95,000.00)	63,300.00
Stock in City & County Bank	12,500.00
Real Estate (market value $2,209,365.00)	1,888,350.41
Fixtures	5,532.82
Cash on hand	229,519.73
	$5,187,997.73

NET ASSETS:

Capital Stock paid in cash	$1,995,260.00
Reserve	2,930,494.52
		$4,925,754.52

LIABILITIES:

Dividends payable (uncalled for)	$ 4,082.78
Home Certificates, Gold Notes and Mortgages on property purchased (not a legal liability)	258,160.43
No unpaid bills.		$ 263,243.21
		$5,187,997.73

THE LAST ANNUAL REPORT SHOWED THE PRINCIPAL PROFITS FOR THE YEAR TO BE:

REAL ESTATE	$261,319.69
INTEREST	180,000.00
BUILDING CONSTRUCTION	10,191.89

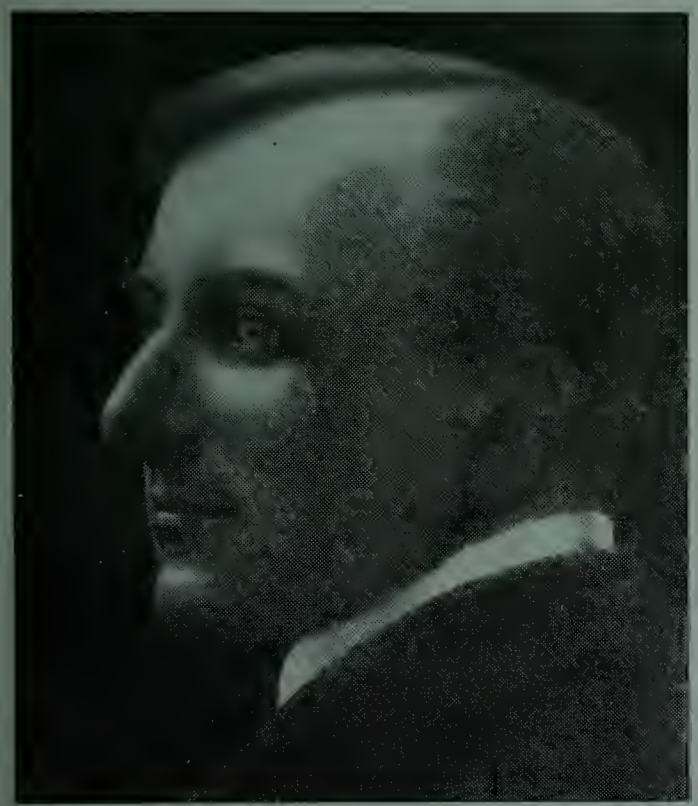
There were also miscellaneous profits from architectural, legal, insurance and rental departments. Quarterly cash dividends were divided among the stockholders amounting to $355,640.52.

NO INVESTOR IN THIS COMPANY HAS EVER FAILED TO RECEIVE ALL HIS MONEY ON DEMAND

Theatre

A Charming "Polly"

As a spectacle, "Polly of the Circus" is a great success, and its appeal to the emotions is clean, pretty and interesting. From the literary viewpoint, it is an ordinary play with a gentle little love story very conventionally written into an unusual setting. The play is not powerful, nor distinguished for fine lines or brilliant dramatic situations; but it is sweet and heartfelt and full of the glamour of the beloved American circus (which atmosphere is strikingly well rendered), so "Polly" pleases the public mightily.



And well may the individual Polly who plays the part in the road company which has been at the Mason this week, delight the heart of man, woman or child. This Ida St. Leon is a winsome, lovable bit of a creature (in the role of Polly—outside of that we know not her attributes), and the naive ways and lively abandon of the child, combined with the talent of a mature actress of considerable perception, which characterize her portrayal of the unsophisticated little circus rider, give to her performance a charm not easily set down in words. Added to this pretty blonde Polly's native magnetism is her apparent "at homeness" in circus scenes—an acquaintance acquired by actual experience on the sawdust, preceded by ancestral experiences of the same kind down a line of circus-playing forebears. Actually, we have only the press agent-historian's word for the pedigree, but certainly one may observe for himself that Ida St. Leon fits the circusy passages by training, even as she fits the finer emotional moments by innate artistry.

The play is generally well presented by this season's company, although Willard Robertson gives a rather amateurish impression of Rev. John Douglas, the young and truly Christian-spirited village minister whose brotherly kindness to the little circus rider at the time of her accident leads, in time, to their mutual love. This actor has not the case, the force, or the attractiveness to make the part alive.

Two players who are perfectly fitted, physically, to their parts, are Mart E. Heisey, as Big Jim, the canvas man, and Charles Warren as Joe Barker, a circus proprietor. Their acting is very creditable, too. J. D. Walsh does a good bit of character in the pathetic part of the clown, Uncle Toby, who has been as a father to Polly. Anne Mortimer in the role of the colored housekeeper, Mandy Jones, enlivens the proceedings with well directed humorous efforts.

Certainly the last act of "Polly of the Circus"—the first scene disclosing the "doings" in the wings, and the second showing the circus in full blast, with performing ponies, real bareback riders on beautiful real horses, acrobats, jugglers, clowns, whipcracking ringmaster, blaring band—is unique and startling. "Polly" is a spectacle well worth seeing; and this time the production is given a very decided charm by the presence of so prettily adjusted a centerpiece as Miss St. Leon.

Lanier Bartlett.

Jefferson de Angelis, in "The Beauty Spot," Majestic next week.

A Gentleman from Mississippi

Apparently we American theatregoers have always with us that Mississippi gentleman about whom Harrison Rhodes and Thos. A. Wise first wrote three years ago, he who was originally visualized by Tom Wise, seen at the Mason last winter in the person of James Lackaye, and who returns to the Majestic this week represented equally well by Robert A. Fischer.

This comedy is deservedly long-lived, for it embodies a sturdy Americanism, and the always interesting story—that of the encounter of an absolutely unsophisticated old Southern senator with the web of political strategy on his first visit to Washington—is unfolded with a deal of keen humor and a pretty by play of distinctly modern sentiment. There is vivid character drawing, too, in the character of Senator Langdon, huge, guileless, primitively unsuspicious and hence lovable, and in the intensely contrasted role of "Bud" Haines, the snippy, worldly-wise young reporter whose innate kindness, (abetted by an interest in Miss Langdon), impels him to put his shoulder to the Langdon wheel and rescue the Senator from the schemes of his enemies.

Given these two roles well played and one can forgive shortcomings in the others—and one has to forgive in the present company. John A. Butler as "Bud" Haines and Fischer as the Senator are as busy as cranberry merchants keeping things moving and drawing the attention of the audience away from the barnstormers who complete (?) the cast. It should be conceded that Miss Ruby Hoffman and Miss Leah Baird are pictorially irreproachable, and their external charms assist in the process of gently hiding the surrounding deficiencies.

Dorothy Russell Lewis

Orpheum

The Orpheum bill this week fell somewhat below the high standard set by the performance of the two weeks previous, but nevertheless yielded considerable enjoyment. Cook & Lorenz, held over from last week, continued to fill a large place in the affections of the audience, and Scheda's second week was as successful as the first.

Harlan E. Knight & Co. present a good sketch by Una Clayton, wherein two old enemies are converted into friends through the medium of a young and attractive girl.

A really amusing turn is the "foolery and fun" which goes under the name of "The Substitute" and is presented by Hilda Thomas and Lou Hall.

Mr. Hymack left the audience completely baffled as to the method of his quick changes in spite of the fact that his "chameleon" variations were accomplished before their eyes.

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Beginning Sunday Night, January 15
F. Ray Comstock Presents JEFFERSON DE ANGELIS
In DeKoven and Herbert's Greatest Comic Opera Success "The Beauty Spot"
An April Array of Girls and Music.
Nights and Saturday Matinee 50c to $1.50. Wed. Matinee Entire Lower Floor at $1 per seat. Coming—James T. Powers "IN HAVANA."

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
Beginning Sunday Matinee January 15
First time on any stage of LEE ARTHUR'S delightful comedy drama "THE FOX"
First Appearance at the Burbank of FRANK CAMP.
Prices the same for this metropolitan production as usual.
Nights—25, 50, 75c. Matinees, Saturdays, Sundays, Holidays—10, 25, 50c.

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447
Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c
New Bill Beginning Monday Matinee January 23
"The Bathing Girls" Jos. Hart's Latest Revue.
Mr. Hymack The Chameleon Comedian.
Cross & Josephine "Dying to Act."
Harlan E. Knight & Co. "The Chalk Line."
Joe Jackson The European Vagabond.
Four Famous Vanis Tight Wire Experts.
Hilda Thomas With Lou Hall in "The Substitute."
Monkey Music Hall Maud Rochez' Simians.
Next Week——ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW——Next Week
Orpheum Motion Pictures

SIMPSON AUDITORIUM L. E. BEHYMER Manager
Tuesday Evening, January 17—One Night Only
Mme. Gerville Reache
The World's Greatest Prima Donna Contralto
IN A SPECIAL GRAND OPERA PROGRAM
Prices—75c, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 and $2.50. Seat Sale Now on at Bartlett's.

MASON OPERA HOUSE W. T. WYATT Manager
All Next Week, Matinee Saturday, Special Matinee Wednesday, With Special Prices 50c to $1.50. Charles Frohman Presents the Big International Musical Production
"THE DOLLAR PRINCESS"
Splendid Company of 75. Augmented Orchestra. Regular Prices 50c to $2.00. Seats Now on Sale.

The four Vanis give a tight wire act which is as good as has been shown here.

Marvelous Griffith continues his marvelousness, and the Quigley Brothers continue their warmed-over jokes.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

"The Fox," Lee Arthur's new comedy drama, will be given its first performance on any stage at the Burbank at the matinee Sunday. The production is the same which Manager Morosco will take east in a few months to fill contracts for engagements in New York and Chicago. "The Fox" is a drama of today, but it is not a problem play, not a muck-

"A Night in a Monkey Music Hall" Orpheum Next Week

rake drama, it does not pretend to expose personal or social wrongdoing, nor does it preach or proselytize. It is designed simply to entertain, and is free from anything that would offend the most fastidious. The scenes take place at the home of a multi-millionaire money king, Roger Delaney (David M. Hartford), who is a type of the self confident, strong, self-made man of affairs. One of the leading characters is his father (A. Byron Beasley), a refined, well educated old gentleman, who is not very welcome at his son's home, as he does not harmonize with the younger man's ideas of life. The millionaire's daughter (Marjorie Rambeau) is a typical American girl, and her mother (Louise Royce) is also typical of the American woman at home. Among the other characters are a brilliant young lawyer (David Landau), a dissipated youth (Charles Ruggles), a veteran detective (Peter Lang), an old time crook (Frank Camp), and two servants (Frederick Gilbert and Willis Marks). These characters are all original, even the servants having a great deal to do with the action of the play. The dialogue is said to be brisk and interesting, and the situations novel. The story is so delightful that to give any hint of the plot would be to detract materially from the enjoyment. The settings have been arranged regardless of expense. A special feature will be the music between the acts, by an augmented orchestra under the direction of Harry Girard. Mr. Girard has writen a special descriptive overtue, "The Fox Hunt," for this play.

The musical comedy success, "The Dollar Princess," comes to the Mason Opera House next Monday evening for a week's run, after fourteen months in New York.

The story, written by the Viennese librettists, Willner and Grunbaum, is an interesting one. Its music is by Leo Fall. It is said to be clean and fresh, with no vulgarity that mars so many musical comedies.

"The Dollar Princess" deals with the affairs of the eccentric John Cowder, president of the American Coal Trust. He has a theory that money-hunting foreign noblemen should be taught to work and therefore engages poor but titled people for his servants, paying them fabulous salaries. His butler is a baron and his head groom a French marquis. Cowder is a widower and his brother and nephew palm off Olga Tartaroff, a lady lion tamer, on the old man. The Coal King believes she is a Russian countess and announces his engagement to her. Alice, his daughter, is furious but she is in love with Freddy Smythe, a young Englishman whom she employs as her secretary, and her ingenuity in gaining her father's consent to her marriage with Freddy Smythe and exposing the shameless Olga makes an amusing plot.

Leading the bill at the Orpheum next week comes a big girl act, "The Bathing Girls," which Jos. Hart sends out with Glenwood Hall as its only man, and Albertine Benson as its star. This bunch of girls is composed of pretty femininity, and all its members sing and dance. There are a number of scenic productions involved in the show, to each of which is appended appropriate songs. Twenty people are required to present this act, the majority of whom appear upon the stage and play parts. The act is in six scenes, they being "A View of Madison Square," the "Jardin de Paris," "An Artist's Studio in Paris," "The Poster Girls," "The Beach at Long Branch" and "In the Surf." In addition to the six scenes, there are six changes of costumes and six descriptive musical numbers. The songs in "The Bathing Girls" number many of the popular hits on Broadway, New York.

Wellington Cross and Lois Josephine bring a bit of travesty, in "Dying to Act." It is a burlesque ot the serious melodrama, full of the inconsistencies that make melodrama absurd, and worked up to a point where it becomes downright hilarity.

Jos. Jackson, "the European Vagabond," has something new to offer in a cycling stunt. This may sound absurd and impossible, but he claims to be absolutely able to deliver the goods. Of course, he burlesques all through his work, but, like his predecessors, it is excellent fun and that is the answer.

The "Night in a Monkey Music Hall," which Maud Rochez presented with the Road Show a year ago, is the fourth new number this week. Those highly trained simians who give the whole stunt are a series of world beaters and the things they do are marvels.

Hymack, "the chameleon comedian," who has them all guessing, Hilda Thomas and Lou Hall in "The Substitute," Vanis on the tight wire and Harlan E. Knight & Co., in "The Chalk Line" remain.

The Orpheum Road Show, Martin Beck's selection of six acts, comes Monday, Jan. 23, for its annual visit. Alice Lloyd joins it here.

"The Beauty Spot," a new musical play by Reginald DeKoven and Joseph Herbert, produced under the management of F. Ray Comstock, will be the attraction at the Majestic for a week beginning Sunday night.

This new musical play brings Jefferson De Angelis once more before the public as a star.

Mr. DeKoven has, it is said, surpassed himself in the music he has written for "The Beauty Spot." Mr. Joseph Herbert has provided Mr. De Angelis with some clever songs, among which are, "A Garden of Girls," "The Cintematograph Man," "Foolish Questions," and "The Boulevard Glide," all of which give him an abundant opportunity for that class of comedy of which he is the exponent.

Chief in his support is George MacFarlane, with a baritone voice of full range. Mr. MacFarlane plays the part of the artist lover, but to hear him sing "Creole Days," will make almost anyone forget all but that song.

Viola Gillette is seen as the General's wife, whose picture gives the name to the piece.

The next offering at the Auditorium will be the coming on Monday, Jan. 30th, of Edward Sheldon's play of the South's great problem, "The Nigger." The author undertook a tremendous task when he sought to present his theory of the race problem in dramatic form, he draws pictures that are literal, pictures that shock at times, and this is the real justification for his undertaking. The problem that now absorbs the South is not one to be discussed by the dillettante, not one to be played with.

Jesters' Bells

The Cannibal King—See here, what was that dish you served up to me at lunch? The Cook—Stewed cyclist, your majesty. Cannibal King—It tasted very burnt. Cook—Well, he was scorching when we caught him, your majesty.—Sketch.

She—Yes, we are all quite desperately in love with the new curate. He—Ah, it was just the dread of that sort of thing in my own case that prevented me going in for the church! —London Opinion.

A gentleman formerly attached to the American Embassy at London tells how an old country sexton in a certain English town, in showing visitors around the church yard, used to stop at one tombstone and say:

"This 'ere is the tomb of 'Enry 'Ooper an' 'is eleven woives."

"Elcven!" exclaimed a tourist, on one occasion. "Dear me! That's rather a lot, isn't it?"

Whereupon the sexton, looking gravely at his questioner, replied:

"Well, mum, yer see, it war an 'obby of 's'n."—Harper's.

A distinguished society leader of New York, lately returned from a motor trip through France, said that her most delightful experience was hearing the French pheasants singing the mayonnaise.—Everybody's.

In a certain small English village there were two butchers living in the same street. One placarded his sausage at one shilling a pound, and the rival promptly placed eight-pence on his card. No. 1 then placed a notice in his window saying that sausage under one shilling could not be guaranteed. No. 2's response to this was the announcement: "I have supplied sausages to the king." In the opposite window the following morning appeared an extra large card, bearing the words: "God save the king!"—Ladies' Home Journal.

"Oh, my!" exclaimed the excited woman who had mislaid her husband. "I'm looking for a small man with one eye." "Well, ma'am," replied the polite shopwalker, "if he's a very small man, maybe you'd better use both eyes."—Tit-Bits.

"Then you think you won no permanent place in her heart?" "I'm just a notch on her parasol handle; that's all."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Now, children, what is this?" asked the teacher, holding up the picture of a zebra. "It looks to me like a horse in a bathing suit," answered a little boy.—Our Dumb Animals.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information aoply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S, Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

MUSIC

Comment is very often made upon the facility with which this or that great artist seems to conquer seemingly unconquerable difficulties in the technic of his instrument, in fact such an observation is a favorite with reviewers, but never could this time-worn phrase be more aptly applied than to the wonderfully effortless execution of Jaroslav Kocian. He is the exponent of technical and tonal perfection—the ear is charmed by successions of such flawlessly produced tones, such delicate phrases, such scintillating runs and trills, as thrill one with delight. In the lower sustained passages Kocian shows breadth and dignity. His interpretations do not lean a hair's breadth to the emotional side; neither do they show much virility of style, but are best characterized as scholarly. His program numbers last Thursday evening were a G minor concerto by D'Ambrosio, the Bach Chaconne, Paganini's "I Palpiti," and three short numbers, "Cavatine," Cuir; "Moto Perpetuo," Ries, and a Humoresque by Kocian himself which met with an enthusiastic reception. In fact, the audience greeted enthusiastically all of this great violinist's offerings. Kocian was himself the calmest person in the auditorium.

Mme. Gerville-Reache, Contralto, Simpson Auditorium, Jan. 17.

A pleasure, more welcome because somewhat unexpected, was the highly excellent solo work of Maurice Eisner, Mr. Kocian's accompanist. Mr. Eisner showed a thorough grasp of his subject matter, and gave an individual and authoritative rendering of his solo numbers, the Bach "Bouree" being especially delightful.

Herr Ignaz Haroldi, who has been absent from the city for some months on an extensive concert tour in the North and East, has returned to Los Angeles and has already resumed his classes.

M. R. T.

Kocian's return engagement the evening of January 10 included not only the return of Eisner, whose finished work as accompanist and pianist made such a happy impression last week, but also the appearance of Rudolf Friml, composer-pianist, who is both compatriot and friend of the Bohemian violinist, and who, while making Los Angeles his home, is heard all too seldom by local audiences. This trio of artists furnished an evening of pleasure to an audience smaller than that attracted by the first Kocian recital, but one equally enthusiastic, whose cordial appreciation received recognition in generous addition to the programmed numbers.

This program might be characterized, not inaptly perhaps, as "a Bohemian Rhapsody," if one may borrow the title of a Friml composition, for among the composers represented were Kocian, Friml and Sevik, with Wieniawski and Chopin as near neighbors, all writers whose music is foreign to Anglo Saxon and Latin thought, however much we may appreciate its beauties. Kocian with Friml, at the piano interpreted these harmonies "in the vernacular"—giving them with a fervor and innate understanding that was a revelation.

Grieg's concerto in C minor served to introduce these virtuosos, but their conception of the Scandinavian music while brilliant, lacked the sympathetic understanding which they brought to the melodies of their home land, and was the least satisfactory of the evening's offerings. Eisner appeared but once, accompanying Kocian in the violinist's own composition, "Hymne au Printemps", Friml's "By-gone Days," and Sevik's exceedingly interesting "Holka modrooka." Unaccompanied violin numbers were two characteristic Bach compositions, "Andante" and "Allegro assai," and Wieniawski's "Faust Fantasie." The Friml piano offerings were Chopin's "Etude in C sharp minor" and "Ballade A flat major," with his own improvisation, "Bohemian Rhapsody.

Mr. Friml, up to the time of his departure for New York a year and a half ago, showed himself a brilliant pianist whose fine technique was characterized by an irrepressible exuberance of spirit, marred at times by more than a tendency toward the erratic and bizarre. These faults of youth have given place to a maturity of purpose that is as marked as it is delightful, and a style that is dignified, viril and full of promise.

Kocian's position among masters of the violin seems assured. He possesses remarkable poise and technique, and is evidently a serious student. His right to a place among composers is instanced by his "Humoresque," given as a program number at his first recital, and as an encore Tuesday evening.

M. N. F. B.

At last we have had the pleasure of hearing the new prima donna contralto; Mme. Gerville-Reache and her work at the symphony concert last Friday, fully justified the praise bestowed upon her by the Eastern press. Mme. Gerville-Reache has been successively the prima donna contralto of the Opera Comique, Paris, the Monnaie Theatre, Brussels, and at the Convent Garden in London, until she came to this country under contract with Oscar Hammerstein of the Manhattan Opera Company, where she scored a triumph with her audiences. This season she is the foremost contralto of the Metropolitan and on her first recital tour throughout the West.

Mme Gerville Reache and her company will give the following program in Simpson Auditorium next Tuesday evening.

1. a. Les Stances (Sapho) .Gounod
   b. "Mon Coeur s'ouvre a ta voix" (samson et Delila.. ..... Saint-Saens
2. a. Ich Grolle Nicht ...Schumann
   b. Der Erlkonig .....Schubert
3. a. "Addio" (Dedicated to Mme. Gerville-Reache) .....Parelli
   b. Aria de la Cieca (La Gioconda) .....Ponchielli
   c. "Stride la Vampa" (Il Trovatore) .....Verdi

Fred Lennox and Barbara Babington, in "The Dollar Princess," Mason Opera House Next Week

4. a. Hindu Slumber Song .... Harriet Ware
   b. "Love's Trinity" .... Reginald de Koven
5. a. Sir de Lia (L'Enfant Prodigue) .....Claude Debussy
   b. L'Anneau d'argent .Chaminade
   c. Chanson Slave .....Chaminade
   d. Plaisirs d.amour (1741-1816) ..... Martini
   e. D'une Prison ..Reynaldo Hahn

The Ellis Club, under direction of J. B. Poulin, will give its next concert in Simpson Auditorium on Tuesday, January 24th.

The concert numbers will be as follows:

"Vintage Song," (Loreley). .. .. Mendelssohn
"In Vocal Combat".....Buck
(Introducing, "Then You'll Remember Me," Balfe; "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," Knight.)
"Toreador Hola," .....Trotere
"King Olaf's Christmas".....Buck
"Carpathian Folk Song"..... ..... Patty Stair
"Spring Night" .....Max Filke
(Accompanied by Krauss String Quintette.)

Soloists and special parts have not as yet been decided on but will be announced later.

The Brahms Quintette, consisting of Ralph Wylie, violin; Adolph Tandler, violin; Rudolph Kopp, viola; Axel Simonsen, cello; Homer Grunn, piano; will entertain the Friday Morning Club next Friday.

Stranger (after an examination)—Well, doctor, what do you think—have I the gout? Great Physician—H'em! Er—what is your income? "Two hundred a year." "No; you have a sore foot!"—Tit-Bits.

LOS ANGELES CITY WORK AND LEGISLATION

An indexed review of all action by Council, Board of Public Works, Commissions and Officials, relating to property improvement or of general interest. Record closes Wednesday night.

PUBLIC WORK BY STREETS

1st St.; ordinance establishing the name of the new cut-off connecting 1st St. on the east with 1st St. on the west of Chicago St., as "First St." Adopted. This makes First St. continuous. The name of that portion of 1st St. in conflict with this is changed to "Cable Street."

1st St. Industrial Districts; pet. from M. H. Hoover et al, for permission to install a 10 horse power electric motor at 1925 E. 1st St. Granted.

3rd St.; ord. of intention to improve 3rd St., Grand to Bunker Hill Ave., Johnson Act. Adopted.

6th and Mill Sts.; protest from Philip Duvale et al, against proposed paving. Protest sustained and proceedings ordered abandoned.

8th St.; ord. of intention to improve 8th St., Figueroa to Francisco St. Adopted.

8th St., Wilmington; ordinance establishing the grade of W. 8th St. from 134 feet west of Main St. to Canal St. Adopted.

8th St., Wilmington; ordinance establishing the grade of E. 8th St. from Canal St. to East St. Adopted.

9th St. Wilmington; ord. changing and establishing name of portion of W. 9th St., Wilmington Dist. Adopted.

16th St.; ord. of intention to improve 16th St., Main to Figueroa. Bond Act. Adopted.

17th and Central; pet. from Horace Anthony et al, for the installation of one arc street lamp at 17th and Central Ave. Ref. to Bd. of Pub. Wks.

39th St.; ordinance extending the time within which to begin proceedings for the opening of 39th St. between Grand Ave. and Olive St. Adopted.

48th Place; from the Pacific Electric Land Company, a deed to the city, for street purposes, for a portion of the west half of the northeast quarter Section 16, Township 2 South, Range 13 West, S. B. M., for the widening of 48th Place between Long Beach Ave. and Honduras St. Accepted.

75th St.; ord. establishing curb lines on 75th St. between Vermont and Normandie Ave. Adopted.

76th St.; ord. establishing curb lines on 76th St. between Vermont and Normandie Ave. Adopted.

77th St.; ord. establishing curb lines on 77th St. between Vermont and Normandie Ave. Adopted.

78th St.; ord. establishing curb lines on 78th St. between Vermont and Normandie Ave. Adopted.

5th Ave.; pet. from Arthur C. Herst et al, for three fire plugs on 5th Ave., one at Pico, one at 16th, one at Washington. Ref. to Fire Com.

Ave. 33; maps of the assessment district, for the sewer work along Ave. 33 between Lacy St. and Andrews St. Adopted.

Ave. 37; ord. granting permission to construct sewer in Ave. 37, Isabel to 250 feet north. Adopted.

Aves. 41, 42 and 43; City Engineer instructed to prepare necessary ordinances for the recurbing and sidewalking of Aves. 41, 42 and 43 between Pasadena Ave. and Marmion Way.

Ave. 65.; ord. establishing grade on Ave. 65, N. City Boundry to Pollard St. Adopted.

Alley, Hollywood; ordinance establishing the grade of the first alley south of Hillside Ave. from Francis Ave. to La Brea Ave. Adopted.

Alley; final ord. for the sewering of the first alley north of 4th St. from Wall St. to San Pedro St. Adopted.

Alley, west of Elden; protest from E. P. Bryan, et al, against the proposed improvement of the first alley west of Elden St. from 11th St. to 12th St. Sustained and proceedings ordered abandoned.

Alley; ordinance extending the time within which to begin an action for the condemnation of property for the opening of an alley from 8th St. to 9th St. between Spring St. and Broadway. Adopted.

Broadway, Wilmington; ordinance establishing the grade of Broadway from E. 9th St. to E. 7th St. Adopted.

North Broadway, from Buena Vista St. Bridge to Cottage Home St.; pet. from C. E. Donnatin et al, against proposed change in grade. Deferred until Jan. 17.

Bouett St.; ordinance establishing the grade of Bouett St. from Amador St. to Brooks Ave. Adopted.

Budlong Ave.; ord. establishing curb lines on Budlong Ave. between north of 75th and south of 78th Sts. Adopted.

Buena Vista St. Bridge; plans and specifications for the concrete ornamental work for the Buena Vista St. Bridge. Adopted and Bd. Pub. Works instructed to advertise for bids.

Carlton Way; ord. fixing and establishing curb line on each side of Carlton Way from Jackson Way to Lemona Ave. Adopted.

Carlton Way; ord. granting permission to improve Carlton Way, Jackson Way to Lemona. Adopted.

Carlton Way; ordinance changing and establishing the name of that certain street heretofore known as and called Carlton Way or Carleton Way, and extending from Jackson Way to Lemona Ave., to "Carlton Way." Adopted.

College St., from Ramona Ave. to North Broadway; protests against change of grade. Deferred to Jan. 17 and referred to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Concord St., from 1st to 4th; protests of L. A. Hughes against acceptance of street improvement. Deferred to Jan. 17 and referred to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Country Club Drive; communication from Robert Marsh, offering to convey to the city an easement for a storm drain to be built across a strip of land owned by him on the north side of Country Club Drive, from Arlington Place to Third Ave., for the sum of $150. Ref. to Finance Com.

Defrees St.; ord. of intention to improve Defrees St., Sunset Blvd. to Effie St. Bond Act. Adopted.

Echandia St.; ord. of intention to improve Echandia St., Brooklyn to Pleasant. Adopted.

Figueroa St., from Boston St. to 321 ft. north of College St.; protests against change of grade. Deferred to Jan. 17 and referred to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Figueroa St.; ord. establishing grade of Figueroa, 8th to 10th Sts. Adopted.

Francis Ave.; final ord. for the improvement of Francis Ave. from Sunset Blvd. to the southerly line of the city. Adopted.

French Ave.; petition from the A. T. & S. F. R. R. Co. relative to the straightening of French Ave. at Marmion Way. City Attorney and City Engineer instructed to prepare ordinance for the vacation of French Ave. and deed for the dedication of strip of land to be acquired for the straightening of said St.

Fresno St.; final ord. for the improvement of Fresno St. from Venice Ave. to Garnet St. Adopted.

Garnier Place; pet. from R. J. Shoemaker et al, asking that the name of Garnier Place, or Gramercy Place be fixed in such a manner as to avoid the confusion now existing. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Gramercy Place; ordinance establishing the grade of the west side of Gramercy Place from Melrose Ave. to the north line of Tract No. 803. Adopted.

Gramercy Place and 11th Sts; communication from Country Club Park, offering to grant the city, for the sum of $850, an easement for the construction of a proposed storm drain across their property, from Gramercy Place near 11th St. to a point near the corner of Country Club Drive and Westchester Place. Ref. to Finance Com.

Gramercy Place; quit claims deed from Country Club Park, covering a portion of Lots 24 to 37, "A" and "B" of Tract No. 647, for widening Gramercy Place on the west and north of Country Club Drive. Accepted.

Hoover St.; pet. from G. V. Wright et al, protesting against the opening of Hoover St. to Santa Monica Ave. Protest sustained and proceedings ordered abandoned.

Kansas Ave.; ord. establishing curb lines on Kansas Ave. between 75th St. and south of 78th St. Adopted.

Kenwood Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Kenwood Ave., Adams to 29th Sts. Bond Act. Adopted.

Marmion Way; petition of F. W. Kring et al, for the condemnation for street purposes of all the lands owned by the A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co. as a right of way along Marmion Way, between Ave. 50 and Pasadena Ave. Filed without prejudice. Council has adopted the necessary ordinances for the opening of Aves. 53, 55 and 56 across the said railroad right of way.

New Depot St., from Figueroa to College; protests against change of grade. Deferred to Jan. 17 and referred to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Oak St., Wilmington; ordinance establishing the grade of Oak St. from a point 627 feet north of W. 10th St. to W. 9th St. Adopted.

Palm Ave.; final ord. for the paving of Palm Ave. from Menlo Ave. to Orange Ave. Adopted.

Park Boulevard; pet. from N., N. E. & N. W. Imp. Ass'n, submitting resolution in favor of constructing a boulevard from the present driveway between Elysian and Griffith Park. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Raymond Ave.; ord. establishing curb lines on Raymond Ave. between 75th St. and south of 78th St. Adopted.

Santa Monica Blvd.; deed to the city from Thomas Rankin and wife, of the north ten feet of Lot 1, Block 24, Colegrove. Said land is for the widening of Santa Monica Boulevard from the west line of Townsend Ave. to a point 140 feet west. Accepted.

Selma Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Selma Ave., Gower St. to Highland Ave. Bond Act. Adopted.

Sycamore Drive; ord. establishing curb lines on Sycamore Drive between southeast terminus and Pasadena Ave. Adopted.

Walton Ave.; final ord. for the improvement of Walton Ave. from 37th St. to 37th Place. Adopted.

Wilson Ave; final ord. for the improvement of Wilson Ave. from Vine St. to La Brea Ave. Adopted.

Land For Street Purposes; from Lucy G. McGowan, et al, a deed to the city, for street purposes, from the southerly part of Lot 12, Block O, West Los Angeles. Said land lies at the junction of Hoover St. and Kingsley St., south of 30th St. Accepted.

BIDS RECEIVED

North Broadway; bids opened December 27 for improving North Broadway from Avenue 18 to 62 feet easterly from and parallel to the easterly line of the official bed of the Los Angeles River, were rejected. Bids for said work will be again received Monday, January 23, 1911.

Waterloo St.; bids opened December 27 for improving Waterloo st. from Reservoir st. to a point 659 feet southerly, were rejected. Bids for the said work will be again received Monday, January 23, 1911.

BIDS AWARDED

Blanchard St.; for street improvement in Blanchard street, from the northwesterly line of Evergreen avenue to the southeasterly line of Mott street. Awarded to H. H. Curtis.

Buena Vista St.; for sewer construction in Buena Vista street between Temple street and Fort Moore place. Awarded to W. N. Hendricks, at $1,925 for sewer complete.

Center St.; for street improvement in Center street from Aliso to 50 feet southwesterly of Macy street. Awarded to B. F. Ford.

Cincinnati St.; for street improvement in Cincinnati street, from the southeasterly line of Forest avenue to the northwesterly line of Evergreen avenue. Awarded to H. H. Curtis.

Francis Ave.; for street improvement in Francis avenue from Vermont avenue to 701 feet easterly. Awarded to David Joy, at 10 3-8 cents per square foot for sidewalk.

Normandie Ave.; for street improvements in Normandie avenue, from the southerly line of Washington street to the northerly line of Jefferson street. Awarded to Fairchild-Gilmore-Wilton Co.

Westmoreland Ave.; for street improvement in Normandie avenue, from the south line of Seventh street to the north curb line of Ninth street. Awarded to David Joy.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

Aqueduct Financial Statement; Bd. Pub. Works presented statement as to aqueduct financial condition on Jan. 1, 1911, showing: Cash on hand, $550,875.81; outstanding liabilities, $452,256.82; net available cash on Jan. 1, 1911, $98,618.99; bills collectible, $90,077.52; total, $188,696.51. In addition to the above assets there is an item of $126,000, expended by the Bd. of Pub. Works for the purchase of lands in the San Fernando Valley, which, we understand, will be reimbursed to the aqueduct construction fund by the Water Department. Expenditures on the aqueduct for December, 1910, amounted to $256,099.38. Operations for the current month will require, approximately, $275,000. Ref. to Finance Com.

Automatic Flagmen Protested; petition from Alex. Davidson et al, requesting the abolishment of bells between 9th St. and Slauson Junction, along the line of the Pacific Electric Railway on Long Beach Ave., and that flagmen be placed at said crossings in lieu thereof. Referred to the Board of Public Utilities.

Basement Pipe Inlets; Fire Chief recommended that, in order to facilitate fire fighting, in buildings, that present city ord. be amended to re-

...ment of ... shall have through its ... pipe inlet with a cover flush ... above and in large ba... more than one pipe inlet shall ... Ref. to Legislation Com.

Bill to Assist Property Owners; City Tax and License Collector sent to Council draft of bill, to be submitted to State legislature for adoption, providing that every purchaser of real estate be compelled to take his deed to the city and county assessors before it is recorded by the recorder. The assessors are to note the transaction on their books and charge the purchaser a fee of 10 cents for making the notation. Change is intended for the benefit of these same purchasers, especially in the matter of street assessments, because of the difficulty in securing the right names. Assessments are often made against "unknown" owners. As the real owner has no notice the assessment often goes delinquent until interest and penalties have more than doubled the original assessment and the owner is put to an unnecessary expense to redeem his property. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Blocking Los Angeles Street; pet from Arnott & Co., et al, for abatement of the nuisance caused by the crowds of men assembling on Los Angeles St. between 1st and 2nd. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Central Park Comfort Station; Bd. of Public Works authorized to enter into the necessary contract, under the emergency provisions of the City Charter, without advertising for bids therefor, for the construction of a Public Comfort Station in Central Park, such authorization to include the doing of any portion of said work by day labor, and the employing of laborers in the Park Department.

City Buys Aqueduct Bonds; City purchased 476 one-thousand-dollar Owens River bonds with aqueduct sinking funds. Council's action was upon the recommendation of the Bd. of Pub. Works, whose report showed funds were needed, as the aqueduct, January 1, had but $98,618.99 available cash on hand.

Cow Limits in Southwest; City Attorney instructed to prepare ordinance extending the cow limits from 38th St. on Hooper Ave. to Vernon, and thence west on Vernon to South Park Ave.

Griffith Park Fire Break; appropriation of $1200 made for the purpose of increasing the width of the fire-break around Griffith Park from 30 to 100 feet.

Height of Electric Signs; pet. from W. H. Clune et al, asking that amendment be made to present ord. allowing electric signs on top of buildings to be made 30 ft. high instead of 20 ft. as at present. Fire Chief recommended that pet. be not granted. Ref to Legislation Com.

Hollywood Main Sewer; in regard to the matter of condemning a certain strip of land for the Hollywood Main Sewer through land belonging to the Mesa Land Co., and land belonging to May K. Rindge. Finance Com. recommended that the sum of $200 be paid the Mesa Land Co. for right of way through Lot 17 West Adams Terrace Tract, and $1500 be paid to May K. Rindge for right of way for sewer purposes across private property belonging to the Rindge Estate, said location being on or about on the westerly prolongation of 23rd St. from 12th Ave. Adopted.

More Street Inspectors; ordinance creating two new positions of inspector at the salary of $110 per month each in the Bureau of Street Maintenance and Inspection. Adopted.

New Subdivision; map of Tract 1065 between Wilmington Ave. and McFarland St. in Wilmington. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

New Subdivision; map of Tifel Brothers' 52nd Place Tract, a new subdivision lying between 52nd and 53rd Sts., South Park Ave and McKinley Ave. Referred to Streets and Boulevards Committee Regulating Billboards; draft of an ordinance amending Section 12 of Ordinance No. 20,000 (New Series) known as the license ordinance. This ordinance relates to the license on billboards and advertising signboards and requires a quarterly license of one fourth of a cent for each square foot of the front surface area of billboards and advertising signboards. This is the license provision which was passed upon favorably by the Superior Court of this county about three years ago and which was in force prior to the present ordinance which bases the license upon the amount of gross receipts. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Redondo Railway Ordered to Stop Operating Cars; Council instructed the City Clerk to order the Los Angeles and Redondo Railway company to stop forthwith the operation of all cars north of Jefferson street, inasmuch as that company is operating its cars on said street without legal right, and the company has had more than sufficient opportunity to obtain the necessary franchise along city streets.

Safety Stations; Board of Public Works requested to advise the Council as to the advisability of the erection of safety stations at the Temple Block and the junction of Main, Spring and Ninth Sts.

Seats on Hill Street; Park Com. requested permission to place seats on Hill St. opposite Central Park. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Sewer Right of Way; perpetual easement and right of way for sanitary and storm sewer purposes, from the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, over a portion of Lot 5, Blk 1, Knob Hill Tract. Accepted.

Street Displays of Merchandise; recommendation of the Chief of Police relative to amending Ordinance No. 19,380 N. S., prohibiting the displaying of merchandise on public sidewalks in a certain district, to include East Fifth St. to Central Ave. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Street Speaking; draft of an ordinance amending Section 4 of Ordinance No. 20,534 (New Series) entitled, "An ordinance prohibiting the obstruction of public streets and regulating public meetings in public streets and parks," by adding to the district described in Section 4 the territory included between Main St. and the east side of Los Angeles St. and from the south side of 2nd St. to the north side of Arcadia St. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Store Department for City; draft of ord. creating a store dept. and regulating the purchase of materials and supplies. Considered and action deferred until Jan. 17. Ordinance abolishes the supply department as it has been conducted and puts it on a footing similar to the purchasing department of railroads and corporations. The storeroom is to be located in the new annex when it is completed.

Tax Protests; claim of stockholders of the Merchants National Bank for a refund of $1,260.98, paid under protest. Also claim of stockholders of 1st Nat. Bank for refund of $2,206 taxes, paid under protest. Ref. to City Atty.

Taxicabs; ord. regulating taxicabs. Deferred until Jan. 17.

Theatre Billboards; pet. from Pantages Theatre et al, for permission to maintain 2 theatre bulletins in front of theatre. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Tract No. 712; pet. from Jennie Gassen, for quit claim deed to Lots 1, 2 3 and 4 Tract No. 712. Ref. to City Atty. for ord.

To Advertise Los Angeles as a Manufacturing Center; message from Mayor enclosing resolution passed by Chamber of Commerce recommending the establishment of a Manufacturers' Commission for the purpose of collecting information in regard to the advantages of Los Angeles as a manufacturing center, to distribute this information in an effort to induce manufacturers to establish their plants here. Ref. to Public Welfare Com.

Wharf Franchise Wanted; pet. from John A. Anderson, making application for a wharf franchise in the outer harbor at San Pedro. Ref. to Harbor Committee and Harbor Commission.

BUILDING PERMITS

From Jan. 1st to Jan. 6th, 1911, inclusive, J. J. Backus, Chief Inspector of Buildings issued 204 permits, amounting to $271,023, which are classed as follows:

Class C	5	$ 63,425
Class D, 1 story frame.	69	106,902
Class D, 1½ story.....	3	5,962
Class D, 2 story	15	66,291
Sheds, Barns (frame)..	40	6,557
Foundations only	1	500
Brick Alterations	15	4,150
Frame Alterations	56	17,236
Grand total 204		$271,023

Comparisons with last year:
From Jan. 1st to Jan. 6th, 1910, inclusive..121 $229,903

Compiled by Mark C. Cohn, Chief Clerk.

THE HIT-IN-THE-JAW HINT

For a generation the American people have been insisting that United States Senators should be elected by direct vote of the people.

Four times the lower House of Congress has adopted a resolution to submit a constitutional amendment to the states, that shall take the election of Senators out of the legislatures, and provide for their election by direct vote.

Four times has the directly interested Senate, whose concurrence is necessary, refused or neglected to join with the House in submitting this amendment.

But two-thirds of the legislatures of the states, by resolution, can compel Congress to call a constitutional convention to prepare any amendment that may be advocated. This means the legislatures of thirty-one states. Twenty-seven legislatures have adopted resolutions petitioning for a convention to change the method of electing United States Senators, and two states have made formal demand that such convention be called, twenty-nine states in all, two less than the necessary two-thirds. There is good reason to believe that through trickery, some of those resolutions are incorrectly drawn, but it is quite evident that before the winter is over, thirty-one states will in proper form have petitioned for the convention to amend the Constitution so that the people shall elect United State Senators.

And now comes word from Washington that the Senate judiciary committee intends after the holiday recess to recommend the adoption of a joint resolution to amend the Constitution so that United States Senators shall be elected by direct vote.

This means that the amendment will be submitted to the states, for the House, after going on record four times for such an amendment will unquestionably concur. That the amendment will be promptly ratified by the states goes without saying.

It is evident, too, that the Senate is capable of taking a him—when hit on the jaw.—San Francisco Star.

TREMENDOUS POWER IN THE HANDS OF TWELVE MEN

An American authority on finance says one-third of the total wealth of the country and four-fifths of all the vital corporate capital of the Nation have passed into the control or under the domination of less than a dozen men.

And the supremacy of J. P. Morgan in Wall Street is undisputed, so to a certain degree he may be said to wield the vast power of that concentration of wealth in a dozen pairs of hands.

The ownership and control of the capital in question relates to industrial, transportation and banking interests, and carries with it immense political power, such as was exerted successfully in the passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill.

So the great question is forced upon The People, whether Wall Street is to control the Government or the Government is to control Wall Street.

And if the multitude realized how tremendous a power money has become in the Government of the Nation, the States, counties, cities and towns, they would marvel greatly and say things must be changed.—Sacramento Bee.

CHARLES FARWELL EDSON TO ADDRESS CITY CLUB TODAY

At the regular weekly luncheon of the City Club to be held at the Westminster Hotel today (Saturday), at 12:15 p. m., Charles Farwell Edson will speak on "Teaching a City." Mr. Edson will present the plan of the St. Paul Institute of Arts, with other suggestions as to how public interest in the affairs of the city may be aroused and information be given to the people.

THE WRONG BASIS

We suppose it is a matter for congratulation that Mr. Carnegie has given $11,500,000 to fight for peace and Mr. Rockefeller another $10,000,000 to his favorite university. Peace and learning are both needed and their promotion requires money. But we go with the Socialists so far as to think that neither permanent peace nor the most useful learning is likely to be had while conditions of unfair privilege make possible the accumulation in private hands of fortunes so swollen that even frantic giving to conventional works of benevolence does not sensibly diminish their redundancy.—Boston Common.

"Better put that hammock up a little higher," said the woman. "No," replied the man. "It's high enough. If I want to fall any further I'll get in an aeroplane."—Yonkers Statesman.

BANK CLEARINGS

Los Angeles bank clearings from Jan. 4th to 10th, inclusive, showing comparison with corresponding weeks of 1910 and 1909:

	1911	1910	1909
Jan. 4	$ 4,188,085.93	$ 3,166,721.24	$ 2,264,454.45
Jan. 5	3,361,498.66	2,386,956.45	1,911,085.65
Jan. 6	2,773,604.84	2,125,664.63	1,732,642.98
Jan. 7	2,817,628 91	2,132,863.70	1,733,242.24
Jan. 9	3,096,111.09	2,439,629.79	1,903,337.40
Jan. 10	2,832,848.45	2,455,134.57	2,368,532.79
Total	$19,069,777.88	$14,706,970.38	$11,913,295.51

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.
Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

. . . DIRECTORY . . .

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

APARTMENTS

THE ST. REGIS, Housekeeping 237 S. Flower. A7336; Main 2290

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS

ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DRY GOODS

VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

EXCURSIONS

BALLOON ROUTE, L. A. Pac. Co. Station, Hill St., bet. 4th and 5th. 10355; Broadway 4000.

MEN'S FURNISHINGS

HARRIS & FRANK, 437 43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS

UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

PIANOS AND ORGANS

GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

PURITAS DISTILLED WATER

LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. Phones Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191.

REAL ESTATE

MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT

BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING

BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Pacific Outlook
LaFollette's Weekly $1.50 Per Year

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT-SPEED-SAFETY

Mt. Lowe

The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

311 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 4 Los Angeles, California, January 21, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

AN INCORPORATED CONSPIRACY

Nothing more fundamental or far-reaching has ever come before the Supreme Court of the United States than the issues involved in the American Tobacco and Standard Oil cases. If the Washington correspondents have sensed the essential issue aright it is this: It cannot have been the purpose of Congress, as it is not within its province, to strip wealth of the power that is inherent in wealth. A corporation is a person and legislation cannot limit the amount of wealth that any person may acquire or the power that it may yield. If one such person possess himself of all the flouring mills in the country no law can restrain the power of that person to fix the price of the bread that the people shall eat. If one such person shall acquire ownership of all the packing houses the law cannot limit that person's power to fix the price which must be paid for meat, and so on until all the means of production and all the means of distribution shall have been subjugated by a few artificial persons with neither bodies to be kicked nor souls to be damned.

It is conceded by the defendants that an association of corporations having for its object the monopolization of any commodity would be unlawful, that an association of individuals having the same object in view might be prosecuted as a conspiracy in restraint of trade, but if a corporation own these subsidiary corporations, if the conspirators incorporate themselves into a "person" they are beyond the reach of law and may restrain trade to their hearts' desire and commit no wrong.

It is fortunate for the nation and the world that this specific issue has, in such simple terms, come before the highest court in Christendom. This is not saying that the supreme court will decide the issue aright. If it follow precedents it will doubtless render a wrong decision, but the sentiment of civilization will not render a wrong decision. That sentiment will go straight to the heart of the matter and, soon or late, it will fetch the supreme court of the United States to its way of thinking.

The issue is simple. Therefore the writer of this may venture to determine it. There are two sorts of persons, natural and artificial. God made the first, man the second. They are not the same and should not have the same status under the law. The law may not limit the strength of the arm of a natural person, his power of mind, his ambition to acquire, the amount of wealth he shall accumulate if he do it honestly, but the law may, nay must, limit the power of the artificial person wherever and however the public welfare requires limitation. It may not only limit its activities, its capitalization, its jurisdicton, its purposes, but the law may blot it out, wind up its affairs and burn its charter in the court house yard if the general welfare require it, and the general welfare does require that these over-grown holding corporations, posing as persons, be dissolved and their holdings distributed. May we venture to hope that the supreme court of the United States will do this and do it now? When Stephen J. Field wrote the decision that affirmed that the Southern Pacific Company is a negro, and entitled to the protection of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, he blundered. It is time that decision were reversed. A conspiracy must not be less than a conspiracy because the conspirators are incorporated for purposes of aggression and plunder.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager

C. D. WILLARD, A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing Editors

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

TO CALIFORNIA WEEKLY READERS:

Pacific Outlook announces that Mr. A. J. Pillsbury, former editor of the California Weekly, has joined the staff of this paper as associate contributing editor. Mr. Pillsbury will also continue in Pacific Outlook, "Political Table Talk, by the Watchman."

If you were a subscriber to the California Weekly at the time it suspended publication and will address a postal card to the Pacific Outlook, 311 E. 4th St., Los Angeles, requesting that it be substituted for the California Weekly, this publication will be sent to your address for the remainder of the unexpired subscription.

THE PEOPLE AND THE MOB

The opposition to the democratic institutions of initiative, referendum, recall and direct primary emanates either from the special interests in politics, whose control of affairs is threatened by the return of the people to power, or else from the conservative, slow-moving elements of the community, who are frightened at the thought of innovation, and who have honest doubts as to the legality and wisdom of such radical changes.

Argument is wasted when applied to those who fight the rule of the people because it will interfere with their business interests. For all such the steam roller is the best form of reply. But the other class, the conservatives, are always entitled to a hearing and an answer.

Back of all their arguments there is found an inherent distrust of the people and a dread of what they may do if power is placed directly in their hands, and this arises largely out of their ignorance of the nature of people when taken in the mass.

To most of them the words "People" and "Mob" are synonymous.

This confusion permeates our literature. Shakespeare nowhere offers a conception of the people as distinct from the mob. Wherever the masses enter the play, whether in Caesar, or Coriolanus, or Henry VI, or elsewhere they are the rabble, ignorant, passionate, unreasoning and dangerous. The same is true of the English novels even down to Charles Kingsley, who, in "Alton Locke," strove to present the case from the people's standpoint, but whose conception of them is widely different from ours.

It is not strange that the man of conservative tendencies should be ignorant of the people. He is usually well-to-do, and neither his business nor his private life takes him out among them. He is not adventurous by nature, nor of an enquiring turn of mind. Being comfortable himself, he sees no reason why he should worry about those that are not, and thus he is not only hopelessly ignorant of the real world about him, but he is also perfectly satisfied with himself. That forms a combination that it is pretty hard to break into.

There was an excuse for the mob of Shakespeare in the general illiteracy that prevailed among the common people of that epoch. Even down to the time of our grandfathers, the average day laborer could not read and write. In this day and generation illiteracy is wiped out, nearly every workingman reads the magazines, and there is scarcely a habitation in the whole city that does not take in some newspaper. The only place to find the good, old-fashioned brand of total ignorance is among these very conservatives, some of whom read nothing but the market reports and fall asleep right after a six-course dinner.

But we still have mobs and they occasionally do atrocious things. Very true. There is as great a gulf, however, between the mob and the people as there is between the individual and the people. Indeed, the distinction is much the same, for a mob is only an individual with many heads.

The people is made up of individuals and yet it has qualities that none of the individuals possess. It is a seeming paradox of a whole that is not made up of the sum of all its parts. Each individual has his weak spot. No man is perfectly moral and entirely free from prejudice. But it may be said of the people as a whole that they are moral and just and fairly wise. To illustrate: imagine the character of an individual in the form of a disc with holes here and there to represent delinquencies. Men are never exactly alike, and so the perforations of the disks show great variety of location. Now place a great number of these disks, each representing an individual, and the whole representing the people in mass, one above another in an even pile. There is absolutely no chance that any one hole can be traced through in a straight line from top to bottom. Thus are the faults of the individual lost when human beings are grouped. Each may have his own special interest, but they will not coincide with one another.

But the mob is a group of individuals with a common interest and that an ignoble one. It is conceivable that in a small community under conditions of extraordinary stress, the whole people might be transformed into a mob. Rudyard Kipling says that public opinion begins when there are ten people gathered together. At just what number is public opinion broad enough to be disinterested? The speculation is a curious one which we leave to our readers.

Mobs are necessarily short lived. The operations of direct legislation give time for thoughtful consideration before the vote is held. In that period the people would assert itself over the mob.

✣ ✣ ✣

BELIEVING LIARS

Who started this preposterous yarn that is now going the rounds of the Eastern press and occasionally shows up on California soil, that when the Llewellyn establishment was partially blown up Christmas morning, none of the Los Angeles papers ventured to tell about it? Sometimes the story is varied by the statement that only one of the papers dared to speak—said paper being the one that claims a monopoly of all the moral bravery of the town. Here on the Coast, where Los Angeles papers circulate freely, the story is varied again, appearing generally in the form that only one of our journals dared to comment editorially on the event.

We do not know who started this yarn but we can guess. It has some well-known ear-marks. As a matter of fact we believe that all the papers gave the explosion its full news value, and most of them illustrated it and gave editorial comment. Nobody was killed, and the damage was not very great, and there were no police developments—all of which made it only a "one-day story." Except in the Times. Like the people in songs the Times "loves to linger." Dickens' Mr. Smangle declared that tobacco was board and lodging to him; and the Times could with truth assert that dynamite outrages are subscriptions and advertising to it. The more labor troubles we have, the more that paper prospers; so it is no wonder that it figures out every possible way to hound the labor unions and drive them to do their worst. And no wonder that it dilates to the fullest every scrap of news that helps to that end.

But how does its yarn that it is the only paper that dares give the news on such matters get circulation and acceptance when the other papers are at hand presenting a visible refutation of the story? How is it that people are so ready to believe habitual liars? Everybody knows that the Times has not a rag of conscience in the matter of veracity, and yet it frequently manages to get itself believed. There ought to be a league started of people who will swear never to believe anything in that paper unless they find it told somewhere else.

The rest of the world has heard about the bravery of the Times, chiefly from the Times itself, until it has come to accept the story through the mere force of reiteration. We do not quarrel with that. People who enjoy sitting around on powder barrels smoking and dropping matches are entitled to all the reputation they can get out of it on the score of bravery. But is it necessary to the Times' case to make out that everybody else in this community is a coward? That seems to us to be rather overplaying the hand.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE RAILROADS AND THE PEOPLE

In his article on "The Railroads and the People," in the January Atlantic, President E. P. Ripley, of the Santa Fe, did himself infinite credit. His fragmentary utterances theretofore had caused the public mind to conceive of him as being a man with a perpetual grouch. The article in question will go far toward removing that impression and establishing for him a reputation for being a reasonable person quite capable of forming a restrained and rational judgment. It is within bounds to characterize President Ripley's article as the best exposition in recent years of the railroad side of the railroad question.

And yet how far, how very far removed, is President Ripley's view from the view that must eventually obtain in this country? The best we can say for his effort is that it is a report of that progress which railroad management is making toward the establishment of justice between railroads and the people they serve. Compared with that Egyptian darkness which prevailed in railroad circles in the barbaric period of railroading, that long, long ago (a dozen or twenty years or such a matter), before railroad managers had eaten of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and so did not know that it was wrong to lie and to steal, to hold-up and to plunder, to debauch legislatures and put courts under mortgage to them, to rob their own stockholders and loot their own roads,—compared with the best railroad justifications of that stygian period this article from the pen of President Ripley is positively luminous.

Epitomized, his contentions are that the proper railroad policy is that which will promote the greatest happiness of the greatest number; that rates must be based on the value of the service rendered and not on its cost; that distance hauled may properly be disregarded; that railroads should be permitted to enter into reasonable agreements regarding rates; that the Interstate Commerce Commission should be given power to raise as well as to lower rates; that rates are now too low and never have been too high else traffic could not have grown as it has or industry thriven; that the profits derived by railroads should no more be limited by law than the profits derived from manufacturing or merchandising; that for every percent declared in dividends railroads should be permitted to earn another per cent to be invested in betterments; that past history of railroading in America makes it fairly evident that betterments made from earnings will not be capitalized and converted into mortgage on traffic enduring for half a century; that railroads will be under a moral obligation to refrain from so doing; that if the railroads have been in politics injuriously it was because the people elected blackmailers to office; that railroads all over the country are now trying hard to avoid the use of improper measures to influence legislation, in which effort the people should meet them half way.

Not all the above propositions can be separately considered within the limits of a single editorial, but only some of them. His standard of policy is false. The joy of a majority however great, is no justification for inflicting hardship upon a minority however small. The goal we seek is justice, not the greatest happiness to the greatest number. If rates be based on the value of the service rendered shall they absorb the full value, "all that the traffic will bear?" Shall they take half of it or one-fourth, or just enough less than the whole to permit traffic to move? These questions sufficiently show the absurdity of the Ripley contention. The value of the service is an element in rate-making, but so are cost of service, physical valuation, distance, a full haul back or empty, volume of traffic, competition, cost of maintenance and operation, the treating of a whole line over mountain and plain as a whole or as separable into topographical units. All these elements, and others, enter into rate-making. Rate-making as certainly involves the power to tax as does tariff-making and for that reason, rates, in their final form, whatever latitude may be allowed to railroads in initiatory work, must be made by government and by no other power than government. Rate-making is an act of sovereigntv not to be delegated to traffic managers.

That railroads should be permitted, where possible without oppression, to earn their non-remunerative betterments is sound doctrine. The people have not objected to their so doing and will not, provided that such betterments be not capitalized as they have been to the extent of hundreds of millions. They are doing it now. The Southern Pacific Company has just invested $15,000,000 of surplus earnings in the bonds of the San Francisco Terminal Company, a subsidiary corporation, and purposes so to invest $35,000,000 more, a free gift from the people converted into a mortgage on the people to draw interest for fifty years and then to be extracted again. The attempt to inflict such a wrong should be made a felony and the only way to prevent such injustice is publicly to regulate the financing of all public service corporations.

That railroads were forced into politics through blackmailers is not true. Such incidents as have taken place served as an excuse, but never as a justification. Railroads went into politics to get things they wanted, mainly things they ought not to have, and they remained in politics to shirk burdens and obtain privileges and immunities. If they are going out it is because they are being kicked out, and the only way to keep them out is to keep a kicking.

But President Ripley is right when he declares that the people should give the railroads, not what they deserve, (which would be a sound drubbing) but a square deal.

Vengeance is the Lord's, and that many a railroad manager will catch hades in due season at the hands of properly constituted authorities is the pious hope of those who wish to see justice vindicated elsewhere if not here. This is no time for pottering over reprisals. The thing to do is to establish justice, a consummation that can be much facilitated if President Ripley and his confreres will abandon a few of their archaic contentions such as that the profits of public service corporation are no more to be regulated than profits acquired in private business, that the value of the service is the sole measure of rates and that American railroad managers have been under conviction for sin, are born again and purged of all iniquity. 'Taint so.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE PAINTED WOMAN'S SNEER

With the beginning of the year the "California Weekly" of San Francisco suspended publication. It was established by a number of patriotic citizens of California, to aid in the great struggle for the political freedom of the state. It did not pay expenses—papers of that order rarely can be made self-supporting—and when the amount subscribed had been spent, the paper said farewell to its readers. It could do this with the better grace, because the chief purpose of its existence had been attained.

A recent number of the Argonaut of San Francisco contains an editorial brutally headed "By an Open Grave," in which it gloats with sneering insolence over the death of the "California Weekly." It dwells upon the fact that it was assisted by a subsidy, as though that were a brand of dishonor, and cynically plays up the failure to pay expenses as an evidence of popular disfavor.

Now there is a little game that anybody with a foot rule and a few facts in his possession can play on either a daily or weekly paper, and the Argonaut is not exempt. The legitimate income for such publications has only two sources, advertising and subscriptions. The rates of both are well known, and the volume of circulation can readily be ascertained. A few processes of measurement and calculation, and you have gross income. Turning to the other side of the ledger, the printing bill is easily figured, and there is nothing mysterious or difficult about editorial expenses. In short, it is easily possible for one who is experienced in such matters to size up a periodical, and tell whether it is a making or a losing proposition—assuming its income to be honest.

Tried by these standards of square business the Argonaut is invariably landed in the red ink up to its neck. Its advertising patronage is limited, and its rates not high. Its circulation was once large for a local affair, for under the management of Pixley and of Hart it gained a national prestige. Most of that has fallen off, and its local sales are not by any means what they used to be. In these days it is read and liked only by the wealthy, reactionary class in and about San Francisco, and they do not run into numbers. Sales in Los Angeles have practically ceased, where once big packages were required. On the other hand, it is an expensive paper to publish, because it uses only high grade editorial work throughout. It gets the best writers—as to style and price—in San Francisco, and that is a city, by the way, where good writing has always been held in esteem. The make-up and typography of the paper are a joy to the eye of a printer, and the reader, even while he condemns its policies, finds himself pleased at the elegance of their presentment.

Yes, the painted woman is fair to look upon, and all the more deadly dangerous for that.

Now then, Argonaut, who pays your deficit of a thousand dollars a month? Without it, you would cease publication immediately, and we might perhaps be making remarks over your "Open Grave." You are a total and an ignominious "failure" as far as money-making goes, only, thanks to some "gentleman-friend," nobody finds it out—except the initiated who can go behind the scenes.

The men who put up to establish the California Weekly were all well-known, and their giving was no secret. Their purpose was honorable and totally unselfish. It did not mean a dollar of gain to any of them that there should be in California government by the people instead of government by the Southern Pacific. But who are the people that pay for the Argonaut, and why do they do it? That paper supports Southern Pacific and Calhoun political policies throughout, without a hair's breadth of deviation.

Shortly after the earthquake and fire, it was known that Mr. Hart was willing to sell the paper, and a group of men of San Francisco offered all it was worth and more. But just as the bargain was about concluded, it was sold out from under them, and the alleged owner was a man who had for years been editing Southern Pacific publications. The paper suddenly became a machine organ, reactionary, devoted to the railway's interest, the supporter of Calhoun. Its one departure from the stand-pat program was on the tariff; it favored revision downwards. By a curious coincidence, Herrin, ex-Republican boss of the State, is, and always has been, a low tariff Democrat. The Argonaut makes a specialty of frenzied opposition to the initiative, referendum and recall; and curiously again that is one of the few things on which Herrin is willing to come out in the open. He recently delivered a long screed on that subject before an Oregon college—duly reported in full in the Argonaut.

There you have the situation. The California Weekly is dispossessed and her goods and chattels are thrown out into the street. As she sits mourning, there passes by the brazen, painted woman of the town, flaunting the silk and jewels bought by the sale of her honor, who says, "You see where your foolish conscience has brought you. Come, be as I am, and prosper."

✣ ✣ ✣

THE EPILEPTIC COLONY IDEA

Recently a paragraph appeared in the news service from Sacramento stating that Senator N. W. Thompson, of Los Angeles, would introduce a bill appropriating $400,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of buildings for the accommodation of a colony of epileptics; that he had said that little can be done for epileptics except to take care of them and that, inasmuch as they can labor while not under seizure such colony, rightly located, should be nearly if not quite self-sustaining. It is always possible that an official may have been shockingly misquoted but if quoted correctly it is evident that there is a great deal about epilepsy that Senator Thompson does not know.

California's need for an epileptic colony is more pressing than for anything else in the institutional line, but the enterprise should not be undertaken under any misapprehension as to basic facts.

California's epileptics are scattered through all her institutions, a source of danger to others and of mortification and misery to themselves. Considerations for humanity demand that they be segregated into an institution of their own where they can be cared for and studied with all that intensity with which human maladies are being studied at the Rockefeller institute.

But the initial segregation into an institution of their own is relatively unimportant. They must be segregated and resegregated until scarcely a score of them are left together under common care. The aged and infirm must go by themselves, the adult chronic epileptics in varying degrees by themselves according to degree; the sane must be separated from the insane, the adult males from the adult females; children under adolescence from children in the adolescent stages; kindergarteners from those of primary grades; the cottage system should characterize the entire enterprise with the exception of the insane and the imbecile of custodial grade who may be congregated to some extent. Sixty per cent should be lodged in single rooms or in dormitories accommodating four to six patients, which means that the cost of housing will run close to $750 per patient and that the cost of attendants will greatly exceed that of any other institution in the state.

Unless the whole enterprise is to prove unavailing the executive and medical staff must be as good as the world can afford with specialists to study, study, study, tirelessly, minutely, with all the appliances that science can afford and ingenuity contrive for, as yet, epilepsy is an unsolved problem. Care and training in self-control, diet, regularity of living, labor requiring skill and intellectual discipline, may ameliorate the sufferings of many and cure some, but the greatest need of all is to get hold of acute cases and subject them at once to almost an individual training and care.

No higher benevolence of a state institutional character is possible than the establishment of a state colony for epileptics, but if it be undertaken let it be undertaken right and with a full understanding of the nature and probable cost of the undertaking.

PRESS COMMENTS

Secretary Dickinson asks Congress for two or three aeroplanes, and in the next paragraph recommends that inefficient army officers be dropped.—Chicago Tribune.

One immediate effect of George W. Perkins' retirement from the house of J. P. Morgan & Co. is that he is being described as a philanthropist.—Springfield Republican.

In order to safeguard the Panama Canal it might be well for Uncle Sam to put San Francisco and New Orleans under bonds to keep the peace.—Wall Street Journal.

We shudder to think what the state of the British mind will be when the first German aeroplane crosses the channel.—Cleveland Leader.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By THE WATCHMAN

Are We Progressives False and Perfidious? Last week a splendid victory for a progressive Republicanism was won at Sacramento in the election of John D. Works to the United States Senate. On the score of the relative merits of the two candidates, Works and Spalding, few can have any misgivings through fear that the better man was not chosen. In the person of Judge Works we have a known and adequate quantity. In the person of Mr. Spalding we had an unknown and, judging from his up-state sponsors particularly, inadequate quantity. Assuredly the legislature made no mistake in selecting the known in preference to the unknown. So far as results are concerned, therefore, there can be no question, that the legislature elected the right man. But did the progressives stoop to conquer? Did true patriotism require that greater heed be paid to the method of the election than to the man elected? In ignoring the district provisions in the advisory statute did the progressives prove themselves lawless? Did they make it manifest that, confronted by an emergency, they are no more to be trusted than that political machine which has for its motto, "Take every trick, no matter how so that you get it?" It little consoles us that such questions are being asked and answered, injuriously to progressive policies, mainly by men who have no more political honor than so many Chinese pirates, for good men are asking the same questions, and with misgivings that do honor to their sincerity if not to their understandings. The brave way, now that the fighting is over and we may face the issue in calmness, is to face it squarely, think clearly and abide the verdict whether it be for us or against us, else the victory won on Tuesday of last week may prove to have been dearly bought.

Were the District Provisions Law? Manifestly the legislators disregarded the district provisions in that paragraph in the direct primary law which deals with the advisory vote for United States senator else they must have elected A. G. Spalding on first ballot. There cannot be two opinions about that. Was this ignoring of those provisions a manifestation of the spirit of lawless disregard for inconvenient statutes or was it the repudiation by one legislature of an act of usurpation of authority on the part of a previous legislature? May one legislature assume to bind the minds and predirect the mental processes of the legislature that succeeds it? May one legislature prescribe how the members of a succeeding legislature shall be "advised" as to the weight they shall accord the decision of a court, the power of the press, the sanction of an oath or affirmation, the degree of reverential regard piously to be entertained for the prayer of the chaplain of either chamber? Manifestly not. Then by what shadow of right may one legislature assume to dictate to another how it shall be "advised" in relation to expressions of public sentiment, whether by districts, by the state at large, by the quality of the vote cast, by its paucity or its generality, its preponderance or its being in equilibrium? The Watchman has, from the opening of this discussion, held to the doctrine that the district provisions in the "advisory" law were beyond the power of one legislature to bind another and were therefore null, void and of no effect, the statute to be read as though such provisions were not in it. The legislators voting for Judge Works appear to have taken this view and, in so doing,—in so ignoring such district provisions in such statute,—they transgressed no law, violated no obligation, legal, political or moral. Rather did they bravely vindicate their rights as legislators to legislate in freedom, in responsibility to their own consciences, in answerability to their constituents and to the state rather than in taking refuge behind a shield set up for them by a previous legislature injuriously manipulated in a special interest. Had those men allowed themselves to be betrayed into voting for an unfit man for United States Senator, or for a candidate of whose fitness they did not feel assured, they would have abdicated a high legislative function and, through their subserviency earned the contempt of all men who dare to be free. These declarations are true and every friend to truth should find pleasure in vindicating the conduct of our free legislators at all times and in all places to the end that the oft repeated charge of perfidy made against the progressives in the legislature may be disproved and the cause of political progress be saved from harm.

What of the Future of the "Advisory" Law? Upon the advisory statute as it is we shall turn our backs at this session of the legislature. What ought the legislature to do? In The Watchman's opinion it ought not to attempt to make mandatory that which constitutionally can be advisory only. It ought not to seek to do by indirection what it cannot lawfully do directly. Any law that is enacted should be for the purpose set forth in the present statute, to wit: "An advisory vote for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment of the voters in their respective senatorial and assembly districts in the respective parties," but to avoid that uncertainty which must attach to an advisory vote, where no one of many candidates receives a greatly predominating share of the suffrages of the people, the two candidates receiving the highest vote at the primary election should have their names placed upon the ballot at the general election to the end that the people of the state may "advise" the legislators which of these two is preferred for senatorial honors. If the result be decisive as to one of the candidates the legislators will accept the popular verdict as being a moral mandate from the people. If the vote be close the legislators will divide about as the people divided and proceed to fulfill their constitutional prerogative of electing a candidate of their own choice. And unless all signs fail of foreshadowing the event, by the time another United States senator is to be elected in California we shall be voting on a constitutional amendment, submitted by the United States Senate itself, providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people. This will end our present troubles.

Some Party Worriments For instance the patriotic editor of the esteemed San Francisco Argonaut, the exuberance of whose urbanity is at all times much mitigated by the spirit of malice, is greatly worried through fear that the adoption, by California, of the Oregon primary plan may result in electing Democrats to office in a Republican state, as it has done in Oregon. Of course that would be terrible to contemplate, and yet the sorrow of it, in Oregon, has been much assuaged by the consciousness that, after all, the people of Oregon elected the men they wanted both for governor and for United States senators, albeit they were Democrats elected by Republicans in a Republican state. Under the system of government by special interests for special interests, of which the Argonaut is so able and consistent an advocate, (a system the most fundamental principle of which is that the popular will must be subjugated and negatived at all times up to the verge of popular revolution), the fact that the people of Oregon elected whom they wished to elect is conclusive evidence that their scheme of nomination and election is and must be wholly undesirable. But the people of Oregon have not grown restive under the existing order and the people of California will not, although hack politicians and special interests may. The Watchman does not favor placing legislators under bond to abide the popular will when it has been expressed. He is of the opinion that the full and free expression of that will, when there is such a will, will meet all requirements. When there is no such will to be expressed then the legislators should be left free to do representatively what the people do not care to do directly. Hence statements numbered 1, 2, 3, etc., are superfluous and needlessly tie the hands of legislators per adventure. In other words, suppose that betwixt the primary and the assembling of the legislature some successful Lorimer were responsibly accused, indicted and, in the public mind, convicted of the wrongful use of money in procuring his nomination, must legislators who had pledged themselves in advance to abide the result of the advisory vote still abide it notwithstanding the injurious exposures? Let us not go farther than we need to. It is essential only that the people have a pronounced preference for a particular candidate for senatorial honors and the ability to make that preference known. The "mortal cinch" is for bronchos, not men.

Party Disintegration Not Viewed With Joy In our rebellion against subserviency to party it will not be well for us to react to the extent of inviting party disintegration. That way lies government by faction, minority government with a dismembered majority agreeing in nothing except hostility to the faction in power. That makes also for instability and lack of continuity of policy. We must cling to the majority principle in government or eventually take our place in that brotherhood of malcontent republics which now embraces Central and South America or, if not so bad as that, then range ourselves side by side with those quasi-popular governments of continental Europe that are held together by coalitions of the most discordant elements. The most serious defect in our direct primary law is that it permits nomination by small pluralities. That is unsound. If suffered to endure it will make mischief. Some reasonable percentage should be placed upon the minority that can nominate. If we cannot secure the nomination of our first choice then, in the interests of stability and party integrity and as a safeguard against government by faction, we must make a virtue of the necessity and by some form of preferential voting make our second or our third choice our first. The "Will of the People," means the will of the effective majority of the people and if we preserve government by majority we shall preserve government by the majority party and that will mean stable government and free government, too, if we take care to make party government as representative as other government. We must have liberty, but it must be a regulated and tolerant liberty and not a liberty of faction and caprice.

Reconstruction of the Federal Brigade Nothing else contained in the keynote address of Judge Works impressed The Watchman quite as favorably as his declaration that he would do all he can to purge the federal brigade in California from all Southern Pacific taint. The federal brigade in California has been a humiliation to the state. Scarcely a member of it but was a Southern Pacifican before he was a Californian and all during Roosevelt's presidency that brigade was openly or covertly opposed to Roosevelt and the Roosevelt policies. The members of it were and are reactionaries almost to a man. They have worked hand in glove with Herrin in state politics and in national. There needs to be a first class "clear'n out" in that brigade both in the interests of the federal administration and in the interests of California. In so far as President Taft has appeared to be reactionary he has had the support of the federal brigade in California, but in so far as he has stood for the Roosevelt policies in spirit and truth there has been throughout that brigade little response to his leadership. Ballingerism has been good enough for them. How Judge Works will get on with his benign and oleaginous colleague remains to be seen. If insurgency gain the whip hand so that to be an insurgent is the way to "get things" for his state Judge Works will find his brand of insurgency tame and tasteless compared with that of the senior senator. Otherwise it will be otherwise. Let him beware of treacle and pin his faith to the riot act.

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

THE DATA for this department is supplied from the statistical bureau of the Municipal League of Los Angeles, but neither that organization nor any other has any control over, or is in any way responsible for, the general policy of PACIFIC OUTLOOK.

Frequency of Charter Amendment: A bill has been introduced in the legislature submitting to the people at the next general election the repeal of the provision of the state constitution that forbids charter amendment oftener than once in two years. This is a very necessary change, applying particularly to the case of Los Angeles. As the matter now stands, and unless this repeal carries, we shall not be able to make any changes in our charter for four years. Through delays, more or less inevitable, we have come to the extreme edge of the legislative session. Under the law there is a large amount of red tape connected with the amendment of charters, and in the case of cities that have fall elections and that desire to double up the charter amendment vote with the regular poll, the date tends to move along each year until finally it falls within the two year limit and this forestalls change until four years have passed. The present law is utterly senseless, because it would be impossible for amendments to be adopted oftener than once in two years anyway as the Legislature, which must pass on all amendments, meets only at two year intervals.

Alice Willard Sollenberger: According to the "Survey," the best authority on the American tramp, since "Josiah Flynt," whose true name was Josiah Flynt Willard, passed away, was Alice Willard Sollenberger of Philadelphia, who died in that city last month. Ernest P. Bicknell tells in a recent number of the "Survey" how Mrs. Sollenberger, then Miss Alice Willard, came to study the tramp and his ways. She was for a number of years in charge of the department of Vagrant Men in the Associated Charities of Chicago—a most singular line of work for a young woman whom he describes as "cheerful, attractive, fun-loving and wholly normal." As Chicago is the general center for the tramp industry of the United States, and as Miss Willard had, so the article states, a "confidence impelling power" together with a keen sense of truth, and as she made a business, through a series of years, of keeping thorough records of her work, it is not strange that she became a recognized authority. At the time of her death Mrs. Sollenberger was just finishing a book on the American tramp written for the Sage Foundation. Mrs. Alice Willard Sollenberger was a sister of C. D. Willard of the Pacific Outlook.

Disposal of City's Dead: Advocates of cremation may have the best of the argument, but it will take the better part of a century to bring everybody to their way of thinking. In the meantime what is to be done with the dead of the great cities, for whom increasing areas of land must be reserved—and wasted? Mr. Carlton Strong, a Pittsburg architect, claims that they can be best cared for in huge sepulchres, above ground. He has designed a building, as an example of what can be done, that will hold 10,000 bodies, and that occupies a piece of ground 200 feet square. This would take care of the dead for a city the size of Los Angeles for a little over two years. Mr. Strong says that such a structure could be made of great architectural beauty and of lasting materials at a cost to the families using it for interment less than burial lots in an ordinary cemetery. It would of course be absolutely sanitary, as the receptacles could be hermetically sealed. The only possible danger on that score might be from earthquakes.

The Fence That Conveyed a Moral: When President Taft met President Diaz at El Paso the spot selected for the event was on the borderline between the two countries, for it was a tradition in both that the president should not leave his national soil. Now it happened that this particular place was in the slum district that lies partly in El Paso and partly in Paso del Norte on the Mexican side. It was a filthy, noisome and altogether impossible neighborhood, and it would never do for a background to so historic an event. What was to be done? Easy enough. Build some high fences to hide the horror. It was done—by the local committee of management—and the sensibilities of two great men escaped being disturbed. But the slum was still there, and is still there. That is very like the way we have treated the slum and sundry other evils in our big cities.

Report on Telephone Rates: The public utilities committee of the Chicago council has for some time had under consideration a request from the telephone company (Bell system) that it be allowed to increase its rate, claiming that it was nearly a million dollars short in its income of the amount needed to pay fair dividends on a just capitalization. The committee employed the leading expert of the Wisconsin Utilities Commission to give a report on the question. He finds that the alleged assets are ten per cent too high, that part of the income is paid to a subsidiary company without adequate return, and that even accepting the company's own figures it is paying 8 per cent dividends. He recommends a reduction instead of an increase.

Automobile Smoke: All European cities and New York, Boston and many American cities now have ordinances forbidding drivers of automobiles to poison the air of streets with fumes. A well run machine in proper order gives out no fumes that will trouble anyone, but carelessness on the part of the driver or certain kinds of disarrangement in the machinery will cause an automobile to throw out a villainous, blue smoke that is dangerous to inhale and is, the medical people tell us, a frequent cause of throat trouble. The attention of health authorities should be directed to this matter.

Segregation of Races: There have been so many rows in Baltimore over negroes moving into white neighborhoods that the city has adopted an ordinance forbidding whites to move into a block a majority of whose occupants are colored, and forbidding negroes to move into a block the majority of whose occupants are white. The legality of this law is disputed, and will presently be tried out in the courts.

A Woman Mayor: The town of Oldham in Lancashire, England, has elected a woman mayor, Mrs. Chas. E. Lees, who is held in high esteem locally for her benefactions and for her practical work in education and in civic improvement. She gave 11 acres of land in the city for a playground and was instrumental in securing playgrounds and parks in all the congested regions.

At 50 Degrees Below Zero: Fire fighting in Alaska is not the midsummer picnic that it is in Southern California. Nine buildings were recently destroyed at Fairbanks in the northern territory, and the fight against the fire was waged with the thermometer at 50 degrees below zero. The water froze before it could be thrown on the flames. Many of the firemen suffered amputation of toes and fingers.

Urban Population Figures: More than 30 per cent of the 92,000,000 of the people of this country live in cities of 25,000 or more. There are 228 cities of that class, of which 19 have a population in excess of a quarter of a million, and fifty in excess of 100,000. The census of smaller cities has not been completed yet, but it will probably show about 40 per cent of the total population are in cities of 8000 or over.

Duluth Wants Commission: The joint committee of city council and Chamber of Commerce of Duluth, appointed to investigate the merits of the commission plan, have reported strongly in favor of the change, on the score of economy, efficiency and the abolition of cheap politics.

State Housing Law: Indiana has tackled the slum question as a state instead of waiting for municipalities to act upon it as a local issue. An investigation made in advance of the passage of the law showed that nearly every city in the state had slum areas with very bad hygienic conditions. It is no different from other states in that matter, however.

Where Our Roads Are to Run: State Road-builder Ellery says that the primary purpose of the $18,000,000 act is to supply the state with two main highways, one through the San Joaquin and the other along the coast connecting the county seats of all the counties through which they pass.

Road Building in Maryland: Under a loan of $5,000,000 Maryland is building about 400 miles of roads. Contracts have been let for 190 miles, and about 90 miles have been accepted. The work of the state has greatly stimulated road work by the counties.

National Highway System: John Brisben Walker, former editor of the Cosmopolitan, is agitating for a system of national highways from Atlantic to Pacific and from the Gulf to Seattle. Los Angeles is included in his plan. He thinks they should be built of cement.

Zoolessness Ceases: For a long time Boston has been the only large city in the country without a "zoo." An appropriation of $119,000 has been provided in this year's budget to provide an aquarium and a zoological garden for that city.

Spotless-town in Texas: Hubbard, Texas, is a city of 2000 population whose Mayor claims that it is the cleanest in the country. Last year he offered a prize of $1000 to anyone who would find a fly in the city—and no takers.

Forbids Re-election: Topeka, Kansas, is under the commission form of government. Its present mayor is urging the adoption of an amendment extending the term of commissioners to four years and forbidding their re-election.

London "Bobbies": The police force of London costs about $8,000,000 a year to maintain and includes 18,657 men.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

Semi-Annual Clearance

Now Going On

THIS sale is inaugurated to quickly dispose of all broken lines and odds and ends at greatly reduced prices before invoicing.

If you have been waiting for bargains, now is the time to secure them throughout the store. Especial mention is made of

Reduced Prices on Suits, Dresses and Coats

Savings range from ¼ to ½ less

FURS ⅓ LESS

MAIN 3540 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
Citizens Bank Building

A New Order of Things

California Is Being Born Again—Old Leaders Giving Way to the New.

By the Doorkeeper

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 17.

The political atmosphere in Sacramento was never before quite so clear as now. One fond of witnessing a fight from a safe vantage point at a press desk is apt to be disappointed this year. There will be no fight, but there will be seen some punishment.

"We are going to get what we want too easily to suit me," said one of the militant "progressive" Senators to me an hour or two after the election of Judge Works to the United States Senate. "I felt like getting in and fighting. I came here hoping to make a record as a belligerent insurgent. But I find that things are going right so surely that it threatens to become monotonous—except for the work involved."

Job Holders Trembling

In his pointed address to the joint legislature on the occasion of the formal ratification of the vote which overwhelmed him into the United States Congress, Senator-elect Works caused the old-line "regulars" like Wolfe and Wright to sit back and do some hard thinking. Judge Works made it very plain that he intended to co-operate with Governor Johnson in the latter's determination to "kick the Southern Pacific out of politics in California."

"The Governor of this state has declared his intention of casting out all of these interests and influences from offices of this state," said he. "Precisely the same thing should be done with respect to the federal offices in this state. They are infested and corrupted by the servants of the interests. For one it is my purpose to aid Governor Johnson in his efforts to redeem this great state of ours from corrupt politics and to make merit and competency alone the basis of appointments to office, and I will do everything in my power to establish this same standard that he has raised, in the making of federal appointments, and to root out of the public service men who have secured their places as a reward for helping to degrade and pollute the politics of the state."

During the delivery of the early portions of the address Senator Wolfe, machine leader from San Francisco, beamed. When Judge Works reached what he had to say about federal patronage Wolfe unbeamed. His face was sufficient index to his thoughts. Perhaps visions of General George Stone, Cornelius Pendleton and other faithful adherents of the old regime gazing hungrily through the want ad columns of the newspapers flitted before him. Perhaps he fancied he already heard the snap and roaring crash following the tumbling of the pillars of the decaying structure built up during long years of political debauchery. At any rate, whatever his fancy conjured within the range of his eyes and his ears, he looked as I can easily imagine Belshazzar looked in that fateful moment when the mysterious mural decoration appeared. He was reading the handwriting on the wall—but he needed no interpreter. The machine has learned the sound of a death-knell.

Character of Committees

The personnel of the standing committees appointed by Lieutenant-Governor Wallace in the Senate and Speaker Hewitt in the Assembly is indicative of the spirit which actuates the official heads of both branches of the Legislature. The old leaders have not yet recovered from the stunning blow their cause has thereby received.

Much depends upon the make-up of committees. This point was brought out and emphasized during the campaign. With a committee the majority of which is inimical to progress a good measure, no matter how strongly it may be demanded by the people, may easily be done to death. Nothing but an insistent public clamor can save a bill unfavorably reported or emasculated by an unfriendly committee. One needs but to revert to the terrific struggle over the anti-racetrack gambling bill and the outrageous direct primary bill during the session two years ago to comprehend the great necessity for good committees, if the demands of the people are to be expeditiously granted.

Two years ago Senator Charles W. Bell of Pasadena, progressive Republican, was barred from the Republican caucus by the vote of the machine Senators. Abner Weed, about whose political career the least that is said the better, was appointed chairman of the important committee on public morals by Warren Porter, over whose record also we will draw the mantle of charity. This year President Wallace named Bell chairman of the committee on public morals, and Bell's associates elected him chairman of the body which repudiated him two years ago.

In the Assembly Speaker Hewitt willingly deferred to the wishes of the progressives and named Prescott F. Cogswell of El Monte chairman of the most important committee of the lower house, that on ways and means. Two years ago Cogswell was honored by Speaker Stanton by appointment to committees on the condition of town pumps, parking the capital lawn, or something of about equal importance. Assemblyman Cogswell is really one of the most valuable men in either house, and the honor conferred upon him is a perfect fit.

And so on, down the list, the most important committees are in the hands of men deemed by both presiding officers to be most highly qualified to perform the tasks allotted to them. This means progress. There will be no reaction in the thirty-ninth session.

Taking a Back Seat

It is highly edifying to note the way in which certain of the old leaders, in most cases legacies handed down by the previous Senate, are being divorced from the egotistical idea that they have inherited some sort of right to act as mentors and guardians of the freshman class. Hardly a week had elapsed before they realized that not only were their services in this direction not demanded by the exigencies of the occasion, no exigencies existing, but that in some cases they were actually being guyed—very gently and in a very gentlemanly and statesmanlike manner, it is true, but nevertheless guyed—by some of the 'tyroes." For example, there is Senator Leslie R. Hewitt, a green man—green in point of actual service only. The old leaders quit patronizing him before he had comfortably warmed his seat in the front row.

Two years ago Senator Hewitt, then city attorney of Los Angeles, was called to Sacramento to see that the charter amendments were put in shipshape. It was a great schooling for him. It did not take him long to "catch on." When he came back as Senator he knew pretty well what was expected of him, and he began his first day's work by living up to expectations.

And so with Senator Lee C. Gates. He emerged from the tyro stage in about three days. Senator Gates, by the way, made a tremendous hit with his speech nominating Judge Works for the United States Senate. It has been many years since such eloquence has been hard in either house. Even Senator Wolfe felt impelled to refer to him as a Daniel Webster. I believe this was one of the times when the machine war-horse was sincere. His words sounded like it. Gates logically and inevitably has become the floor leader of the progressives in the Senate. The other fellows won't try to fool with him. They recognize the real thing in a leader when they see it.

Propelling the Boot

To get back to the tragedy of the Southern Pacific: Governor Johnson is going down the line as rapidly as he can travel making good his promise to the people to kick the old machine out of politics in California. He has begun what undoubtedly will be the most complete and effective clean-up in the political history of any state. He means business. None of the machine henchmen now expect anything except complete annihilation of their forces, so far as they are subject to executive orders. The Governor evidently does not intend to stop until the last rat has been killed and all the holes plugged. Then he will destroy the nests, fumigate the places where they were located and put watch-dogs on guard.

Oh, it is a bully fight, just as he declared it would be when he was shooting about the state in his red automobile. And every day the faces of his supporters assume broader proportions on horizontal lines.

Railroad Regulation

The administration railroad regulation measure unquestionably will go through with no material alteration. It is even hinted that the railroad lawyers, realizing how futile their task would be, have abandoned the idea of making a fight against it. Its provisions have been discussed in the daily papers and doubtless are familiar to most readers of the Pacific Outlook.

Railroad regulation laws in the past have been ciphers because the railroad commission, intrusted with authority to see that such laws were executed, has played tiddledywinks and cashed pay checks rather than doing anything resembling actual work.

Things are different now. Of the three members of the commission two, Eshleman and Gordon, are regular work-eaters. The third, Loveland, is going to be good. And, too, the commission has a live wire in its secretary, Charles R. Detrick, and a man who knows the difference between a railroad tariff and a hotel bill of fare. There have been secretaries and commissioners who, if they were thus wise, never let anybody know it. And so, I say, the administration bill, enacted into law, will be inforced, and intelligently.

Yes, a new order of things political has been established in California. Not only has the dominant party been born again, but the State undergoeth travail.

LA FOLLETTE'S DELEGATE PLAN

Senator La Follette's proposal that Wisconsin shall elect delegates to national conventions by direct vote at the primaries and his recommendation that like steps be taken in every state has much to commend it. It ought to work out better than the Oregon plan of having each voter designate his personal choice for the presidency, which is likely to cause much confusion and eventually that almost every state would vote for a favorite son. In such event the situation would be just to the liking of the political manipulators and make easy running for almost any dark horse that the "interests" might want to put forward. Combinations that could not help but be detrimental to the whole people would have to be made in order to insure a nomination.

Possibly there also would be confusion under the La Follette plan, but the nation would have conventions made up of men who come directly empowered by the people and not picked out by those in power to do their bidding. It at least ought to give each party a convention where contests would be practically impossible and there would not be the spectacle of the "steam roller" as it was used in the last Republican convention in Chicago. It always has been the rule that soon as one faction discovered it was in control of the machinery it has unseated unfriendly delegations to make room for others who would vote according to orders. Under the La Follette plan it would be impossible to exclude entire state delegations to make room for others past, and even by the peerless Bryan, who secured his seat in the Chicago convention of 1896 as a member of a contesting delegation.—Los Angeles Herald.

"How do you distinguish the waiters from the guests in this cafe? Both wear full dress."

"Yes, but the waiters keep sober!"—Cleveland Leader.

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 128x128
Southern Pacific Switch
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.

REMOVAL SALE
Pianos and Player Pianos
Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player Piano this is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.
Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers
345-347 S. Spring St.

"The Wrong Mr. Wright"

You know those old catchwords for the man without another man nearby—to wit, "desolate," "unspeakably lonely," et al. Seek no further for their exemplification (six syllables—count 'em). Step this way, ladies and gentlemen, right into the Senate Chamber, State Capitol, Sacramento, Cal.; avoid the red screen before you and gaze up the central aisle, midway to the President's desk; and observe the lank and lurid form of Leroy A. Wright, the original "in wrong," now almost extinct, this specimen being the only known now in existence with exactly this coloration and contour. This, ladies and gentlemen, is the exemplification whereof we spoke; this is Unutterable Sadnesss in the flesh, the true species of Patience on a Monument, Smiling at Grief, Napoleon at St. Helena, Prometheus on the Rock, and Robison Crusoe, all in one and visible for the price of one admission.

Truly, 'tis a melancholy sight. Nothing more so, no, not even a Pinchot conservation picture of the umbrageous forest "after taking" the Walker forest cure, nor a Herpicide ad before the final spiral roofing of the dome of thought has curled its last farewell and Fate whispers "too, too late." The umbrageousness that here flowered a brief two years ago, flowers still, minus only the "ous," which makes the following lucid and simple algebraic formula: "umbrageousness minus 'ous' equals umbrage." That is the answer. Umbrage is left, and its name is Leroy A. Wright. Note the facile but unwilling smile, and scoff who can.

It all happened thusish, as Elbert Hubbard would say, if he had thought of it first: This man Wright was ranked as a performer at the beginning of the session of 1909, and at the end of the session he was still a performer, but just a rank or two ranker, than Porter, the original performer. He is the individual who suddenly decided that the Stetson Railroad Regulation hill was not exactly the sort of reform measure demanded by the State, and who consequently, at the eleventh hour, introduced a little substitute measure of his own, dashed off impromptu, so to speak (dashed off from San Francisco by deadhead special train, according to common belief) which should save the people from the impending disaster of the Stetson bill. This touching little effusion was accepted at once by the legislature, and subsequently was discovered to contain more bugs than now infest the executive mansion (To Let, terms reasonable).

A sigh at once arose from the progressive camp, similar in all respects to that one breathed by Bill Nye in the direction of Truthful James when Ah Sim laid down his right bower, "which the same Nye had dealt unto me." The progressives remarked in perfectly plain language that "this fellow is all Wright, he has handed us a bouquet of lemons, but we will make him feel like the duce of the clubbed before we get through with him," note the accent. Whereupon they went for the aforesaid lank and lurid form.

But they went a few moments too late. From Sacramento to San Diego is several drinks further than from Caminetti to high C, and the effect of this fact was that the true status of one L. A. Wright did not percolate to her perfumed shores quite soon enough to prevent him from getting his usual pass-age on the Southern Pacific to Sacramento for the session of 1911, this year of grace.

But how different this northward drift from those of old. How far more rapidly than in the days of yore the thermometer fell as Leroy A. Wright approached the capital. By the time he reached the Hotel Sacramento, Wright's form was shrouded in furs; when he took up the pen to register at the desk, Cook's hand shook less at the North Pole than his; when he laid down that pen, hoar frost lay on it. 'Twas a chilly day for the Wright family when Leroy A. came to town.

In olden tragedy, the strain was eased by the Comic Relief. Lear had his Tom-a'cold, Wright had his Spalding. For one glad hour the lobby throbbed as the old hero of the diamond, followed by his fans, struck out. But then they lit out, and Wright was left alone. Since then—well, take another glance up that central aisle, and see what you shall see. The wind-swept pine, the solitary captive, the grand and gloomy and peculiar, sadly arises and paws the ambient air (whatever in thunder that is) and seats himself again in silence, resuming where he left off the light luncheon he hourly partakes from the ends of his intensive moustache. Do these, his fellow tribunes, hear and heed? Men and brethren, in deepest confidence and on the deadest dead low-down, they do not. They do not give a tinker's damaged forceps what Mr. Wright may say, and sadly Mr. Wright, the same he knows it. Here, at least, we pause to lay the passing tribute of a tear upon his case; in justice we will say he has the nerve to go stolidly to the slaughter every time he sees a chance for immolation (good word: forgotten I had it). From the rusting wreck of the dead machine he plucks, now a broken spoke, anon a twisted rod, of parliamentary armament, and marches to the hopeless fray. But it is such lonesome, ah, how wearily, drearily, deadly lonesome work. Withdraw your eyes in charity, and let fall the veil. Honest, it's tough. Wright?—it is to laugh.

A STRAP HANGER ABROAD

The Los Angeles Express published recently under this heading, some observations of their special correspondent in Washington upon this serious nuisance to the public. The article follows:

The federal government, through its consular service, has been investigating the strap-hanger question. It finds that on the municipally-owned street car lines of Liverpool, Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds, Belfast, Marseilles, Brussels, Berlin and Moscow, all noted for the low fares charged the public and for the large profits turned into the various city treasuries, there are almost no strap-hangers. In fact, it is generally true that any conductor who permits his car to be overcrowded is subject to heavy punishment.

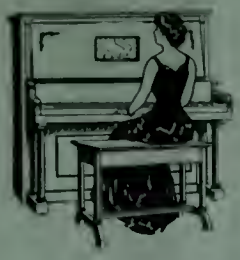
"There is almost entire absence of excessive overcrowding of street cars in this city," says the report from Liverpool, "even during the opening and closing business hours of the day, when traffic is heaviest. This problem has been met and satisfactorily dealt with by the local authorities, who have placed upon the various lines no less than 68 per cent additional cars during the rush hours. The conductors become proficient in estimating the number of persons who have boarded a car and, when filled, the gate is closed and no more passengers can enter until some of those on board get off."

"Standing in a street car is specifically prohibited," says the official report from Birmingham. "A few straps hang from the top of the cars, but only to assist passengers in getting on and off. The ordinances of the city permit the police to regulate the loading of cars, and passengers enter by the front door and leave by the rear. When a car has its quota the motorman draws a chain across the entrance and nobody is permitted to get on board until a seat is empty."

In Manchester there are no strap-hangers, and the number allowed in a car would certainly astonish an American. During rush hours and in hot weather, says Consul Howe, "four persons are permitted to stand in a smal car and six in a large car, after all the seats are occupied."

"In this city," reports Consul Chase of Leeds, "the street car service is augmented three times a day by adding about 30 per cent more cars than are in use during the rest of the time. Standing in the interior of the car is allowed to the extent of eight persons over the number of seats provided, namely 58. Straps are provided for such persons and for convenience in walking through the car."

Belfast, and in fact all the municipal lines in Ireland, have rules against crowding, although in some of the cars in Belfast, under certain circumstances, conductors are permitted to allow 16 persons to stand in a car after all the seats are filled. Overcrowding is prevented by the conductor shutting his door when the cars have a legal load.



In Marseilles the French are reported as having organized a splendid car service, and no people are permitted to stand in those portions of the cars where people are seated. But the cars have a large standing space in the open at the rear. Each car bears a plain placard stating how many passengers it may carry, and the consul says the straight fare anywhere within the city limits is 1.93 cents.

Consul-General Ethelbert, at Brussels, declares the entire absence of overcrowding. "It is strictly prohibited and does not occur," he reports. "The number of passengers a car may carry is restricted by the city regulations, enforced by the conductors and the police. These regulations delay traffic to a certain extent, but during rush hours sufficient extra cars are run to meet the demand."

In Berlin the regulations are also very strict. Police rules governing the number of seats and standing room spaces—rarely exceeding seven—must be posted in conspicuous places on the cars. On account of bad weather, or parades, or public festivities, or funerals, a few extra persons may be carried. Violations of these rules cost the violator $14.

"The superiority of the street car lines of Moscow is apparent to the casual visitor," says Consul-General Snodgrass, with some pride. "The cars seat 26 persons with standing room for eight passengers on the rear platform of the trailer. No one is permitted to remain standing in the cars or take advantage of the straps, nor can the front platform be occupied. Whenever a car has its quota of passengers the gates are closed, and any passenger who disregards the rules is handed over to a policeman."

FAIRBANKS

The World's Greatest Player-Piano Value $550 and Up

Here is a perfect player-piano. To fail to investigate it is to pass by your greatest opportunity. See it today.

Free Music Rolls

With every Fairbanks Player-Piano purchase we give a liberal supply of rolls and free exchange in our library of 20,000 selections.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO.

"The House of Musical Quality"

332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC.)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.

FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

ANNUAL REPORT OF GRAVES DISPENSARY

A report has just been issued on the Selwyn Emmett Graves Memorial Dispensary for the year ending October 1, 1910. This dispensary is a part of the State University and is located at 737 North Broadway.

The figures presented show that over 7000 different poor people who were sick were treated at this dispensary last year, and with returning patients the total figures exceeded 20,000.

"TEACHING A CITY"

CHARLES FARWELL EDSON ADDRESSES CITY CLUB—RECEPTION TO SENATOR-ELECT WORKS

Charles Farwell Edson, member of the City Planning Commission, addressed the City Club at its regular weekly luncheon, at the Hotel Westminster last Saturday, on the subject, "Teaching a City." The program included, also, an informal reception to Senator-Elect John D. Works, who made a short address.

Mr. Edson's address was as follows:

"Mr. President and gentlemen: "I appreciate that the fulfilment of ideas is always of more importance than the broaching of the idea itself, and you men of the City Club have seen the fruition of your hopes along certain lines in the election of a United States Senator by the people. You listened a week ago to one of the finest addresses that it has ever been my pleasure to listen to on 'The City.'

"Lawrence Hope says, in one of the masterpieces of the English language:

"'Men should be judged, not by their tint of skin,
The gods they serve, the vintage that they drink
Or by the way they fight, or love, or sin,
But by the quality of thought they think.'

"The city is made up of each individual in the city, each individual interest and each individual regard for the city and we have come in the latter part of the nineteenth century and the beginning of the twentieth century to realize the adaptability of the Populist ideas of the initiative, referendum and recall, yes, I say Populist. Now, all of you Populists here have these reforms, the initiative, referendum and recall, and must go the next step, which is the teaching of a city. If it had not been for you men here in Los Angeles who made this the first free city in America there would have been no free State of California.

What a Free City Means

"But in order to reap the benefits of this free city we must teach all men and women from all quarters of the earth what it means to live in a free city and what are the applications and duties of a citizen in a free city.

"Many of you doubtless know the Mayor appointed a City Planning Commission. Do any of you appreciate what that means to the city of Los Angeles? I have not seen any of you at our meetings and we have received no communication from anyone although we have asked for such from anyone who has any suggestions as to what Los Angeles should be when it has a population of two million people, which we should plan for now, not when we have the two million. That is part of the teaching of a city. What does a business corporation do when they want to enlarge their business or start into business? What did the steel corporation do, at Gary? It built a whole city just for the purpose of business.

Co-operation Lacking

"We have in this city here all the interests and instruments with which to work but there is no co-relation between the departments of the city. I don t mean the business part of the city; I mean the people who are working for the betterment of the city. You have the women's clubs, the Improvement Associations, the Symphony Orchestra and the public libraries all working their individual ways but there is no corporation,—nothing drawing them together. The city of Los Angeles has the most magnificent deep water harbor of the world if she would but use it. But there is already some discussion and some suggestions that the most valuable piece of frontage we have now, the Huntington fill, which is eighty-five acres of land right on the deep water, where, with little work and expenditure, you can bring the biggest vessels in the world right to the city's wharves,—that that most valuable piece of frontage shall be used by the fishermen to dry their nets and make a fisherman's wharf, so that when the cities of the world send their citizens and their emigrants, when those people come into Los Angeles they will see the fishermen drying their nets on the most valuable place. I don't think the city intends to do that but we hear a good deal of talk that this is a good thing to do.

Chicago's City Plan

"Chicago spent two years and seventy-five thousand dollars in cash in simply drawing up a plan for Greater Chicago. They sent experts all over the world to find out what could be done, and a plan has been completed that, in its working out, will take at least fifty years. They have followed along the lines of European cities which have made a success of city planning. If it is good business for a city which is as well established as Chicago to build itself anew, with a plan that is going to cost millions of dollars, isn't it an infinitely better proposition for us, who are in the making, to plan for the future so that when we are a larger city we will have everything laid out along the lines that we wish this city to grow?

Advertising as a Medium of Conserving the Public Health

"The Board of Health in Chicago has at its head a man who believes in the modern methods of advertising in order to teach the people of the city how to live. In the bulletin from the Board of Health of the city of Chicago for the week ended December 31, 1910, is a little line entitled, 'Just a Jingle.'

"'A walk of a mile in the open air
Will save you more than your nickel fare,
For in God's out-doors the air is good;
It will clear your brain and redden your blood
And bring you more vigor and health by far
Than you can possibly get in any old car.'

"I will read you a short extract from this bulletin:

"'Pneumonia killed 161 people in Chicago last week, 151 the preceding week and a total of 729 for the closing month of the year.

"'It is our belief that the transportation companies must be charged with a full measure of responsibility for the 1,483 lives that have been lost during the past three months by the king of dirty-air diseases.

"'Time was when the Department charged pneumonia almost solely to the hibernating habits of the average flat dweller. But in the light of re-

CHAMOUNY APARTMENTS

N. E. Cor. W. 11th and Grand View Sts.
Opposite
BEAUTIFUL PALM PLACE

MOST attractive and home-like apartment house in the west. Will have a wide expanse of lawn, flowers and shrubbery. Has a large outside living-room, fine reception room with brick inglenook. Third floor contains an amusement room, 18x45 feet, with immense balconies on either side. Apartments contain 2 and 3 rooms, are extra large, and all have French doors opening on private outside balconies. Will be ready about Feb. 1st. Open for inspection afternoons between two and three o'clock.

CALL OWNER 10673 or MAIN 1457 FOR FURTHER INFORMATION.

MRS. N. WILLIAMS ANDERSON, Manager.

ent studies and observations it must be admitted that for downright deadly danger from foul and germ-laden air the cars on the transportation lines, both surface and elevated, have the steam heated, unventilated flat beaten off the map.'

'I door conditions in Chicago, in homes and work places of all kinds, are getting better all the time, for the reason that most people are learning that dirty air is death. Thousands of people are sleeping every night now in bedrooms with wide open windows and are healthy and happy because they have learned that Fresh, Pure Air is Life.'

"That is the Board of Health of the city of Chicago trying to teach the people how to live. We have plenty of fresh, pure air here but we must teach the use of it to those who are making this city the greatest city, not only of the American continent, but in the world.

Attract People Here by Giving Them What They Need

"I know you are used to a great deal of 'hot air,' but this is no 'hot air'; it is a plain business proposition, that in order to attract people here—people of intelligence, refinement and wealth—you must give them the things they need. The time is past when you can do nothing but advertise real estate and climate and other things that God has given us, and we have got to get down to the practical proposition of 'What are we going to give to people that come here, to attract them here, and what are we going to give to them to make them stay?'

"The teaching of the city is the business of the city. Now we give our children what we call free education and we give it to them simply because we appreciate the value of education in a democracy. But we have new conditions here. We have new ideas of a city. How are we going to teach this city the value of those ideas.

The Result of the Work of One Man in St. Paul

"One man in the city of St. Paul, Minnesota, took up the proposition I have just mentioned, and from his work was evolved the St. Paul Institute of Arts and Sciences of St. Paul. Its purpose is to promote among all classes of people the knowledge and enlightenment which are essential to right living and good citizenship. It will seek to accomplish this purpose through lectures, instruction classes, publications and other means designed to stimulate interest in the practical arts, hygiene, literature, history, the fine arts, economics, government, and all departments of arts and sciences, but without sectarian bias or political partisanship; it may collect and disburse funds, gather endowments, and acquire, hold and administer real property and material equipment for its work in the service of the community.

Some of the Results Accomplished

"Let me tell you what the Institute did in the course of three years:

"The first year they had nineteen members and they gave eight lectures, with an attendance of 9,400 people. The second year they had twenty-five members, delivered twenty-nine lectures, with an attendance of 16,600. The third year they had 2,220 members, gave 119 public lectures, two public meetings and receptions, three concerts, and six art exhibitions, with a total attendance of 53,000.

"That is a practical business proposition, and the proof of it is in the fact that it has worked out.

'We are going to have, in a very few months, the problem of what to do with the electric power that is coming down from the Owens River. One seemingly very foolish man said that the city had no means to buy the existing power plants. Another seemingly foolish man said the city had means,—we could sell the power companies electricity and buy the plants. A business man looking at that would say, 'Surely I have got something to sell, they are building power plants. I have electricity to sell.' That is business. And so are such things as the St Paul Institute. The citizens of St Paul built a large auditorium, seating ten thousand people. They use that, too. What for? For the education of the city.

130 Entertainments for $5.00

"The membership of the St. Paul Institute is divided into life members, permanent members, patrons and benefactors. A life member is a man who gives from $100 to $1000 to the Institute. The permanent member is a man who gives from one thousand to ten thousand dollars. The patron is a man who gives from ten thousand to one hundred thousand. A benefactor is one who gives more than one hundred thousand dollars to the St. Paul Institute for the benefit of the city. They have honorary members, which comprise those persons who have rendered distinguished and valuable service to man by their creations, contributions, discoveries or inventions in the Arts and Sciences. The Corresponding Members of the Institute shall comprise those persons whose knowledge in the Arts and Sciences qualify them to contribute special and valuable information to the proceedings of the Institute or of its several departments, and who do not reside within a radius of twenty miles of the city of St. Paul. The Associate Members pay five dollars a year for membership and five dollars initiation and this five dollars gives them the privilege of attending all the general lectures and meetings of the Institute and at special entertainments and lectures where payment is charged he pays one-half the regular rate. During the last year—the third year of the Institute's existence—they had the privilege of attending one hundred and thirty entertainments for five dollars. That is the business side of it. All the people working together can do a thing cheaper and better than a dozen or fifteen groups working separately.

A Business Proposition

"It is a practical business proposition. Don't forget that. Unless your ordinary education can be proved a business practicability it is not worth having. Unless your education of the schools is fitting students for business life, that is, earning a living, your schools are not fulfilling their mission.

"Just take an item of local interest—a recent occurrence. The Chamber of Commerce asked the city council to appoint a secretary, or a clerk, to get statistics along the line of manufacturing in the city of Los Angeles. That is all right, but why doesn't the Chamber of Commerce do it? Why do they ask the city to do it? They recognize it is the city's business to do the business of the city for the city. The United States Census has been taken but recently. The Chamber of Commerce could go to that data and easily get what they wanted, but they say to the city of Los Angeles, 'We think it is your business to get this data and then give it to us to use.' I say it is the city of Los Angeles' business to give the people of Los Angeles the very best of music, art and sciences, of free lectures, recitals and entertainments that the world affords.

Utilize Schools

"We have six high schools within the city limits. They are used five days in the week and possibly a little on the sixth day. A business corporation looking over this situation would say, 'Why don't you use these all the time? Why leave them idle?' You answer that the children only go to school part of the time. In St. Paul they started a night school. They ran this night school not only for children but for men and women. What are the International Schools doing all over the United States? They are giving the people things they could give themselves. The University of Wisconsin recognized this, under their wise and far seeing president. He went into one of the big cities in the middle west, to one of these International Correspondence schools, and said, Have you a first class man who understands this business? They introduced him to the man and he said, 'What are you getting? I will pay you so much more to come into Wisconsin and start a correspondence school for the benefit of the people of the state of Wisconsin.'

"That is the business of the state and the business of the city,—to take care of its people and give them an opportunity to become better citizens.

"The plan of the St. Paul Institute is so simple and it accomplishes so much in its workings. Let me tell you of the different departments: Art, Business, Home Economics, Industry, Literature and Languages, Municipal Art, Music, Natural and Physical Sciences, Social Sciences, Teachers' Department."

Mr. Edson then gave a brief resume of the subjects of lectures given at the Institute by some of the most learned and renowned men of the country.

"The possibilities of this plan are absolutely unlimited. For instance, a group of men and women wish to pursue a certain line of study; they state their needs; the department supplies the necessary instruction.

Symphony Orchestra an Uplifting Force

"We have had a symphony orchestra in our city for fourteen years, but it has been sadly neglected. I know several of you are not heartily in favor of unions, but the union men in this city who have played for the symphony orchestra for these fourteen years have only received a dollar or a dollar and a quarter for their service; in other words, they played five rehearsals and one concert for six dollars. How many of you have devoted that much time to the city for fourteen years? Two or three days a week and then a public appearance for which they had to give up their time, yet you cannot get the city or any business organizations to take up the matter of symphony orchestras. It is the city's business, gentlemen, to bring these things together for the good of the city.

Concerts at Ten Cents

"You may give popular concerts in your high school auditoriums which at ten or fifteen cents admission will bring a return of $240. These concerts can be given for $200. Now, it is a business proposition to take ten thousand dollars and invest it in this business. You men here perhaps have the idea that musicians and artists are not business men. Music is a business and when you treat it as a business you get the same results as in any other vocation.

"But how can we carry out these ideas? In St. Paul they had one patriotic man who said, 'I will finance this until it has been demonstrated that it is a success,' and this he did, until the project was on a self-supporting basis.

City Club Should Investigate Plan

"Now why not have the City Club look into this policy and, if it is a good one, suggest that it be carried out. It may not be practical for our city government to carry out, but it is for the good of this city and we men who live in this city, and especially we native Californians, should see the possibility of making this city the greatest the world has ever known. It seems to me that now, that we are a free city and a free state, we should show to the world what it means to be free men; that we are going to give to our citizens the very best the world affords, because we appreciate the duties and obligations of free citizenship; in other words, we are going to try to love our neighbors as ourselves."

Senator Works said:

"I have had the occasion many times to express my thanks to the City Club for the help they have been to me and to this city in the past in the work of making healthy politics and redeeming this state from the degredation into which it has fallen politically. I can't say to you how much I appreciate the good will of this Club at this time. It stands for all that is good in politics and public life in this city. I can appreciate the fact that such men as I see before me today are rejoiced in the fact that under the circumstances I have been elected Senator of the United States, not because it is I,—that is a very small matter—the great thing for the State of California, infinitely greater than the personality of any man, or set of men, is the way in which I was elected United States Senator.

"Shortly after the vote was taken in the Legislature, Governor Johnson came into my room at the hotel, his face beaming with satisfaction and pleasure. He sat down and said to me, 'Isn't it a glorious thing that a man can be elected to the United States Senate in the State of California without doing anything that can be criticised, or spending a quarter of a dollar in securing his election?' I want to say that this is just exactly what was done. There was no buying of votes; there was no using of patronage for the purpose of influencing any individual member of the Legislature; there was nothing done that might not be published to the world and bring no criticisms to

Furniture Repair Works
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS

MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

Residence Burglary Insurance
Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?
Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.
Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.
R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY
200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.
Home Phone 40444 Sunset Phone M. 7096

the men who carried on this campaign. It is a great thing for the State of California that we have reached that stage in politics. It is one of the things we have been fighting for. It is one of the things that the Insurgents of this State stand for today,—the independence and freedom of the individual voter and upright honesty in politics.

The New Regime

"Let me tell you just a little thing that occurred that indicated the feeling that was in the Legislature amongst those who were undertaking to carry out this contest to a successful issue. The gentleman who was to nominate me in the Assembly of the Legislature came to me before the vote was taken and said that someone had been to the speaker of the Assembly and suggested to him that probably a certain man would be more favorable to Judge Works if he were placed on the committee on which he was desirous of serving. The speaker said to him, 'I don't want to hear a word about anything of that sort.' My nominator said to me further, that someone had suggested to the speaker that it might be well to withhold the announcement of the committees until after a vote was taken on the Senatorship. This member said to me, 'I would like to know what you think about that.' I said, 'I think the speaker of the Assembly had better do his duty. If he has his committees ready to announce he had better announce them without any reference to my candidacy for the United States Senate.' And the committees were appointed that morning before the vote for the Senatorship was taken.

"There is one thing that I have felt very deeply, one thing I have appreciated very much, and that is the support I received from the Democratic members of the Legislature. But I appreciate the fact still further that the idea of the Democratic members giving me their support originated here in the city of Los Angeles where I was known. It gave me the greatest pleasure that the Jefferson Club, representing true Democracy in Los Angeles, originated that idea by passing a resolution that if it were not possible to elect a Democrat to the United States Senate that the vote of the Democrats be cast for me. I had occasion to say to some of the members of the Legislature, after the election took place, that a Progressive Republican and a Progressive Democrat could hardly be told apart at the present time. And, gentlemen, the time may soon come when there will be a new alignment of parties in this country. The time may soon come when Progressive Republicans and Progressive Democrats will be called upon to join hands and meet the power of the moneyed influences of this country for the purpose of perpetuating its free institutions. (Applause). Whenever that time comes every true patriot in this country will set aside his partisanship and join hands with those who are willing to stand for the interests of the people of this country irrespective of their politics. (Continued applause).

"I appreciate always the spirit of good will and the friendship of the members of the city Club. It has been one of the institutions that have helped to bring us out of the gloom under which we have been laboring in politics; which stands for all that is good, and there is no club whose support I would rather have in a fight of this kind than the City Club of Los Angeles."

Meyer Lissner Speaks

After Mr. Edson's address Meyer Lissner was called upon by the members to make a speech. Mr. Lissner said:

"I didn't know just what to tell you but a gentleman at my side here suggested that I tell you something about Spalding (a voice, 'Who is Spalding?') I suppose I am called upon because I have just returned from Sacramento, but I did no more there than several other of our good citizens, like Mr. Stimson, Mr. Dickson and Mr. Rowell and a dozen others.

"I suppose that probably the thing that had the most influence in starting Judge Works upon the road to victory was the conference we held in San Francisco in the latter part of December. When we called that conference, which was for the purpose of listening to the reports of the committees on proposed legislation, we had no idea that it would have the effect of materially aiding the candidacy of Judge Works, but it certainly did have that effect. At that time the Los Angeles delegation got busy, and you know when Los Angeles boosters get busy something usually happens. When we got through with the conference we counted noses and found that we could undoubtedly count on at least seventy-five votes for Judge Works.

'We went to Sacramento and stayed with those legislators day and night. We worked with them from early morn until early morn. There was no night, up to the time that Judge Works was elected, that we were finished before two o'clock in the morning. We used with the representatives only legitimate argument and persuasion. Judge Works has told you that no money was used in this campaign and that there were no threats or coercion. That might have been done without it being known except to men who were more active in the campaign than Judge Works. I can tell you, however, that nothing of that sort was done. We spent exactly $13.44 for telegrams and we paid our hotel bills. After it was all over we had a blow-out and Judge Works treated to pink lemonade and cake. Those telegrams brought to our assistance the best, cleanest and highest-minded men, from all parts of the state.

"Judge Works has told you how much we appreciated the aid we received from the Democrats. We do thoroughly appreciate it. Some of us have found that the alignment is not between the Republicans and the Democrats now. It is not a horizontal line-up but a vertical line-up between progressives and reactionaries. When we had the Democrats coming our way the rest was easy,—the Band Wagon' was going so fast we could not stop it.

"Some of us have been subjected to considerable abuse down here but what we got in Los Angeles was not a circumstance to what they gave us in San Francisco. There always has to be a 'goat.' For some years I have been in the habit of being the 'goat.' I suppose I should be ashamed to say it, but my hide has become so thick by reason of the tanning that I received here that I did not mind what I got up there at all. I will just give you an instance of the kind of compliments that were handed out, to me particularly. The San Francisco Call,—that reform organ,—came out with an editorial in which it mildly insinuated there was only one difference between myself and one of my people named Ruef and that was the fact he had curly hair.

"Having given the credit of the victory where it belongs, because there is enough glory to go around to all, I think I might not be considered immodest in telling you what Mr. Spalding said just before he left Sacramento. Somebody remarked to him, 'How do you like the umpire?' He understood the word but he did not understand the application so the correspondent of the Los Angeles 'Times' asked him what he thought about Lissner. 'Oh, Lissner!' Well, he had never seen Lissner until that very noon; saw him in the dining-room and then his back was turned to him so he could not see his face. 'But,' he said, 'Lissner and I made for the door about the same time, I walked faster than Lissner and reached the door before him, and I am informed by my friends that I am the only man in Sacramento that beat Lissner to anything since he had been here.'"

A CORRECTION

Pacific Outlook:—Permit me, through your columns to correct two misstatements inadvertently made in my recent article upon "The Need for the Merit System" in the California Weekly of December 23, 1910. In that article I stated that "most civil service provisions require that a discharge can only be effected by the filing of charges and a trial before the civil service commission." I am informed by the Secretary of the National Civil Service League that this is only the case in Chicago and cities west thereof which have followed her lead, but does not obtain in the Federal System nor in the East generally.

Again, instead of having been adopted in fifteen cities as was stated on authority which was not up to date, one hundred and ten (110) cities are now under civil service provisions.

Yours truly,
Francis B. Kellogg.

W. B. MATHEWS TO DISCUSS CONSOLIDATION

At the regular weekly luncheon of the City Club, to be held at the Westminster Hotel today (Saturday) at 12:15 p. m., W. B. Mathews will speak on "Consolidation of City and County Governments."

The Jester's Bells

How the Fight Began

Violette—"I wish you would tell me how to get this pitch off my dress. I have tried everything I can think of."

Reginald—"You might try a song. You always get off the pitch when you sing."—Judge.

A Robber

"Were you ever confronted by a robber?"

"Sure."

"And did you play the part of a hero?"

"No, indeed; you can't throttle a gas-meter."—Houston Post.

Miniature Specialization

A young medical student was being quizzed by one of his teachers: "In what will you specialize?" he was asked. "Diseases of the nostril," replied the student. "Good," said the professor, enthusiastically. "Which nostril?"—Success.

Reasons

Professor—"Why did you come to college, anyway? You are not studying."

Willie Rahrah—"Well, mother says it is to fit me for the Presidency; Uncle Bill, to sow my wild oats; Sis, to get a chum for her to marry; and Pa, to bankrupt the family."—Puck.

Much can be forgiven a man with that fine sense of humor shown by Dr. Cook in taking passage on the George Washington.—Baltimore News.

When Taft Went Swimming

One morning in summer President Taft, wearing the largest bathing suit known to modern times, threw his substantial and ponderous form into the cooling waves of Beverly Bay.

That afternoon Jesse Conway, a newspaper correspondent, sent the following to his paper:

"There was mighty little swimming along the north shore today. The President was using the ocean.—Popular Magazine.

Reporter—Senator, if I mistake not, your name has been mentioned once or twice in connection with the Presidency.

Senator Lotsmun—Why, yes; a London journal, I believe, once remarked that if the office of President of the United States was for sale, I would probably buy it.—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Prosperity has ruined many a man," remarked the moralizer.

"Well," rejoined the demoralizer, "if I was going to be ruined at all I'd want prosperity to do it."—Detroit Free Press.

Poverty in Old New York

Knickerbocker Gossip—Yes, that is the rich Miss Guineas. They say her father hath five thousand pounds if he hath a shilling.—Judge.

Ascum: I saw your wife at the dance last night. She certainly did look magnificent. By the way, old man, you're rather thin, aren't you?

Muttley: I guess I am. You see, we went to housekeeping recently and I arranged with my wife to give her a certain allowance each week to provide for the table and buy clothes for herself.—Catholic Standard and Times.

"He loves me, he loves me not," murmured the romantic summer boarder.

"You must have picked a thousand daisies to pieces today," remarked the old farmer.

"Possibly I have."

"Couldn't ye play that game just as well with potato bugs?"—Washington Herald.

Uncle Ethan was in a cautious frame of mind.

"Which," somebody asked him, "do you think is worse, a flood or a drought?"

Uncle Ethan scratched his head.

"It always depends," he replied. "I should say that a flood was a great deal worse, providing, of course, that there was a flood."—Youth's Companion.

A famous North Carolina clergyman, while preaching from the text, "He giveth his beloved sleep," stopgazed upon his slumbering congregation, and said: "Brethren, it is hard to realize the unbounded love which the Lord appears to have for a large portion of my audience."—The Argonaut

"You must try to get on without the luxuries. Confine yourself to the necessities." "That's what I'm doing," replied Mr. Chuggins. "I'm cutting down on beef and potatoes so as to meet the repair bill on my automobile."—Washington Star.

Theatre

The Fox Hunt at the Burbank

The Fox, that new play with which Oliver Morosco has aroused a really extraordinary amount of excitement among local theatre-goers, is an interesting example of inverse composition. It is a drama worked out in a style entirely different from that usually employed in play making; instead of unfolding a story of widening ramifications with characters constantly growing in the importance of their relation to the central theme, it folds in on the story until, by a process of elimination, it gradually diminishes the importance of those at first apparently most concerned and leaves the one character of them all which had seemed nothing but a by-play, standing at the last moment alone in the center of interest.

The love story prominent at the offset, steadily diminishes in interest; the details of the family life which early bulk large, recede; the extraneous figures introduced mystify instead of elucidate; the details of the millionaire's questionable business deal, which promised to be the vitals of the climactic disclosure, are hurled in the progress of the inward folds without causing a pang of disappointed curiosity; the whole story is compressed down, one act after another, until just two relationships stand out as of any consequence—those of "The Fox," and the millionaire. And in the end the latter is remembered principally as a developer of the unusual and startling character of "The Fox," rather than as a vital personality of the play.

By this it is not to be inferred that the various characters of the comedy drama are loosely drawn, uninteresting, or unnecessary; quite the contrary; but they are entirely subsidiary to the climax. They are introduced to confuse the onlooker, and then to be eliminated as the plot secretly focuses on the delightful, unbelievable "Fox"—and so is created, by concave instead of convex development, a strikingly good detective story, albeit the actual detective of the play does not cover himself with glory.

Book worms—or rather magazine worms—have discovered that this Lee Arthur fabric suggests the reflection of a Harold McGrath serial which once appeared in an Eastern magazine; but this fact does not dim its interest or make less marked its constructive peculiarities.

It would be inconsiderate, if not inartistic, even at this late hour to disclose the identity of "The Fox" himself, because there are many yet in Los Angeles, and a vastly greater number in the far-spread cities of the nation at large, for whom the problem of "The Fox" is still unsolved, and by whom the play is still to be enjoyed; for this new dramatic composition of Lee Arthur, given its premiere at the Burbank Theatre in this city this week, is bound to appeal to all classes of playgoers and acquire a wide fame. It is not a masterpiece of art, nor "the greatest play in ten years," nor anything of that exalted sort; but as an entertainer it is a decided success. The plot is cleverly conceived and consummated, (though the first act is a little disappointing); the lines are bright, sometimes witty; with all the excitement aroused there is no act done to cause the most sensitive person to cringe, nor any word spoken to shame the most chaste. It is one of the few plays that promises to have a great popular success entirely without employment of base excitives. The law is broken (in semblance) as the story proceeds; but the fractures are not the sort that will injure the morals of the witnesses.

The story of how Mr. Morosco secured the manuscript of Mr. Arthur's "Fox" during his recent visit to New York, and gave it to the world first in Los Angeles, is an interesting one, but is outside the bounds of this comment.

It is to be doubted whether "The Fox" will ever have a better presentation than that with which it has been favored by the Burbank company. The staging is admirable and the acting competent. Byron Beasley never did anything beter, (if he ever did anything as well) than his interpretation of Peter Delaney, the charming but fallible old gentleman with the style of other days. David M. Hartford displays his usual vigor in the role of the selfish millionaire whose business trickeries give the story its start and Charley Ruggles adds zest to the proceedings in his brief appearance as Edward Mackey. Miss Ramhean looks her best in the leading feminine role of the millionaire's daughter, though the part is of small value.

Who blows open the concealed safe, there in the pitch dark of the millionaire's apartment, that night? Who is "The Fox?" Get a seat and sit tight until the last of the last act, if you want to know. You're a good guesser if you suspect either of the right parties before the denouement.

Lanier Bartlett.

La Pia, with Orpheum Road Show, Next Week

The Dollar Princess Mediocre

It is but to join in a unanimous chorus to say that the music saves the "Dollar Princess," a musical comedy appearing at the Mason Opera House this week. It did more than that. It made the play possible, not to say bearable. It thrilled the audience just as any art inspires a gathering. It dominated the situation and made more endurable the inane dialogue and mystical plot which went to make up that elusive thing called a musical comedy.

In a musical comedy one does not expect much as to plot, but there should be something in the way of snappy dialogue and something in the way of unity of action and a reason for three acts.

In the "Dollar Princess" there was nothing calling for a second or a third act except to rest the tired eyes of the audience with a different change of scenery. Th climax, which was made perfectly clear and left no question as to the end of the play, was apparent in the first few moments of the play and through the rest of the evening it was but to sit and watch the action trip along to a definite conclusion. As far as the dialogue and the play was concerned, it was like

AUDITORIUM
Theatre Beautiful
L. E. BEHYMER Manager

Two Nights Only—Tues. Jan. 24; Friday, Jan. 27
The Tivoli Opera Co., W. H. Leahy, Mgr., Presents

TETRAZZINI

Assisted by Frederick Hastings, Baritone; Andre Benoist, Pianist; Walter Oesterreicher, Flutist.

Seat Sale at Bartlett's. Prices $1, $1.50, $2, $2.50 and $3. Boxes and Loges $5.00. $1.00 Seats on Sale Day Before Concert.

Hardman Piano used.

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d 1447 Mat. Every Day Both Phones Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c

Beginning Monday Matinee, Jan. 23 ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW

LA PIA "The Enchantress" Dances
HOWARD Scotland's Ventriloquist
CHAS. LEONARD FLETCHER & CO. In "His Nerve"
CROSS & JOSEPHINE "Dying to Act"
BROS. RIGOLETTO In Eight Varied Turns
MELVILLE & HIGGINS "Just a Little Fun"
HIBBERT & WARREN "Colored; Not Born That Way"
JOE JACKSON European Vagabond

Orpheum Motion Pictures

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Beginning Sunday Night, Jan. 22

Sam S. & Lee Shubert (Inc). announce JAMES T. POWERS
With the original company of 100, including the "Hello People" girls in
"HAVANA"
Nights and Sat. Mat. 50c to $2. Popular Wed. Mat. 50c to $1.50.

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth

SECOND WEEK—Take your sweetheart and bet her a box of candy she can't guess who "The Fox" is at the end of Act II. Don't be afraid. You won't lose.

Lee Arthur's Delightful Comedy Drama "THE FOX"
Nights 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 10c, 25c, 50c.
Next—"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE?"

the train you remember in your boyhood days, running out of the valley each day to return at night, on time and just as you had expected. It did not even have the diversity to run off the track.

The company is one of two or three road organizations that have branched out from the original company which is playing somewhere in the East after a year's success in New York. It is a good company as road companies go, and truly there are some passable voices among the principals and the chorus is above the average.

Eileen Clifford, who plays a second part, dances her way into the hearts of the audience and Miss Alice Cowder has a good voice and is called upon to use it almost continuously. Franklin Farnum has a rich tenor voice and wins the approval of the audience.

But it is the music of Leo Fall that has made the play what it is and it is he who deserves the credit for the long run the play has enjoyed.

J. L. Barnard.

"The Beauty Spot"

A trivial and at times vulgar conglomeration of Joseph Herbert wit and De Koven music introduced new talent to Los Angeles this week in the person of Jefferson De Angelis, fresh from his late role of Ko-Ko in the eastern all-star revival of "The Mikado." Mr. De Angelis is a comedian of the unexaggerated type, the more successful because he refrains at all times from too broad appeal to the risibilities. Realism is the keynote of his comedy. The spontaneous antics of a funny old fellow rather than the exertions of a buffoon are what he portrays. In the character of General Samovar of the Russian Legation at Paris, he maintains an effervescent inanity and a ludicrous weakness for the fair sex which, coupled with the peculiarities of his short, square person and facial changes, rapidly reduces Majestic audiences to the desired state of giggling responsiveness.

The texture of "The Beauty Spot" is the flimsiest, and some of its maudlin by-play would better be omitted. Still there is personality enough in the cast to build something solid upon the slight framework provided by the author. Miss Viola Gillette, as General Samovar's wife, whose portrait painted before marriage when she was a model, causes all the fuss, possesses comliness of the Lillian Russell type, costumes both dashing and statuesque, and a rich voice which soars effectively in her solo "Memoirs." The General's daughter Nadine is played by Miss Florence Martin with fresh, girlish charm and unconsciousness of self. In the song, "Pretty Punchinello," her fascinatingly-costumed dance atones for the inadequacy of her sweet little "parlor" voice, and in the duet, "In a Hammock," the splendid voice of George J. MacFarlane added to Miss Martin's talents calls forth well-deserved encores. It is one of the disappointments of the production that Mr. MacFarlane isn't given more chance to sing, but fortunately he draws the best number of all, "Creole Days," whose melodious refrain could be heard a score of times, at least as Mr. MacFarlane sings it, without palling.

The others of the cast are fairly capable. A discerning eye can distinguish several bonny faces in the chorus if it troubles itself to look beyond the front row. Scenically, the Grand Hotel at Dinard and the tropical gardens of the same are attempted with some pictorial excellence.

Dorothy Russell Lewis.

Orpheum

The Orpheum bill of the past week was pre-eminently a fun-making and laughter-producing affair. The audience began to laugh with Mr. Hymack, smiled more broadly at the Monkey Music Show, laughed aloud at Joe Jackson, the European Vagabond, and was convulsed by Cross and Josephine in their little skit, "Dying to Act." This clever nonsense concludes with a caricature of melodrama which would make the most dyed-in-the-wool pessimist laugh. Wellington Cross should be a good subject for the psychic researchers as he is a decided example of dual personality—being at one time the villain of darkest hue and at another that sweet creature, the "Mellerdramer" hero. The Bathing Girls show a variety of attractive costumes and clever stage settings with a spectacular windup in the moving-picture waves.

M. R. T.

Mme. Tetrazzini

COMING ATTRACTIONS

An annual event in the local vaudeville field, is the coming to the Orpheum Monday matinee, Jan. 23, of the Orpheum Road show.

The Road Show, under Mr. Martin Beck's personal direction, is always an aggregation of picked acts, well balanced, varied and each act a complement of every other. Mr. Beck at the beginning of every season gathers together his idea of what such an aggregation should be and each act for it is personally selected and approved. The result is a compact, well regulated and arranged show, traveling together. Every year, this show is sent on the tour of the circuit, and pays a visit of a fortnight here.

This year's Road show is said to be particularly fine, in that many of the acts are foreign, and these have never been seen here. On its second week, Alice Lloyd joins it here, and the great aggregation will be complete.

La Pia, "the Enchantress," and the twin Brothers Rigoletto, each a novelty, head the first week's list. The former is a dancer engaged direct from the Palace, London, and presenting a series of Terpsichorean revels. She gives four dances during her act, each in its own setting.

A Japanese dance, showing the art of that land, comes first, followed by "The Dance of the Pyramids," an Egyptian effect. Then is shown a fire dance, and finally, "The Sea Nymph," a picture of the frolic of the ocean waves.

The Brothers Rigoletto, twins, do eight varied and different turns in their 40 minutes on the stage, each in its own setting, and each as complete as if given by a separate troupe. They show an instrumental turn, juggle, mimic, illusionize, do magic of the Chinese sort, plastic poses, aerial gymnastics and acrobatics.

A third foreigner is Howard, Scotch ventriloquist. He has not only all the dry humor of the Scots, but at the same time he is gifted with a vocal ability, which enables him to do many tricks.

Only one act is retained from last year's Road show, Melville & Higgins. No need to go into detail here—all remember the rotund Mae, with her "Let it lay!" and her "Soft, soft pedal," and the long lean foil that Robert Higgins made for her.

The sketch this year is furnished by Charles Leonard Fletcher. His vehicle is a Lambs' club gambol success, "His Nerve," described as a tense and thrilling tabloid drama.

Minstrelsy is now almost entirely a feature of vaudeville, and so has earned place with this show. Gus Hibbert and Fred Warren are prime exponents. Hibbert is a dancer, Warren is a pianist, and the pair in black face "but not born that way," offer pleasing entertainment.

Cross & Josephine, and Joe Jackson, "the European vagabond," will remain to make up the eight acts required here, and new motion pictures are promised. And next week come Alice Lloyd and Lew Sully, and the whole show will be complete.

James T. Powers in the Shubert's production of the London Gaiety musical play, "Havana," with a company of 100 people, will be the attraction at the Hamburger's Majestic Theatre next Sunday night, for one week with regular matinees, when Mr. Powers will be seen here for the first time in the role of Samuel Nix, bos'un of the yacht Wasp. Mr. Powers, by the way, has revised the book of "Havana" for America, proving that he is not only a comedian, but a writer as well.

Nix, as the story goes, has visited the port of Havana seven years before the action begins. During his stay he married a Cuban girl, deserting her a few hours after the ceremony. He little suspects that he will ever drop anchor in this harbor again, but now after seven years his ship, the Wasp, ties up at Havana and Nix, eager for the sights of the shore, goes into the city, momentarily expecting, however, to run across his wife. His endeavors to hide his identity cause him to be mistaken for a revolutionist, and the Wasp is spotted as a filibustering vessel. Nix is taken into the inner council of the insurgents and during one of the meetings he is arrested by the police charged with the crime of being the ringleader of the revolutionists. He is sentenced to be shot. His neglected wife discovers that there is an old law which declares a husband dead who lives away from his wife for a period of seven consecutive years, and she is about to take advantage of this. She hears of the plight of Nix and upon her explaining to the mayor of Havana that her husband is already dead, plans for the execution of the bos'un are abandoned. The rest of the play is given up to rejoicing.

The music of "Havana" is by Leslie Stuart, composer of the score of "Florodora."

"The Fox," Lee Arthur's delightful comedy drama, which received its premiere at the Burbank last Sunday, is booked for a Broadway production. The verdict of Los Angeles, as expressed in crowded houses throughout the week, is that it is deserving of this honor, and the business has been so large that a second week will begin with the matinee Sunday.

Probably no play ever written has offered audiences a more absorbing and baffling problem than does "The Fox." In the second act a burglary takes place, a safe being blown open in full view of the audience, though the stage is so dark that the identity of the cracksman is hidden. There are several persons who can logically be suspected of the act, each one having a distinct and different motive for desiring possession of the contents of the vault. Then the guessing begins. It would be more than human for anyone not to select the person whom he considers most likely to have committed the burglary, and it is interesting, after one has made his own selection, to listen to the variety of opinions expressed by those sitting near. Then, when the cracksman is discovered, near the end of the play, it comes as such a delicious surprise that everyone wants their friends to see it and try their hand at guessing.

MUSIC

Musical Los Angeles had the privilege last Tuesday evening of greeting a truly great artist in the person of Mme. Gerville-Reache, the French contralto. This artist is the fortunate possessor of a matchless contralto voice, a charming appearance and an intensely dramatic temperament. It is her temperamental qualifications which place Gerville-Reache at the head of the list of eminent contraltos of the present day, even more than her wonderful vocal organ. Vocally she can compare with the efforts of any contralto recently heard on the coast, her remarkably deep, rich and resonant lower tones, as well as the exquisitely delicate pianissimos to which her voice falls, being hardly equalled here before; but it is her great dramatic resources which lift the presentations of this artist to a plane by themselves.

Most of the program numbers were the work of French composers, several of the moderns being represented.

The program in full follows:

1. (a) "Les Larmes," Massenet; (b) "Mon Coeur s'ouvre a ta voix" (Samson et Delila), Saint-Saens. 2 (a) Ich Grolle Nicht, Schumann; (b) Der Erlkonig, Schubert. 3. (a) "Addio" (Dedicated to Mme. Gerville-Reache.), Parelli; (b) Aria de la Cieca (La Gioconda), Ponchielli. 4. (a) Hindu Slumber Song, Harriet Ware; (b) "Love's Trinity," Reginald de Koven. 5. (a) Dir de Lia (L'Enfant Prodigue), Claude Debussy; (b) L'Anneau d'argent, Chaminade; (c) Chanson Slave, Chaminade; (d) Plaisirs d'amour (1741-1816), Martini; (e) D'une Prison, Reynaldo Hahn.

M. R. T.

On Thursday evening, January 12, in Simpson Auditorium, Los Angeles music lover had the opportunity of hearing one of Chicago's best-known vocalists, Mr. Thomas N. MacBurney, who was persuaded to give a recital while visiting in Hollywood for a few days. The program was a comprehensive one as regards composers but was not sufficiently varied in the character of its selections to insure perfect balance. Mr. MacBurney possesses a pleasing, though somewhat thin, baritone, distinguished by a highly sympathetic quality. He sings entertainingly and in a manner indicative of fair training, although in this particular program an intimate knowledge of certain of the numbers was obviously lacking—a great handicap in his work.

The opening number, Bianchi's "Tu seconda i voti mici," was a happy introduction, being not only charming in itself but especially well suited to the singer's talents. In the quiet, sustained passages of this number Mr. MacBurney was at his best. The first song of the second group, Sinding's "Licht," gave him another opportunity for effective work, which met with marked appreciation.

Throughout the rest of the program, which included beautiful selections from Kaun, Weingartner, Debussy, Saint Saens, Delibes, Mallinson, Huhn and others, the singer failed to repeat his satisfying performance of the more unpretentious numbers, lack of volume or of depth of interpretation being responsible for his decreased excellence.

The accompanist, Mrs. M. Hennion Robinson, rendered capable assistance.

D. R. L.

The only appearances in this city of Tetrazzini will be Tuesday night, Jan. 24, and Friday evening, Jan. 27. Immediately after the conclusion of the Los Angeles concerts Tetrazzini and party go direct to Denver for one concert. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago and New York are the only cities in the United States to be favored with more than one concert by Tetrazzini's management, the Tivoli Opera Company.

Following are the programs:

Jan. 24:

1. Fantasie for Flute and Piano—"Goodnight, My Dear Child".. ..... Popp
   Messrs. Oesterreicher and Benoist
2. Baritone Soli—
   (a) An die Musik.....Schubert
   (b) Ewig Mein Bleibt...Schutt
   (c) Der Sieger .....Kaun
   Mr. Hastings
3. Aria "Caro Nome" (Rigoletto) ..... Verdi
   Mme. Tetrazzini
4. Piano Solo, Polonaise E major ..... Liszt
   Mr. Benoist
5. Aria "Una voce pocafa" (Barber of Seville) .....Rossini
   Mme. Tetrazzini
6. (a) Romance .....Stiehl
   (b) Arbesque .....Debussy
   Messrs. Oesterreicher and Benoist
7. (a) Young Dietrich....Henschel
   (b) Lyns .....Benoist
   (c) The Ballad of the Bony Fiddler .....Hammond
   Mr. Hastings
8. Grand Aria, including Mad Scene (Lucia) .....Donizetti
   Mme. Tetrazzini

Jan. 27:

1. Fantasie, "Pastoral Hongroise" (flute and piano).....Doppler
   Messrs. Oesterreicher and Benoist
2. Baritone Soli—
   (a) Widmung .....Schumann
   (b) Ich Grolle Nicht..Schumann
   (c) Die Allmacht .....Schubert
   Mr. Hastings
3. Aria "Ah fors e lui" and Sempre Libre (Traviata) .....Verdi
   Mme. Tetrazzini
4. Piano Solo, "Marche Militaire" ..... Schubert-Tausig
   Mr. Benoist
5. Aria "Bel Raggio" (Semiramide) ..... Rossini
   Mme. Tetrazzini
6. (a) Romance (flute and piano) .....Emile Bernard
   (b) Le Tourbillon.....Anderson
   Messrs. Oesterreicher and Benoist
7. Baritone Soli—
   (a) Mirage .....Liza Lehmann
   (b) There Was an Ancient King
   (c) A Theme .....Benoist
   Mr. Hastings
8. Grand Polocca from "Mignon" ..... Thomas

Following is the complete program to be given by the Ellis Club in Simpson Auditorium, Tuesday evening next, under direction of J. B. Poulin. The club will be assisted by Constance Balfour, soprano; Arthur Alexander, tenor; Wm. James Chick, baritone; Mrs. Ada Marsh Chick, organ; Krauss String Quartet. Club numbers will consist of:

A Vintage Song (From the unfinished opera "Loreley").... ..... Mendelssohn
In Vocal Combat.....Dudley Buck
Carpathian Folk Song.....Paty Stair
Spring Night.....Max Filke
(With soprano obligato by Constance Balfour and string quintet accompaniment)
"Toredor, Hola!.....H. Trotere
(Arrangement by N. Clifford Page.)
King Olaf's Christmas..Dudley Buck
(With tenor solo by Mr. Alexander and baritone solo by Mr. Chick, and piano, organ and string quintet accompaniment.)

Constance Balfour will sing—
(a) "Pace Mio Dio" (La Forza del Destino) .....Verdi
(b) Ecstacy .....Walter Rummel

Arthur Alexander will sing—
(a) "Where'er you walk"...Handel
(b) Allerseelen ...Richard Strauss
(c) A Love Song .....Haesche

The Krauss String Quartet will play—
(a) Quartet Op. 44, No. 2..... ..... Mendelssohn
Andante
Presto Agitato
(b) Romanza with 'Cello solo... ..... Chopin

Edna Darch, the Los Angeles prima donna, who has been abroad for five years, part of the time singing at the Royal Grand Opera in Berlin, has returned home for a couple of months' visit. Her many friends here are anxious to have her appear in recital before leaving Los Angeles and already many demands have been made upon her for concerts throughout Southern California.

Herr Ignaz Haroldi, who has been absent from the city for some months on an extensive concert tour in the

Herr Ignaz Haroldi

North and East, has returned to Los Angeles and has resumed his classes.

The annual concert commemorating the birth of Schubert, arranged by Miss Margaret Goetz, will take place at the First Unitarian Church, on Sunday, January 29, at four o'clock.

Assisting artists are: Mesdames W. J. Kirkpatrick, soprano; Aida Marsh Chick, Gertrude Ross, accompanists. Messrs. George Walcker, basso; Arthur Alexander, tenor; Oskar Seiling, violinist; Axel Simondsen, cello; and a chorus of women's voices. Some beautiful and rarely sung songs, as well as old favorites, will be sung.

The Tetrazzini management has yielded to the demands of friends and patrons and has changed the second Tetrazzini concert to Friday evening instead of the afternoon, at the Auditorium, Jan. 27. Many people unable to attend in the afternoon have requested this change, as they desire to have an opportunity of attending both recitals.

Two very interesting programs have been arranged by Harry Clifford Lott, the popular baritone of our city to be presented at Cumnock Hall, on the evenings of January 26th and February 23rd. Every year Mr. Lott manages to present to the public a program containing one or more novelties, and this year has combined on his second program the poems of Rudyard Kipling set to music of which "Danny Deever," "On the Road to Mandalay" and "Mother O'Mine" are the best known.

Mary Louisa White, writing in the "Musical Standard," London, objects to the morbidly pessimistic tone affected by the writers of song poems, and urges a change in the direction of a healthy joy in present good things instead of a sentimental whining over the past. Here is a quotation from the article:

"Let us then have no more 'chains with broken links'; 'faded petals that have lost their color and perfume'; 'eyes that once spoke of love, but are now vacant and cold'; instruments 'with broken strings'; 'souls that can no longer make harmony'; 'vacant chairs'; 'broken hearts' and 'sunless lives'! Selfishness or affectation, or both, are largely responsible for this unwholesome attitude. He who participates in the lives of others, has a care for their welfare and happiness; is happy in toiling for their good; and is ever sensitive to the everlasting spring that surrounds him on every side."

Contracts have been closed with Henry Ohlmeyer, the California bandmaster, for a number of weeks, with his band at Willow Grove, opening the 28th of next May. This is a much coveted honor, and so far has only been given four of the large musical organizations of the country, among them Sousa, the Damrosch and Victor Herbert orchestras.

"Not long ago Eric Wolfgang Korngold, the wonderful child composer, had an experience which is probably unique—namely, for a boy of thirteen to appear before the curtain of a grand opera house to acknowledge the loud applause with which a composition of his had been received. This was entitled 'The Snow-Man: a Pantomime.' It appears that the boy two years ago wrote the music for the piano, rather as an exercise than anything else. Now it has been orchestrated by the boy's teacher, Herr Zemlinsky, conductor at the Vienna Volksoper, and in that form played by the first orchestra in the world and loudly applauded by a critical Viennese audience! Without doubt in its original form it is an astonishing work for a child of eleven, showing that he was even two years ago able to think in music. Rhythmically and melodically the work is full of interest.

"A trio written scarcely two years later than the pantomime, shows that a most remarkable development has taken place in the meanwhile; it is about to appear as his Opus 1 in the 'Universal Edition.'"—London Musical Standard.

Stranger—And who is the beauty with her?

Gossip—A beauty, yes; but, alas, her face is her only fortune. She hath but a miserable ten-acre farm on Broadway.—Judge.

He—They say that the face is an index of the mind. She—I don't know. It doesn't follow because a woman's face is made up that her mind is.—Boston Transcript.

Country Opera Director—What do you think of our tenor? Stranger—If I were you I would hire him out as an imitator of the phonograph.—Fliegende Blaetter.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

LOS ANGELES CITY WORK AND LEGISLATION

An indexed review of all action by Council, Board of Public Works, Commissions and Officials, relating to property improvement or of general interest. Record closes Wednesday night.

PUBLIC WORK BY STREETS

Third Ave.; draft of ord. for lighting Third avenue from the northerly line of Pico street to the southerly line of Country Club drive. This ordinance contemplates that the property owners within the assessment district shall pay all the costs of said improvement. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Ave. 18; ord. of intention to improve Ave. 18, N. Broadway to Mozart St. Johnson Act. Adopted.

Ave. 20; ord. establishing the name of a triangular piece of land at the southeast corner of Mozart St. and Ave. 20, deeded recently to the city for street purposes, as "Ave. 20."

Ave. 63; ord. of intention to improve said St. from Bertha St. to 110 ft. north. Bond Act. Adopted.

Alley; ord of intention to improve Alley W. of Westlake Ave., 6th to Orange. Bond Act. Adopted.

Alley; ord. of intention to improve first Alley north of 8th, Valencia to Union. Bond Act. Adopted.

Alley; pet. from Chaffey, et al., requesting the establishment of grade of first alley east of Main st. bet. Winston and 5th. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Alley; pet. from Josephine B. Camp et al., requesting that steps be taken to acquire for public purposes an alley running south from 2nd between Fremont and Beaudry. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

1st St.; pet. from Wm. Brill, et al., asking for the paving of 1st, Bailey to Boyle. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

2nd and Western; pet. from R. I. Thomson, et al., requesting a light at 2nd and Western. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

3rd St.; pet. from 9th Ward Imp. Assn. requesting that proceedings be instituted for sidewalking in front of third lot west of St. Louis st. on the south side of East 3rd st. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

3rd St.; ord. of intention to improve 3rd St., Saratoga to 339 feet southeast. Johnson Act. Adopted.

4th St.; pet. from A. Raymer, et al., for the tunnelling of 4th st. Ref. to the Sts. and Blvds. Com.

W. 7th St.; pet. from E. C. Wilson calling attention to the condition of W. 7th st. beyond Westlake Park, caused by the L. A. Ry. Co. tearing up its track. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

9th St., Wilmington; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on W. 9th St., north side. Adopted.

W. 9th St., Wilmington; ord. changing name of alley from I to K Sts., Wilmington, to West 9th St. Adopted.

W. 9th St., Wilmington; ord. changing name of 9th St., from Oak to K. St. to West 9th St. Adopted.

9th St., Wilmington; ord. establishing grade of W. 9th from F St. to Fries St. Adopted.

10th St., Wilmington; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on W. 10th St., each side between F St. and Bay View Tract No. 2. Adopted.

11th St., Wilmington; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on W. 11th St., F to Bay View Tr. No. 2. Adopted.

16th St.; pet. from G. C. Emery, et al., protesting against the assessment for the opening and widening of 16th st., Pacific ave. to Normandie ave.

17th St.; pet. from L. J. Goehring, et al., requesting that 17th st. bet. Naomi and Tennessee, be improved. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

18th St.; pet. from J. R. Keough, et al., for the improvement of 18th st. between Naomi and Tennessee. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

35th St.; pet. from J. C. Kayser, et al., asking for improvement of 35th Western to St. Andrews place. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

54th St.; ord. of intention to improve 54th, Compton Ave. to Fortuna. Bond Act. Adopted.

74th St.; ord. establishing grade of S. side 74th, Moneta to Main. Adopted.

78th St.; ord. establishing grade of 78th St., Normandie to Vermont. Adopted.

78th St.; ord. granting permission to improve 78th, Vermont to Budlong Private Contract. Adopted.

Arroyo Seco Bridge; City Eng. reported: "The County Surveyor has submitted to me, for approval, his plans for the bridge across the Arroyo Seco in the extension of Pasadena avenue between Los Angeles and South Pasadena. I transmit the same to your honorable body with a request that you approve them, if satisfactory." Approved by Council.

Barton Ave.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Barton, Gower to Vine, each side. Adopted.

Also ord. establishing grade of Barton Avenue, Gower to Vine. Adopted.

Bertha St.; ord. of intention to improve said street from Echo St. to Ave. 63. Bond Act. Adopted.

Bonnie Brae St.; pet. from D. L. Meley, et al., for improvement of Bonnie Brae st., 16th to Washington. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Buena Vista St. Bridge; City Eng. reported that in his opinion lions would look better than heads which were ordered as ornaments for said bridge. Figures were produced showing cost of such ornaments in concrete, granite, imitation bronze and bronze. Ref. to Art Commission and Bridge Com.

Cahuenga St.; ordinance changing and establishing the name of a certain street between the north boundary line of the city as it existed prior to October 27, 1909, and Santa Monica Blvd., to "Cahuenga St." Adopted.

Canal St.; final ord. for the sewering of Canal St. from water to 7th and other streets. Adopted.

Carlton Ave., Hollywood; pet. from Wm. O. Jackson requesting that the grade be established on Carlton ave. from Lemona to Jackson way. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Carlton Way, Hollywood; ord. establishing grade of Carlton Way from Lemona to Jackson Way. Adopted.

Carnation Ave.; City Eng. furnished City Attorney the necessary descriptions for the vacation of a portion of Carnation avenue and Crown Ave., lying westerly of Micheltorena St.

Commercial St.; ord. of intention to improve Commercial and other Sts. between Alameda St. and the L. A. River. Bond Act. Adopted.

Clifford St.; ord. of intention to improve Clifford from W. terminus to Allesandro. Bond Act. Adopted.

Commercial St.; ord. establishing name of Commercial St., N. Main to New High. Adopted.

Concord St.; appeal from L. A. Hughes et al, appealing from the acts of the Board of Public Works in accepting the improvement of Concord St. between First and Fourth Sts. Action deferred until Jan. 24th.

Crenshaw Blvd.; ordinance changing the name of Mont View Ave., or Montview Ave., to "Crenshaw Blvd." Adopted.

Echo St.; ordinance of intention to improve Echo St. from Hays Ave. to the southerly terminus of Echo St. Bond Act. Adopted.

Eleanor Ave.; ord. fixing and establishing curb line of Eleanor Ave., Gower to Vine, each side. Adopted

Eleanor Ave.; ord. establishing grade of Eleanor Ave., Gower to Vine. Adopted.

Figueroa St.; protest from J. Murrietta et al, protesting against the change of grade of Figueroa street from Boston street to a point 321.35 feet north of College street, and other streets. Action deferred until Jan. 24.

Hays Ave.; pet. from Harry L. Strob, et al., for the improvement of Hays ave., Avenue 60 to Avenue 61. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Fountain Ave.; ord. changing and establishing name of certain St. between Hartford Ave. and W. boundary line of city to "Fountain Ave."

Franklin Circle; ord. establishing curb lines on Franklin Circle, Vine St. to Franklin Ave. Adopted.

Gramercy Place; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Gramercy Place, 10th to Country Club Drive. Adopted.

Highland Ave.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Highland Ave., Aldama to Granada. Adopted.

Hobart Blvd.; ordinance changing and establishing the name of a certain street between Barrow St. and a certain unnamed street, commonly known as "Benefit St."; to "Hobart Blvd." Adopted.

Humboldt St.; ordinance of intention to improve a portion of Humboldt St. and other streets, by constructing storm sewers and appurtenances. Adopted. This work is to be done under the Bond provisions of the Vrooman Act.

Jefferson St.; ord. of intention to improve Jefferson, Vermont to Western Ave. Bond Act. Adopted.

Juanita Ave.; ordinance changing and establishing the name of a certain street between Temple St. and Melrose Ave., to "Juanita Ave." Adopted.

Kent St.; pet. from N. Goff, et al., for the improvement of Kent st., Waterloo to Fanning. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Lexington Ave.; ordinance changing and establishing the name of a certain street between Holly St. and the west boundary line of the city, heretofore known as "Emelita Ave.," "Lexington Ave.," "Emmet Ave.," or "Cedar St.," to "Lexington Ave." Adopted.

Lucile Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Lucile Ave. from 832 feet south of Sunset Blvd. to 1232 feet south of Sunset Blvd. Johnson Act. Adopted.

Macy St.; City Eng. reported. "For some time this office has had an order to prepare plans for the paving of Macy St. between Main St. and the Los Angeles river. The preparation of these plans have been delayed from time to time on account of drainage conditions. I would recommend that the matter be referred to the City Council with the request that steps be once more taken leading to the construction of the Alameda St. storm sewer, and that if this cannot be brought about at once, that the paving of Macy St. be deferred until such sewer can be constructed." Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Main St.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Main between Slauson and Manchester Ave. Adopted.

Main St.; pet. from C. L. Benham, et al., protesting against contemplated change in numbers on Main, 5th to 6th sts. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Main St.; City Eng. reported: "I recommend that I be instructed to prepare plans for the paving to its full width with asphalt of Main st. between Thirty-sixth place and the south line of Fifty-eighth st. Proceedings are now under way for the opening of Main st. across the Santa Fe right of way and on this account it appears to me advisable to omit paving for the present between Fifty-eighth st. and Slauson ave." Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Marmion Way; pet. from C. O. Henry, et al., for sewering of Marmion way bet. Mt. Washington drive and Avenue 43. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Middlebury St.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Middlebury St., Hoover to Vermont. Adopted.

Morcom Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Morcom Ave., Alvarado to Cerro Gordo. Bond Act. Adopted.

Mozart St.; ordinance establishing the name of Mozart St. between Av. 16 and Av. 21. Adopted.

North Broadway; protest from C. E. Donnatin et al, protesting against the change in grade of North Broadway from Buena Vista St. Bridge to Cottage Home St. Action deferred until Jan. 31.

Ord St.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Ord St., Castelar to Yale, on each side. Adopted.

Oregon St.; ordinance changing the name of Adelaide St. between Ezra St. and Camulos St., to "Oregon St." Adopted.

Park Boulevard; pet. from the N., N. E. and N. W. Imp. Assn. submitting resolution in favor of constructing a boulevard from the present driveway between Elysian and Griffith Parks. Filed, for the reason that when Alessandro street has been improved it is the intention that this street will be a continuation and will be a connecting link between Griffith and Elysian Parks.

W. Pico St.; pet. from C. F. Stetzel, et al., for permission to install a five horsepower electric motor at 720 W. Pico. Ref. to Pub. Welfare Com.

Roberts Ave.; ord. establishing curb lines on Roberts Ave., Vine to Franklin Circle. Adopted.

St. Andrews Place; ordinance changing the name of Victor Ave. to "St. Andrews Place." Adopted.

Santa Monica Blvd.; deed from Cahuenga Valley Lemon Ass'n. to portions of Lots 2 and 3 of Block 23, Colegrove, for the widening of Santa Monica Blvd. from Townsend Ave. easterly. Accepted.

San Pedro Street Names; pet. from W. A. Weldon, et al., with reference to street names in San Pedro, and suggesting that if the names or numbers of streets should conflict with corresponding numbers in Los Angeles, then a prefix or affix of "S. P." should be added. Ref. to the Bd. Pub. Wks.

Stoll St.; ordinance fixing and establishing the curb line on the northerly side of Stoll St. between the easterly line of Pioneer Investment & Trust Company's Windemere Park and the westerly line of said Park. Adopted. Also on the southerly side between Arminta St. and Austin St., and between Austin St. and the westerly line of Barrow's Subdivision, at 15 feet northerly from and parallel with said southerly line of Stoll St. Adopted.

Stanford Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Stanford Ave from 45th St. 135.5 ft. north. Johnson Act. Adopted.

Sunset Blvd.; City Eng. reported: "I recommend that opening and widening proceedings be instituted to condemn the street known as Sunset boulevard, New Sunset boulevard and Hollywood boulevard, between Benefit and Winona boulevard, to a width of 100 feet, between Benefit street and Hollywood boulevard, and a width of 80 feet between Vermont avenue and Winona boulevard." Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Vermont Ave.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines on Vermont Ave., 6th to Los Feliz Ave. Adopted.

Vine St.; final ord. for the improvement of Vine street from Wilson Ave. to Fountain Ave. Adopted.

Walton Ave.; ord. of intention to improve Walton Ave., 37th St. to 37th Place. Johnson Act. Adopted.

Wesley Ave.; pet. from University of Southern California, et al., requesting that the name of Wesley ave. between Jefferson and Santa Monica, be changed to University place. Ref. to Sts. and Blvds. Com.

Westmoreland Ave.; ord. changing and establishing the name of a certain street between Temple St. and Melrose Ave., to "Westmoreland Ave." Adopted.

Wilshire Blvd.; ord. of intention to change and establish grade of Wilshire Blvd., Benton Blvd. to former west boundary line of the city. Adopted.

Wilton Place; ord. of intention to improve Wilton Place and other Sts. Bond Act. Adopted.

Yale St.; ord. fixing and establishing curb lines bet. Ord and Alpine. Adopted.

BIDS RECEIVED

6th St.; for improving Sixth street between that portion of Central avenue extending north from the said Sixth street and the west line of Alameda street.

3rd Ave.; for improving Third avenue from Pico street to a point 935 feet north.

Alta St.; no bids were received for improving Alta street between Manitou avenue and North Broadway, under Ordinance No. 21,365 (New Series). Bids for the said work will be again received Monday, January 30, 1911.

Alta St.; for improving Alta street from Manitou avenue to North Broadway.

Lord St.; for sewering Lord street between the Arroyo de los Posos main sewer and Judson street.

Stanford St.; for improving said street from 45th street to 135 feet north.

Spence St.; for improving said street from Seventh street to Venice avenue.

Municipal Ferry; for furnishing municipal ferry boat and landings to the city.

BIDS AWARDED

3rd St.; for street improvement from Saratoga street to 341 feet southeast.

Marmion Way; for street improvement in Marmion Way, from Dayton avenue to the northeasterly terminus of said Marmion Way.

Mesa St.; for sewer construction in Mesa street, between Twenty-second street and Twentieth street.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

52nd Place Tract; map of Tifel Brothers Fifty-second Place Tract. Adopted.

Additional Firemen Wanted; recommendation of Fire Com. that following extra positions be provided: One captain, second class; one engineer, second class; one lieutenant, five firemen; in order to place in commission on March 1 Engine House No. 25, located at Euclid an Stephenson avenues. Ref. to Supply Com.

Billboard Licenses; ord. requiring a quarterly license of one-fourth of a cent for each square foot of the front surface area of billboards and advertising signboards. Also limiting the height to 9 ft. 4 in.; prohibiting billboards in residence district, except on lots advertised for sale, when said boards must not be larger than 4x4 ft. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Boyle Heights Industrial District; pet. from Frank A. Kelly, et al., asking that the industrial district on the east side of the Los Angeles River, in the southeast part of Boyle Heights, be enlarged so as to include the lands owned by petitioners as therein set forth. Ref. to the Pub. Welfare Com.

Crossing Bells a Nuisance; pet. from John Fleigaus complaining of the ringing of crossing bells on the Pacific Electric Railroad from 8th st. to Slauson Junction. Ref. to the Bd. of Pub. Utilities.

Cross Town Car Line; Bd. of Pub. Utilities reported that it had withheld pet. of L. A. Ry. Co. for franchise for a street railway on parts of Alvarado, Hoover and Jefferson Sts., thence along Central Ave. and Vernon Ave., as Council had declared Alvarado St. from 7th to Hoover Sts. to be a public boulevard along or upon which no railroad franchise shall ever be granted, and for this reason Bd. has held pet. in the endeavor to arrange with L. A. Ry. Co. a different route which may more or less satisfactorily meet th requirements of the people.

Cow Limits; ord. including within cow district No. 2 that portion of the city from Thirty-eighth street on Hooper avenue to Vernon avenue and westerly on Vernon avenue to South Park avenue. Adopted.

Disposal of Power; request of Consolitation Commission that the Council be requested to provide for submission to the people at the coming election of March 6, 1911, of the proposition whether the city shall itself distribute the electrical energy belonging to the city to its inhabitants and other consumers, or sell the same, or any part thereof, at wholesale to the power companies for distribution to such consumers. Ref. to Public Welfare Com.

Echo Park Playground; deed from John H. Folks for land in Echo Park Playground. Accepted.

Election Supplies; City Clerk instructed to advertise for bids on 90 sets of election supplies.

Electric Signs; petition from W. H. Clune et al, asking that the height of electric signs be changed from 20 to 30 feet. Denied.

Electric Wiring; recommendation of the Fire Chief requesting the enactment of an ordinance regulating the installation of service wires and electric sign feed wires, providing for accessible shut off of electrical current into buildings other than residences. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Fire Apparatus; City Clerk instructed to advertise for bids on the following motor propelled vehicles: One chemical and hose wagon, three fire dept. chassis, one hook and ladder truck.

Gamewell Demands Rejected by Auditor; City Auditor rejected demands of Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Co. which had been ordered paid by Council, claiming they were exhorbitant and illegal. Ref. to Supply Com. and to City Atty. for report as to Council's power to reconsider demands.

Garbage Disposal; Inspector of Public Works reported: "When the present contract for the disposal of garbage was entered into the need of the city incinerator for the destruction of garbage ceased. The question arose as to what should be done with the incinerator. We have been advised of excessive charges which were being made by private parties for the dumping of combustible rubbish and market refuse.

"I recommend that the incinerator contractor be permitted to erect an addition furnace, at his own expense; that the charges be modified and that the rubbish men and haulers of market refuse be compelled to deliver their material at the incinerator or the auxiliary plant." Ref. to Pub. Welfare Com.

Gas Feed Pipes; recommendation of the Fire Chief relative to enactment of an ordinance regulating the installation of gas feed pipes in buildings other than residences, providing for accessible shutoff. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Gas Service Refused; in recomplaint of R. B. Young against Domestic Gas Co. gas bills and that the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation has refused to serve him with gas. Bd. Pub. Utilities reported:

"That anyone whose residence is within one hundred (100) feet of a gas main has the right to insist upon the company furnishing him gas, and the fact that he was then supplied with gas by another company, which he desired discontinued, is no concern of the company from which he desires to take.

"We therefore recommend that your honorable body pass such ordinance as may be requisite to give the city power to compel all utility corporations to comply with demands for service, and to render illegal, with proper penalties ensuing, any agreement or combination among such corporations, to withold service in territory served by both." Ref. to Legislation Com.

Griffith Park Water System; City Clerk instructed to advertise for bids on galvanized iron pipe and fittings, also on steel pipe for said system.

Harbor Rates; ord. fixing rates for wharfage in harbor, also fixing rates for docking charges for handling freight and providing for the license for taking tolls on wharves. Adopted.

Highway to Harbor; communication from the City Planning Committee, suggesting that City Council be requested to see to it that the highway between San Pedro, Wilmington and Los Angeles is completed at the earliest possible date. Filed, as the Board of Supervisors, who have this matter under their jurisdiction and control, are using their best efforts to have the said road or roads completed at the earliest possible date.

Hollenbeck Park; pet. from 9th Ward Imp. Assn. for sidewalking on west side of Hollenbeck Park bet. E. 4th and E. 6th. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Wks.

Loafing in River Bed; recommendation of the Police Chief relative to the enactment of an ordinance regulating the use of the official bed of the Los Angeles River, making it unlawful for anyone not engaged in labor or some lawful pursuit to loaf or sleep there. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Municipal Railroad; City Eng. reported on request of Council for a report regarding a municipal railroad to connect the business district of Los Angeles with the harbor, and suggested a route to be followed, terminals, freight yards, etc.

Passage at Breakwater Wanted; pet. from Frank A. Garbutt, et al., for the establishment of a small boat passage at the westerly extremity of the present government breakwater at San Pedro. Ref. to the Harbor Commission.

Protest Against Municipal Ferry; pet. from San Pedro Trans. Co. protesting against the establishment or operation of any ferry by the city of Los Angeles within a mile of the ferry now being operated across the channel of the inner harbor of Los Angeles. Ref. to City Atty.

Railway Companies and Street Openings; pet. from Henry C. Jensen, et al., asking that efforts be put forth with the State Legislature to have a law enacted by which the railroad and street car companies shall be compelled to pay their just proportion for opening and widening streets of this city.

Filed. City Atty. reported to Council verbally that the matter would be taken up by Mr. Hewitt at the present session of Legislature.

Redondo Railway Franchise; comn. from L. A. and Redondo Ry. Co., stating that there has been a misunderstanding with reference to the operation of its cars on the streets of the city and filing petition for franchise over the streets under consideration. Ref. to the Bd. of Pub. Utilities.

Also pet. from L. A. & Redondo Ry. Co., applying for grant of franchise to construct and operate its railroad commencing at 35th st. and Grand ave.; thence to Jefferson st.; thence to Grand ave.; thence to 7th st.; thence to Broadway; thence to 2nd st. to Spring st.

Also commencing at 7th st. and Broadway; thence on Broadway to Main st.; thence on Moneta ave. to private right of way L. A. and Redondo Ry. Co. Ref. to Bd. Pub. Utilities.

Sidewalk Displays; recommendation of Police Chief relative to the enactment of an ordinance regulating the use of sidewalks for the display of merchandise in space exceeding 18 inches in width from the property line in all sections of the city outside of the business district. Ref. to Legislation Com.

Store Department for City; ord. creating a store dept. and regulating the purchase of materials and supplies. Ordinance abolishes the supply department as it has been conducted and puts it on a footing similar to the purchasing department of railroads and corporations. Adopted. The storeroom is to be located in the new annex when it is completed.

Street Speaking; presented by Legislation Com., ordinance amending section 4 of Ordinance No. 20,534, prohibiting street speaking in the territory included between Los Angeles street from Third street up to and including the Plaza; thence west to New High street and thence south along New High street to connect with the present district. Ref. back to Legislation Com. for further consideration.

BANK CLEARINGS

Los Angeles bank clearings from Jan. 11 to 17 inclusive, showing comparisons with corresponding weeks of 1910 and 1909:

	1911	1910	1909
Jan. 11	$ 3,538,348.64	$ 2,972,245.72	$ 2,599,754.25
Jan. 12	2,901,286.11	2,419,187.91	1,953,327.01
Jan. 13	3,380,768.92	2,385,622.79	1,794,081.94
Jan. 14	2,924,371.37	2,347,478.32	2,163,698.33
Jan. 16	2,850,510.59	2,639,353.88	2,246,766.00
Jan. 17	3,111,437.18	2,447,438.92	1,892,536.62
Totals	$18,706,722.81	$15,211,327.54	$12,650,164.15

Suburban Home
FOR SALE

MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.
Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

. . . DIRECTORY . . .

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

APARTMENTS
THE ST. REGIS, Housekeeping 237 S. Flower. A7336; Main 2290

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS
ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DRY GOODS
VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

EXCURSIONS
BALLOON ROUTE, L. A. Pac. Co. Station, Hill St., bet. 4th and 5th. 10355: Broadway 4000.

MEN'S FURNISHINGS
HARRIS & FRANK, 437 43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS
UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

PIANOS AND ORGANS
GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

PURITAS DISTILLED WATER
LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. Phones Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191.

REAL ESTATE
MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT
BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING
BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT · SPEED · SAFETY

Mt. Lowe

The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

Pacific Outlook
La Follette's Weekly $1.60 Per Year

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

311 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 5 | Los Angeles, California, January 28, 1911 | 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

LODGE COMES BACK

Badly mauled, touscled and battered, his armor knocked to pieces and his banner trailing in the dust, the "Scholar-in-Politics" manages to crawl back into the Senate—a sorry enough spectacle. He knows the people of his state do not want him. The proof of it lies in the overwhelming majority given the ex-Republican Foss for governor, who from every platform in Massachusetts denounced Lodge and all his works. But there was a legislature filled with representatives of special interest and hold-over politicians, a body in no sense responsive to the popular will, and just enough votes could be found to save Lodge from joining Hale, Depew, Dick, Flint, Burrows, Aldrich and the rest of the Tories that are now transplanted into the Has-been column.

But at what a cost! Henry IV. of France, he of Navarre and the white plume, said that Paris was worth a mass, and gave up his religion for a united kingdom. To win the senatorship Lodge, son-in-law of the Carpet Trust, was compelled to surrender the most sacred tenets of the High Tariff Rake-off, viz.: Revision in the mass and revision by politicians rather than by experts. When the Aldrich revision upwards of 1909 was in progress, who voted straighter than Lodge? Nobody except Flint the lemon-lover of California. And who more fierce than Lodge in denouncing the plan of a revision by separate schedules? When the poor little faint-hearted plea of President Taft for a commission to study tariffs and report on them from a non-political, business standpoint came before the Senate, whose sneers and jeers were crueller than those of the Massachusetts senator? One phrase after another was struck out of the bill describing the powers of the proposed commission, until its members were reduced to the rank of errand boys, and it was only by the most outrageous stretching of executive authority, worse than the worst his predecessor ever attempted, that President Taft galvanized the commission into a semblance of real life.

The Scholar in Politics! It is an ancient tale but it applies to Lodge as to no other man in public life: that the politicians think he is a great scholar, and the scholars think he is a great politician, and at that the scholars have largely the best of the argument. Thanks to father-in-law's millions and to a set smile he has made some progress in politics, but the scholarship claim assays nothing but a few commonplace lives of statesmen and some limited excursions into the fields of history.

There is one good thing to be said for Lodge, and that is that he has won the loyal friendship of Theodore Roosevelt. It is quite possible but that for the Colonel's endorsement in this campaign, Lodge would not have been able to return to the Senate. Teddy's weak spot always lay in his judgment of men, a fact of which Lodge is not the most conspicuous visible proof, there being another exhibit weighing 200 pounds heavier.

However, the new Lodge will not be found as dangerous as the old. His statesmanship is largely of the band-wagon variety. He shines in the reflected light of a majority. When Aldrich is in the saddle he is an Aldrich man, but with Insurgents holding the reins, he is likely to turn progressive. At all events, he is pretty well committed on the two principal issues of tariff reform—voting by separate schedules and the preparation of figures by a commission of experts.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager

C. D. WILLARD, A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing Editors

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

TO CALIFORNIA WEEKLY READERS:

Pacific Outlook announces that Mr. A. J. Pillsbury, former editor of the California Weekly, has joined the staff of this paper as associate contributing editor. Mr. Pillsbury will also continue in Pacific Outlook, "Political Table Talk, by the Watchman."

If you were a subscriber to the California Weekly at the time it suspended publication and will address a postal card to the Pacific Outlook, 311 E. 4th St., Los Angeles, requesting that it be substituted for the California Weekly, this publication will be sent to your address for the remainder of the unexpired subscription.

\+ \+ \+

THE ALDRICH FINANCIAL SCHEME

Our California dailies, being chiefly concerned with that which is local and ephemeral, it has been needful to await the arrival of eastern papers to tell us what the Aldrich currency plan contemplates. It behooves all to take notice.

Nor are we wholly justified in dismissing the Aldrich plan with the exclamation that, being from Aldrich, it must needs be in the interests of The Interests and antagonistic to the common good. The presumption lies that way, but it is a presumption which investigation may overcome. There is a possibility of Aldrich being right, the more especially as he is evidently preparing to meet his God and hopes to crown his public career with at least one meritorious act to his credit. A few whiffs of brimstone are sometimes wonderfully disinfecting. Let the Aldrich plan be considered as apart from Aldrich as possible.

For we do know that our existing financial system is unstable, wont to become panical upon occasion and to stampede spreading consternation and ruin in its path. All countries suffer financial depressions and financial panics occur here and there now and again, but in the United States we have financial disturbances as often as some dipsomaniacs go on sprees, and it behooves us to find a remedy for our attacks of financial nerves if we may.

What, then, is the Aldrich idea?

It is, in merest outline, this: There shall be a "Reserve Association of America," which would seem to be a central bank under a name that smells more sweet. The starting point is to be local associations of national banks formed all over the country with not less than ten banks in each association and having not less than $5,000,000 of capital and surplus combined. Each local association shall elect a board of directors, three-fifths of such board being elected by the banks as individuals and two-fifths by the same banks in proportion to their holdings of shares in the "Reserve Association of America."

For a next step the whole country is to be divided into fifteen reserve districts with a branch of the Reserve Association in each such district. Each of the local reserve associations will elect a director of the branch association for that district, and these directors will forthwith meet and proceed to elect two-thirds as many more directors as were already elected, this time, however, in proportion to the number of shares the respective local associations hold in the "Reserve Association of America." The final step in constituting the the district directorship is to elect to the directorate another third of the number of locals in the branch, but this time from business men not officers of banks, a bit of outside leaven to take off the taint of being wholly a bankers' institution.

The "Reserve Association of America," the monument to Aldrich of which the local associations form the base and the district associations the pedestal, is to have forty-five directors, six of whom shall be the governor of the reserve association and two deputies, appointed by the President of the United States, the secretary of the treasury, secretary of commerce and labor and controller of the currency, all direct representatives of the executive branch of government. Representatives of the legislative branch of national and state governments are ineligible to participation at any point. Fifteen directors are elected, one from each branch as a branch and twelve more elected in proportion to the shares held in the "Reserve Asociation of America." Finally, this board so constituted elects twelve more directors fairly representative of the commercial, agricultural and industrial interests of the country who are not officers of banks, although bank directors are not, in any case, to be classed as bank officers. "The Reserve Association of America" is now ready for business.

What will it do?

It will take over all of Uncle Sam's money without interest and, as part compensation, pay all of Uncle Sam's bills without charging him exchange; fix rates of discount and foreign exchange from time to time, take over the note-issuing function of the national banks as rapidly as present issues are retired or additional issues are needed, receive deposits from association banks only, rediscount their paper for them whenever required, establish correspondent banks in foreign countries, issue its own notes upon its own assets to supply currency in panical times or in other seasons of stress, borrow where there is money in surplus and lend where there is demand and, in short, so equalize the ebb and flow of fluid capital as to make our currency and banking system stable, at once beyond the manipulation of partisan politics and of great, selfish, designing special interests. All profits above five per cent are to go to the national government. The Aldrich plan might do it. But look into it.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE PRISON PROBLEM

California needs a reformatory for first offenders. It needs other things. It can not have all the things it needs all at once. That thing which it needs most should come first. What is it? The State Board of Prison Directors say that California most needs to have the prisons it has put into such condition as will make it possible to transform those graduate schools of criminality into reformatory institutions. They are right.

Public sentiment in California has not been adequately educated on the subjects of penology, criminology and reformation. It is under the old dispensation of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, and one reason why it has not been better educated is because the spoils of office system has characterized the conduct of all our reformatory and penal institutions. Convicts, or, speaking in the vernacular of the prison atmosphere, "cons," are looked upon as being enemies to society whose first need is to be roundly come up with, the second consideration being to keep them where the dogs cannot bite them so that society may be protected from them. What finally becomes of them has been of small public concern. It is time to usher in a new order of penology, and that new order should begin with the abolition of the State Board of Prison Directors, mainly composed of patronage purveyors who, at best, can only give odd hours to the business in hand, and the substitution for it of a state department of prisons and reformatories with a general superintendent at its head empowered to so organize his department as to cover the whole problem of criminality from the juvenile delinquent to that occasional congenital criminal who, for the protection of society, must be caged like a bear in a zoological garden until death bursts the bars and sets a malignant spirit free.

Such a department rightly headed may so transform our whole problem of dealing with criminality as to make another state institution superfluous. But that consummation will not have been reached without first bringing the whole prison problem under the care of trained men who give their whole time to the work, without so educating the judges of criminal courts that they may be, at any rate, less than mediaeval in the conception of their duties, without taking the public into the fullest confidence and giving it at least an elementary education in the science of penology, or without so constituting our penal institutions as to make it possible to do reformatory work within their walls. Let us begin at the beginning by putting our prison houses in order and submitting to the people an amendment to the constitution abolishing the state board of prison politicians and giving the legislature full power to organize a department for the punishment and prevention of crime.

But the best we can hope for under any system will be only as good as public sentiment demands. Our existing system, abominable though it is, is as good as public sentiment has required. California has been contented with low standards. We have been contented to be governed by a railroad for the benefit of that railroad, contented to put up with such an administration of all our institutions as might be hoped for from pliant tools of special interests and there is not an institution in the state, from the State University down, that has not been contaminated by this baneful influence. Every such institution has had to go to these low-grade men for whatever was needed to sustain it and that necessity has proven debasing.

Give God the praise, but there is a new order in our political life and with the progress of that new order will come an elevation of standards in the institutional life of the state. The new spirit will be all pervasive. It will reach the judge on the bench, the jailor in his office, the sanctum of every newspaper, the pulpit of every church, the fireside of every home. There is not a state in this union whose jails alone do not create more criminality than all the prisons and reformatories of such states can redeem to good citizenship, and any scheme of punishment and reformation that leaves the city and county jails out of consideration will fail of making good.

One of the first wrongs to be righted is that of the attitude of organized labor toward prison labor. It is irrational but not unnatural. It grew out of the system of contracting prison labor to private interests, a system that never should have gained a foothold in any civilized country. It is not the competition with free labor that hurts. If those men were out of prison and at work they would be in competition with free labor. It is the unfairness of that competition that hurts, and with the removal of that unfairness, there should be removed the last objection, not only of setting prisoners to work, but to paying them or their families something over and above their keep for the work they do. How those poor striped devils will work for a chance to accumulate a little stake to go out with! Or for something to send home to the family while they are doing penance for their wrong! And what a new light it does let in upon those darkened lives in the radiance of which to lay the foundation for a new manhood! Every prison should be a factory, every reformatory a trade school, every so-called reform school a school in fact, with the farm and the shops for the boy and not the boy for the farm and the shops, as has been the case in California and nearly everywhere else.

There is a great work ahead crying to be done, crying for a public sentiment that will put up with nothing short of the best that may be done to prevent crime as well as to punish it. As good a first step as any will be to so equip the penal system we have as to make it possible for it to do more good than harm. It is not now.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE TWO DROMIOS

After long pretense of ignoring the issue and then backing away and dodging it for a quarter of a century or more, the American Senate and the English House of Lords are simultaneously brought face to face with the question of their own reformation.

Our American House of Peers is not in favor of the election of its members by the people. Why? Because they know—the great majority of them—that if the matter had been left to the people, they, the present members would not have been chosen.

The English senators want no reform in their august body. Why? Because they know perfectly well that any change which would be beneficial to the nation as a whole would inevitably derive them of privileges they now enjoy at the expense of the people.

Senators may dodge and squirm and peers may rave and rant, but the world moves and the people will come into their own.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE LADIES' PRIVILEGE

Just before leaving Sacramento, whither she went to urge legislators not to vote to submit the woman's suffrage amendment, Mrs. Caswell of Los Angeles gave an interview to a newspaper in which she says, or is made to say, that many members of the Legislature who are voting for the submission of the amendment have told her that they would rather vote "no" on the question, but are compelled to obey the wishes of the Governor. Furthermore, Mrs. Caswell says that she is unable to see any difference between the present arrangement, where men are forced to vote against their convictions through the power of the executive, and the old machine method of boss rule in this state.

Thus we meet again, coming from a new and unexpected source, the familiar reacmary charge that the organized effort of the party leaders to bring about the fulfillment of the party's pledges to the people constitutes a "machine," and that all machines and all bosses and all leaders are exactly alike and equally reprehensible.

To begin with this "I wanted-to-vote-for-you-but-could-not-because-I-was-coerced" story is as old as politics, as old as mankind. Men will lie handily to one another on this subject, and when it comes to explaining a vote to a lady—really, it is too perfect an alibi to be overlooked in time of need.

Mrs. Caswell and her small but devoted band of anti's are contending that woman is endangering her privileges in her pursuit of rights, and there is a good deal of merit in that idea. It is not strange that it should take hold particularly among those women whose means (or that of their husbands) and whose social position ensures them the good fortune of having those privileges respected to the fullest.

But foremost among these privileges in whose behalf rights are to be sacrificed is that of being lied to by men. It is part of that superb, old-time gallantry which the stronger sex should always show to the weaker, never to tell a woman the truth, particularly if it is in any way disagreeable. "You are the only woman I ever loved." "I mistook you for your daughter." "I wanted to vote your way but couldn't." It is all of the same order. It it part of the program to treat woman as an inferior being, as a child. Most men have a theory that women like it. For that matter, most men would rather receive a bit of flattery than be told some disagreeable truth.

Now it is a fact that the Governor and Mr. Lissner, chairman of the state committee, and Senator Works and the leading men of the Legislature all maintain that since the party pledged itself in its platform to present the suffrage amendment to the people of the state for them to vote upon, there was only one honorable thing to do, and that was to fulfill the pledge. They made their views on that subject generally known, and as their influence carries weight—and should carry weight—it no doubt moved some wavering votes in that direction. Any man who felt strongly on the issue, however, could do exactly as he pleased and run no risk of serious disfavor; because the matter was not one in which the administration was vitally concerned—as it is, for example, in the railway bill.

As to the remainder of the lady's interview, that she can see no difference between the "bossing" now in progress at Sacramento and that in vogue under the Southern Pacific regime, we prefer to allow ourselves the privilege of believing she did not say it. The paper in which it appears, which the public of Los Angeles will readily identify when we say it is the one that always prints a filthy story on its first page, never hesitates to warp an interview to fit its reactionary brand of politics. So we will give Mrs. Caswell the benefit of the doubt. If it were possible that a cultivated and experienced woman, like this one, were actually unable to recognize the difference between the frank and open use of the logical influence of party leaders to bring about the keeping of party pledges set forth in the published platform, threshed out in a campaign and accepted by the voters, and the crafty secret work of men like Walter Parker and Jere Burke, in the pay of the Southern Pacific, ordering the votes of a brigade of machine legislators down to the smallest detail, and shaping legislation not for the benefit of the people, and not for the keeping of party pledges, but for the betrayal of the public interest to the greed of a corporation—if such a woman can see no difference between the old order and the new, then she presents in the evident obscuration of her intellect a more potent argument against allowing women to vote than any she put forward at Sacramento.

* * *

END OF PRIZE-FIGHTING

The present Legislature is likely to put an end to the prize-fight game, and several measures, all of them drastic, are under consideration, with a certainty that some one of them will carry. The one that meets with greatest favor among people who have had practical experience with this problem absolutely forbids all fighting exhibitions, ignoring the matter of weight of gloves, number of rounds and everything else. This would, it is said, make a friendly bout with soft gloves at a Y. M. C. A. gymnasium impossible. Boxing is an ancient and a pretty game which a lot of ruffians and gamblers, ably assisted by the newspapers, have commercialized and ruined. Sad experience seems to show that it is impossible to make any kind of legislation that distinguishes between the prize-fight and the innocent boxing match do the work required. One way or another, the pugs manage to hide behind it, and the result is that the game goes on. In laws controlling the liquor traffic, horse racing, prize fighting and such matters there is always an urgent plea, put forward often by very excellent people, that drastic legislation should be avoided. The disagreeable fact is that as a rule nothing but drastic legislation is any earthly good in such cases.

* * *

MUNICIPAL PLANT ECONOMIES

It is frequently urged by those who are opposed to municipal operation of utilities that it is impossible to effect economy on the side of the payroll. Tacoma has just been reorganizing its force in the municipal lighting plant and in the last three months has cut down the pay roll $5000, or $20,000 a year. Few reductions were made. The saving was accomplished by the discharge of a number of men and an increase in the amount of work required of the remainder. There were some advances of salary to compensate for added work.

* * *

MUNICIPAL NEWSPAPER FOR LOS ANGELES

A curious misunderstanding has come about with respect to Charter Amendment No. 15 in the series to be voted upon next March by the people of Los Angeles. It includes among the powers of the city this provision: "to publish a newspaper and to sell and distribute the same." That is all there is of the amendment—just those eleven words, and yet reading the comments one is led to suppose that all sorts of radical things are proposed. We have not looked the matter up, but would be disposed to wager that the same provision will be found among the charter powers of a dozen or more American cities. This must be so—or at least should be so—for there are a dozen or more of them that are publishing papers—two or three of them dailies and the rest weeklies. Some of these contain what is known as city printing and some do not. In European cities the practice of running a municipal paper to contain city notices and advertisements is well-nigh universal. With us, on the contrary, it has been customary to use this printing for local newspaper graft. The charter provision is not mandatory; it simply gives the city the power to be exercised whenever it sees fit.

* * *

PERPETUAL FRANCHISE

The Supreme Court of Oregon holds that a city has no right to grant a utility company a perpetual franchise. Many of the franchises held by street car companies in Eastern cities are for 999 years. Some of these companies moved by a dread that some court might call this a perpetual franchise and cause it to be annulled have secured a 50-year limit instead.

* * *

PRESS COMMENT

The Vote Sellers

Recent political news from Ohio gives one an edifying glimpse of the mass of cheerful and impenetrable stupidity which exists in the world. No doubt those Russians who marched up to be shot at by the Little Father's Cossacks in defense of their right to present a petition to the throne, or those Finns who sacrificed blood and liberty in support of their constitution, would be considerably disconcerted at learning that hundreds of theoretically respectable Ohioans, possessing far greater political privileges, gayly bartered them away for a few dollars in current coin. Probably the same Ohioans would have fought a czar who took away their right to vote. They were too dull to understand that somebody had fought for that right in the past and somebody would have to fight again in the future to regain it if its keeping now were exclusively in hands as little guided by intelligence as their own.

There is a good deal of vote selling in this country. It is as prevalent, we believe, among the native-born as among the foreign-born. Never having known anything but free institutions, they fail to understand that such institutions are not the free, irrevocable gift of Nature, but a result of much human sacrifice. They would amend Lincoln's Gettysburg Address to read: "That we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people by the people for the people shall not perish from the earth—unless we can get four dollars for our vote."

Incidentally it is a proof of the relative goodness of our Government; for not even a vote seller would barter away his ballot unless he felt perfectly sure that his essential liberty would be undisturbed, no matter who might be elected.—Saturday Evening Post.

A stronger argument for peace than Carnegie's $10,000,000 is our annual pension roll.—Wall Street Journal.

Somebody ought to put a want ad in the Congressional Record for whitewash that will stick.—Washington Post.

Something must be done this year to reduce the high cost of high flying.—Chattanooga Times.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By THE WATCHMAN

The Problem of Alien Ownership The issue of alien ownership of land is inconvenient whenever raised and troublesome whoever raises it, and yet it is an issue that will not down. It must not down. Be it remembered there is no divinity to save us the consequences of our own acts. Divine grace may forgive us our iniquities but their consequences go on and on. Our blunders share the same fatalities that befall our iniquities. Their consequences last. Not many understand that the most stupendous economic fact in human history has taken place here where we live and while we are living, but such is the truth. That star of empire that took its prehistoric way westward from the uplands of Asia now stands over the Pacific Coast as stood the Star of the East over the manger at Bethlehem of Judea. Shall it go on? Shall it go back? Shall it stay where it is? Shall the issue be determined by legislation, by war or by that struggle of the fittest to survive that requires ages to be worked out? Where shall the border line between the Aryan and the Mongolian be established? Or shall it be established at all? Shall the frontier of Aryan migration be fixed at the 180th meridian west of Greenwich or at the 130th, or shall it recede to the 120th? Or shall there be a mezotint, twilight zone of amalgamation betwixt white and yellow that shall extend from perhaps the 120th meridian west longitude to possibly the 150th east of Greenwich, dedicating the Pacific Coast and Paeific Ocean to miscegenation and human mongrelism? Our legislators fondly think that they are dealing with alien land ownership in California, and they find that quite perplexing enough, but these are the problems they are really attacking. Is it any wonder that our statesmen, from Governor down, put their hands to their foreheads to mitigate the ache of perplexity?

Some Elemental Fundamentals This alien ownership issue will neither down nor will it yield to off-hand treatment. There are many parties in interest. Commerce between Aryan and Mongolian there must be. Therefore there must be commercial residential rights for all peoples among all peoples. Stick a peg there. Such residential rights carry with them rights to schools, to full public participation in those utilities that are meant for the public, including leasehold and title in fee to residential and commercial properties; but these concessions imply neither agricultural nor industrial participation, rights of suffrage nor liability to be called into military or civil service. All these relations are to be determined by the treaty making powers and usages of nations and are not subjects for state legislation except in the absence of national legislation on the subject. Commercial comity among nations will involve something of racial amalgamation, but not enough to hurt for the reason that an alien strain submerged in a denizen mass soon runs out. The progeny of American and Japanese is half cast, the next generation is quarter blood, the next eighth, sixteenth, thirty-second. The fourth or fifth generation leaves not a trace of alien blood to give a tinge to the skin or a slant to the eye. But with industrial and agricultural migrations it is different. Either amalgamation or race antagonism are inevitable with the greater likelihood in favor of both of them. Races cannot live together in separateness and peace except one race consent to be a serving class for the other, a status as demoralizing for the served as for the serving. It involves both races in a common ruin and leaves them with nothing else in common except economic and moral failure. But neither Aryan nor Mongolian is or has ever consented to be a servile race. These two races differ as widely as the ocean that separates them. Individuals may serve individuals pro and con, but neither race will serve the other race. They must dwell together as equals or not at all, and if they try to dwell together as equals there will be amalgamation or war to the point of extermination. The eventuality is fraught with greater hazards than either race can afford to take. Therefore it were best that they live apart.

On Industrial and Agricultural Lines Wherever the boundary between Aryan and Mongolian civilizations is set up it will be based on industrial and agricultural lines. Neither people will be allowed to settle industrially or agriculturally in the territory of the other. The workingman and the agricultural laborer must be rigidly and mutually excluded and land ownership must be mutually limited to commercial purposes and uses incident thereto. This is the problem. The legislature of California cannot settle it but it can force it upon national and international attention, which also will be a valued public service. California convinced the nation and the world of the wisdom and justiee of Chinese exclusion. It can do the same with Japanese. It can compel the erection of the industrial and agricultural barrier between these two races and dedicate that barrier to the lasting peace of the world. Than this it was never given to any people to perform a greater service to humanity, but we must proceed with caution, in a spirit of courtesy and conciliation, yet with firmness and clarity of mind. We must not strive to usurp those functions that belong to the treaty making power of the national government, but if this is to be a white man's country only white men must be eligible to the ownership of its agricultural lands. Right there is the crux of the whole issue.

A Land Policy for California The problem of alien ownership of agricultural land will be found to involve, or at least open the way for, the formulation of a sound land policy for the state. California needs agricultural settlement and development and nothing should be done that seriously will retard it. Homeowning needs to be encouraged. Landlordism is to be dreaded. We have hundreds of alien home owners, very desirable ones, too. It is oriental ownership and settlement that we need to prevent rather than alien. We cannot well prohibit corporate ownership of agricultural land, but if we permit agriculture to be carried on upon a manufacturing basis we shall destroy our civilization almost as certainly as though we permitted our coast to be overrun by a Mongolian peasant proprietorship. Would it not be a good thing for this legislature to appoint a commission to study the land problem as the problem of taxation was studied that wise legislation may be reported two years hence? The need makes huge demands upon human capacity, knowledge and wisdom.

Shameless Abuse of Opportunity If anything were needed to empty the last few dregs of honor out of the gubernatorial office before leaving it the devices employed by former Governor Gillett to "appropriate the public service," as Governor Jonnson expresses it, in the cases of Bank Superintendent, Labor Commissioner and Building and Loan Commissioners, should make up the deficiency. By a "pussy wants a corner" game of resignation and reappointment it was sought to tie Governor Johnson's hands as to these positions throughout his term of office. The wonder is that Mr. Herrin's governor did not play the game to the limit, but it is possible that incumbents of other offices had too much of self respect to make them parties to any such transaction. It is to be hoped so. Whatever the legislature can do to prevent any such chicanery in the future should be done and whatever the legislature may do to undo the mischief done should be done. It is not, as most politicians and newspaper reporters assume it to be, an issue of official scalps. It is an issue of responsibility and efficiency in government. The progressive wing of the Republican party in California is responsible to California for the government of the state during the next four years. With that responsibility should go the power needful to discharge it and that responsibility cannot be discharged as to these three important functions of government so long as the heads of those departments are Herrin men. It was natural that Mr. Herrin should wish to do all that he could for Mr. Alden Anderson who, to serve the purposes of Herrin, had given up all that a woman gives up when she gives up her all. It was natural, too, that Mr. Herrin should wish to find a good place for Charley Curry who, with but a single reservation, has served him well and truly for many a year. Transue is a negligible quantity and was provided with a corner merely that Curry might be provided with one; but Mr. Herrin had no right to demand of James N. Gillett that, before vacating the office that Herrin had provided him, he do that which could not enrich Herrin but left the retiring governor poor indeed. It was a miserable business participated in by miserable men and not a man of them but will repent himself of his share in it.

Board of Control Things at Sacramento seem to be shaping in the direction of the board of control idea of administration. It is a good idea if it can be worked out well. It is a great deal better idea than that of administration through ex-officio boards made up of officials who have so much work of their own to do that they can scarcely maintain a speaking acquaintance with the several boards to which they belong. For instance the Governor, Secretary of State, and Attorney General constitute the State Board of Examiners and, with the addition of the State Forester they constitute the State Board of Forestry, with the addition of the Secretary of State, Board of Health and the General Superintendent of the state hospitals they constitute the State Lunacy Commission. The petty patronage attached to these offices is about all that makes them attractive to the Secretary of State or Attorney General and these officers are of precious little value to these boards and to the public needs they are intended to subserve. A much better arrangement than that which has prevailed for many years would be to abolish the boards above enumerated and rest content with in their places, a state examiner, the general superintendent of the state hospitals and the state forester, each being responsible for his department to the Governor and holding office at his pleasure. If the board of control idea is entered upon that board should be made to take the places of a number of boards and the Lieutenant Governor should be placed at the head of it. It would make him an active part of the administration and would not be greatly inconsistent with his other duties, but The Watchman does not know that this can be done without amending the constitution. Anyhow the present cumbersome and irresponsible board system should be superceded by something more simple, direct and responsible.

A Season of Good Feeling Nothing pleases the ordinary good citizen better than the concord that seems to exist in the Legislature between the progressive Republicans and the progressive Democrats. Let us hope that it may last the session through, but if it does it will survive all that political mischief-makers can do. Partisan Republicans will

(Continued on page 7.)

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
Harris & Frank (INC)
Leading Clothiers
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Louisville's Seal: Louisville, Kentucky, had a city seal, the chief figure of which was an old fashioned wood-burning locomotive of the type of 1800. After a prize contest, in which a great many designs were submitted, the city has accepted one, the chief feature of which is a lot of sky-scraping buildings. The old locomotive was discarded because it looked ridiculous and out-of-date; but, who knows, fifty years from now the sky-scraper may be regarded as a blemish and a back-number. In the city of fifty years hence beauty and good sanitation will count for more than big profits to a few rich men.

Baldwin Essay: William H. Baldwin of New York before his death provided a fund out of which a prize of $100 is given annually for the best essay on a municipal topic written by an undergraduate of some college or university, that has instruction on municipal government. The subject for this year is "The administration of the police department in some city in the United States with a population of over 200,000." The terms and conditions may be had from the National Municipal League, Philadelphia.

A Case of Infringement: The fire department of Fort Worth, Texas, uses for its automobile apparatus a peculiar staccato horn that came to be recognized and respected by street car drivers, pedestrians and others. Now several private automobiles have secured the same horn, and the result is confusing and several accidents have taken place. The fire chief proposes to bring some kind of legal action to bear on those who have infringed on his horn.

Special Water Tax: Spokane is suffering one of the penalties of too much prosperity. Rapid growth of the city caused real estate booms, and the opening of new tracts led to over-development of the water system. The business is rapidly getting toward the red ink, and the city council is urged to adopt an ordinance fixing a special tax on property to which water has been conveyed but which makes no use of this service.

Percentage on Dairy Conditions: The health authorities of Syracuse have a system of credits and debits which they use on the dairies that supply the city with milk. They say that for three years they have been teaching the milkmen the rules of safety in milk production, and those who now fail to comply should be put out of business. Regular inspections are made and a card given with a percentage figured out. If the score is below requirements the milk is excluded.

Philadelphia Municipal Exhibit: Mayor Reyburn of Philadelphia has asked council for an appropriation of $30,000 for advance work on a display of municipal activities which is to be held next fall. Some of it, he figures, can be made ready for display when the convention of city planners meets this spring. The mayor wishes the people to be given a chance to see just what has been accomplished by the present administration.

Trials of Winter Climates: Eastern cities make provision for sprinkling during the summer months but not in winter, when water thrown on the street will turn to ice. Just at present many eastern states are suffering from a winter dry spell which makes the cities dusty and causes a great deal of ill health. Calcium chloride is now generally used on the streets in lieu of sprinkling.

Bid for City Funds: Chicago has $80,000,000 lying in its vaults, and 55 banks have put in bids for its use. Of the 55 all but 3 sent in exactly the same bid, two per cent, which is one of the most remarkable coincidences in history. The three were small banks that may have been overlooked in the deal. Their bids were all 3 per cent—another queer coincidence.

New City Hall for Indianapolis: The new city hall of Indianapolis has just been dedicated and is now ready for occupancy. It is a four-story structure of genuine architectural beauty. The Federal building in Indianapolis is by many experts regarded as the most beautiful building owned by the national government outside of Washington. The new city hall is of a corresponding style of architecture.

Pays to Plant Trees: Thirty years ago the town of Orson in Sweden made a business of planting trees on the municipal land, of which there was a large area. Its people now pay no taxes nor telephone fees nor street car fares. The American system has been to sell city land cheap to speculators and then long afterwards buy back little dabs of it at enormous cost.

Commission Government Refused: The voters of Chickasaw, Oklahoma, defeated the commission government charter by a small majority. This is said to have been due to the opposition of the labor unions, which, while favoring the commision plan, were dissatisfied with other features of the charter.

Chicago's Mayoralty: Alderman Charles E. Merriam of Chicago, who served as head of the reform commission that reorganized business methods in Chicago, has been put forward as a candidate for the Republican nomination for mayor. His principal opponent for the nomination will probably be the incumbent, Busse.

Grade Crossings in Cleveland: The city of Cleveland is disposing of its grade crossings wholesale. It will cost $2,875,000 to abolish the crossings of the Pennsylvania road, of which the city must pay one-third. The people of Cleveland have voted two millions to cover the city's part of improvements of this character.

Single Tax Plan: The town of Fairhope on Mobile Bay, founded fifteen years ago by Iowa people, puts the Henry George theory into practice. The city owns all the land and rents to the inhabitants. There are no taxes, no charge for water or telephone, free docks, etc.

Number of Automobiles: There are said to be 550,000 automobiles now in this country. New York leads with 64,000 and California comes next with 40,000. At times it seems as though all of the latter were grouped along the streets in the congested district of Los Angeles.

Queer Delaware: Delaware is the only state in the Union, and for that matter the only community, where the people have had a chance to adopt the initiative and referendum and where the majority was against it. The worst thing about slavery is that it sometimes even destroys in the slaves all desire for liberty.

State Sanitary Engineering: The state health officer of Texas urges that a state bureau of sanitary engineering be established to deal with questions of pollution of water courses and other sanitary means of general bearing.

Improved Financing: Austin, Tex., has been under the commission form of government two years, and in that time the water and light department has created a reserve of $68,000, paid $29,000 on debts, and made two reductions of rates.

Non-Partisan Direct Primary: Concord, New Hampshire, recently used for the first time its non-partisan direct primary for the city election in just the same form we have it in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Oakland Improvements: Oakland has spent about two million dollars in permanent street improvement during the past year. This includes about twelve miles of paving and sixteen miles of macadam.

The Two Best American Cities: In his new book, "Great Cities of America," Dr. Delos F. Wilcox, the municipal expert, gives the leading place for good government to Baltimore, with Cleveland in second place.

Automobiles and Snow: Deep snow on country roads puts a stop to automobiling in the East. It is planned to run heavy rollers over the snow, crushing it down so the automobile wheels will not sink in.

Firemen Perish: On the 21st of last month 14 firemen were killed and 36 were injured at a big fire in Philadelphia, and on the 22nd 30 firemen were killed at a fire in the Chicago stock yards.

The Difference: Chicago loses about $5,000,000 a year from fire, and Berlin about $170,000. The difference is in the amount of wood used in building.

Too Old to Work: A twenty-inch water main in Cincinnati which was laid in 1854 got tired of its job the other day and blew up, tearing a hole 100 feet long in the street.

A Municipal Cemetery: The city government of Milwaukee is considering the establishment of a municipal cemetery. The lots will be sold at cost.

The Board Walk City: Atlantic City, New Jersey, is agitating for a commission system with five managers of city affairs instead of a council of 17 as at present.

Increase in Number of Cities: Ten years ago there were 160 cities in the Union having 25,000 or over of population. Now there are 228.

Required Number of Engines: An authority on fire equipment says that the standard requirement is one engine to every 18,000 of population.

Six Days for Firemen: The Legislature of Ohio is likely to pass a law which provides for six days of work to one of rest for firemen.

Big Saving: New York City expects to save about $135,000 on its printing contract this year mostly by cutting out unnecessary work.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall
DENTIST
Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway
314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

Semi-Annual Clearance

Now Going On

THIS sale is inaugurated to quickly dispose of all broken lines and odds and ends at greatly reduced prices before invoicing.

If you have been waiting for bargains, now is the time to secure them throughout the store. Especial mention is made of

Reduced Prices on Suits, Dresses and Coats

Savings range from ¼ to ½ less

FURS ⅓ LESS

MAIN 3540 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
SOUTH SPRING ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

The New Order of Things

By the Doorkeeper

Steady Accomplishment Marks First Three Weeks of Legislature—Rulers Who Really Work

Sacramento, Cal., Jan 25.

At the close of three weeks of the legislative session of 1911 more actual progress has been made than during the first month or more of any previous session. Some of the old-time members even say that the legislature is fully two weeks ahead of what they had expected of it.

From Governor Johnson and Lieutenant-Governor Wallace down to the least important of the attaches everything savors of hustle and dispatch, though there is no evidence of undue haste. The legislature is simply working. Instead of idling about awaiting orders from the Southern Pacific bosses for the first month and then at the eleventh hour rushing through such work as has been demanded of the real rulers of California, every senator and every assemblyman has discovered that if he is to accomplish results it will be necessary for him to emulate the Governor and get busy. Even the attaches have to earn their per diem, for the first time in the history of the legislature.

Everybody Works

The tale of the attaches is an interesting one. In days of yore it has been the custom for the men and women on the payroll—aside from a few who could not dodge the routine labor necessary to keep up with the pace set by the legislators themselves—to loaf about and take things as easy as they could. They have have been in the habit of showing up at the Capitol—those of them who were expected to do anything toward earning their money—for an hour or two of the day; but some of them have not even made a pretense of work. For instance there is the case of a near relative of a certain presiding officer of one of the branches of the Legislature who drew her five or six dollars per day and, so far as can be learned, rendered the state no greater service than to participate in those social functions which marked legislative periods of the past. Then there was the McCartney family case, about which the less that is said the better.

This year things are radically different. With the opening of the session attaches of both houses were notified that they were expected to arrive at their posts of duty at nine o'clock in the morning and put in a full day's work. To make sure they are on hand they are required to register. The rule is enforced. Attaches either do their work, and a full day's work at that, or there is nothing doing at the cashier's desk. The result is that members of the legislature do not have to putter around waiting for the things they want done. The issue of an order is now sufficient guarantee that it will be obeyed promptly.

Direct Legislation Fight

Really the term "fight" is a misnomer. It won't be much of a fight, according to the present outlook. Contrasted with the campaign of 1909 for the submission to the people of a constitutional amendment providing for the Initiative, the fight for the Initiative and Referendum this year will be play. It is a foregone conclusion already that the measure introduced by Senator Gates of Los Angeles will be passed. It may be slightly amended in some of its details, but in its essentials it will go through both houses.

There is a possibility, however, that the measure providing for the Recall will have to undergo more prolonged discussion. While it is conceded, even by the opponents of the Initiative amendment introduced two years ago, that a fight aginst the Initiative and Referendum this year will only put the opposition in a worse light before their constituents, it is agreed by the advocates of the Recall amendment that its provisions will have to be thoroughly analyzed and its work in other states carefully canvassed and its usefulness and effectiveness demonstrated. But this will be done. The advocates of the measure are primed. They ask that the Recall shall be applied to state officers, but leave to the option of the various counties the application of this principle of government to those political subdivisions. They expect to give the counties certain rights, leaving it to the voters of the counties to determine the minor details, once they have made up their minds to take advantage of the constitutional privilege.

While there is little doubt that the Recall amendment will pass in some form, considerable opposition to its application to the judiciary has developed. The fight against this particular provision in the measure will be led by the machine and by some of the leading lawyers of the state, lawyers as a rule being constitutionally opposed to the idea of applying to one of their own profession a principle which they seem willing to allow to be attached to the ordinary man, the layman. But there are lawyers in both houses this year who will wage an aggressive fight for the recall of the judiciary on the ground that this department of government is no more sacred and should be no less responsive to the will of the people than any other department. Electors hire their judges just as they hire their governors and their senators and their constables, and if they have a right to discharge a governor, it is argued, they have as much right to discharge a judge.

Those Dripping Fangs

I don't believe there is any danger that the voters of the state will be over-warned regarding the insidious work of the poisoned press. The reactionary newspapers are as active and as vicious as ever. They lie so many different ways and wear so many disguises that it takes an expert, even if he is constantly on the scene of action here at the capital, to discern them.

The Los Angeles Times, the San Francisco Examiner, the Call and the Chronicle are doing especially effective work in dispensing political virus. They inject into their poison just enough of the truth to make it palatable. They fool some of the people, no doubt. But they do not delude discerning men who honestly seek the facts regarding what is transpiring at Sacramento. Fortunately for the people, however, these papers are slowly but surely poisoning themselves. So far as their influence upon the public mind is concerned, they are committing suicide.

"We will observe in this poisoned press the minimizing of the good work that is being attempted," says Governor Johnson. "Hardly will there be a suggestion of it—a refusal even to print a message such as was sent to the legislature on the railroad rate bill. And this refusal, you may be assured, was because of the concrete figures given, which demonstrate to every reader the wrong that it is planned to correct. We will observe this poisoned press picking out some particular representative of the Southern Pacific in the legislature, no matter how discredited such a representative may be, and playing him up daily in fights against the administration and against good measures. We will observe the gradual attempt to divert attention from the real work of the legislature and a purpose to befuddle the people as to what really is being attempted.

"The people of the state of California, if genuinely interested in the accomplishments of this administration, should watch the press and not give it any encouragement if it be shown that the papers represent Southern Pacific and allied interests. The best test of this alliance between Mr. Herrin and any newspaper is in that newspaper's failure to give publicity to any document before the legislature showing wrongdoing on the part of the predatory corporations, and in endeavoring to minimize the real issues, in manufacturing stories and in centering upon things not of vital import.

"Let the people watch the legislature now and see if any man in it is seeking to delay, to hinder or to impede proposed good legislation. Judge every man by how he acts on legislation you believe to be right. And if you find legislators who are lawyers making wry faces and questioning the constitutionality of proposed measures—measures, be it remembered, that have been passed upon by every law officer of the state—watch him well, because his opposition on that ground is a pretense and a sham. And if any legislator seeks to delay the real issue by a pretense of investigating something long past, and with which he long has been familiar, his design should be apparent."

Governor Johnson says that it is his design to have the voters of the state thoroughly understand the situation. "In the past many legislators have not been given credit that was properly theirs," he says. "The people have been too prone to condemn and too slow to praise. I shall see to it that the people of each district learn of the good work of their representative so they may hold him in the esteem he merits. And I shall also see to it that each district learns of the pretense and hypocrisy of a member representing it, that it shall know whether such a member represents the people or the Southern Pacific."

Three Points of Attack

It is already apparent that the programme of the Southern Pacific leads off with three chief points of attack. It will fight, and already has begun to fight, these proposals of the Governor and the progressive members of the legislature:

1. To provide definitely that the Railroad Commission may establish absolute railroad rates, both for freight and passenger traffic.
2. The "Oregon plan" for selecting United States Senators by direct vote of the people.
3. The Recall of the judiciary.

Rate Making

The vital point in the railroad problem is the question of rates. With the adoption of the absolute rate rule, as provided in the administration bill, introduced in the Senate by Senator Stetson, all common carriers must abide strictly by the rates established by the Railroad Commission. All the railroads will be permitted to do is to charge and collect the rates fixed by the commission. Under the "fluidity" rate system devised by the Southern Pacific's legal department and forced upon the legislature two years ago, a "big business" may secure the shipment of freight under one rate, and immediately after that rate has been accorded it, another rate may be given to some small competitive concern. How such a rule works is obvious. With absolute rates big business and little business will secure exactly the same rate, or the rate-maker may have to continue his labor in jail and pay handsomely for his infraction of the law beside. Incidentally, it may be remarked, the bill introduced at the last session which confers upon the railroads the right to fix any old rate at any time, within a specified maximum, was fathered by Senator Leroy Wright of San Diego, who also stood sponsor for Al G. Spalding, the sporting goods magnate who recently was put out on first base in his run for the United States Senate.

The Oregon Plan

The Southern Pacific opposes the Oregon plan for the election of United States Senators for the same reason that the average human being shudders when he faces a gun in the hands of a man with murder in his eye. Until the federal constitution can be changed the only way which has yet been devised to secure anything approximating the popular election of United States Senators is the system in vogue in California's northern neighbor. Most readers of the Pacific Outlook understand that under the Oregon system a candidate for the legislature definitely pledges himself to vote either for that candidate

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 128x128
Southern Pacific Switch
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.

REMOVAL SALE
Pianos and Player Pianos
Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player Piano this is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.
Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers
345-347 S. Spring St.

for United States Senator who, at the primary, receives the vote of his legislative district, or that candidate who receives the greatest popular vote. Violation of such a pledge is pretty apt to mean political suicide. The San Francisco Call, a once influential newspaper, now gone to seed, so far as its influence in state or local politics is concerned, led the fight in the legislature for Spalding, and it is generally believed that, along with the Los Angeles Times and the other chief organs of the ghost of the machine, it will make a desperate fight to prevent the adoption of the Oregon system in California. Fortunately the attitude of none of these papers will make any particular difference in the outcome of the contest. Their influence has been demonstrated in the recent popular struggle to send a progressive United States Senator to Washington. It is about four degrees better than zero.

Recall of Judges

As I have suggested, the progressives will find their greatest difficulty in securing the adoption of the constitutional amendment providing for the recall of the judiciary. With such an instrument as this in the hands of the people the Southern Pacific, which has notoriously owned courts in this state, will be entombed. Already its breathing has become stertorious. With absolute railroad rates established by the state, the Oregon plan of electing United States Senators and finally a judiciary subject to the Recall, the railroad machine will be put out of business forever.

As a matter of fact, the Recall of the judiciary has always been in vogue in California, only up to the present time it has been exercised almost solely by the Southern Pacific itself. Proof of this is found in the fact that in the past judges who have exhibited a spirit of independence of that hitherto dominant institution have quietly been retired to private life upon the expiration of their terms, regardless of their desire to remain upon the bench and the desire of the people to have them retained.

The Case of Anderson

Alden Anderson will not retain office as head of the state banking department. Governor Gillett attempted by a trick worthy of that executive to keep him on the job by permitting him to create a vacancy by resigning and then appointing him to succeed himself, but it didn't work. Everybody knows the story of how Anderson's resignation, once on file in the executive chamber, mysteriously disappeared. With no resignation on file there was no vacancy, and Governor Johnson, upon entering upon the duties of his position, could not get rid of this undesirable official without creating a vacancy. To redeem his oft-repeated pledge that, when Governor, he would kick the Southern Pacific out of politics, and adjudging Anderson to be a part and parcel of the Southern Pacific, it was necessary that Anderson go. All the progressives want him out of the way, but they did not see a way to put their desires into effect. But the Governor did. He caused to be drafted and presented to the legislature a bill amending the bank act by providing for the appointment of a commissioner who might hold office at the pleasure of the Governor. It will pass, without doubt, and there is not the slightest question as to what the Governor's pleasure in the matter will be. He will be pleased to retire Anderson, and the cause of progress in California politics will receive a boost. No intelligent and honest man questions Anderson's machine affiliations, and none will object to an act enabling Governor Johnson to relegate him to the Southern Pacific political junk pile.

Compulsory Vaccination

From all sections of the state there are being sent to Sacramento unqualified indorsements of Senator Hurd's bill repealing the statute providing for the compulsory vaccination of children as a prerequisite to admission to the public schools. While as a rule physicians are said to favor or at least not oppose compulsory vaccination, some of the members of the legislature who are practicing physicians are ready to vote for the Hurd bill.

For Free Text Books

"Eddie" Wolfe, leader of the old machine forces in the Senate, is leading what already looks like a hopeless fight against the adoption of a resolution which aims at providing free text books for children attending all public schools beneath the high school grade. This resolution, introduced by Senator Shanahan, asks that the whole question of cost of printing books, profits accruing to the book trust and the State and cost to children be gone into thoroughly, and that the committee appointed to investigate the matter report on the advisability of the state's providing the books free of charge. Lieutenant-Governor Wallace has named Senators Strobridge, Shanahan, Black, Thompson and Avey as a special committee under the resolution. All are progressives.

State Printing Inquiry Probable

Assemblyman Harry Polsley, who has developed a penchant for nosing into the work of the state commissions and departments, is preparing to introduce a resolution asking for an inquiry into the work of the Superintendent of State Printing. For years this department has been regarded by reformers as one of the most expensive adjuncts of the state administration. There has been lots of talk about investigating it, but thus far nothing has been done. The revelations made as the result of a thorough investigation probably will be followed by a demand that the department as now constituted be abolished or radically reformed.

While this is generally regarded as a move in the right direction, there is a growing feeling that the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction likewise undergo a thorough overhauling. There are in course of preparation, to be submitted if an investigation be ordered, charges of a nature that promises sweeping reforms in that department also.

Political Table Talk

(Continued from page 4.)

transcend themselves if they do not become alarmed before the session is over because of the number of strategic good points Democratic members are likely to score. We shall be fortunate if the shadow of 1912 does not stunt the growth of progress in 1911. Just now there seems to be a generous rivalry between progressives of both parties to see which can father the most good measures and it must be admitted that the Democrats are scoring very well. May we venture to hope that partisanship will put no stumbling blocks, crimps, pits to fall in, or other impedimenta in their way. With a legislature overwhelmingly Republican and a Republican administration it will be impossible to deprive progressive Republicanism of all proper credit for good legislation no matter who introduces the bills providing therefor. It is no time for littleness to loom large.

A New Spirit Moving on the Face of the Waters Our time is big with coming events. In our grandfathers' days it was believed that, with a continent for a free field and no favors the general struggle to get on would put no one very far ahead or leave any but the lame, the halt and the blind very far behind, but the event has proven otherwise. The inequalities that, aforetime, existed only between princes and plebeans now exist between neighbors. In the holding corporation we have created a giant that makes the world tremble when he walks. All men see this and a progressive Republicanism took the field against this giant in the hope of first winning over the Republican party and then marching to victory over this giant under that banner but, so far, the victories of a Republican progressivism over a Republican standpatism have been less sweeping than was hoped for. Only in California has it been roundly satisfactory. How is it with the Democrats? If ye are to judge from their caucus of congressmen-elect, held at Washington on the 19th, the progressives of that party are splendidly in the saddle and have left the Tory contingent with scarcely a corporal's guard. Are we to witness the rise of a constructive and progressive Democracy? To use an expression from the streets, are the progressive Democrats going to "beat the progressive Republicans to it?" In resolving to constitute house committees through a committee on committees, and so put an end to Cannonism, Republican or Democratic, that caucus did splendidly well. The party that prefers public advantage to party advantage will win the votes of the American people and should win them. The Democratic party has had no such opportunity in a quarter of a century and it seems to realize the advantage of its position. Can it keep from blundering over some petty, party stumbling block? It has made a good start. Can it keep a going?

No Returning to the Old Method It was to be expected that an assault would be made by local boards upon the state engineering and architectural system. There have been strained relations between Engineery Ellery and practically all the institutions, but this does not prove that the new system is a bad one or that the old system of construction by local boards was a good one. The latter is not susceptible of proof. It was intolerable. It was polluted by graft and shattered by incompetency. It was inherently bad in that final judgment had to be rendered by inexpert persons. Local boards have been largely formed of gentlemen whose political services required recognition and the patronage thus placed at their disposal has not proven unattractive. These members come and go, superintendents come and go and each superintendent wants a total rearrangement of his institutions for the same reason that every different kind of a crank has to have a different kind of a house to live in. The result has been the hacking and chopping of state institutions until the lives of their inmates are endangered and jere-building became the rule rather than the exception. The state engineering idea of construction is based upon the principle of expert determination and the co-operation of the engineer and the architect. It is everlastingly right. It should never be departed from again. Mr. Ellery may not be the man to head such a department of government. He probably is not, but that does not prove that the engineering department idea is not the right idea. And there is one thing that probably can be said for Ellery. While the buildings he has erected have exceeded the appropriations and the estimates they will not fall down about the ears of their inmates, and that is more than can be said of many that were built under the old system. Security covers a multitude of other short comings.

THE PIANOLA PIANO

Best by Every Test

If you want the Pianola Piano's efficiency you must get the Pianola Piano itself—there is no substitute. Music personally rendered is what the Pianola Piano furnishes. The elusive charm of individuality is in every performance.

Call and hear this great instrument and learn details of our easy payment plan. If you live out of town, write for art catalogue.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO.

"The House of Musical Quality"

332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

EXPERTS TO DISCUSS POWER PROBLEM AT CITY CLUB TODAY

At the regular weekly luncheon of the City Club, to be held at the Hotel Westminster at noon today, two speakers have been provided.

E. F. Scattergood, electrical engineer for the Los Angeles Aqueduct Power Bureau, and John B. Miller, president of the Southern California Edison Co., will present their views on the advisability of taking a straw vote, at the charter amendment election March 6th, on the question of the city's leasing or itself distributing the Aqueduct power.

The man who managed the Interests' fight against Senator La Follette before the recent Wisconsin election spent $107,000 and polled 42,000 votes, whereas La Follette spent not a penny and received 144,000 votes. Money isn't always boss.—Boston Common.

CONSOLIDATION OF CITY AND COUNTY GOVERNMENTS

W. B. Mathews Addresses City Club on Important Subject

W. B. Mathews, counsel for the Aqueduct board and a former city attorney, was the speaker at last Saturday's City Club luncheon.

Mr. Mathews had as his subject the proposed consolidation of city and county governments, and his interesting address was listened to by a large number of members.

That the City Club realizes the importance of this question is evidenced by the fact that three speakers have expressed their views before the club on the subject during the past few weeks, Senators Leslie Hewitt and Lee C. Gates having entertained the club with a debate on the merits and demerits of the project on December 3rd last.

Mr. Matthews' speech, in full, follows:

We, of this city, are, at this moment, under two local governments, separately maintained and administered, and the question we wish to consider is, why should they not be merged into one government? The subject of a consolidated city and county government for Los Angeles is not new or strange in this community. On the contrary, for several years past, it has had a very definite, and, at times, a very prominent, place in the popular mind; and I may say further that, during all that time, public sentiment in this city has been strongly in favor of consolidation.

It may be well, at the outset of my remarks, to attempt a statement of what is meant by consolidation of our city and county governments, as generally understood and proposed. It would mean the establishment of a municipality, to be known as the city and county of Los Angeles, and existing under a single charter within limits embracing the present city of Los Angeles, and such other cities and territory in the vicinity as might be combined with it, under general laws, prior to such consolidation. It would also mean that the rest of the present county would be organized into one or more new counties, under new names, and as independent of the new city and county as the County of Orange is of the present County of Los Angeles.

While undoubtedly the new municipality would have the name Los Angeles as part of its designation, it may be that the rest of the territory of the county would be organized as a new county, and retain Los Angeles as part of its designation. Anyway, so far as the proposed new city and county of Los Angeles is concerned, I think it would be absolutely foolish to suggest or attempt to promote a movement for its creation under any other name than the city and county of Los Angeles.

The question of consolidation was presented before this club, at a recent meeting, in joint discussion, with Senator Hewitt advocating, and Senator Gates opposing it. I understand that the latter urged, as one of the main grounds of his opposition, that the proposed new city and county could not retain the name Los Angeles, but that the creation of the new municipality would be by way of secession from the old county, which, as he contended, would keep that name. If I may be allowed to speak for those who favor consolidation of our city and county governments, I wish to make it plain that the program of consolidation contemplates, as an indispensible condition, that the new municipality shall have and forever retain the historic name of Los Angeles.

Possible to Retain the Name

I am convinced there is no insuperable legal difficulty in the way of the retention of the name Los Angeles for the proposed new city and county. The machinery that can be, and, I anticipate will be, provided for effecting the consolidation will, doubtless, make adequate provision for continuing county government in the remaining territory under a new name.

The proposed consolidation of our city and county governments is, however, hindered by certain legal difficulties, which must be cleared away, and we hope that the necessary steps to this end will be taken by the Legislature at its present session,

Constitution Provides for Consolidation

It is contemplated in our State Constitution that municipal communities will want consolidation of city and county governments, since it provides in Section 7 of Article XI, that,

"City and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes. The provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent or prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated governments."

The method of consolidation contemplated by this provision apparently involves incorporation of the new city and county under general laws, passed by the legislature, and supplanting the charter of the city affected. Grave douht exists as to whether this provision of the Constitution applies to the case of a city operating under a freeholders charter, like Los Angeles. We

GEO. I. COCHRAN, President. GAIL B. JOHNSON, Vice-President

Pacific Mutual Building, Sixth and Olive Streets, Los Angeles.

The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co. of California

CAPITAL FULLY PAID UP, $1,000,000

Balance Sheet as of December 31, 1910

ASSETS
Loans on Real Estate ..... Amount of Loan does not exceed the statutory percentage of appraised value.	$ 8,313,959.64
Loans on Approved Collateral	1,043,772.48
Loans to Policyholders ..... In no case does amount of Loan exceed the Reserve held by the Company.	3,163,168.12
Bonds and Stoeks Owned ..... Being Bonds, $5,343,604.85, of Municipalities, Railroads and other Quasi-Puhlic Corporations, and Stocks, $368,682.00, all valued as of December 31, 1910.	5,712,286.85
Real Estate Owned ..... Los Angeles Income Property, including Home Office Building.	1,120,450.10
Interest and Rent ..... Accrued but not due.	210,660.39
Outstanding and Deferred Premiums—
Life Department	500,588.68
Aeeident Department ..... Net Amount, Reserve charged in Liabilities.	319,904.78
Cash on Hand ..... Including Deposits drawing Interest.	380,397.23
TOTAL ADMITTED ASSETS	$20,765,188.27

LIABILITIES
Reserve on Polieies	$18,128,589.36
Claims in Process of Adjustment ..... Being Claims reported, but of which Proofs have not yet been received, or are incomplete.	123,483.51
Premiums and Interest Paid in Advanee	116,765.94
Reserved for Taxes Payable 1911	71,549.42
All Other Liabilities ..... Including $12,415.46 set aside for Medical Fees, and $103,851.20 for Agents' Commissions in Accident Department.	179,128.72
TOTAL LIABILITIES	$18,619,516.95
Capital Stoek	1,000,000.00
Surplus Set Aside for Future Dividends to Policyholders	420,684.23
Surplus, Unassigned	724,987.09
TOTAL	$20,765,188.27

New Life Business Written, 1910	$ 20,656,363.00	Inerease in Life Business in Force	$5,973,789.00
Total Life Business in Force	117,513,574.00	Inerease in Assets	2,335,983.99
Total Cash Income, 1910	6,750,765.88	Increase in Cash Ineome	586,237.46
Premium Income Accident Department, 1910	1,276,820.98	Inerease in Reserve	1,989,974.17
Total Paid Polieyholders, 1910	2,456,568.08	Inerease in Surplus, Assigned and Unassigned	293,789.78

SURPLUS, (Assigned and Unassigned Exelusive of Capital) $1,145,671.32

received our charter from the people, acting directly under the Constitution, and not from the legislature, nor under any legislative enactment. It gives us independence in our municipal affairs, and is not subject to amendment, repeal or abrogation by the legislature.

This situation suggests that the legislature be asked to submit to the people the proposition to amend the Constitution so as to provide, in clear and comprehensive terms, for the merging of city and county governments, whenever the people of the locality so desire, and regardless of the character of municipal charter affected.

Again, Section 3 of Article XI of the Constitution, relating to the creation of new counties, provides that no boundary line of a new county shall pass within five miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided. This provision is supposed to create a serious difficulty by reason of the position of Pasadena. The question is commonly asked, Is that city to be included in the new city and county, or excluded therefrom? It also has a freeholders charter, and under the Constitution and laws, as they now stand, political union between Los Angeles and Pasadena is probably impossible If the two cities cannot be amalgamated, then the boundary line of the proposed new city and county must be drawn between them, and that would bring it within five miles of the county seat of Los Angeles County. It has been suggested, however, and, I believe, upon good grounds, that the five mile limitation contained in Section 3 of Article XI of the Constitution, does not apply to the formation of a city and county government, but only applies to the creation of a new county. In the nature of things, the consolidation of city and county governments, where the city affected is the county seat, must necessarily bring the new boundary line within the five mile limit. Therefore, to apply the restriction to such a case, would make the constitutional provision ridiculous.

There is a difference between the formation of a new county under the constitution and the creation of a new municipality by the consolidation of city and county government. If it were proposed to form the county of Pomona, or Monrovia, or Whittier, out of the present county of Los Angeles, then the line of the new county nearest to the city of Los Angeles would have to keep at least five miles away, but that is a matter relating to the creation of new counties. The Constitution, besides providing for the creation of new counties, contemplates that there may be municipalities created by consolidation of cities and counties, so that in order to keep the Constitution from absurdity, it is reasonable to construe this provision as allowing the formation of a city and county municipality like the city and county of Los Angeles, even by drawing its lines closer than the five mile limit provided in the Constitution,—even by making the boundary of the new city and county coincident with that of the city itself.

There is, therefore, an essential difference between the creation of a new county and the formation of a city and county government by consolidation, and constitutional restrictions applicable to the former, may be held inapplicable to the latter. However, in view of the great importance of the public interests involved, the provisions of law for consolidating city and county governments should be made complete and certain, so that it may be effected without difficulty where the people may desire that form of government. The constitution should be amended so as to allow cities having freeholders charters, like Los Angeles and Pasadena, to consolidate under one charter, and while the scheme for consolidation is being worked out and perfected, the constitution may as well be amended, so as to make clear that the five mile limitation, contained in Section 3 of Article XI of the constitution, or any other restriction peculiarly applicable to the creation of a new county, does not apply to the establishment of a city and county.

The Legislature is now in session, and if these suggestions as to the amendment of our State Constitution, in the interest of consolidated city and county governments, appear sound, then steps should be taken to have the Legislature submit to the people, at the next state election, the necessary proposition for amending the Constitution in these respects.

Welfare of the Whole People Paramount

A point which, in its detail is of minor importance, yet in its entirety is of very great importance, is the public convenience. The inconvenience of one man does not amount to much, and perhaps the inconvenience of a hundred men does not amount to much, but when you begin to multiply to any extent, then inconvenience becomes a serious matter and I should think it is a matter of great importance that we should in every way seek to promote the convenience of the people as a whole. When a government is inconvenient by being manifold and complicated rather than simple, then we should begin to consider how we can promote public convenience by eliminating those things in our government which make for inconvenience. Those of you who are taxpayers and who have other relations to the city and county government requiring you to visit the city hall and the county court house and other public offices, appreciate how serious a matter inconvenience becomes, and you will appreciate how serious it is where thousands and tens of thousands of people have to make unnecessary trips to transact oublic business.

Advantages to Be Derived

Having indicated, in a general way, what I understand to be the program of consolidation in this community, and the legal difficulties in the way of effecting it, I wish to call attention to some of the advantages that reasonably may be expected to flow from the merging of the local city and county governments. In the first place, the merging of the city and county governments would mean greater simplicity, economy and efficiency in the conduct of our public affairs. It would mean that, instead of two governing bodies, exercising functions within the municipality, to-wit: the Board of Supervisors and the City Council, there would be but one governing body, in respect both to its strictly municipal functions and to its county affairs. It would mean one Clerk, one Auditor, one Assessor, one Tax and License Collector and one Treasurer, instead of two sets of officials of these kinds. It would mean, if desired, that the Clerk would by the Recorder, the Sheriff would be the Chief of Police, and the District Attorney would be the City Attorney. It would mean one assessment of property in the municipality for the purposes of taxation. It would mean one policy for the location and construction of public buildings, roads, boulevards, works and improvements. All of this would be conducive to economy and efficiency in the conduct of our public affairs.

We have in this state, but one consolidated city and county. I refer to San Francisco. That was created under an Act of the Legislature fifty years ago. They now have a freeholders charter adopted under the present Constitution. Despite the fact that San Francisco has for many years been a hot-bed of bad politics, graft, waste and inefficieney in the public service, the cost of local government to the people of that city is substantially less than here. For the year 1910 the tax levy for city and county and state purposes in San Francisco was $2 on each $100 of property valuation; while here it was $2.76. It is not difficult to see that the tax levy in San Francisco should even be considerably less than the rate last year, with an administration like the present one in this city.

Will Not Lose Influential Position

Referring again to the remarks of Senator Gates upon this same subject before this club a few weeks ago, I understand—I say "understand" because I was not here, but I am so informed—that one of his reasons why there should not be a consolidation of our city and county government was the fact that Los Angeles city is just now attaining political preeminence and control in the affairs of the state, and, therefore, should not be divided. There is merit in that point only so as it is meant that the moral forces of the community should not be divided. Los Angeles is the outgrowth of conditions prevailing in Southern California, and public sentiment is not only sound and admirable in Los Angeles as a rule, but it is so throughout the whole of Southern California. The lines bounding the city of Los Angeles are not boundary lines of good sentiment and bad sentiment,—between one kind of sentiment that is supposed to exist within the city and another kind that is supposed to exist without the city. The conditions are fairly uniform in this county, so that separation by trol in state affairs to Southern and county from the rest of the county of Los Angeles would not mean that Los Angeles would be separated from those general conditions which are now giving pre-eminence and control to Southern California. Los Angeles as a city and county, would stand with the rest of the county and with the southern country generally in all those things that are good and true so far as our public affairs are concerned.

Local Self-Government in County Affairs

The consolidation of our city and county governments, under a freeholders charter, would give us independence of the Legislature in our local affairs. The Legislature prescribes the form of county government, the number, character, and duties of the officials and their deputies, and the salaries to be paid. The cost, however, must be met by the people of the county. With consolidation and a freeholders charter, these important matters would be under the control of the people of the new municipality, as they should be. In times past, it has too frequently been the case that the Legislature, under the influence of office seekers, or other persons actuated by purely selfish motives, has imposed upon the different counties burdens of expenditure not required by the local public service, nor desired by the people upon whom the expense would fall. And this has meant a good deal more than mere waste of the public revenue. Many a man has been given office in this county as the result of a bargain made at Sacramento, and his appointment has come, not because of personal efficiency, or because his services were needed, but because it was necessary in order to fulfil a political obligation. Hence, I say that consolidation, with a freeholders charter, for this community, would tend to give us purer political conditions. The people would then have only what they should elect to have under the Constitution. If it was burdensome or expensive or inefficient, it would be the result of their own action, but then the remedy would lie in their hands, and by amendment of the organic law, authorized by a vote of the people, these evils could be eliminated. Local government means local responsibility, and, with an intelligent and enlightened citizenship, like our own, the responsibility for the character of the public service will make the people more careful and attentive in the performance of their duties as citizens and voters.

In conclusion, and to summarize in a word the views I would express concerning the merits of consolidation, I will say:

Consolidated city and county government, with boundaries embracing Los Angeles and its environs, would mean purer politics and greater efficiency and economy in our local public affairs. It would mean one set of officials to elect, watch and deal with, instead of two; one assessment of property for purposes of taxation; and one policy for the construction of public buildings, works and improvements.

Too much government, besides involving extravagance and waste, is a hinderance to progress. This is our condition with the city government independent of the county government, and it should be corrected just as quickly as the law will permit.

"A good wife is heaven's greatest gift to man and the rarest gem the earth holds," remarked Mr. Jarphly the other morning. "She is his joy, his inspiration and his very soul. Through her he learns to reach the pure and true, and her loving hands lead him softly over the rough places. She is—" "Jeremiah," said Mrs. Jarphly, solemnly, "Jeremiah, what wickedness have you been up to now."—Truth.

Furniture Repair Works
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS
MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET
RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

Residence Burglary Insurance
Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?
Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.
Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.
R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY
200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.
Home Phone 40444 Sunset Phone M. 7096

NEW NATION-WIDE REFORM MOVEMENT

Organization of the Republican Progressive league by "progressive republican senators, representatives, governors and others—an organization which will seek to fight for the establishment of popular government" —was announced in Washington, D. C., Monday.

Plans of the new league, which have been under way since the assembling of congress, were concluded at a meeting Saturday night when a declaration of principles was signed, a constitution adopted and the following officers elected:

President — Senator Jonathan Bourne, Jr., Oregon.

First vice-president—Representative George W. Norris, Nebraska.

Second vice-president—Governor Chase S. Osborn, Michigan.

Treasurer—Charles R. Crane, Chicago.

Executive committee—Senator Moses E. Clapp, Minnesota; Senator Joseph L. Bristow, Kansas; Representative E. H. Hubbard, Iowa; Representative Irvine L. Lenroot, Wisconsin; Representative-elect William Kent, California; Gifford Pinchot, Pennsylvania; George L. Record, New Jersey, and the president, vice-presidents, treasurer, members ex-officio.

Declaration of Principles

The declaration of principles signed by nine republican United States senators, the governors of six republican states, 13 members of the house, and others, follows:

"We, the undersigned, associate ourselves together as the National Progressive league.

"The object of the league is the promotion of popular government and legislation.

"Popular government in America has been thwarted and progressive legislation strangled by the special interests which control caucuses, delegates, conventions and party organizations, and through control of the machinery of government, dictate nominations and platforms, elect administrations, legislators, representatives in congress and United States senators and control cabinet officers.

"Under existing conditions, legislation in the public interest has been baffled and defeated. This is evidenced by the long struggle to secure laws, but partially effective, for the control of railway rates and services, the revision of the tariff in the interest of the producer and consumer, statutes dealing with trusts and combinations, based on sound economic principles as applied to modern industrial and commercial conditions, a wise, comprehensive and impartial reconstruction of the banking and monetary laws, the conservation of coal, iron, gas, timber, water powers and other natural resources belonging to the people, and for the enactment of all legislation solely for

Responsive to Popular Will

"Just in proportion as popular government has in certain states superceded the delegate convention system and the people has assumed control of the machinery of government, has government become responsive to the popular will and progressive legislation been secured.

"The progressive league believes popular government is fundamental to all other questions. To this end it advocates:

"The election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.

"Direct primaries for the nomination of all elective officials.

"The direct election of delegates to national conventions with opportunity for the voter to express his choice for president and vice-president.

"Amendment to state constitutions providing for the initiative, referendum and recall.

"A thorough general corrupt practices act.

"The league will co-operate with progressives in the several states and wherever acceptable, will render assistance in promoting the organization of state leagues.

To Aid State Leagues

"Whenever requested by any progressive state league or by progressive leaders in state legislatures, the National Progressive Republican league will aid in the preparation of appropriate bills and resolutions and will furnish speakers and literature in support of legislative action upon the proposition, enumerated in the five numbered paragraphs set forth in the foregoing declaration of principles."

(Signed):

United States senators—Jonathan Bourne, Jr., Oregon; Albert J. Beveridge, Indiana; Joseph L. Bristow, Kansas; Norris Brown, Nebraska; Albert B. Cummins, Iowa; Moses E. Clapp, Minnesota; Joseph M. Dixon, Montana; A. J. Gronna, North Dakota; Robert H. LaFollette, Wisconsin.

Governors—Lester H. Aldrich, Nebraska; Joseph M. Carey, Wyoming; Hiram W. Johnson, California; Francis E. McGovern, Wisconsin; Chase Osborn, Michigan; W. R. Stubbs, Kansas.

Congressmen—Henry Allen Cooper, Wisconsin; William J. Cary, Wisconsin; C. R. Davis, Minnesota; E. H. Hubbard, Iowa; C. N. Haugen, Iowa; Irvine L. Lenroot, Wisconsin; C. A. Lindbergh, Minnesota; Victor Murdock, Kansas; H. Madison, Kansas; E. H. M. Morse, Wisconsin; John M. Nelson, Wisconsin; Miles Poindexter, Washington.

Other signatures—Ray Stannard Baker, Massachusetts; Louis D. Brandeis, Massachusetts; Charles R. Crane, Illinois; James R. Garfield, Ohio; Francis J. Heney, California; Fred S. Jackson, Kansas; William T. Kent, California; William LaFollette, Washington (three latter congressman-elect); Gifford Pinchot, Pennsylvania; W. S. U'Ren, Oregon; Merle D. Vincent, Colorado; William Allen White, Kansas.

Purposes of League

Senator Bourne, president of the league, made the following statement in regard to its organization and purposes:

"The declaration of principles of the National Progressive league speaks for itself. While its membership is confined to those who believe the republican party represented by progressive republicans offers the most encouragement for the establishment of these principles, there is no purpose to make it a political organization in the sense of the promoting of the political fortunes of any man or men.

"The enactment of legislation carrying out the program is its sole purpose, and it stands ready, whenever acceptable, to assist democratic as well as reoublican legislators to secure such legislation.

"The league will at once enter upon an aggressive campaign. State legislators will he organized, and upon request, furnished with bills, literature and speakers. Permanent headquarters will be maintained for carrying on the work.

"Precise uniformity of legislation in the different states is not to be expected. Account must be taken of the conditions in each state as to the details of the legislation to be urged, the object being to insure popular government in the end.

"Membership in the National Progressive Republican league consists of those who have signed the declaration of principles and constitution, and of those who may hereafter be elected by a majority vote of the members.

"I expect to devote my entire time to the work of the league so far as my official duties will permit. The league will be a permanent organization and its founders have made their plans for a continuance of its work for a number of years."

League Has Roosevelt's Approval

According to the dispatches, Theodore Roosevelt Wednesday, in a signed articie in the Outlook, approved the platform of the National Republican Progressive League.

STATE SHOULD NOT FIX LOCAL RATES

Opposition Develops to Provisions of Sutherland Bill

Protests are being vigorously made against some of the provisions of the bill to create a state board of public service commissioners, which has been introduced in both houses of the Legislature and sponsored by Assemblyman Sutherland.

The section which has called forth protest is that of regulating rates. The bill provides that the commission, to be created, shall fix rates of public utilities for the whole State, thus depriving cities of the inalienable right of fixing utility rates within their limits.

Speaking on this subject, President Finlayson, of the City Club, had the following to say at last Saturday's luncheon:

"In this State we have, perhaps more than in any other State, local self-government for our cities; and this is true particularly with respect to those cities like Los Angeles, who are operating under freeholders' charters, they being practically independent of the Legislature. Such cities can work out their own salvation, unhampered with laws passed by the legislature to a large extent. Such is not the case with the cities of some eastern states, as, for example, New York. The city of New York cannot determine for itself what regulations it shall have respecting the liquor question, but is bound and shackled by the law known as the "Raines" law, passed by the Legislature at Albany.

"This local self-government which we have in California is of vital importance. Many cities of the eastern states, and many of the Middle West also, are hampered because they are continually subjected to the influence of legislation made by the state legislature.

"I understand there is now pending before the Legislature of this State a proposed constitutional amendment, the details of which I do not know, as I have just received notice of it, providing for a state public utilities commission. Those of you who had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Haven's address of a few weeks ago remember what he said about the legislature enactment for a state utilities commission. A very good idea, indeed. One which would not intrench upon those commissions already existing in the municipalities of the state, but, on the contrary, without intrenching upon their jurisdiction will aid them very materially by giving to those local public utilities commissions information gathered by the State commission; so that Mr. Haven's idea of the legislation to be passed by this session of the Legislature must be fraught with nothing but the very best results.

"But I am informed that this constitutional amendment will empower that commission to regulate the public utilities of the State. I may be mistaken, but if I am informed correctly—as I say, I have not yet seen the resolution—that proposed constitutional amendment, giving to the state utilities commission the power to regulate the public utilities, might give to it power that would entrench upon the jurisdiction of our own Public Utilities Commission of this city and public utility commissions in other cities of the State, which would deprive us of that most valuable asset—local self-government. I know of no place in which self-government is of more importance than with regard to the regulation of public utilities.

"It would be disastrous for this city, so far as the regulation of public utilities in this city is concerned, were we subject only to the jurisdiction of the state commission which, in the years to come, perchance might be in control of some politician from San Francisco, and then the citizens of Los Angeles would be dependent for their most sacred rights upon the will and, perhaps, whim of that San Francisco politician. Therefore, I say this proposed constitutional amendment, if I am correctly informed, might be fraught with danger. However, this much may be said with safety—it should be carefully scrutinized so that our legislators may be advised that the cities of this state, operating under freeholders' charters—particularly the city of Los Angeles—do not propose to surrender one iota of their right of local self-government, particularly the right to regulate the public utilities operating within the boundaries of this and other cities operating under freeholders' charters."

The Municipal League of this city has added its protest by adopting the following resolution, which will be sent to Governor Johnson and members of the Legislature:

"Resolved, That the Municipal League of Los Angeles, Cal., indorse and is in favor of legislation creating a public utilities and service commission which shall have power to fix rates to be charged by public service corporations outside of the limits of freeholder charter cities, and which shall have power throughout the State to supervise all public service corporations in relation to their capitalization and the creation of bonded indebtedness and to prescribe a uniform system of bookkeeping; but the Municipal League is strongly opposed to the constitutional amendment known as 'Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 6' introduced hy Mr. Sutherland, for the reason that the same purposes to extend the jurisdiction of a public utilities commission, which is to be appointed by the Governor, over all public utilities throughout the State with absolute power of regulation and control of such utilities, and to deprive all cities or commissions relating to such cities of any regulation or control of such utilities or of corporations operating the same within their limits, and be it further

Resolved, that the Municipal League urges that the proposed constitutional amendment be amended so as to exclude from its provisions large cities operating under freeholders' charters, or at least all cities of the class to which the city of Los Angeles belongs, for the reason that there is no function of the local government which is of more importance or more necessary to the welfare of the citizens of a community than the control and regulation of public utilities and of the public service corporations which occupy its streets and furnish necessary transportation, lighting and power and other public service to its citizens. To take such control from the local authorities in cities which have the population and financial strength to intelligently and effectually regulate such matters and vest it in a state board is a step backward, a return to state control of local affairs, and is opposed to the modern and progressive principle in municipal affairs that all local matters should be managed and controlled by local officials, a principle which has found its best exponent and justification in our own city."

NEW NATIONAL MUNICIPAL LEAGUE OFFICERS

Every Part of the Nation Represented on the Governing Board of Organization.

William Dudley Foulke, of Richmond, Ind., formerly United States Civil Service Commissioner, is the new president of the National Municipal League. He is one of the most aggressive workers in the country for municipal advancement. President Foulke succeeds Charles J. Bonaparte, who was president of the League for seven years.

The vice-presidents chosen in the Buffalo convention, in November, are H. D. W. English, president of the Pittsburg Civic Commission; President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University; George McAneny, borough president of Manhattan; Charles E. Merriam, chairman of the Merriam Commission, Chicago; Charles Richardson, of Philadelphia, and Thomas N. Strong, of Portland, Ore.

Clinton Rogers Woodruff, secretary of the League since its formation seventeen years ago, was re-elected, as was George Burnham, Jr., the treasurer. Both are of Philadelphia.

These are the members of the Executive Committee: Professor Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard University, chairman; Robert Treat Paine and Harvey Stuart Chase, Boston; Dudley Tibbets, Troy, N. Y.; William G. Low, Eugene H. Outerbridge, Robert S. Binkerd, Richard S. Childs, Arthur C. Luddington, William B. Howland, Raymond V. Ingersoll, New York; Knowlton Mixer and Frederick C. Gratwick, Buffalo; Merwin K. Hart, Utica; Charles W. Andrews, Syracuse; Clarence L. Harper and Thomas Raeburn White, Philadelphia; J. Horace McFarland, Harrisburg; Oliver McClintock, Pittsburg; Charles H. Ingersoll, South Orange, N. J.; M. N. Baker, Montclair, N. J.; William P. Bancroft, Wilmington, Del.; Charles J. Bonaparte, Baltimore; Elliott Hunt Pendleton, Cincinnati; A. Leo Weil and George W. Guthrie, Pittsburg; Walter L. Fisher, Chicago; J. L. Hudson, Detroit; John A. Butler, Milwaukee; Dwight F. Davis, St. Louis; Ernst C. Kontz, Atlanta; the Rev. C. N. Lathrop and Frank J. Symes, San Francisco; Meyer Lissner, Los Angeles.

"Corporations in Relation to Politics"

An address delivered by Delos F. Wilcox, Ph. D., Chief of the Bureau of Franchises of the Public Service Commission for the First District, New York; Before the Economic Club of Providence, December 6.

When I was invited to take part in the discussion of "Corporations in Relation to Politics" on this occasion I thought I could take as my text, and approve without reservation, the sixth paragraph of the "Creed of the American People," promulgated at Detroit on the 28th of October, this year, by the distinguished ex-Forester, Mr. Pinchot. This paragraph reads:

"I believe that corporations have certain rights that should be respected, but they have no political rights, powers or duties, and they should have no representatives in Congress, in the Cabinet or on the Bench."

Upon further reflection, I have concluded that Mr. Pinchot was too conservative. I now find myself unable to accede to his preliminary declaration that "corporations have certain rights that should be respected." In my judgment corporations, as such, have no rights whatever, except possibly in a metaphorical sense, as we might say that the woodman's axe has a right to be sharpened or that a lady's last year's bonnet has a right to be retrimmed. A corporation is a mere tool to be used in the furtherance of human welfare. So long as it is useful, or may be made useful by improvements, we would be wise to use it. But it has no rights whatever. We have the rights. A man and a corporation are not in the same category at all.

"Rights" of Corporations

I do not wish to be overtechnical or to juggle with words. I suppose that many of the persons who speak of the "rights" of corporations are really thinking of the rights of the people who have associated themselves together for corporate activity. But even so, the persons who are in corporations have only the same rights as respects the State that other individuals have, except insofar as these particular persons may have undertaken in their corporate capacity certain special obligations which necessarily carry with them special compensating rights. Certainly no corporation or group of men in a corporation that is not performing any public function can claim special or unusual rights from the State. It would be monstrous for the State to confer special rights on a special class of citizens without imposing any corresponding obligations. It would be at variance, not only with the accepted principles of democracy, but with the principles of every form of government that has been establishd since the world began. And so I say not only that corporations, as separate entities, as tools of human activity, as creatures of the State, have no rights, but also that corporate men, the groups of individuals who make up the corporations, have no rights as such unless they are performing a special public service by means of their corporate organization, and then their rights are depended upon and measured by their faithfulness and efficiency in performing that service.

What a Corporation Is

I do not wish, however, to pass over too easily the conception of corporations as separate, powerful, intangible entities stalking over the land and making themselves masters of it. For after all the explanations to the effect that a corporation is a mere association of human beings very like other human beings, the fact remains that in current thought and popular discussion the emphasis is laid much of the time upon the instrument itself rather than upon the men who use it. The tool overshadows the man. The idea of the tool masters the man as he stands in the shadow. It is essential in this discussion to dwell upon the differences between man and tool. I have said that they are not in the same category. In these modern days of intense outward activity and constant stimulation, we may not have a clear and precise idea, ready at all times to formulate itself in words, of the superiority that characterizes a human being in relation to any or all of the non-human things that surround him. But none of us is so mean that he would not instinctively scorn comparison of his own ultimate importance with that of the greatest corporation in the world. It is this superiority of man over his environment and the creatures of his hand and brain, that lies at the basis of the State and marks politics as the highest category of the world's activity. Our fathers declared that all men are created equal and that they are endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Perhaps as a reaction from the spirit of unreasoning reverence for the pronouncements of the fathers, it has now become quite the fashion to pick the Declaration to pieces and say that it is fallacious and untrue, especially in the statement that men are created equal. Looking upon the acknowledged inequalities of men in physical, intellectual and moral stature, the modern apologists for privileged classes tell us that Jefferson was mistaken. The inequalities to which they point are perfectly obvious, and were as obvious in 1776 as they are in 1910. Jefferson certainly did not suppose, or think he could make the world believe, that all babies at birth weigh exactly six pounds and are twenty inches long, or even that all men who are given equal facilities for self-development from their birth will attain an exactly equal adult stature in education, culture and social power. Men are equal in this respect—they are all born of women, they hunger and are satisfied with bread, they grow weary and are refreshed with sleep, they play in their babyhood, in manhood they work and grow strong, they love and beget children, they live in a state of mutual co-operation and independence, they grow old and die and their bodies dissolve into the elements of the earth. This wonderful drama of life is universal among men. Every child that is born starts upon such a career. It is the function of the State to smooth the way so that as many as possible may keep in the race to the end, living their lives fully and well, performing their parts in the great panorama in which all are actors and spectators at the same time.

Freedom, Not Liberty, the Goal

No human being is so small or so insignificant as to fall outside the jurisdiction of the State. Political action goes to the individual. The census ramifies and searches in all the nooks and corners of the earth to find human beings. Every man, woman or child that draws the breath of life counts one. For governmental purposes the surface of the earth is physically divided and set off into sovereign jurisdictions so that no one may be left out. Each particular sovereignty is itself divided into commonwealths, counties, cities, towns, administrative districts and election precincts. The State sets up its agents in every corner of the land, so that no spot capable of supporting human life shall be neglected and no man, however mean or ignorant or unsocial, shall be left to himself alone. Government organizes everywhere and in detail. Politics is the sum total of the people's activity in relation to government. What is the purpose of this all-embracing movement, the common intelligence directing the common endeavor toward a common end? The only word that is adequate to describe this universal, age-long purpose is 'freedom." Freedom is the goal toward which history and civilization tend—not freedom to "do as one pleases," not freedom to follow wild and lawles impulses that are self-destructive and destructive to society—but freedom to do right, freedom under law, freedom to develop one's powers as a social being, constructive freedom. We might as well be rid once for all of the idea that freedom can ever be liberty to destroy or to refuse to function. Freedom does not include the right of suicide or of social destruction. The man, or even the family, alone on a desert island is least free. The untutored savage in the pathless forest is least free. It is only by social co-operation, division of labor, economy of effort, development of social functions that freedom can be attained. Politics is the eternal vigilance that is the price of liberty. Government is for men. Government has only human ends. It is not concerned with physical nature or with property except as they are or can be made subservient to men and thus increase human opportunity. Government in all ages has been in large measure diverted from its true universal purpose into an institution devoted to the benefit of those who govern. But we hold that democracy was ordained from the beginning, that it is the normal purpose of the state toward which civilization tends.

Relation of Corporations to the State

What shall be the relation of the corporation to the state? It should be the same as the relation of man to his Maker—one of daily prayer and humble service. Even this analogy will be misleading without a further explanation. My religious creed does not allow that the daily prayer referred to should be the importunate demand for special favors, which characterizes the devotions of some religious people and the political activities of many lusty corporations. On the other hand, my religious creed does not require that men should be constantly waiting upon the Lord, pressing upon Him their direct and personal services. When He has need He will call us. Meantime, in the world at large, governed by His law, we work out our destinies for ourselves, in joy and sorrow and patience—but always obeying His law. The daily prayer and the humble service are in the application of the Golden Rule to the affairs of men. It is when men become arrogant and forget God, in the sense that they break His law and try to put themselves outside of His jurisdiction and "do as they please," that in the assertion of a false freedom they destroy themselves. It is hard to kick against the pricks. The corporation, in its relation to the state, should devote itself to the furtherance of all converging into one purpose—the development of a free, strong, happy people. If the corporation introduces economies in production, helps in the equitable distribution of wealth, promotes honesty and fair dealing among men—in a word, contributes to the development of human freedom—it is a good tool. It has no specific relation to politics, except as an instrument of the people through which prosperity and order can more easily be attained. It has no rights. It does not forget its creator in attempts to break the law or to defeat the purposes of the state. It does not clamor for privileges or protection. It is dumb. It can only work under the laws which men in their wisdom or their ignorance prescribe for the furtherance of their own welfare. Otherwise, these intangible creatures, arrogating to themselves the powers that attach to the control of concentrated wealth, become a sort of phantom aristocracy, all the more powerful because they are so elusive and pervading, so much the creatures of men's thoughts and fears.

The Purposes of Democracy,

Campaign Contributions a Betrayal of Trust

Political contributions by corporations are inconsistent with the nature of things. They represent a betrayal of trust on the part of certain individuals who for the time being have control of corporation funds. They are given because these individuals are unwilling to contribute the money from their own pockets so long as they are able, through their trusteeship, to give of the funds in which others have a share.

Great Personal Fortunes Condemned

Another abuse of corporate organization is the exploitation of it for the creation of great personal fortunes. It is through corporations for the most part that men get rich. Men have no right to get rich. It is to the interest of the state that they should not. Property, like the corporations, has been set up in many quarters as an end in itself. Property has no rights. It is only men who have rights. When the accumulation or the concentration of wealth or of the control over wealth runs counter to the general welfare of men, every instrument that helps to accentuate the evil is without standing before the state. It should be discarded or its use transformed. I fear we have a wrong notion about property. There is no such thing ultimately as private property.

All Wealth Is Social

All property is held in trust. The day will come when, roughly speaking, no man who makes an ill use of wealth, either for himself or for society at large, will be permitted to keep it under his control, and on the other hand every man who develops special social efficiency will be put into control of enough wealth to enable him to perform his functions for society to the best advantage. The corporation is, in its ideas, an instrument particularly adapted to help bring about this transformation in our attitude toward property. Whenever it is used to strengthen the recognition of absolute ownership of property by individuals, or to increase the amounts of property subjected to such ownership, it is being perverted from its true function and is running counter to the purposes of the state. Under such circumstances the corporation needs chastening, or if that is not possible, then dissolution. The juggling with corporate securities is the particular abuse through which the corporation is most frequently used to make men rich to the detriment of the state.

Special Franchises

Before bringing my remarks to a close, I must refer briefly to the special class of corporations that bear a particular relation to the state. I mean public service corporations enjoying special franchises. The relation of this class of corporations to politics is unique; their function is not private, but public. In the broadest sense of the term their activities are wholly political. Public utilities, to my mind, are public functions which, in this country, are usually delegated to corporations as agents of the state. It seems to me that public utility companies should be treated substantially as arms of the civil service, and in the same way be divorced from "politics" in the narrow sense of that term. If my idea of the true relation between public service corporations and the state or the city government is correct, then first of all the speculative element should be ruled out of public utility investments and the utilities operated as public monopolies at cost, including a limited but reasonably certain return upon the capital actually and necessarily invested. Municipalities usually pay their bonds when due. Broadly speaking, public service corporations never do. Public utility securities, under a rational franchise contract, would become substantially as safe as municipal bonds. I regard this question of capitalization as at the very core of the problem of the relations of the public service corporation to politics. It is here that the public and the private interest clash most violently.

Plants Should Be Honestly Capitalized

It is to the interest of the public that utility plants should be honestly and conservatively capitalized to begin with and then that the capital should be continuously reduced by amortization out of earnings. It is to the interest of the public service corporation, not as the servant of the state, but as the tool of those who seek great riches, that utilities should be capitalized as heavily and as dishonestly as possible to begin with and that thereafter the capitalization should constantly increase. But, perhaps, there is no better illustration of the ultimate futility of the theory that freedom means freedom to take oneself out of the jurisdiction of law than in this very matter of overcapitalization. While particular individuals get rich in this way and incur the distinction that attends upon infamy, the great majority of those who invest in the hope of securing riches only mutilate their own fortunes and suffer and perhaps perish in oblivion.

Freedom pertains to men. It means freedom to do well. A corporation is a mere tool. It has no political rights. If it does not serve the purposes of the state, if it runs counter to human welfare, it has no standing before the bar of judgment. It should be mended or destroyed.

EXPRESS RATES IN CANADA TO BE REDUCED

Railway Commissioners Condemn Express Companies for Excessive Charges

After an inquiry spread over a period of several years and involving the hearing of a vast mass of evidence, the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada has issued a voluminous judgment, which, in effect, is a sweeping condemnation of the express companies doing business in the Dominion. Declaring that the express companies are greatly over-capitalized, that their forms of contract with shippers are grossly unfair, and that they are owned by the railway companies, whose earnings on express traffic are excessive, the board finds that the tolls are unreasonably high and orders the filing of new tariffs within the next three months, and the preparation of a new form of contract. Other points which have been the subject of complaint for years are dealt with in a manner more or less favorable to shippers, the whole judgment being in the direction of relaxing the grip of the companies upon the trading public. It is perhaps the most notable deliverance yet made by the railway board, and will have a far-reaching effect.

Commenting on the decision, the Toronto Globe says, editorially:

"The old evil of over-capitalization seems to be especially potent in the case of the express companies. There are as a matter of fact, no express companies in Canada in the sense in which the words are used in the United States. The Canadian Express Company is the G. T. R. under another name, and the Dominion Express Company is the C. P. R. The actual money in the form of capital put into the Canadian Express Company when it was organized in 1865 was $27,520. No further money was put in on stock account. The Grand Trunk bought out the company in 1892, paying $660,000 for the business as a going concern. There are now three millions of stock outstanding on an original investment of $27,520., while the tangible assets are only $212,719. The capital account of the Dominion Express Company is on the same basis. The sum of $24,500 is all the money ever actually paid in on capital account; the accumulated assets are about $600,000, while there are two million dollars' worth of capital stock outstanding. The commissioners very properly point out that if a company chooses to inflate its capital by making nine-tenths water to one-tenth cash it is absurd to say it is entitled to six, eight, ten, or any other percentage upon the inflated capitalization.

"In this terse sentense the railway commission of Canada lays down a principle over which there have been years of strife across the border. The basis of the cost of railway transportation should be the cost of performing the service plus a reasonable rate of interest on the capital invested in the business. If a company chooses to say it has ten millions invested in it, and has in fact but one million in it, the railway commission proposes to base rates on the real and not on the fictitious capital."

SENATOR WRIGHT AND HIS GROUCH

Senator Leroy A. Wright of San Diego cannot hide his chagrin over the defeat of his Senatorial candidate, A. G. Spalding.

He carries his animosity against Senator Works to the point of attacking E. T. Earl of Los Angeles, a friend and supporter of the progressive Senator.

Wright would, if he could, prevent Earl's confirmation as a trustee of the normal school in Los Angeles, one of the most acceptable appointments yet made by Governor Johnson.

Naturally, Senator Wright denies that Earl's support of Senator Works has anything to do with his fight against the Los Angeles millionaire.

He gives as his reason for his opposition the allegation that Mr. Earl accepted rebates from the railroads when he was a big fruit shipper, some fifteen years ago.

The absolute flimsiness of this excuse is apparent to all who are not irreparably biased against truth and fairness.

Granted that E. T. Earl did accept rebates fifteen years ago, what has that to do with the present case?

Fifteen years ago rebates were looked upon as a part of general business. There was no law against the practice; no public clamor that rebating should cease.

When rebating degenerated into a weapon for the strong shipper against his weaker competitor; when it became a thing of evil. E. T. Earl stopped his acceptance of drawbacks, and went out of the shipping business.

But Senator Wright continues to harp upon a legal and general practice among business men in a vain effort to discredit one of the leading progressives of California. He knows his charge against Earl carries no weight. He is using it to cloak his open hostility against Earl because the latter is a friend of Senator Works.

The utter absurdity of his position regarding rebating is shown in the fact that a San Bernardino investigating committee reported that Alden Anderson—of whose school of politics Wright is a member—accepted rebates long after E. T. Earl discontinued the practice.

Senator Wright admits he has no proof of Earl's rebating, and he has until Monday to gather evidence.

In the meantime his charges are treated with the disdain they deserve. E. T. Earl is in the forefront of the great struggle that is freeing California from the stranglehold of the Southern Pacific; he is the proprietor of a newspaper that is consistently fighting for right in city and state; he is clean and able; not self-seeking; and California is the better for his having lived in this state.—Oakland Enquirer.

HOW POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS WORK

British postal savings banks pay two and a half per cent interest on deposits and have over eleven million depositors—roughly, one to four of the population—with eight hundred million dollars to their credit. When the interest on Government bonds was two and three-fourths per cent the postal banks showed a profit. Since bond interest was reduced to two and a half per cent—the same rate paid depositors—they have, of course, operated at a loss.

French postal savings banks pay two and a half per cent interest on deposits and have five million depositors, with about three hundred million dollars to their credit. They are operated at a profit. The postal savings banks of Italy also have five million depositors, with about three hundred million dollars to their eredit. They pay a little over two per cent on deposits and show a good profit after deducting over a million dollars a year of income tax. Postal savings banks in Belgium pay three per cent on small deposits, two per cent on larger accounts. They have two million depositors, with a hundred and forty million dollars to their credit, and are operated at a profit. In England and France the annual cost of administration is a little less than one-half of one per cent of the amount on deposit; in Belgium it is a little more; in Italy only one-quarer of one per cent.

From a bulletin recently issued by the National Monetary Commission, statistics for other countries might be added—all, however, to the same general effect. There are over forty million depositors in all postal savings banks—mainly working people, for whom perfect security and convenience of access to a depository are the great inducements to save. To take care of their savings costs nothing, except in England, where the deficit is due to a reduction of interest on the Government debt. Such, briefly, is the world's experience of the system which is now being established in this country—Saturday Evening Post.

HALF-CENT COIN

The idea of the half cent as currency has not in the past harmonized with American notions. Fractional currency as small as that seemed too insignificant to bother with. But American notions of the value of things are changing, and it is probable that an effort will be made in the next Congress to add the half cent to the country's coinage. The lack of the half cent in our money undoubtedly costs the consumers of the United States millions of dollars every year. Competition has become so keen in business that producers and middlemen figure their prices down to the finest point.—Cleveland Leader.

First Cannibal—How did that actor taste? Second Cannibal—He was good in certain parts.—Columbia Jester.

The Jester's Bells

"Them Burglars"

He was a big man, with a broad-brimmed slouch hat and a fierce bristling gray beard. A guide tagged along as he marched briskly down the main corridor of the capitol, commenting on the sights shown him only with a growl, a snort or a grunt. He paused at the end of the corridor and perked his head toward a carpeted passage:

"What's them burglars doing today?" he demanded.

"The senate is not in session, sir," said the guide in a shocked voice.

After the visitor had departed the guide sat down on his chair and mopped his heated brow.

"That's one kind that comes here," he said. "We have all kinds, but his style is the hardest to deal with. Called the senate burglars—you heard him, and he kicked at everything else I showed him. They ain't got no patriotism at all, and a United States senator ain't no more to them than a doorkeeper. Why, I'm afraid to take men like him into the supreme court—likely as not they'll say something disrespectful right out loud. Do you know what that one said when I showed him Statuary Hall? He says, 'Who are all those crooks?' Then he wanted to know how much all them statues cost the government and who got the rake-off. I told him they were given by the states and he said that was once when the states put one over.

"You wouldn't think," said the guide with a sigh, "that patriotic Americans could come here and be so callous about the things they see. I don't know what the country's coming to. I've been a guide here 20 years, but I never thought I'd live to hear the senate called burglars."—L. A. Record.

Mrs. Muggins—My husband is a great believer in the power of the press. Mrs. Buggins—Yes. I notice he always hides behind his paper when he has a seat in a crowded car. —Penna. Press.

Chief Editor—Look here, Sharpe, here's a fiddler been hanged for murder. How shall we headline it? Musical Editor—How would "Difficult Execution on One String" do?—St. Louis Times.

"Noah must have felt lucky when he landed after his long sail." "Yes," replied the New York importer. "Think of a man landing all that cargo without a customs official to say a word!"—Washington Star.

Artist—Madam, it is not faces alone that I paint, it is souls! Madam—Oh, you do interiors, then?—Boston Transcript.

Away Out West

"You say this is the only house in the county?"

"That's what."

"I'm thinking of building a few miles further on."

"Build right here, stranger. Then we'll have a town."—Courier Journal.

An Interesting Antique

"Fine old inn, sir," commented the host. "Everything in this house has its story."

"I don't doubt it," remarked the grouchy tourist. "And is there any legend connected with this old piece of cheese?"—Kansas City Journal.

Long Drawn Out

Judge—"What is your name?"

Prisoner—"J. J. J. J. John Jones."

Judge—"Why do you have so many J's in your name?"

Prisoner—"The preacher who christened me stuttered, sir.—London Answers.

A Courteous Juryman

Prosecutor Cline of Cleveland tells a story of a murder case he once tried, in which he had a good deal of difficulty in getting a jury chosen. He asked of one veniremen the question: "Have you any scruples against voting for the infliction of the death penalty in case willful murder is proved? "I got to ask for information," answered the veniremen, cautiously. "Should I say yes or no to that there question if I don't want to set on this here jury?"—Kansas City Star.

For the First Comer

Young Man—"So Miss Ethel is your oldest sister? Who comes after her?"

Small Brother—Nobody ain't come yet; but pa says the first fellow that comes can have her."—Boston Transcript.

Sareastic

A pompous-looking lawyer once chartered a hansom cab, and on reaching his destination he only gave his driver the shilling required by law.

The driver looked at the coin and bit his lip. Then in the most courteous manner he said: "Do step in again, sir. I could ha' druv ye a yard or two farther for this 'ere."—London Fun.

"The only thing I find to say against you is that your washing bill is far too extravagant. Last week you had six blouses in the wash. Why, Jane, my own daughter never sends more than two." "Ah, that may be, mum," replied Jane, "but I 'ave to! Your daughter's sweetheart is a bank clerk, while my young man is a chimney sweep. It makes a difference, mum."—Tit-Bits.

Yeast—And was he cool in the hour of danger? Crimsonbeak—Well, his feet were!—Yonkers Statesman.

"How Tillie's clothes hang about her! Why, they don't fit her at all!" "But think how much worse she would look if they did!"—Meggendorfer Blatter.

"Guess I must have been born unlucky." "What makes you say that?" "Well, for instance, I went to a ball game once. There were eighteen players on the diamond, fifteen or twenty on the benches, 10,000 people in the grandstand, 20,000 on the bleachers and—the ball hit me."—Toledo Blade.

McCool—What's my bill? Clerk—What room? McCool—I slept on the billiard table. Clerk—Fifty cents an hour.—Chicago Daily News.

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Smith told us, "my husband is an enthusiastic archaeologist. And I never knew it till yesterday. I found in his desk some queer looking tickets with the inscription 'Mudhorse, 8 to 1.' And when I asked him what they were, he explained to me that they were relics of a lost race. Isn't it interesting?"—Boston Traveler.

Theatre

Orpheum

The attractive bill offered here this week by the Orpheum Road Show is distinguished by at least four acts which are perfect of their kind. These are the two headliners, La Pia and the Rigoletto Brothers, Howard, the Scotch ventriloquist, and the playet, "His Nerve." To begin with the best, Charles and Henry Rigoletto are a whole vaudeville show in themselves. They have mastered an unbelievable number of phases of dexterity, which they display with generosity, nerve and an equipment whose lavishness goes far toward proving them expert and enterprising. Their long act includes feats as instrumentalists, jugglers, illusionists, plastic acrobats and aerial gymnasts. After their dashing finale, a banjo and mandolin duet play as they balance at either end of a ladder in midair, one sighs in pity for the old vaudeville "artists" who gloried in but one line of work. What chance have they against these Italian brothers with their unchallenged versatility?

For beauty and novelty, no dancer who has appeared on the Orpheum stage has offered an act which equals that of La Pia, "the Enchantress," now on her first American tour. She appears in an exquisitely dainty Japanese dance, in a gorgeous Egyptian effect, in a remarkably realistic fire dance, and in "The Sea Nymph," a marine fancy both new and beautiful, which leaves one with an almost awed sense of the sea's irresistible powers.

The achievements of Howard, the ventriloquist, would better be heard than read about, lest the veracity of the writer be doubted.

Charles Leonard Fletcher does some finished work as the intrepid and humorous gentleman burglar in "His Nerve," a sketch which certainly bears out its claim to "absorbing interest" and is an extremely clever and compact affair.

To supply the broad laughs which no Orpheum bill is complete without, Mae Melville and Robert Higgins return to receive an uproarious welcome and to renew their jests on Mr. Higgins' physique. He still "lets it lay" when he drops his hat, to the audience's delight.

Hibbert and Warren entertain with good minstrelsy, and Joe Jackson and Cross and Josephine hold over to complete a splendid program.

D. R. L.

Jolly T. Powers

If you want a merry-go-round of fun, that will keep the cobwebs from getting permanent hold in your top, go to see James T. Powers at Hamburger's Majestic theatre this week. The play "Havana" contains all the traditional machinery of improbabilities that characterize light opera, and is a very excellent musical comedy of the good sort.

Maxine Elliott, Majestic Theatre Next Week

As bo-sun of the Wasp and a matrimonial outlaw, Mr. Powers has a role that gives him no end of opportunity for fun making, of which the large audiences seem never to have enough. Mr. Powers is a great favorite with audiences who want to forget the vexations and frictions outside. While not a vocalist, his enunciation is so distinct that his hearers don't care whether he is singing or talking. It is a pity that he does not encourage the other soloists to enunciate as carefully.

The fun of the play is all clean, the chorus excellent, the stage pictures beautiful. All the parts are in competent hands. Helen Darling as Consuelo, the Cuban beauty, and Dave Andrada as the son fresh from an English University, deserve special mention for good acting.

The music of "Havana" was written by Leslie Stuart, author of Florodora and is reminiscent of that popular opera.

If tired or bored, if blue or cross, spend an evening with J. T. (Jolly Talker) Powers at the Majestic and you will be glad you are living.

M. J. B.

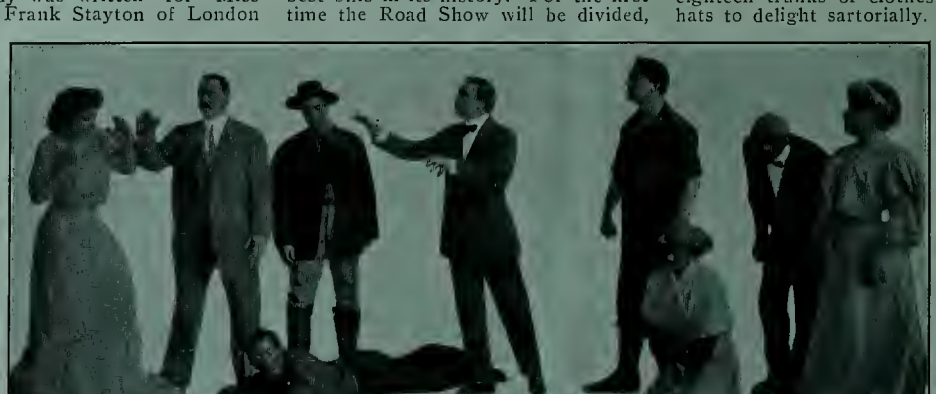
COMING ATTRACTIONS

At the Auditorium next week there will be offered as the first dramatic production of the year Edward Sheldon's much-discussed race-problem play of the South, "The Nigger," with Florence Roberts. As the name suggests, the play deals with the negro and his relations to the dominant white race, and in working out his story the author is said to have attacked conditions that no other American playwright has ever before had the courage to assail. Nevertheless, the play does not make an appeal for racial equality, and insists that the future of the negro must depend largely upon himself. The race question, however, is simply the background for these acts of intense human realism. This may be readily judged from an outline of the plot. Philip Morrow, the central figure of the play, after some unpleasant experiences in handling a party of lynchers, is elected governor of a Southern State, largely through the efforts of Clifton Noyes, a distiller, who looks to his successful candidate to veto the prohibition bill which the legislature has passed. Morrow refuses, even when Noyes, who has discovered that Morrow has negro blood in his veins, threatens to expose him. This scene with Noyes, and the subsequent one with Georgiana Byrd, his sweetheart, when he tells her that he is a "nigger," and she repulses him, are dramatic. At the finale of the play, Morrow accepts his tragic fate, resigning all hope of social equality and political preferment, and condemned to see the woman he loves pass out of his life, anticipates his enemy and makes known to the public that he is a negro, and that he can no longer be their governor and leader. It is not difficult to concieve of the dramatic possibilities of such a situation.

Alice Lloyd, Orpheum Road Show Next Week

Miss Maxine Elliott comes to the Hamburger's Majestic Theatre on Monday night for one week in her jolly nautical comedy, "The Inferior Sex," in which she appeared at Daly's Theatre in New York last winter and spring and a supplementary engagement at her own theatre this autumn. The comedy was written for Miss Elliott by Frank Stayton of London and has in it the tang of the sea air and the music of rolling waves.

It tells the story of a beautiful woman who is rescued from an open dory adrift on the wide ocean and brought aboard a yacht owned by a man who hates women or thinks he does, which all amounts to the same thing. He has left London to escape the charms of his feminine acquaintances and is writing a book which he is pleased to call "The Inferior Sex," in which he dwells with more candor than politeness on the weaknesses and foibles of womankind. Circumstances force the woman to remain on the yacht some days and the gradually clearing comprehension of the man for womankind in general and this woman in particular, makes a diverting and absorbing entertainment, enhanced, of course, by a pretty love story, for naturally the master of the yacht falls desperately in love with his charming supercargo.



Miss Elliott will have the same support which surrounded her during her two New York runs in the piece. The company includes Frederick Kerr and O. B. Clarence, two gentlemen known in London for their abilities to amuse and T. Tamamoto, a Japanese actor. The scenic accessories are novel, all the action taking place on the yacht, "Firefly," of which the cabin, decks and superstructure are revealed.

"The Fox" goes into its third week at the Burbank Theatre beginning with the matinee Sunday. This comedy of Lee Arthur's has unquestionably caused more comment than any other new production given by Mr. Morosco. Although "The Fox" has achieved considerable reputation as a baffling puzzle play, it is not in the manner in which it fools the audiences that it makes its greatest appeal. The characterizations in the play are novel to the stage, and probably nothing like the Peter Delaney of A. Byron Beasley has been created. The other members of the Burbank company are equally at home in roles which possess originality. David Hartford, David Landau, Charles Ruggles, Frank Camp, Peter Lang, Frederick Gilhert, Willis Marks, Marjorie Rambeau and Louise Royce give a performance which is finished in every detail. The third week of "The Fox" will give the Burbank company an opportunity for rehearsing the first stock production ever given of David Belasco's New York comedy, "Is Matrimony a Failure," which will be staged the following week.

The second week of the Orpheum Road Show, together with Alice Lloyd, Lew Sully, Lillian Burkhart & Co., and Ernest Scharff, which begins with the matinee on Monday, January 30, promises to be better than the week just closing, which has offered Orpheum patrons one of the best bills in its history. For the first time the Road Show will be divided, and instead of all its acts being here only the four biggest will remain, these include La Pia, the Rigoletto Brothers, Howard and Melville and Higgins.

Little need be said of Alice Lloyd, England's well-known comedienne. Miss Lloyd has daintiness, beauty, winsome ways and that faculty of getting things over which puts her into intimate touch with her audiences. She has a wealth of new songs, all of them being restricted to her exclusive use; she still retains her success, "Splash Me," and one or two others of her best liked past hits, and she has eighteen trunks of clothes and forty hats to delight sartorially.

As funny and desirable in his way, too, is Lew Sully—fat, fair and more than forty. Lew is a comedian all of his own school. With Miss Lloyd's aid and consent he is giving travesties of that fetching little singer. Several of her most popular numbers, such as "Splash Me" and "Master Cupid," are

Scene from "The Nigger," Auditorium Next Week

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse, Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Beginning Monday Night, Jan. 30

MISS MAXINE ELLIOTT

(Under her own management) In her cup-lifting yachting comedy
"The INFERIOR SEX" By Frank Stayton
Prices—Nights and Sat. Mat. 50c to $2.00. Popular Mat. Wed., 50c to $1.50. Coming—"THE MIDNIGHT SONS."

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
Third Week Begins Sunday Matinee, Jan. 29
Packed at every performance—the same production New York will pay $2 a seat to see in October "THE FOX"
Nights—25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 10c, 25c, 50c.
Next Week—"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE?" FIRST TIME IN STOCK.

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447 Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c
Beginning Monday Matinee, Jan. 30

ALICE LLOYD — Dainty English Comedienne
LEW SULLY — "Words & Music"
LILLIAN BURKHART & CO. — "What Every Woman Wants"
ERNEST SCHARFF — "In a Music Store"

And, Positively Last Week THE ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW,
Direction of Mr. Martin Beck

AUDITORIUM Theatre Beautiful L. E. BEHYMER Manager
ALL NEXT WEEK, STARTING MONDAY NIGHT
Bargain Matinee Wed. and Sat. Best Seats $1.00
THE DRAMATIC SENSATION OF THE YEAR
Wm. A. Brady (Ltd.) Presents California's Favorite Actress

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Supported by THURLOW BERGEN
And a strong company in Edward Sheldon's Great American Play
"The NIGGER"
Magnificent Scenery and Remarkable Stage Effects.
Prices—Night, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50.
Matinees, 25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00.
Seats now selling.

...by Lew for the broadest burlesquery. Imagine the ponderous Lew in a bobbie or in pink tights and Cupid's wings, and you need nothing more in the fun line.

Lilian Burkhart comes with the Road Show, taking Fletcher's place, with the sketch "What Every Woman Wants," a product of Mrs. Madge Clover and Miss Louella Conley of this city. The sketch had its premier here, and on the strength of that was given Orpheum bookings. Since then it has played much of the western time.

Ernest Scharff, a versatile musician, is the fourth new number, and his offering, "In a Music Store," enables him to present his proficiency on a varied number of instruments all of different sorts.

MUSIC

There were two great attractions at the Auditorium last Tuesday evening, one program scheduled for the evening and the other crowd which came to hear it. As the automobiles filed past the entrance in seemingly endless succession, only pausing an instant to discharge their gorgeously gowned passengers, the lobby and entrances became filled with an ever-changing shimmering flashing crowd which made the scene one to be impressed upon the memory. All the newest dress inspirations were to be seen among the brilliant assemblage drawn by the magnet of Tetrazzini's wonderful voice. Not only was the Auditorium crowded to its topmost tier, but the stage itself was appropriated for the overflow of the audience, and then when every available cranny had been filled with spectators the late comers still clamored for seats which could not be procured.

Josef Hofmann, Pianist, Simpson Auditorium Feb. 7th and 11th

The public mind had been prepared for an experience somewhat out of the ordinary, and every expectation was gloriously fulfilled. One may say without fear of contradiction that Tetrazzini is the greatest mistress of coloratura singing in the world today and mayhap of all time. Standing easily before her audience she brings forth those glorious tones with an ease that is almost unbelievable.

Her tones have preemminently the resonant heart-stirring quality which even at the softest note vibrates in the remotest part of the auditorium and pulses about the listener in waves of exquisite sound. Every tone is purity itself and there is not a note that lacks in roundness and sweetness.

Of the three famous arias which formed the diva's program, the last was the most productive of enthusiasm though all three were exactly suited to the singer and all examples of the best style of earlier Italian composition, to the interpretation of which Mme. Tetrazzini confines herself.

A demonstration of unexampled enthusiasm brought forth a repetition of a portion of the "Lucia" aria and closed a concert which will be long remembered.

Mr. Hastings is the possessor of a baritone voice of a decidedly fine dramatic quality, his songs being well chosen and exceedingly well rendered. Mr. Benoist played the Liszt "E. Major Polonaise" with a technical resourcefulness and tonal power worthy of all praise. Walter Oesterreicher flutest, completed the list of assisting artists.

The huge crowd which filled the Auditorium to hear Tetrazzini did not seem to draw in the least from the Ellis Club enthusiasts who throng Simpson Auditorium at every appearance of this ambitious and successful organization. The place which this club holds in the regard of our music-loving people has been so often attested by packed houses that it was no surprise that even the inclement weather, which under ordinary circumstances keeps Los Angeles people at home, did not affect the size of the audience.

Taken as a whole, the program Tuesday evening was about the most consistently excellent work the Ellis Club has done during the last couple of years at least, this being the period during which the writer has heard their concerts. The assisting artists were Mrs. Constance Balfour, a soprano, whose voice possesses a good deal of power but not much sympathy; Mrs. Ada Marsh Chick, organist; Mr. Arthur Alexander, tenor; Mr. William James Chick, baritone, and the Krauss String Quartet.

Mr. Alexander, recently appointed organist of Christ Church Cathedral, who played his own accompaniments, has a tenor of most pleasing quality and was enthusiastically received, being obliged to give two encores.

In the Chopin "Romanza" Mr. Opid's cello solo was effective, the encore being the "Traumerei" with muted strings.

The choral program numbers were: "A Vintage Song," Mendelssohn; "In Vocal Combat," a combination of "Then You'll Remember Me" and "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," arranged by Dudley Buck; "Carpathian Folk Song," Stair; "Spring Night," Filke; "Toreador, Hola!" Trotere; "King Olaf's Christmas," Buck.

M. R. T.

Half of the Symphony Orchestra series for the present season is over and the second half, beginning Friday afternoon, February 10, in the Auditorium, when the fourth concert will be presented with Mr. Arnold Krauss, concert-master and soloist. The program selected is an exceptionally good one for this mid-season presentation, including in addition to Mr. Krauss' solo, Beethoven's "Concerto in D Major," Mendelssohn's "First Symphony in C Minor," Shapleigh's Tone Poem, "Mirage," and Cherubini's Overture to Anacreon.

February will be a busy month musically, opening as it does with the Josef Hofmann recitals at Simpson Auditorium the evening of February 7 and the matinee on the 11th.

The Glee Club concert, given by the united schools with Ellen Beach Yaw as soloist at the Auditorium, Monday, February 13, is already attracting considerable attention.

Edna Darch, the Los Angeles girl, whose success abroad particularly in Berlin, has secured a place prominent in the musical circles of Europe for her, will be heard in recital at the Auditorium on the evening of February 16.

The Orpheus Club will give it's next concert in the Auditorium Friday evening, February 17.

Miss Lillian Adams, the pianist and teacher announces a recital to be given in Gamut Club auditorium, in conjunction with Mary Le Grand Reed, soprano.

The second Harry Lott recital will take place Thursday evening, February 23, at Cumnock Hall, a Rudyard Kipling program to be given.

Alessandro Bonci, the well known tenor of the Metropolitan, will be heard in recital at Simpson Auditorim Tuesday evening, February 28.

Josef Hofmann, pianist, comes to Simpson Auditorium the evening of February 7 and the matinee of the 11th.

Two years ago Hofmann came to Los Angeles and made the best impression he had ever made in this city. This was his fourth visit, but he showed the resources of the Hofmann genius. Hofmann is a pianist who thinks himself of less importance than the men who wrote the music he interprets. Hence his mental and emotional attitude towards the master works is one of normal and healthy intellectuality. The beauty of his work is that he is enabled to intellectualize Beethoven, sentimentalize Chopin and give in a virile and heroic form the Russian composers works with which he is so familiar.

His opening program, which follows, is strictly a Hofmann arrangemen:

I

(a) Sonata E Minor op. 90; (b) Rondo a Capriccio, op. 129; (c) Sonata A flat major, op. 26; (d) March from "Ruines d'Athenes" (Transcription Rubenstein).. (Beethoven)

II

(a) Ballade F Major; (b) Nocturne E flat major; (c) Valse A flat Major; (d) Andante Spianato et Grande Polonaise ....(Chopin)

III

(Russian Composers)

(a) Etude G sharp Minor (Scriabine)
(b) Melodie E Minor..(Gabrilowitch)
(c) Tabatiere a Musique....(Liadow)
(d) Prelude G Minor.(Rachmaninoff)
(e) Barcarolle G Minor (Rubinstein)
(f) Paraphrase from "Eugene Onegunne.....(Tchaikowsky Pabst)

The tremendous sale for the Tetrazzini concerts throughout this week and the fact that every seat for Friday night, including four hundred on the stage and in the orchestra pit, were already sold at ten o'clock Thursday morning, resulted in activities which brought about the possibility of a third concert on Saturday night of this week at the Auditorium. Manager Leahy had already arranged a recital on Monday evening at Salt Lake, and the Tetrazzini car had been ordered for the Saturday morning's "Limited."

Manager Behymer, knowing well the disappointment of the many thousands turned away, concluded to take a long chance and with Manager Leahy's consent, wired the Salt Lake local manager a financial offer which could not be refused. With Salt Lake eliminated an open night at the Auditorium in waiting, the next step was the consent of the diva herself to do something which she has never consented to do before—sing two nights in succession. She at first demurred, but after learning there would be no Monday night concert and a complete rest between here and Denver, and realizing full well that never before had she entered the gates of a strange city and been received in such a gracious manner as in Los Angeles, she consented to this farewell in Los Angeles. Tonight then, Mme. Tetrazzini will be heard for the last time in an entire change of program.

The German boy who presided over the soda fountain in the only drug store in an Ohio town was accustomed to patrons who did not know their own minds, and his habit of thought was difficult to change.

"Plain soda," said a stout woman, entering one day, in great haste.

"You haf vanilla, or you haf lemon?" calmly inquired the Teutonic lad.

"Plain soda—without syrup! Didn't you understand me?" demanded the stout woman, testily.

"Yas, I understand," came from the boy, whose placid German countenance did not change in expression, "but vot kind of syrup you vant him mitout? Mitout vanilla or mitout lemon?"—Harper's Magazine.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

AUDITORIUM The Home of Good Music L. E. Behymer Manager
A GALA FAREWELL
Tetrazzini
To sing again for us
SATURDAY NIGHT, JANUARY 28
ENTIRE CHANGE OF PROGRAM
Seats on sale at the Auditoriumbox office and Bartlett Music Co.
PRICES: $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50 AND $3.00.
The $1.00 seats on sale Saturday morning.
Coming—JOSEF HOFMANN—Feb. 7 and 11.

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.
Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

. . . DIRECTORY . . .

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

APARTMENTS
THE ST. REGIS, Housekeeping 237 S. Flower. A7336; Main 2290

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS
ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DRY GOODS
VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

EXCURSIONS
BALLOON ROUTE, L. A. Pac. Co. Station, Hill St., bet. 4th and 5th. 10355; Broadway 4000.

MEN'S FURNISHINGS
HARRIS & FRANK, 437-43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS
UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

PIANOS AND ORGANS
GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

PURITAS DISTILLED WATER
LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. Phones Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191.

REAL ESTATE
MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT
BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING
BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Pacific Outlook
La Follette's Weekly $1.60 Per Year

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT-SPEED-SAFETY

Mt. Lowe

The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

11 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

Read: Shall Los Angeles Lease or Distribute the Aqueduct Power?

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 6 Los Angeles, California, February 4, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Where Is Mrs. Taft?

IT HAS BEEN GIVEN OUT from Washington that President Taft is soon to lose the services of his able and astute private secretary, Mr. Norton, and that he is looking for another manager to be ever at his elbow reminding him that this is his busy day, that he has no time for cracking jokes with callers while off the golf links, that he must be very careful what he says and to whom he says it, and that the time fixed for the next delegation to be received is only three-quarters of a minute off. Where is Mrs. Taft? What is a wife for if not to keep her illustrious husband headed off and rounded up?

Shake 'Em Out

SHAKING-UP THE POLICE of San Francisco is almost a daily occurrence since the advent of Chief Seymour, but that is not half what the occasion calls for. The police force was debauched with the rest of the official life of San Francisco under the regime of Schmitz and Ruef, was only half redeemed under Taylor and wholly given over to the "Paris of America" idea which the McCarthy dynasty ushered in. That force now needs to be shaken out until not a grafter remains in uniform. Will the McCarthy board of police commissioners stand for it? If they be less than equal to the emergency they be more than is expected of them.

Missionaries to New England

TIME WAS WHEN the sons and daughters of New England felt the call to go north, south and west in the interests of human liberty and a higher civilization, but now their missionaries are coming home, if not to roost at least to boost for a more just and progressive nationalism. New Hampshire has seen the light, Massachusetts has been not a little concerned and Maine went wrong trying to get right, but Vermont is dead in "organization" sin, Rhode Island is content to wear the collar of vassalage to Aldrichism, while Connecticut is thrall to "the interests" just the same under Democratic as Republican domination. Is it any wonder that the spirit prompted Senator Bristow of Kansas to go "back east" to reason with the indifferent and the obdurate? Next thing we know Missouri will be trying to "show" Massachusetts the way to political and economic salvation.

An Incident to Efficiency

THE GOSPEL OF SCIENTIFIC administration in the interests of the economic efficiency of the individual has reached the ears, and made a convert of, our respected Uncle Sam. He has figured out a $1,000,000 a year waste in allowing his letter carriers to whistle while we come to them to get our mail. Hereafter there must be mail boxes at all doors in order that the energy lost in whistling may be utilized to propel the letter carrier along another street or two added to his beat. Why should not Uncle Sam, as well as another, get out of a man all there is in him before giving him the G. B.?

Bourne's Salvation Army

IT WAS CHAUNCEY DEPEW who poked fun at the Republican Progressive League, lately formed on a national scale, by calling it Bourne's Salvation Army. The standpat press is vociferous in the claim that it is merely a movement to divide the Republican party. Not so. The Lincoln-Roosevelt Republican League of California did not divide the Republican party in California. It cut the rotten parts out, drew the wound together and so stitched the hide that the party was better able to hold together than it had been since the days of Lincoln. So will it be with the National Progressive Republican League. By getting busy and working hard right out in the sunlight, hiding no iniquity and extenuating no fault, it can make the Republican party fit to survive and so well merit the fame of being the army of its salvation. The California idea is becoming national none too soon. Nineteen-twelve is only a year away.

Cutting Salaries

IF WE MAY BELIEVE what we hear salaries are ruthlessly to be cut where the chopping was least expected to be applied. The United States Steel corporation began it by cutting the salary of its president in half. It is given out that the Equitable Life will pay Paul Morton's successor only five-eighths of what he received. In short the top-notch salary for the biggest toads in the financial puddle hereafter is to be only a paltry $50,000 a year. None will know the pinch of poverty like those whose scale of living requires an expenditure of $75,000 a year while their salaries have slumped a third.

The Man For the Place

NO BETTER COMMITTEE appointment was made in either branch of the Legislature of California than that of W. F. Chandler of Fresno to head the assembly committee on roads and highways. Chandler is a man of affairs, he is honest, he is earnest, he has common sense and he never shirks a duty. If that whole $18,000,000 bond issue were entrusted to his care, layman though he is, the state would derive as much solid good as it has any right to hope for from a scheme which was conceived in iniquity and brought forth in folly. If he is not a scientific road builder he can find someone who is and not a dollar entrusted to Chandler will feather the nest of any political bird of passage. Given common sense and integrity, a firm grasp and a will of one's own (and Mr. Chandler has all of these) technical expertness can be hired and the road building problem worked out. Is there not some way of making Assemblyman W. F. Chandler head of the good roads bureau? The state needs him and, perhaps, two more like him, if they can be found.

Old Ben Rush

POLITIC BUT HONEST, loving all women because they remind him of his own wife, Senator Ben Rush is trying to legalize an eight-hour day for women who work. His effort does honor to the heart of him but as for his head, well, would it not be just as well for a starter to fix the hours at ten, as in Oregon and Illinois, leaving something to be done after the woman-drivers have had a chance to catch their breaths? The eight-hour day is the ideal for a millenial industrialism for all mankind. The ten hour maximum day for women who work is for the safeguarding of generations unborn. Let us see to that first. The ideal working day can wait.

Say What We May

SAY WHAT WE MAY about freedom of contract, and defend it as an abstract proposition diligently as we can, the fact remains that there is no freedom of contract except between those equally free to contract. That condition does not obtain between Dives and Lazarus so long as the barns of the former are bursting with store and the cupboard of the latter is in the condition of that of Old Mother Hubbard. Under such conditions freedom of contract can be safely exercised only after the intervention of a properly constituted umpire speaking with the authority of The People.

What of the Old Stock?

NEXT TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT, who is a Dutchman the best living representative of the New England conscience in public affairs is Louis D. Brandeis and Brandeis is a Jew. Where are the sons of the abolitionists of old who fought, bled and suffered contumely in championing the right of man? Have they sold themselves altogether to "the interests" that Lodge and Hale, Aldrich and Gallinger, yes and Ballinger, too, are accepted as representative of the New England sentiment of our day? Is it true that, with the going of big families, there went also the big, broad-minded, humanity loving men?

NOMINEES FOR 1912

Whether it is due to the narrowing influence of tariff legislation, or to the control of our politics by corporations, or to some unknown cause, we are not prepared to say, but it is a fact that of late years, say in the last two or three decades, we have developed a variety of politician that is peculiarly obtuse and stupid, and that is farther away from an understanding of the people than any of his tribe heretofore produced. Where have they come from, these phenomenal boneheads that have had charge of the destinies of both the old parties during the past few years? They are of the ancient Bourbon type that never learns and never forgets.

We have just been through an election which to the observer of fair intelligence seemed brimming over with lessons all to the same general effect. There was nothing obscure or equivocal about the voice of the people as it resounded through the ballot box last November. While there might be difference of opinion as to its local significance here and there, the same general message came through everywhere. It said: "We are awake, and we are in earnest. We care very little for party. We want results and if you can't give them to us we will find those that can. We want no more laws giving prosperity to the few and a high cost of living to the many. We want no more legislation in favor of special interests. We want representatives that really represent us; and you are not going to fool us any more with these silly partisan labels, and this fake partisan fighting. We want the goods. Produce them. And hereafter we propose to keep a close eye on the business and take a hand occasionally."

For a moment the old hands at the game sat up and took notice. To some the message took the form of a discharge, and to all it seemed a clear enough warning. But when they assembled at Washington, the habits of a lifetime reasserted themselves. Politics was a line of business they knew and understood—their kind of politics, that is. The ideas of the people seemed wild and strange to them. Indeed, men of this sort have difficulty in comprehending that the people have any real ideas. When they speak of the people, it is with patronizing accents, as one speaks of little children, that are creatures of impulse, dominated by ignorance and prejudice. They seem to have decided that the whole episode was a dream or a mistake, and they are back at the old game, playing away with much of the former zest.

From all along the political line comes the announcement that Taft is sure to be the nominee of the Republicans and Harmon or possibly Champ Clark the nominee of the Democrats. This is not the mere personal support of a few followers; it is a concerted party movement on both sides. In the case of Taft, there is a union of the reactionary special interest element of the Republican party with the great mass of the old-fashioned partisans who want no more fighting within the organization. Pretty much everything that the insurgents have asked is to be granted them, and the President will develop more and more of the progressive spirit as nomination time draws nearer. On the Democratic side the need for harmony to insure success is played up, and the two elements of conservatism and partisanship are welded together for a common purpose—first to get into power, and second to hold the line firm against real progress.

Where do the people come in in all this program? Nowhere. The politician does not know the people. He knows just two kinds of beings: the partisans with whom he comes in contact in political work, and the "business men" who come to him for an exchange of favors.

As yet there is no sound of protest against this plan. But wait.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager

C. D. WILLARD, A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing Editors

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

✣ ✣ ✣

IF THERE WERE AN EQUAL DIVISION

The corporation tax law seems to show that the average net profit of all the corporate business done in the United States is about 6 per cent per annum. If this be true of corporate industry it is probably not far from true of industry taken as a whole, all gains being set off by all losses and allowance made for the up-keep of productive agencies.

After allowing for all other deductions we must take from the net income at least one-fifth or one-sixth to cover the demands of an increased population and an increasing standard of living for the people as a whole. This will allow us substantially 5 per cent. as the net income annually to be derived from the productive wealth of the country as a whole available for distribution to those who own productive wealth and in proportion to what they own. This is, of course, in addition to what is individually earned by service.

The estimate made by the national census bureau in 1904, the latest made, placed the per capita wealth of our nation at $1300, including everything that we call property that gets onto a tax roll rated at what it is reasonably worth. Five per cent. on this per capita average is $65 per annum income outside of earnings for each man, woman and child in the country, or $325 per annum for each family of five persons, about enough to pay the rent for a comfortable six-room cottage. Whatever family of five persons collectively owns a home of the gross value of $6,500 which, insurance, taxes and repairs deducted, yields a net income of $325 per year, has its full share of the aggregated wealth of the "richest nation on earth."

In order that some few may have millions by the hundred how many other millions must there be who possess nothing that goes upon a tax roll! It may be doubted if any other country on the globe possesses so large a percentage of individuals and families that do have and do hold their per capita share of the wealth of the nation in which they live, and yet how far, how desperately far, are we in free America, from an equal, or even an equitable, distribution of the common wealth!

It is often said that the problem of the coming century is not to be that of the creation of wealth, that we have that problem solved, but that it is to be the equitable distribution of the wealth created. It may well be that the problem of equitable distribution should come first, but that is no rich country in which the equal share of a family of five in the aggregate wealth of all the nation does not exceed the equivalent of a comfortable cottage home with lawn and roses in front and a little truck patch and poultry pen at the back. Humanity needs to be richer than that if life is to be liberal, broad and abundingly joyous. The world is still poor.

The problem of the efficient creation of wealth has not been wholly solved and the problem of the equitable distribution of wealth (we want no other) has scarcely been touched. There is work enough ahead for us all in making this world what the good of the race needs to have it become. Get a hold somewhere that you may help, if in no other way than by seeing to it that you have a family of five and that that family has its full share of the common wealth of our common country.

✣ ✣ ✣

ROOSEVELT AND DEMOCRACY

The most significant issue before the American people today is democracy. Not the Democratic party—that is something of merely transient importance. The vital question is whether the people are to rule their own affairs or trust to luck with a lot of semi-representatives, and with special business interests looming large in the background.

Just as this is the most significant issue before the American people, so is Theodore Roosevelt the most significant personality, in that he holds public attention and public confidence as no other living man does.

Thus when Theodore Roosevelt speaks on the subject of direct legislation and the recall, as he does in a recent number of the New York Outlook, citizens that think and care—in other words real citizens—will be likely to take note of his utterance.

Now, we are for Theodore Roosevelt. We have absolute confidence in his honesty and good intentions, and a very large degree of confidence in his judgment. We feel, moreover, that he is thoroughly alive and is growing and will continue to grow. But we have never contended that he was without faults—which is an attitude that some of his band-wagon friends have taken at the moments of his greatest popularity, and have sought to decoy the public into following them. We have always understood, and we are certain that the American public as a whole understands, that this man, like all really human, big men, has numerous short-comings and idiosyncrasies, that he occasionally goes wrong, violates good taste, loses his temper, and frequently puts himself into positions that give his enemies a chance to jeer and flout. It is, indeed, one of the most complete proofs of the man's lasting greatness that he is able to live down and obliterate all his mistakes, and that the people care for him so deeply in spite of them.

We speak of this side of our hero—for that is what we frankly call him—because his discussion of the initiative, referendum and recall is absurdly inadequate and disappointing, and discloses a point of view that is not at all in harmony with real democratic sentiment. We are neither surprised nor disturbed at this. It was to be expected, for it is exactly in line with the Roosevelt-that-is. We miss in our estimate of the situation, however, if this view finds holding ground in the Roosevelt-that-is-to-be.

No doubt, if the Colonel were called upon to describe his Outlook article, he would speak of it as "open to the charge of radicalism." One can see sticking up all through it a desire and an effort to make the largest possible concessions to democracy.

Democracy, however, is not asking for concessions. When its true friends discourse on the topic, they are not hunting for "weasel words" and for phrases by which things may be half-said. One is either frankly and squarely for the rule of the people, or he is not—and that is about all there is to that story.

The fact is Theodore Roosevelt is not a democrat by nature, inheritance, nor—as yet—by training. By nature, he is an autocrat, as are most men of force and action, men endowed with a sense of order and with confidence in themselves. By inheritance and environment, he is an aristocrat, born to wealth in a family that has long enjoyed power and social standing as a matter of course. Everything in his official career conspired to bring out the autocratic tendency rather than to teach him democracy. Judge Works says truly that no president—save possibly Andrew Jackson—went further in violation of precedent and of constitutional restrictions to achieve his ends than did Roosevelt; and yet, in the confused state of things, when he trampled on precedents and restrictions that were in their turn stifling democracy, he never lacked popular approval.

Roosevelt loves the people and as a practical issue thoroughly believes in them. Thus he has taken two steps toward democracy, and he is faced in the right direction. Moreover, he keeps moving, for it is not characteristic of this man to stand still. But when he takes up his pen to discuss the initiative and referendum, the man of practical affairs and of the big heart disappears, and there steps in a scholar and a theorizer. The result is the stereotyped fear of the "mob," the need for "utmost caution," the dread of percentages that may be small and of votings that may be too frequent, of mistakes and injustices into which the voters may be led, and all the barnacled mass of imaginary objection that timid and near-sighted conservatism thinks it sees adhering to the rule of the people.

Many of those who now believe most absolutely in democracy have passed through these fears and questions and have come out so far beyond them that they seem now like some form of ancient and unaccountable superstition. What has the mob—a thing of a few individuals suddenly gathered for a specific purpose—to do with the people, advancing deliberately, in accordance with law, to register its duly considered purposes, and accepting in advance the will of the majority? Mistakes? Injustices? To be sure. When were human affairs free from them? But let the contrast be not between direct legislation and some ideality, some Plato's Republic or More's Utopia, but between Oregon or Switzerland at their wildest and worst and the average American state legislature or city council at its best. We have a Supreme Court and an Appelate Court in this State kept busy most of their time in correcting and killing the bad work of the legislature—bad, that is to say, from a purely legal point of view. Through the acts of this same body a powerful, conscienceless concern, named the Southern Pacific, was allowed and assisted to take over and own and control our political institutions, our courts and our commerce. For a score of years a million people were bound, hand and foot, gagged, robbed and insulted, and our so-called representatives never lifted a finger to save us. It was not until a faint ray of democracy broke into the darkness, in the form of a direct primary, that life stirred upon the waters and hope was born.

Yes, the people make mistakes, and democracy makes no claim to perfection in government, but the people learn wisdom from their errors, and that wisdom goes down to the eternal foundations and lasts forever. The wisdom and experience of some benevolent despot may be serviceable for the moment, but they pass with his death. What if there should be many elections and confusing questions and expense and occasional hasty, ill-considered action,—put it all together, all that has been thus far (which is a trifle) and all that might be imagined in the next half century, while democracy is fighting its way into power, put in all the mistakes, risks, confusion, injustice, every bit of it, yes, and then multiply it ten times over, and you have nothing, nothing, to what despotism and government by special interest has done to the world in war and cruelty and slavery and poverty through the long, long story of the people's wrongs.

✣ ✣ ✣

A MUNICIPAL RAILWAY

It is a most engaging picture that T. E. Gibbon, Esq., and his associates of the Harbor Board, Messrs. Newmark and Jess, have unrolled before the people of Los Angeles: a well built and well equipped, double-track, electric railway for swift freight and passenger service between the business center and the water front, owned, controlled and operated by the city, but standing open and ready for the use of all new railway systems that may desire to enter Los Angeles. It is known that there are three roads that are working in this direction, and the offer of terminal facilities, all ready to hand, might prove a determining factor with them. Another transcontinental road would be better than a gift of fifty million dollars to this city, and would add one or two hundred thousand to the population. That is a pleasant phase of the matter to contemplate, but not the most pleasant. If the project is consummated, as we are certain it will be, the real deep-down gratification will come in the fact that it is an operation by the city as a whole, and for the benefit and gain of the city as a whole, not for the enrichment of a few individuals.

When we consider this enterprise from that point of view the curtain of the future rises for us one brief moment, and we see the city as it will sometime be—a city that is for all the people. It is an inspiring sight that thrills the mind with hope and optimism and love for one's fellow man. One by one the great public enterprises will be taken over by the city and managed for the general good. Presently the city will find itself able to undertake great housing work, and the slum will disappear. Money will be obtainable for municipal art development and the beautification of the city. The enormous increment in land values due to the increase of population will in time be made to flow into public coffers for the benefit of all instead of being garnered for the enrichment of the few. The construction of this railway line, if it is carried through, will mark the transition from the Los Angeles of the past into the Los Angeles of the future. That we should own and operate our water system is nothing; almost every American city does that. That we should have our own electric plant is not remarkable; many other cities have the same. But that we should have a great volume of power at our disposal and with that power undertake great enterprises—that marks the new epoch and puts us in a unique place among the cities of this country.

✣ ✣ ✣

A NATIONAL FIGURE

At last we have in the governorship of California a man that fits the State. Like California he is big and broad, free, independent, courageous and progressive. He is one that dares and one that does. He does not meet the people with his mouth full of excuses, evasions and regrets. When he talks it is with straight-out frankness and arguments for the public good. He does not work with the legislature through Southern Pacific paid lobbyists, nor with the gumshoe tactics that mystify the public. Being one-third of the legislative body in his veto power, and being the most prominent element in the State administration as a whole, he does not hesitate to make his views known on the laws that are most important. Call this "bossing" if you like; it is honest bossing, out in the open, before the face of the people.

It is interesting to watch a great man at the beginning of his career—if you have the discernment to recognize him. Hiram W. Johnson has been before us as a man of public affairs less than a year and has been in executive office only a month. But he has already achieved a place in the hearts of the people that the average politician will fight for all his life and never gain. They know now that he is in earnest, that he "means business," that he is "the real thing" or by whatever phrase sincerity is to be described. That he is thoroughly competent for the work ahead of him there is every evidence in the way he has taken hold. Watch this man, and see him grow to be a great national figure. .

✣ ✣ ✣

PRESS COMMENT

To judge by customs scandals we have been almost a free-trade nation without knowing it.—Wall Street Journal.

"Is the House too large?" is often asked. We could get along with a smaller House if the Representatives were larger.—Columbia State.

More Mexican rebels apparently are killed and captured by the Government's telegraph service than by its military service.—New York World.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By THE WATCHMAN

Administration Legislation Unquestionably Governor Johnson could not father all the beneficial legislation that is to be looked for from the thirty-ninth session, but it had been better had he extended the scope of what are known as administration measures to cover the reformation of our criminal procedure. He is an expert on the subject and the State and the Legislature have a right to look to him for guidance in doing the right thing, and not merely for the exercise of a veto power to prevent the Legislature doing the wrong thing. He has prosecuted and he has defended and he knows what should be done to enable our laws to be enforced against criminals of all classes. The situation calls for and justifies affirmative executive influence on behalf of the administration of justice in this State. The Watchman therefore hopes that the Governor will, upon second thought, so broaden the scope of his legislative program as to make it include the reformation of criminal procedure. The People will be disappointed if he does not.

Why Did They Sit So Tight? By declining to be heard in relation to railroad legislation the railroad representatives have set the whole State to guessing. It cannot be because they have no concern in what is doing for their concern is vital and direct. Nor can it be because they have predetermined that justice is not to be had from this Legislature, for it is not an assemblage of wild-eyed enthusiasts, but of men who want to know what should be done in fairness to all interests. Are the railroads, then, content to rely on that spirit of fairness and so rest their interests in the hands of the Legislature without alarm? But even the fairest of legislators may be in need of information. Do they look upon such legislation as characterized the Webb bill of 1909 as inevitable and that opposition thereto would be useless? Why not take hold, then, and help put the legislation into the best possible shape in a spirit of good will and willingness? Are the railroad men sitting sullen as may a contumacious defendant who refuses to plead either guilty or not guilty to the charge preferred? That would be doing the baby act and our railroad managers are not whimpering boobies. They have set us all to guessing. The guess of some is that they have something up their sleeve; that of The Watchman is that, as in those earlier years when the commission style of public control was first inaugurated, the law men of the railroads are sitting back serene in the expectation that, whereas The People may have the Legislature, the railroads have the courts. It was this that made the railroad old guard indifferent to the railroad commission save as affording political patronage to be passed out to the faithful. The Watchman prides himself on being able to guess nearer than some folks can figure.

Growth of Local Option Proof of a Moral Sense That unbridled license which the liquor interests have enjoyed in the older portions of California has been accepted by the rest of the country as conclusive of an all pervading moral idiocy on the part of our people. Californians have been regarded as good fellows, generous to a fault, more joyous than is justifiable in this vale of tears, hospitable and sympathetic, as unrestrained by social conventions as undaunted by disaster, but so devoid of a moral sense as to make huge demands upon divine grace if any of them are to be saved. Whatever the fate of the local option measure now pending in the Legislature the fact that it is there and that, being there, it is being seriously considered instead of being cast out neck and heels, proves that California has a moral sense and that it is awakening. We shall not, and perhaps ought not, be rid of liquor. The door of opportunity for the unfit to destroy themselves is not to be closed. There are some sixty-odd other poisons that will serve if alcoholics be denied, and there are reasons for suspecting that the appalling statistics concocted by prohibition zealots are mainly of the stuff that dreams are made of. And yet we all of us do know that the liquor evil is bad enough at best and will continue so to be crib it, cabin it, confine it as we may. The low estate of public sentiment in San Francisco as to graft is dependent upon no one thing more than upon saloon sentiment. That tyranny of organized labor of which many complain has the San Francisco saloon as certainly as the labor council for its breeding preserve, for it is three parts political to one part industrial and the only civic center San Francisco has is the saloon. That is where San Francisco politics is "done." The plight of Oakland is little better. The saloon dominates Alameda county. Sacramento has scarcely enough light on the subject to enable it to perceive the darkness in which it lives. Stockton is some better but San Jose is worse. However, the light is breaking up through the San Joaquin valley and the local option issue has been definitely joined. The moral sense of the interior is awakening and its influence will make itself felt in San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento and San Jose. The time is at hand when it will be as respectable to be sober as it is coming to be to be decent. The soul of California is not dead.

Pity the Sorrows of the Democrats It is hard enough for a Republican legislator to line up on the side of local option, but for a Democrat to do it,—well paralysis gets him in the legs and he simply cannot stand up. Progressive Republicans know that the saloon is against what they stand for, and they accept the fact as one of the fixed conditions of warefare. It goes with the job they have tackled. Now, the Democrats want that vote, but they also want to be just as decent as ever they can be and still get that vote. For instance, it is known that, two years ago, Senator Sanford was personally in favor of local option, as he is personally in favor of every other good thing, but he did not dare line up for it out of consideration for the effect on the candidacy of Theodore Bell. He is now trying to defeat local option by substituting for it the best regulative measure he can think of that the liquor interests will stand for lest a worse thing (local option) come upon them. The position of our Democratic legislators is a trying one and yet, if they did but know it, to wobble is to lose their hold on both the decent and indecent elements in our social life.

The Saloon the Bane of Democratic Government Mr. Lincoln Steffins has pointed out, what we all of us ought to have had a realizing sense of long ago, that, in theory and form, our great corporations are all democratic. We hear much of the democratization of industry. Well, it has long since been democratized, anyhow as to form and theory. What are the stockholders in a corporation but the voters in a democratic government. But Hill and Harriman, Morgan and Rockfeller, easily found that by getting together a solid bunch of stockholders who would vote as one man, shares equal to 25 per cent of the whole issue outstanding could control any corporation they wanted. The Morganization of banking, of industry and of the railroading of this country has been effected through a concentration of less than one-fourth of the outstanding shares of the corporations Morganized. It is the old story. The shareholders who might govern do not and through their neglect Morgan and his associates are able to use billions of resources not their own as though they were their own, precisely what is accomplished in politics through the "push" vote. Now the push vote is the saloon vote which the little bosses control in the interests of the big bosses. Local option strikes at the saloon vote and affords our best hope for the democratization of politics. There is more involved in the pending local option contest at Sacramento than many suppose and whoever can lend a hand to the cause of local option, by stiffening the spine of some wobbly legislator, should apply the starch while it is needed and put it where it will do the most good.

Not Prohibition But Protection The opponents of local option protest that the proponents of that measure are not honest in their advocacy of it, but are Prohibitionists in disguise. Perhaps some are, but the many are not. The Watchman is not a Prohibitionist. He does not believe that fifty-one persons have a right to determine what forty-nine shall eat or drink or wear. He believes that the right to use malt and spirituous liquors in moderation is unalienable and that such right to use implies the right somehow, somewhere, to buy that one may use, but that use, being fraught with undeniable risks to society, the right to buy for use becomes a proper subject for public regulation to the end that the risk may be reduced to a minimum. The public safety requires the shutting up of all road houses and cross-roads gin mills and the centering of the liquor traffic into the chief trading centers where it may be watched and regulated as to hours, as to how and where sales may be made, yet leaving it so that the hundredth man, even if there be no other, may somewhere, somehow provide himself with such liquors as he wants, always holding himself responsible to community and state for how he uses his right. In the judgment of The Watchman this is sound doctrine and that if it shall become a recognized public policy in California it will not develop into prohibition, but will eventually destroy the saloon as we know it and, in its place, will establish the family liquor store, whose sales will not be consumed on the premises, and the only other place where liquors will be sold will be with meals at bona fide hotels and restaurants. This, The Watchman conceives to be the ultimate outcome of local option, a condition a thousand times preferable to that we now have. Again, therefore, there is more involved in the pending local option measure at Sacramento than many suppose. The reader should give the cause a boost if he can.

Let Us Rejoice And Be Joyous Senator Eddie Wolfe, one of the last of the Herrin Mohicans, has expressed the desire to see The People get their fill of reform legislation. The People feel just that way about it, Eddie. They have waited long for the opportunity and are likely to feast their fill now that they have a chance. And what splendid work that Legislature is doing! How promptly it attended to the cases of the race-track gamblers! And what a different Senate we have from the senates we did have when Wolfe and Wright and Leavitt were the whole thing! Wright has complained that he is neither of the majority nor of the minority, which he is not. He is of the political boneyard with few to do him honor despite his fine mental equipment. Also there are no flies on Eddie Wolfe when it comes to a show-down of shiftiness in a tight squeeze. Like a cat, he always alights on his feet, but in a legislative body where character is rated above cunning, and moral purpose above servitude to special interests, men like Wolfe and Wright find themselves neither in the majority nor the minor-

(Concluded on Page 7)

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES

Harris & Frank (INC.)
Leading Clothiers
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Aqueduct Troubles Over: The financial troubles of the Los Angeles Aqueduct enterprise seem to be at an end. The syndicate has agreed to take the full quota for the year, and it even agrees to pay in the money and take out the bonds as needed. While it is a relief to get the matter settled, it had long since ceased to be a subject of doubt or question as to whether the bonds would sell if put out into the open market, so it was not essential to the welfare of the enterprise that the syndicate should take up its option. Arrangements had been made through Marco Hellman for the New York Life and other companies to take up enough bonds immediately to carry us past any possible delay had the syndicate failed to come to time. Thus closes an episode that was the cause of much worry and at times something very like panic among city officials. Trouble began last spring when the syndicate refused to put up any more money until it should catch up with the option, and refused to say whether or not it would exercise the option. It fell back for a time on its absolute legal rights, leaving the city badly in the hole. As an alternative to this ruinous situation, it advanced a series of proposals, every one of which had for its evident purpose heading off the city from developing its electric power. For a few months the aqueduct work was cramped, but money was finally secured—part of it grudgingly supplied by the syndicate itself—to carry on the work. Even as late as November the syndicate tried on an alternative plan which would have tied up the sinking fund and cut off premiums and put the option date along two months; but this was not accepted. Peace is now restored and everything forgiven.

Sublime Egotism: A wealthy man of Detroit named James Scott left in his will $500,000 to the city, to be used in erecting a life-size statue of himself in one of the parks, the statue to be fitted up with appropriate surroundings. The city has at last decided after some months of discussion to accept the gift. Very decided objection was entered by many civic and religious organizations to the carrying out of Scott's wishes, as he had no particular merit as a citizen, and thus to exalt him and to hand his memory down to future generations, merely because he had put up half a million dollars for the trick, seemed like a bad example to the youth of the community. On the other hand it was contended that only a small part of the donation need go into the statue, and that the park could be beautified by an elaborate setting for the figure, and that such a display of public spirit, even if tinctured with egotism, was worthy of consideration.

Those Higher Up: A woman in Grand Rapids had two clothes poles in her yard that were exactly 100 feet apart. She bought two clothes lines each of them marked "50 feet" and found them 16 feet short of reaching the required distance. The local sealer of weights and measures undertook to prosecute the dealer, but the latter was able to show that the cord came in packages from the factory with the false length stamped upon it, and as this factory was not even in the state there was, of course, no way to get at it. This led to an investigation of many marked packages and in nearly every instance the weights and measures were found to be false. For example, the match boxes marked "500 matches" were found to contain only 250. It is believed that the only way to get at these fraudulent "higher-ups" is by a national inspection of weights and measures to be applied to all factories serving an interstate market.

Three Cent Rate: Slightly disfigured but still in the ring, the three cent street-car fare continues to live in Cleveland. It did not turn out as badly as its enemies hoped nor as well as its friends predicted. It does pay expenses; but when the company asks for a subscription to bonds to make extensions and improvements Wall Street says no, and demands an increase in the rate of fare. This is a concrete illustration of the argument advanced by the great steam railway presidents recently on the issue of the increase of freight tariffs. Since they could not show they needed the money to pay expenses—which were all covered—nor to pay fair dividends, they asked it for the purpose of creating a surplus and establishing credit on which they could issue securities and get money for needed improvements.

Use of Rifles by Police: Occasionally there is heard the suggestion that city police should be deprived of revolvers. The London police are not allowed to carry fire arms, and many experts on criminology hold that there is better real police work done in London than in any city in the world. On the other hand the fight with the anarchists that recently took place in London seemed to show a fatal weakness in the system. Few American cities will be disposed to go as far in the other direction as Pittsburg has done, in arming many of her patrolmen with Springfield rifles. The escape of several burglars, who had been caught in the act but managed to get away under a revolver fusillade, led to the introduction of rifles.

Cannot Supply Cars Enough: The Interborough system of New York, which operates the subways, and the Public Service Commission of that city have come to a deadlock on the question of supplying cars enough during the rush hours to give everybody a seat. President Shonts of the company declares this is a physical impossibility, and that his people will not attempt to comply with the order, but will fight in the courts. The Interborough Company does not enjoy the favor nor the confidence of the public of New York, as some of the other transportation companies do.

The "Greatest Criminal": Rats, which have been called the greatest criminals of our time, are steadily growing worse in most of the large cities. They are the great common carrier of disease, and many health authorities hold that it will never be possible to establish proper sanitary conditions in our cities until the rats are absolutely put out of existence. The street commissioner of Baltimore recently reported an alarming increase in the number of rats in that city and asked for better legislation on the subject of garbage cans.

A Fire College: The Fire Department of New York city contemplates the establishment of a "Fire College." in addition to and above the school for fire drill. This is for the purpose of developing in the department a corps of fire experts on such subjects as explosives, high voltage wires, fire apparatus, including life saving devices, the chemistry and physics of conflagrations. By this plan, it is believed, that the knowledge and skill gained by individuals can be made permanent and handed down to new generations of fire fighters.

A "Good-fellow" Mayor: Philip H. Breitmeyer ended a two year term as Mayor of the city of Detroit January first. He was asked what it had cost him in actual outlay of his own money and he replied: "Forty thousand dollars." The Mayor kept open house to everybody in his office, gave banquets and picnics to his friends, and generally played the part of a good fellow. He was also an excellent Mayor, although not renominated owing to a primary mix-up.

Experience with Water Meters: Petersburg, Virginia, in the face of a great amount of protest, decided to put in meters on its water users. The immediate effect was to cut down the pumpage 90 per cent. When people became accustomed to the meters, the use of water settled down to about one-third of what it had been under the old system. This made a big reduction in the cost of operation, and at the same time reduced the cost of water to the people.

Water Corporation's Liberality: The company that supplies Bridgeport, Connecticut, with water celebrated the beginning of the year by presenting the city with all the water needed for municipal use during the next 16 years in which the contract will run. As the city has been paying $12,000 a year average for use of water, this is regarded as a present of over $200,000 and the people are greatly pleased at the company's liberality.

Spokane a Commission City: Over ten thousand votes were cast in Spokane, Washington, December 28th on the question of adopting a freeholders' charter in the commission form and there was a majority of 2237 in favor of the change. This includes the recall, initiative and referendum and the initiative form of future charter amendment.

A Paving Failure Made Good: In Portland, Oregon, a quantity of Hassam street pavement began to break up four months after it was laid. The company said it was due to a bad quality of cement and tore up the paving and replaced it with new. There is a block of Hassam paving in Los Angeles—on Sixth street between Main and Los Angeles.

Failure of Water Supply: Granville, a New York town of 5000 people, had a disastrous fire recently which would have destroyed the place entirely but for a lucky change in the direction of the wind. The water supply gave out completely early in the fire. Ten blocks of business buildings and many residences were destroyed.

Bloodhounds for Police Service: The police department of Chattanooga has two bloodhounds which it acquired from the state prison of Tennessee. It is said these animals have a great record for capturing escapes, which sounds rather startling. They are to be used for cases of violent crime.

Lake Water Contaminated: Cleveland is disturbed at the increase in the number of bacteria in Lake Erie from which that city gets its water supply. Careful investigation will be made to determine the source of the contamination, and state authority will be used to correct it.

Plan a Co-operative Town: A large body of working people of the city of Muskogee, Oklahoma, plan to establish a suburb on a co-operative plan which they intend to call Altruria. The land will not be owned in common, but the stores and other enterprises needed in a small town will all be co-operative.

Pneumatic Oil Sprinklers: Road makers in New Jersey—which is a good roads state—are having good success with a device for putting oil on the highways broken into a fine spray under pneumatic pressure. With this method the street or road can be put immediately into use after the application of the oil.

Public Drinking Cup: Idaho has passed drastic legislation abolishing the public drinking cup. This applies to trains, hotels, schools, street fountains, parks and all other public places.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

New Foulard Silks

85c to $1.25

FOULARDS will be very popular silks this spring and summer, for the development of dressy toilettes; they are equally becoming to old and young, which makes them deservedly popular.

We invite your inspection of our new collection, which embraces the latest designs and most fashionable colors

The New Order of Things

By the Doorkeeper

Legislature Making Good—Forwarding the "Johnson Policies"—Class Legislation Tabooed.

Sacramento, Cal., Feb. 1, 1911.—When Hiram W. Johnson read his inaugural address and outlined the Progressive program for legislative action, the opinion prevailed throughout the state generally that the state's lawmakers would have to work on the jump to "make good." The Legislature is now on its fifth week, and the general impression is that it is well on the way toward making good. From the first day of the session it has been working as none of its predecessors have worked. It is considering measures which, when enacted into law, will put into effect what are coming to be known as the "Johnson policies."

Never before in the history of the state has any Legislature attempted anything like the amount of work proposed at this session. It is indeed doubtful if any State Legislature in the entire United States ever attempted quite as big a job as that upon which the California Legislature of 1911 is now engaged. In evidence the following list of legislation already in process of the making is offered:

1. The Railroad Rate bill, with jail penalties for violation.
2. The Initiative, the Referendum and the Recall, the latter applicable to all State officers, including the judiciary.
3. The creation of a Board of Public Control, to establish a uniform system of public accounting for all state institutions.
4. Home Rule for counties, through freeholders charters.
5. A Public Service Commission, for the control of public utilities other than steam railroads.
6. Civil Service Reform in the state and its counties.
7. The Australian Ballot in its original form, doing away with the party column and the party circle.
8. A non-partisan judiciary.
9. The Oregon system of electing United States Senators.
10. Ratification of the federal income tax amendment.
11. A better anti-racetrack gambling law.
12. Local option.
13. A federal steamship line on the Pacific Ocean.
14. Reform in criminal procedure.
15. Employers' Liability act.
16. Conservation of the natural resources of the State along the lines suggested by Gifford Pinchot.

At this time the Legislature is estimated to be two weeks ahead in its work. The number of useless, worthless bills introduced has been the smallest in history. The progressives have set a pace and have builded a model.

The Governor's intentions to tolerate no nonsense are so firmly impressed upon the minds of all that the members of both houses look well at every bill handed them for introduction before they turn it in. Many that have been sent here with the request that they be introduced have been returned to their authors with a note to the effect that the administration desk has been cleared for action on measures that the people, not individuals and special class, want. And this is one reason why the legislature is able to work to such good advantage. It is not spending the better portion of its time considering unimportant measures.

Greasing the Ways

I have been standing patiently at the door awaiting the time when I might see the form of Alden Anderson go hurtling out of the state service into political oblivion. There is hardly a doubt that he will have to travel the path being marked out for him, but I note that some of the members of the legislature who delight to call themselves "insurgents" are fearful that the path is not going to be as distinct as it has been planned to be.

These slightly timorous spirits are not numerically strong, however. Among the ranks of the Progressives solidly back of Governor Johnson in his wise determination to give the Augean stables of Southern Pacific politics a thorough cleaning and then to burn the stables themselves, there is a uniform inclination to do everything possible to expedite the day when the last vestige of machine control shall have vanished. Like the Governor, they will not rest content with firing a few Southern Pacific parasites who have been holding down jobs as stenographers, porters, clerks and other minor positions. They want to see the whole kit and caboodle of "push" politicians unceremoniously relegated to the political ash barrel. A bank examiner who is regarded as a very important cog in the machine looks to them exactly like some senator's mother-in-law or some speaker's sister or some departmental head's wife or daughter or some Southern Pacific conductor on leave of absence.

There has been some talk of opposition to the Governor's programme to "kick the Southern Pacific out of politics," but it has been confined to the unhappy and extremely nervous, though bold-fronted minority led by such old-line Performers as Senator Eddie Wolfe. About all the fight against the enactment of the proposed law reorganizing the bank commission, which means the extermination of Anderson in politics, will be found, in the final analysis, in one or two florid orations on the floor of either house when the question comes to a vote. But the oratory will be innocuous. The handful of machine legislators may spout and fume and get red in the face all they care to. Anderson is going, and they know it. And so is Mackenzie and the rest of the Southern Pacific pets.

Wasted Sympathy?

I really felt sorry for the leader of the anti-woman's suffrage lobby during the days when lobbying against Senator Bell's constitutional amendment was the vogue in certain quarters. She flocked all to herself most of the time. Her only friends—politically, of course—seemed to be Senator Leroy Wright, Assemblyman Milton Schmitt and two or three other brave leaders of what is left of the reactionary forces in the legislature. She would wander down from the mezzanine floor of the Hotel Sacramento into the lobby of an evening, stand close to the clerk's counter, as if seeking a haven, and gaze hopelessly upon the throng of political enemies.

To make matters harder for her the women leading the fight for the amendment were, as a rule, surrounded by legislators and newspaper men. The contrast between the good-fellowship exhibited on the one hand and the coldness evident on the other was really pitiful. Somebody told me that the attitude of the anti-suffrage lobby was a part of the general scheme—though why it was so, if so, I can't understand. At any rate if resignation is a virtue the reactionaries in this case certainly were not looking for sympathy.

Tricky

The many years of legislative experience enjoyed by Senator Wolfe of San Francisco, the enemy of progress and the friend of the race-tracks and other things for the abatement of which the Progressives are working, have enabled him to turn a few pretty stunts this session. Most of the Progressive Senators lack somewhat in parliamentary experience. This explains why Wolfe has been able to make believe he is yet a sort of floor leader for the entire Republican contingent.

One of the prerogatives of the floor leader of the majority is to take upon himself the duty of moving for adjournment when the time for the end of the day's labors has arrived. Wolfe has been on the job so many years that he hates to relinquish it to Senator Bell, who is the recognized leader. The instant the Senate is ready for adjournment Wolfe, not waiting for Bell to act, has habitually jumped to his feet and beaten Bell to the motion. It is a little discourtesy that Wolfe must realize, yet he persists in posing as the floor leader. If Lieutenant-Governor Wallace should happen to refuse to recognize Wolfe once or twice when he springs to his feet for the purpose of tagging the motion to adjourn and give Bell an opportunity to exercise his privilege, possibly the usually thick-skinned gentleman from San Francisco would take the tip and act upon it.

Why They Changed Their Views

The idea of applying the Recall to the judiciary is growing in popularity in both houses of the legislature. As I suggested last week, it required but the action of the Supreme Court in granting the order for a rehearing of the Ruef case, through a document to which were appended, in typewriting, the names of four of the seven members of the court, one of whom was sick abed and another of whom was in the East, to settle the question in the minds of some of the legislators who up to that time had doubted the wisdom of making this instrument applicable to such an august body as the court of last resort.

An indication of the attitude of the Senate on this question may be gathered from the following statements made by certain influential members:

Lee C. Gates: "I announced at the Republican legislative conference held in San Francisco that I did not favor the recall of judges. I see the necessity of it now."

Miguel Estudillo: "I was opposed to the application of the recall to the judiciary, but it now has my hearty approval, and I will vote for it."

Ernest S. Birdsall: "I was strongly opposed to the recall of judges, but this Ruef decision is too much. It proves the necessity of the action recommended by the Governor."

Marshall Black: "Up to the rendering of this decision I was opposed to including the judiciary, but am now convinced that I was wrong in my view. I will vote for the recall on judges."

Harvey M. Hurd: "No argument on earth can convince me that the recall on judges is not a crying necessity. I was opposed to it heretofore, but am now convinced that the sooner we apply it the better it will be for the state of California."

And more to the same end from other members of either house. Which means that a proposition to amend the constitution by making the Recall applicable to judges will be submitted to the people at the next election held in this state.

Wolfe a Historian, Maybe

Franklin Hichborn, whose "Story of the Legislature of 1909" proved to be such an effective campaign work last year, driving several candidates for re-election out of business, is gathering notes for another record of the present legislature along lines that will make his work of still greater value in coming campaigns and of vastly deeper interest to the voter who desires to know what his representatives in the legislature have been doing. Senator Wolfe, among others, evidently does not like the Hichborn idea of keeping close tab on the records of the various members. I imagine the lonesome leader of the machine minority is considering the advisability of writing a little book of his own to offset the Hichborn work. In a burst of thinly veiled passion the other day he shouted:

"I am going to keep check upon

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall

DENTIST

Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806

Three-Story Brick

WAREHOUSE

For

LEASE or SALE

BUILDING 100x140
LOT 128x128
Southern Pacific Switch

FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.

REMOVAL SALE

Pianos and Player Pianos

Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player Piano this is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.

Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers 345-347 S. Spring St.

you reformers on labor measures and see whether your reform is skin deep."

"I find," declared Wolfe, "that the reformers are thin-skinned. You are disturbed about what the press says about you. Ye gods and little fishes! You haven't had a hint of what is coming to you later. It may be that the license of the press, the unrestrained license of the press, is the greatest menace to the country."

I don't know, can't imagine, don't care, whether the words of the smarting senator from San Francisco are to be interpreted as a prophesy or a threat. If a threat, I, for one, hope he will make good. The whole state of California, reformers and performers, Progressive and Southern Pacific machine, would be immensely entertained by any strictures which Eddie Wolfe would impose upon the element which is seeking to redeem the state from the grasp of the sordid organization is seeking to redeem the state from the grasp of the sordid organization which all but reduced the state to a condition of abject thralldom. We all know what the Wolfes and the Leavitts and the Wrights and the Porters think of the Bells and the Hewitts and the Gateses and the Hichborns, but it surely would be most edifying to see those thoughts, in all their pristine loveliness, reduced to cold type and laid away upon the shelves of the public libraries of the state for the enlightenment of future generations. Such written history as that bearing the imprint of Herrinism and racetrack government would be a delectable morsel on the tongue of your children and mine, my dear audience. Let us hope and pray that Senator Wolfe will make good and check up the reformers and their work during this session of the legislature, and that he will put his work in permanent form.

Hard Losers

I heard something the other day which Meyer Lissner should have heard. I am afraid it would not have hurt his feelings.

Three men, none of whom I knew, were standing about four feet from my observation post at the door to the Senate chamber. All were evidently disgruntled at the character of the men they saw seated in front of them transacting the state's business and making the state's laws.

"Yes, I saw him," remarked one of them. "I wanted to punch his face."

"You did, eh? What's he been doing to you, old man?"

"Doing? Doing? Great Caesar's ghost, man, look at that bunch in there that he's put over on us. Isn't that enough? Do you think for one little minute that we are going to get anything out of that crowd? You can stake your last dollar on it, there's nothing doing this year, and then you can get down on your knees and thank Lissner for it. It's me for the street department. Last session I got six per, and some on the side, with nothing to do. This year it looks like the real thing in the hustle line. Let's get out of this. It makes me sick."

"THE LABOR PROBLEM IN OUR PRISONS"

At the regular weekly luncheon of the City Club, to be held at the Westminster Hotel today (Saturday) at 12:15 p. m., W. A. Gates of San Francisco, secretary of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, will speak on "The Labor Problem in Our Prisons."

Economy

"Then this," asked the rejected suitor, "is absolutely final?"

"Quite!" was the calm reply. "Shall I return your letters?"

"Yes, please," answered the young man. "There's some very good material in them I can use."—Life.

Political Table Talk

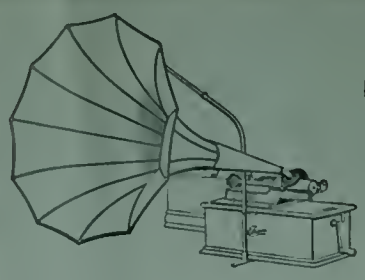
(Continued from Page 4)

ity, but in the junk heap, whereat all good citizens should rejoice and be glad for their eyes have seen the glory of the coming of a new order of things political. The Thirty-ninth Legislature of California may do unwise things but it will not inflict iniquities upon the people as legislatures have done within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant.

Of the Highest Statesmanship We may profitably turn from rejoicing over our local joys to share some of the glories being achieved at Washington. The reciprocity relations arranged for with Canada must be set down as an act of the highest statesmanship. Give President Taft the praise! It has been a shame to our nation that our policy toward Canada has ever been other than that of the largest liberality and the most fraternal feeling. We not only want Canada's good will and trade, but we want our Lady of the Snows to come in with us and be a part of us. We should fix our national minds and hearts upon making this an ocean-bound republic, not by conquest, but by consanguinity, by mutuality of ideal and aim, by being the fittest to survive and having institutions contributing in the highest degrees to the establishment of justice and the furthering of the well-being of the race. The fate of the Mexican in Southern California, an enviable one in many respects, will he the fate of the Mexican in Mexico and so on to the big ditch. Not until this continent shall have been dedicated to one indissoluble democracy, in politics and industry, will Americans be justified in boasting of a democracy triumphant.

Star Chamber Proceedings Controller A. B. Nye does well to protest against any provision in the new revenue law binding the members of the State Board of Equalization to secrecy in relation to what transpires before that board, which has not heretofore borne so much resemblance to Madam Caesar as to place it beyond the need of being watched. No department of our government has been under greater temptation than this board and, under the new revenue law, its power and temptation to go wrong will be greater than before. Where the sun of publicity does not shine in, the bacilus of graft is sure to spawn and multiply. If there be anything that the corporations to be taxed do not want generally known the chances are that it is the very thing that most needs to be known to all men. There is small justification in the plea that private interests may be hurt through publicity. Corporate interests are not private. Corporations are created by the public and for the public and the public at all times needs to know what they are up to. Publicity is to official business what sunshine is to physical health. We cannot well have too much of it.

The Delightful Alden Anderson There is not a more jolly good fellow in all California than Alden Anderson. His personality is bewitching. What other politician has been able to secure for himself honors and emoluments of office without ever lining up one one side or other of any public issue? Always and ever he has fraternized with both camps, a standpatter with standpatters, a long-hair with long-hairs, neat as a pin, clean as a whistle, everybody's friend, barring none. Nor is Mr. Anderson wholly unjustified in denying that he was the Southern Pacific candidate for gubernatorial honors. He may well have his "doots." Perhaps he only thought he was at the time. It may have been Curry after all, but that he was somebody's puppet everybody knows. But whose? It was during the heat of the primary campaign that Mr. Anderson declared that the Political Bureau of the Southern Pacific Company was a myth. Well, it did look like it, Alden, after the votes were counted! It is probably true that neither Anderson nor Curry knew, knows or will ever find out, which of them was the only, truly Herrin candidate for Governor at the last election. Appearances, and even metalic contributions to campaign funds, are so deceiving. The best that either of these astute political gentlemen can ever say with truth is that he does not really know if he were "it" or not, but only hoped, prayed, believed and thought he was at the time. But one thing we do know: Neither Anderson nor Curry was the candidate of the liberty-loving, progressive, emancipating Republicans of California. That candidate was Hiram Johnson and he went into office under bond to kick corporation-serving officers holders out of office and, "By the Eternal," as Andrew Jackson would have said, he'll do it or expose to the eyes of all the world the reason why it cannot be done.



That Mere Matter of Political Patronage Just as the affiliated higher-ups sought to whisper the San Francisco graft prosecution down so the same confraternity is now busily engaged in trying to make it appear that all this hullabaloo over the deposition of Anderson, Curry, Transue et al, from positions which the superserviceable Gillett sought to put beyond Governor Johnson's reach during his term of office, is neither more nor less than a squabble over official patronage and that, in this regard, the reformers are showing themselves to be no better than the performers were, the inference being that if the reformers were sincere and honest they would leave all of Mr. Herrin's handy men in office to thwart every progressive effort and paralyze every reform measure. The chicane practiced by Gillett should be negatived if it can be and the mischief that he did should be undone at all hazards. Besides, Alden Anderson is not a trained banker. He is not such a qualified man as the law contemplates for the office he holds. He was reared a fruit grower, dealer, shipper and rebater and became interested in banks, as has many another wealthy merchant or manufacturer in the days of his prosperity. He has served no apprenticeship, graduated from no banking institution and, at best, is merely the possessor of that adaptability and versatility that go to make us Americans what we are, the best amateurs and the least of experts in the civilized world. If the banks are all satisfied with Alden Anderson in his present position it is because he isn't doing a thing to 'em except being nice, agreeable, complaisant. It will be entirely possible for Governor Johnson to put in Mr. Anderson's place a trained banker with a will to know what is doing and who is doing it. The good of the State demands that he have that opportunity.

REDLANDS PARK BONDS

On the night of January 20th last Rev. Dana W. Bartlett delivered a lecture in Redlands favoring the Park Bond vote to be held January 24th in that city. On the day following the elections Mr. Bartlett received the following letter from K. C. Wells of the Redlands Board of Trade, expressing his thanks for the effective lecture:

"Our park bonds carried yesterday by a vote of 840 to 283 and we feel that our success at the polls was in a large measure due to the fine lecture given us by you on the night of January 20th, and I write to congratulate you on the outcome of the bond election and to thank you for the courtesy you have shown us in coming to us at this time and helping us win the parks."

Respectfully,
(Signed) K. C. WELLS.

"Give Us Something to Entertain Us"

Has ever been the cry—the answer today is the

Edison Phonograph

Everybody can have his own story teller, his own songster, his own bandmaster, right in his own home. Don't forego the joy of an Edison a day longer. Come and hear it—you'll surely buy it. Prices $12.50 upwards—on the easiest of terms.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO.
"The House of Musical Quality"
332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS

MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

Plan For University Operation of Commercial Power Plants

Correspondent Thinks That State Laws Are Needed Giving to State Universities the Control of Some of the Remaining Water Power Rights.

Cannot some plan be devised by which every state university can engage in the business of making electrical power for commercial purposes? Cannot 50,000 or 100,000 h. p. of undeveloped water power be at once reserved in one or in several sites for each such institution? Cannot the State or Federal Government develop with public funds one of the sites thus reserved for each of the universities, taking in payment low interest bearing bonds, payable in small annual instalments? There are, doubtless, legal difficulties in the way, but law is man-made, and law which clearly points to the immediate financial interest of the public, can generally be enacted in progressive communities.

One of the conditions to be imposed on the universities might be, that they conduct such business under government supervision and especially to further secondary and higher education. Another condition might be that each university operate its plant or plants through men who act part of the time as managers of the business, and part of the time as instructors in the school; also that all other positions should be filled with part-time students taking courses in electrical work, and who are earning their way. One purpose of employing student-workmen would be, to realize the greatest efficiency in the power plants. Such a student might be given work for a certain period of time in the electrical plant for every period of six or twelve months that he has attended the university. The student's time at school and at the plant would have to be so proportioned that his wages, if wisely spent, would enable him to pay his way through the university course.

Still another condition might be provided, namely: that, ten per cent to fifty per cent of the net available profits, made on the sale of power, go to the university; the remainder of this profit to go towards assisting the secondary schools in the locality in which the electrical energy is used. Such a use of the profits would help to make the plan popular, and it would gain for the universities the admiration and respect of the entire public. It would also give the public possession of minutely accurate knowledge in regard to the entire electrical business, thus enabling it to regulate fairly the rates charged by private corporations.

The apparent feasibility, and the almost self-evident benefits of the plan might result in progressive statesmen being given the necessary support of the public in the enactment of any laws that might be needed to carry out this plan. Graft could find no entrance, if the student-workmen were compelled to make a detailed study of the business, including the accounting of the particular plant in which they are employed. These electrical plants could, without serious inconvenience, be hundreds of miles from their respective universities.

Just as soon as any such university had gained the full confidence of the public and had made out of profits a few payments on the bonds, the State or Nation could, under the same terms and conditions, build other power plants for the university until the legally prescribed limit had been reached.

William Thum.

DICTATING TO ARIZONA

A dispatch from Washington says that President Taft is "unalterably opposed" to Arizona's new Constitution. We are told that this may lead to the rejection of the Constitution by Congress and delay Arizona's admission to the Union under the enabling act passed a year ago. All because Arizona's Constitution contains the initiative and referendum and the recall, the latter being especially sweeping, in that it applies to judges. President Taft is especially opposed to this. The radical features of the Oklahoma Constitution were protested against both by President Roosevelt and Mr. Taft when the latter was Secretary of War. Remembering this fight, the congressional leaders largely at the President's wish, had the enabling act for Arizona and New Mexico so worded that the State Constitutions must be approved by Congress before they can become valid. This is mighty interesting reading. The President will take a great deal upon himself if he tells Arizonans that they cannot frame their own organic law. The ground he takes is, I suppose, that the initiative and referendum are not consistent with a republican form of government. In this he is wrong; for the initiative and referendum and recall are not substitutes for representative government, but checks upon it, to make it more effective. The republican form of government is government by the people, through representatives or otherwise. Switzerland has the initiative and referendum, but it is a republic. And the founders of the republic of the United States are on record as favoring government by the people, directly or indirectly. If Congress, at President Taft's suggestion, is to tell the people of Arizona that they cannot organize as a State in accordance with their own views of the location of final power, then Congress may veto the Constitution of any State. Where does the power of the people, directly exercised, stop? Is it not a fact that it stops nowhere? Cannot the people vote any kind of government they desire, and having so voted, are they not justified in revolution against any force that attempts to thwart their will? If the President is right, the power of the people is a myth; they have no power at all. The Taft attitude smacks strongly of dictatorship.—St. Louis Mirror.

A Scotch Answer

A little Scotch boy was up the other day before the examiners for the Navy; the examination was viva voce, designed to discover signs (if any) of "general intelligence." They asked the boy what he knew about the battle of Flodden. He said, "Nothing." "What!" they said. "Don't you know anything about that battle in which the English beat the Scotch?" "Well," he said, "I know it must have been verra exceptional."—London Telegraph.

Unspeakable

"What would you think, daddy, if Algernon Nocash should suggest becoming your son-in-law?"

"Withdraw, my dear, while I think aloud."—Brooklyn Life.

CHAMOUNY APARTMENTS

N. E. Cor. W. 11th and Grand View Sts.
Opposite
BEAUTIFUL PALM PLACE

MOST attractive and home-like apartment house in the west. Will have a wide expanse of lawn, flowers and shrubbery. Has a large outside living-room, fine reception room with brick inglenook. Third floor contains an amusement room, 18x45 feet, with immense balconies on either side. Apartments contain 2 and 3 rooms, are extra large, and all have French doors opening on private outside balconies. Will be ready Feb. 10th. Open for inspection and occupancy on and after that date.

MRS. N. WILLIAMS ANDERSON, Manager.

CALL ALEXANDER MacKEIGAN, 10673 or MAIN 1457 FOR FURTHER INFORMATION.

Shall Los Angeles Lease or Distribute the Aqueduct Power?

Interesting Discussion at the City Club on Subject of Vital Importance.

"In about twenty months the aqueduct water will be pouring through Francisquito tunnel. Will we be ready with our plans and for the development of power and its distribution in this city? . . .

"This city cannot wait for a more convenient season for the companies, or a more auspicious one to carry out their plans. . .

"The companies have everything to gain by delay, and nothing to lose. . . .

"The recommendation with reference to taking a straw vote was made only after the most earnest consideration."

JAMES A. ANDERSON.

"From the standpoint of the power companies, we consider a vote very desirable to have, but it should not be taken at a time when the companies have no proposition to present, and they are not in a position now to present one. . . .

"The power companies, to date, have not been able to obtain from the city or aqueduct officials any definite information. . . .

"I think we are part of this town; we feel we are loyal citizens. . . .

"If the city can make arrangements with the power companies by which the consumer gets just as low a rate and this city makes just as much money and the city is spared the investment of the amount necessary for a distributing system; I think it would be a good thing for the city to do, at least for awhile." . . .

J. B. MILLER.

"In the first place I want to call your attention to the fact that the city of Los Angeles is not making war on the electric companies; there is room for all in Southern California. . . .

"I am here working for the small tax-payers—the fellows who need help. The big fellows generally own property . . . and can protect themselves. . . .

"I am in favor of a straw vote. It will merely tell Mr. Scattergood the people do or do not want to arrange for a distributing system, and the lighting of the city of Los Angeles."

MAYOR GEO. ALEXANDER.

"I say that the city officials have been instructed not once but twice in regard to this matter, and that too in a perfectly legal and binding manner. This straw vote would not be a legal vote at all; it would be merely advisory and would not be binding. . . .

"I am satisfied from my talk with the Aqueduct officials, that if we were to sell this power to the power companies at $25 per annual horse power there would be a profit to Los Angeles of several hundred thousand dollars per annum net, and that without the expense of putting in a distributing system, building up a business and losing time and money while the business is being developed."

MEYER LISSNER.

"If the companies want to make a proposition, why don't they do it. The Mayor tried to pull them out and took action to induce them to in the Council chamber meetings. It is my opinion that you could not pull a proposition out of them with a six-mule team. They don't want to give you one. They are sparring for time, absolutely. And finally the time will be so short that there will be no alternative but to let them distribute it."

COUNCILMAN ANDREWS.

The subject programmed for last Saturday's meeting of the City Club of Los Angeles was "The advisability of taking a straw vote at the charter amendment election on March 6, on the leasing or distribution of the Aqueduct Power." James A. Anderson, chairman of the Consolidation Committee, took the affirmative and John B. Miller, president of the Southern California Edison Co., the negative.

The meeting developed into something of a general discussion, several other speakers being called on to present their views after the principal speakers were through. In addition to Mr. Anderson and Mr. Miller, those who spoke were Mayor Alexander, Meyer Lissner and Councilman J. J. Andrews.

Mr. Anderson spoke as follows:

"I suppose you all are aware of the manner in which this question came to be considered. Our Council, following the recommendation of the Consolidation Committee, has directed the City Attorney to prepare a resolution—an ordinance—to submit to the people of this city the question of whether or not it shall distribute its electric power or whether such electricity shall be leased or sold to the lighting companies.

"Concretely, the question which is up for discussion here is whether or not this election should be postponed. I will attempt to explain, as far as I can, the reasons why this has been urged and the reason why the election should not be postponed. In doing this, owing to the fact that I will not have time nor opportunity to reply to Mr. Miller, I will, necessarily, have to assume to some extent the arguments which will be chosen by Mr. Miller, judging from interviews I have had with him in committee and otherwise.

"Now, gentlemen, while a crises faces this city relative to the construction of its power plant, the facts are not new. It has now been nearly six years since this city determined to bring the Aqueduct water here, and part of that scheme, through all those years, has been the development of this electric power, which we all know to be a by-product of the water. We all know this, that no part of our community has been more alive to that situation than the power companies. They are necessarily more vitally affected by that proposition. Nearly twelve months ago the people of this city voted $3,500,000 for the development and distribution of power. So that I say this condition which confronts us is the outgrowth of events with which we have all been familiar and came as a surprise to no one. But Mr. Mulholland tells us that in about twenty months the Aqueduct water will be pouring through Francisquito Tunnel. Will we be ready with our plans and be ready for the development of power and the distribution in this city? That is the question that is before us. E. F. Scattergood, chief electrical engineer of the L. A. Aqueduct power bureau, has told the public that it will require at least ten months after the bids are accepted, or about that time, to complete the power plant. So we now see the urgency that confronts us. I am going to read a short statement by Mr. Scattergood in relation to this matter because it bears particularly on the proposition of stating this issue.

Mr. Scattergood's Statement

"Mr. Scattergood says, 'It has been pointed out in the first annual report of the Power Bureau, dated June 30, 1910, and in several written statements of earlier and later dates from the Power Bureau to the Board of Public Works and from the Board of Public Works to the City Council, that it would require several months in which to receive bids and sign contracts after advertising for bids on the machinery and equipment necessary for the power plants, transmission lines and distributing systems, and that it would require at least eighteen months for the delivery and installation of such machinery and equipment, particularly for the generating plants and transmission lines. It is expected that the Aqueduct will be completed in eighteen to twenty months from date, and it is therefore, apparent that definite information must be had at once and that delay means postponement of the time at which the city can profit, whether it be by relief in taxes or reduction in rates, or both, by its Aqueduct power possibilities.'

"He then goes on and points out that with the issuance of the bonds steps were recommended by him to be taken at once for the adoption of the necessary plans, suggesting taking up the matter with the power companies as to whether or not such distributing system could be secured from them or must be provided independently. 'The Board of Public Works did not feel that it had authority, therefore, on August 31 a letter was addressed to the Board setting forth this position and the necessity for action in order to bring it formally before the city officials and the people generally. One conference was held and adjourned to meet again. In the meantime the City Council made provision for public meetings at the city hall. At these meetings the power companies introduced the proposition of selling to them for resale, whereupon the Mayor insisted that they should present their proposition in concrete form, in order that the people might pass on it. This they have never done. After these public meetings no provision seemed to exist for definitely determining the policy to be pursued. Finally it was made clear that the Consolidation Committee was the proper body to take the initiative, and the necessity for determining the city's attitude toward the power companies' proposition being apparent a straw vote was promptly recommended.'

Definite Knowledge Necessary

'Should the city determine to have its own distributing system, certain machinery and equipment would be purchased for power plants, transmission lines, sub stations; and hydraulic works in the form of conduits, tunnels, etc, would be constructed which would not be constructed or purchased with these funds in case it would be decided to sell to the power companies, showing that it is impossible to proceed without knowing definitely what is to be done. Furthermore, Mr. Mulholland has stated several times to the Advisory Committee that it is necessary to know what hydraulic works are to be constructed, and to have the funds for the construction practically at once in order to complete the work in time to pass the water for aqueduct purposes by the completion of the Aqueduct. Delay, therefore, no only means delay in the time at which the city may profit by its power opportunities, but it would be also necessary to take a chance on spending a portion of this bond money for hydraulic works which might not be in line with the policy finally established and therefore reduce the possible power development to be derived therefrom.'

"Now, gentlemen, that statement sets forth more clearly than I can the needs and requirements for prompt action. There is nothing to guide the city officials. It is apparent, as Mr. Scattergood states, if we are going to distribute ourselves we have got to make one set of plans, and adhere to them, and do it speedily On the other hand, if we propose to turn this electricity over to the power companies an entirely different system and plan will be followed.

Immediate Action Required

"Now, we have gone, up to this

Hats Cleaned. Phone A-3605
Misfit Clothing Bought and Sold
Telephone and I'll Call
Junction Tailor
N. H. Sanders, Prop.
Ladies' and Gents' Clothing Cleaned, Dyed, Pressed and Repaired. We Make a Specialty of Remodeling All Garments
844 South Main Street

MAIN 3340 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
SPRING ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

Furniture Repair Works
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

Residence Burglary Insurance
Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?
Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.
Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.
R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY
200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.
Home Phone 40444 Sunset Phone M. 7096

time without any action being taken. Why? Because the city officials have not felt they knew what to do on account of the indefiniteness of the proposition voted on by the people before, and further from the fact that since last fall, when these meetings have been held, there has been 'in the air' a proposition to be made by the companies for the purpose of taking over this power. Consequently, precious days and weeks and months have passed and now we have come to the parting of the ways when we have got to act promptly.

"It is suggested that the companies have not had time to make a proposition. Gentlemen, what time do they expect? Isn't six years enough time to prepare themselves to meet contingencies and the conditions which they knew would be coming? Isn't four months that have elapsed since we have had these meetings before the Council at which they brought forward publicly for the first time the question of taking over this power and redistributing it, isn't that time enough for them to prepare on the three main factors,—the duration of the lease; the amount to be paid the city for wholesale power; rates to be charged to the consumer? Those are the three factors. Haven't they had time to consider them and determine them? They will not tell you they have not because to doubt that question is to doubt their business capacity. But they, and the gentlemen who are supporting their position, tell you there is not time enough to educate the people on this proposition. I say it is impugning the intelligence and good sense of our citizens to say they cannot appreciate fully any proposition the companies may make, after thirty days of campaign which we would have.

"The time is not opportune from the companies' position, or at least they think it is not opportune. They may think the people need more education than a month's time will give them. They may think that conditions will arise of one kind or another that may cause the people to have different ideas about these propositions. But this city cannot wait for a more convenient season for the companies, or a more auspicious one to carry out their plans.

"We are told, in discussing this matter in committee, that if we will postpone this, and first it was suggested that we should postpone it until the fall primaries, which would bring it in the midst of a heated campaign, that if we postoone this an attractive proposition will be submitted. Attractive to whom? Now, the views of the power companies and the ordinary man of this city as to attractiveness are as wide apart as the poles. Not only that, but you must remember that even here in our own city among our own people, outside of the power companies, there is developing two distinct lines of cleavage. On the one side we find the big taxpayer who is interested in looking upon this as a revenue producer to obtain the greatest amount for the city treasury so there will be fewer issues of bonds. To him, necessarily, the question of rate to the consumer is of secondary importance. On the other hand we have the small consumer, the man whose taxes may be negligible cannot be but most keenly interested and appreciative of the advantages he expects to derive from cheap power for lighting. These are things we will have to consider in order to form an opinion of what we are to call an attractive proposition.

"So far as I am concerned, after talking with the representatives of the power companies and knowing what their ideas are and the length of time they think necessary to have this power in order that they may work the proposition out with advantage to themselves, I have not any hope that an attractive proposition will be submitted.

"I want to ask you if you appreciate what a delay for even a few months may mean? You have seen by Mr. Scattergood's statement that even though we knew today actually what the plans would be, even though the engineering department could go to work and prepare the details and specifications for the machinery, that we would barely have time to have that plant ready to distribute the electricity to the citizens or turn it over to the companies by the time the Aqueduct is ready. The companies have everything to gain by delay and the city has everything to lose.

"I did not mean to say and I am not saying that Mr. Miller is here to ask a delay in this matter for the selfish interest of the company in order that the bringing of the electric power here may be postponed. I don't accuse Mr. Miller of any such thing, but I say it is the natural result of postponement.

Delay Costly to the City

"Last year, according to Mr. Comstock's figures, these companies collected in this city, for lighting alone, nearly $2,200,000. That means that a delay of six months in approving the plans of this city will permit the companies to collect two million dollars more in the way of rates. Every month's delay means that the city is going to lose that much of earning time from its power from this day on. Now, what is the plain duty of our officials? What is the plain duty of those to whom we have committed this great task? It is to push forward with the greatest diligence and to perfect their plans and to have a distributing system ready when the water comes tumbling through Francisquito Canyon. If there is a delay, if we find the aqueduct water here and the water power plant not ready, the plans not prepared for the distribution, I feel sorry for the city official who has got to explain to his constituency. We have had six years to prepare for this. There is no excuse for us not to be ready with the power plant when the water is here. Our engineers tell us that if we postpone this we will not be ready.

"I want you to bear in mind always that back of all this discussion and back of all the differences of opinion between city officials and the citizens and the companies, the big question is, 'Who shall have the distribution in our city here of power and light to its inhabitants?' That is the question. It is a rich prize, and the companies naturally don't want to give it up, but it is written that the city is going to bring its power here and is going to use it, and sooner or later there is going to be municipal distribution, and the relations of the companies thereto have got to be made. They might as well be made now as any other time.

Possibilities of a Harbor Railway

"There is another great municipal project to be launched, namely, the Harbor Railway. That railway is intended to be operated by Owens River power. The ultimate use of that railway will wait upon the completion of the power plant. The plans of this city and of its citizens, to a large extent, depend upon and have relation to the completion of that power plant when the time will come that with a publicly owned harbor, with a publicly owned railroad from the city's walls to the center of this city, we will break the railroad monopoly that has hampered our commercial development so long.

"This action was not taken with any haste. The recommendation with reference to taking a straw vote was made only after the most earnest consideration and with the utmost approval of our beloved Mayor, George Alexander."

Mr. Miller's Argument

Mr. J. B. Miller, president of the Southern California Edison Company, then presented the power companies' side of the question as follows:

"From the standpoint of the power companies, we consider a vote very desirable to have, but it should not be taken at a time when the companies have no proposition to present and they are not in a position now to present one, nor to present it to the people so quickly or in such short time after the proposition is formulated that there is no opportunity for the people to understand on what they are voting. So far as delaying the proposition is concerned, the power companies do not desire to do that, except for some sixty or ninety days at the utmost.

"In the public mass meetings that were held, Mr. Scattergood made a statement that if the city distributed, itself, it would cost $6,500,000 to put in the installation plant and that where a six cent rate maintained there would result to the city, after all expenses had been paid, a profit of $700,000. Now, I want to have you remember that, and bear it in mind because I will refer to it again in reference to other things.

No Definite Information Furnished Is Companies' Claim

"Mr. Anderson stated we have had six years in which to get ready for this thing and we have had four months in which to present the proposition. The six years have elapsed, as well as the four months, but the power companies to date have not been able to secure from the City or Aqueduct officials any definite information as to what the city will have to sell, where it will sell it, what kind of current the city will develop, what the per kilowatt hour load will be, what the peak load capacity will be, what the number of cycles will be. They don't go into any details whatever. There is no knowledge as to what the voltage will be. We haven't had any information. I have talked with and telephoned various city officials and endeavored to secure interviews, and have asked for the appointment of officials, or committees, authorized to confer with the power companies on this subject. As long ago as last spring the matter was taken up, tentatively, with Mr. Mulholland and Mr. Matthews, and perhaps one or two others. The matter was also taken up immediately after the power bonds were voted. That was the first opportunity the companies had to take it up, and it was taken up immediately for the purpose of cliciting information. We found the city officials reluctant and in fact they refused to confer with us. In the mass meetings the proposition was made for and on behalf of the power companies, time and again, that we were ready and anxious to confer with anybody that had the necessary information and authority to confer with us and act promptly on a proposition. We cannot make a proposition right out of clear air. We have got to know what the city has to sell. So I do not think it is quite fair to charge the power companies with delay in this matter.

Proposition from the Companies

"And, now, regarding again Mr. Scattergood's statement,—you remember that,—$6,500.000 investment, a six cent rate, a profit to the city annually of $700,000. The power companies feel that if that is their opinion or their estimate of what the city is going to do, they can make a proposition to the city of paying the city, at a seven cent rate, $35 per kilowatt per annum. Now, you can figure that out for yourselves. If there are 38,000 kilowatts in the first two plants in the Francisquito Canyon, I do not know whether there are or not, the resulting profit to the city would certainly run into six or seven hundred thousand dollars, and possibly more. I have figured it myself as high as eight hundred thousand dollars. If the rate is six cents, we can pay $30 per kilowatt, provided the cycles are the same, etc. With the five cent rate, we could pay $20 per kilowatt per annum. Now, what does that mean? It would simply mean that the city would obtain under that arrangement exactly as much profit as it would if it distributed itself and the rate is no higher than the city would probably charge. The city probably would not go below four cents, although it might, and the investment, instead of being $6,500,000 would only be about $3,000,000. Now, that is the proposition the power companies would like to make to the city officials and have the people vote on it, but we have got to confer with Mr. Scattergood, or whoever has information as to exactly what the city has to sell, before we can say definitely and pledge our commercial honor to the citizens that if they vote for a certain thing we will carry out our part of the bargain. In the enumeration of what the city had done in calling this straw vote and in discussing what it is going to do with its power, did Mr. Anderson refer to any conference with the power companies at all, or has there ever been anywhere any consideration shown to the power companies on the part of the officials? I think we are a part of this town. We feel we are loyal citizens and we have had quite a part in the development of this section of the country. It might have simplified matters if we had the opportunity we were seeking to confer with city officials on this matter..

"Just to show you a little of the responsibility that rests on the shoulders of the power companies, I want to read you a few statistics on what they are in the city:

"The number of employes on the pay roll, 2,902; total wages paid during 1910, $2,700,561; number of electric consumers, 95,786. (I think that is just in the city, that may be in the suburbs too); number of gas consumers, 116,279; number of horses, 192; wagons, 174; automobiles, 32; amount paid in taxes and licenses, $611,890.04; amount paid local merchants exclusively for supplies, $3,560,888.05 (that is, local merchants in Los Angeles get that much money out of the power companies every year); number of street arc lights, 6,649 (that is all over Southern California); incandescent street lights, 9,920.

"Should the power companies be considered? I think if for no other reason the financial position which they represent in this community would entitle them to some consideration in this matter.

"Then, there is the standpoint of the city. We all know that the city is very close to its bonded capacity. I think you will all agree with me that in the next five years at least, there is going to be just as much demand for money on the part of the city as has been spent in the past five years. I think we are going to grow faster if we can all get together and pull together. With a municipal railroad which Mr. Anderson referred to, storm drains, school houses, libraries and public institutions of all kinds, this city is going to need bonds. If it can make arrangements with the power companies by which the consumer gets just as low a rate and this city makes just as much money and the city is spared the investment of the amount necessary for a distributing system, I think it would be a good thing for the city to do, at least for awhile."

A voice: "How long a time contract?"

Mr. Miller: "I can't tell you until we talk with Mr. Scattergood and find out just how much electricity he will have to sell. On the aqueduct there are seven different plants. How many of them are they going to develop? Is there anyone in the room who knows?"

Mr Scattergood. "It is my opinion that the annual report which has been on record since July 1st, that that record would show any power man approximately near enough for a statement of this kind just what they could do with three million dollars and a half. You know what the city can get for it possibly as well as I."

Mr. Miller: "From the standpoint of the companies, I told you something of our large transactions here. We have a very large investment here in Southern California. I think in the neighborhood of $45,000,000. More money than the city contemplates putting in both the water and power development. Those securities are scattered all over the United States and all over California and to take drastic action on the 6th of March without allowing the power companies to be heard would be unfair, and even if we could formulate a proposition in the time between now and March 6th, it would afford no time to educate the people and it would compel us to tell these investors and capitalists of the United States as a whole that there is no consideration in Los Angeles for investors; that if you are seeking investment, go some place else.

"The attitude of Los Angeles toward capital is quite an important item Southern California is growing fast, growing faster, almost, than any other part of the United States, and we have only ten or fifteen per cent of the money here necessary to take care of the normal growth of public utilities. Drastic action on March 6th will make a very serious bar to our obtaining the necessary outside capital. It will practically preclude our being able to get more money to bring into this section. Of the $45,000,000 I have just mentioned I can say that there are at least fifteen million—Oh, yes, I suppose thirty-five million, that was brought from east of the Rocky Mountains and it has meant a whole lot to us to have that money come in here and help out our local institutions.

"If we cannot make a proposition which on investigation and careful checking will prove as substantially as good as the city can do itself, we expect that the city will turn us down."

We are not coming before the city with any other kind of a proposition. We believe that if we can make this proposition of $35 per kilowatt per annum, with a seven cent rate, or $30 per kilowatt per annum with a six cent rate, that it is substantially as good as the city can do itself, and with half the investment. But we must go into that and see if we can do it and confer with the city officials, and that will take fully all the time from now to March 6th. Even if it only took two weeks, it would not be enough time to properly present it. We desire a postponement of only sixty or ninety days for the purpose of transacting this business. I understand Senator Camenetti introduced a resolution at Sacramento calling for a special State election very shortly after the adjournment of the State Legislature, for the purpose of vetoing the special vote on the proposed constitutional amendment now being considered by the Legislature. That would be entirely convenient for us, and I cannot see that two months that might possibly delay this proposition is nearly so important as to have this matter voted upon intelligently. If you go before the people and say 'Shall the city distribute its power or lease it?' what is the use of holding the election? They will all vote to distribute it. We would like to be given time to prepare a proposition and put it before the people and then if they vote it down there is nothing more to be said.

"Mr. Anderson made the statement that the only parties that would be benefitted by a proposition from the companies would be the big-tax-payer, but that the power companies did not take into consideration the non-tax-payer, or the tax-payer whose taxes are negligible. I presume he had in mind that under competition the rates would be so low that a deficit would be created, or instead of earning large, handsome profits for the city treasury it would give that profit to the city in the way of low rates. That is possibly true but that is putting a premium on non-tax-paying. The man who will get any good out of that will not want to have any taxes or business in the city of Los Angeles. I do not think we want to build up that kind of a community. I think the great majority of people in this city have their own homes.

"I want to lay stress once more upon that proposition of ours. We think we can present a proposition, if we are given time to prepare it and put it before the people, which will be substantially as good as the city could do itself, just as low rates to the consumer, just as large profits to the city treasury and only half the investment. If they hold this special State election we will be very glad to have our proposition by that time, or any election which will come, say after the first of May."

Mayor Alexander's Remarks

Mayor Alexander was called upon to make a few remarks and said:

"In the first place, I want to call your attention to the fact that the city of Los Angeles is not making war on the electric companies. There is room for all in Southern California. All the electricity the power companies can furnish and all the power the city can get will be needed. Mr. Miller knows that, for in a private conversation we have talked this thing over. 'But,' he says, 'we don't want competition.' That is what is the matter. That is the whole thing in a nutshell,—they don't want competition. He tells me the city will have the advantage because everyone will want to take the city's current instead of theirs. Now, when you consider conditions in Pasadena that is not very good logic. I understand that over there it is about evenly divided. We want it understood right at the beginning that this city is not going to make war on any of the electric companies. I, for one, would not be in favor of making the rates so low as to put them out of business or cripple them in any way.

"I just want to make one statement at this moment,—some may think it a little harsh, but nevertheless I will make it. Under Amendment No. 1 these public utility corporations will not contribute any money toward the government of the city and you want to keep that in mind when you are talking about the power companies' rights. They are not even willing to pay their licenses any more. So there are two sides to this question.

Sentiment of the People Wanted

"As far as the city is concerned, the people have voted three and a half million dollars to erect power plants on the Aqueduct and to furnish a distributing system and it was understood when that was voted that the city was to distribute that current. Mr. Scattergood informs me that as soon as we are sure we will have the money, he wants to enter into contracts for machinery and power houses, and, of course, if we carry out that part of the program, a distributing system. Now we want to know just as soon as possible if you want to distribute what you have, even if it be only one unit. It is intended to spend about two millions or two millions and a quarter of the three million and a half for machinery, etc., reserving about a million and a half or a million and a quarter to put in a distributing system, and we don't expect for years to come to supply the whole city of Los Angeles. We are going to start in with city lighting. How much do you suppose we are paying each month for city lighting, that is, just the lighting of streets? Over $21,000 a month, and the city is not half lighted. When those men put up ornamental lights along the streets they are required to pay seven-eighths of the cost. They should not be required to pay one cent of the cost. If this thing continues you will not be able to do as much ornamental lighting as you have in the past.

"We are going to put in a municipal plant just as we can afford it. It will be ten years, fifteen years, maybe twenty years before we need the whole amount. The people in the outlying districts will have to wait until we can get to them.

"In the meantime, suppose we save that $250,000 a year which we are now paying out to the power companies for city lighting and suppose we use that to extend our systems, won't that be something?

"I have nothing against the power companies at all, but I am working for the city and it is my opinion that we require an expression from the people on the sixth of March as to whether they want Mr. Scattergood, the electrical engineer of our city, to provide for a distributing system. His plan is that we will save enough on our city lighting to constantly extend the system with very little outlay above the original one.

"I want to tell Mr. Miller, that he will be able to sell all the power he can generate at a good price, too, and we don't for a moment think of confiscating a dollar's worth of his company's property. His stockholders are entitled to good returns on their investment, and they shall have them, as far as I am concerned. But the city of Los Angeles also has rights in this matter. We have the right to go into the electric power business if we want to.

Cheap Power a Commercial Inducement

"Mr. Miller speaks about protecting capital and bringing business here. If we can say to the manufacturers who want to come here, 'Gentlemen, the city owns an electric plant that will furnish you the cheapest electricity in the world,' won't that bring business here? Talk about protecting capital! That is the way to protect it and induce it to come here. Our municipal plant will make a rate at which the companies can live and at which we can live. But they must not say, 'We don't want competition.' Competition is all right.

"We had meetings several months ago in the City Hall council chamber. I tried to get something definite out of the power companies and tried to have them make a proposition. At the second to the last meeting I said, 'Gentlemen, I want you to come prepared next meeting to submit a proposition as to what you want to do on this lighting matter.' Did they come prepared? No, they had no proposition to make. It is about three or four weeks ago that this 'straw vote' business was first talked of and they have done nothing. It is still over a month to the election and I would be in favor of putting off the election proclamation as long as possible so that they would have time to put a proposition on the ballot. They came nearer today to saying what they want to do than I have ever heard them before If Mr. Miller had made that proposition when we held the meetings in the council chamber I would immediately have appointed a committee to hold conferences with the representatives of the companies.

"Now, I am in favor of a straw vote. As I understand it, it will merely tell Mr. Scattergood the people do, or do not, want to arrange for a distributing system and the lighting of the city of Los Angeles. Under the present rates, if the city was properly lighted, it would cost half a million dollars a year. Anyone knows there are not half lights enough, but when you come to pay out three, or four, or five hundred thousand dollars a year and the city has a great big water power standing idle, the people will want to know what kind of a city government we have. The city of Los Angeles is going to distribute its power as far as it can go. We will not make war on the power companies and we don't want to interfere with their business. They may go ahead and make contracts and we will protect them with a reasonable rate. As long as I am there I will see that that is done, so far as lies in my power.

"I am here working for the taxpayers,—the small fellows who need help. The big fellows generally own property to a large extent and can help themselves, but it is the little fellow I want to help. There are thousands of people who don't own their homes who are interested in the lighting business. Everyone who rents a house has to pay the lighting bill. Those are the fellows who are hard-up. You gentlemen who have annual dividends and clip coupons off your bonds don't need help nearly so much as the others, and, gentlemen, there are lots of poor people in the city of Los Angeles. Mr. Miller talks about the people in their employ. We are not going to have them discharged. We want them to live and let live.

"Therefore, my advice is, vote for the straw ballot."

Meyer Lissner Opposes Straw Vote

Meyer Lissner, president of the Los Angeles Board of Public Utilities, requested the privilege of saying a few words upon the subject under discussion in order that the reasons for his previously declared opposition to the straw vote might be known.

Mr. Lissner said:

"I happened to go into the Council Chamber of the City Hall the other day while I was waiting for a meeting of the Board of Public Utilities to be held upstairs. This matter happened to be before the Council and someone suggested that I was present and might have some ideas upon the subject. I was called upon to speak, which I did. I spoke in opposition to this straw vote because I am opposed to it at this time. I will make to you gentlemen practically the same talk I made to the City Council on the subject, with such suggestions as have come to me from listening to the speakers here today.

"In the first place, under the Charter of the city of Los Angeles, no part of the hydro-electric power that is to be generated by the city can be alienated in any way except upon a two-thirds vote of the citizens of Los Angeles. When the citizens of Los Angeles adopted that charter amendment, by an overwhelming majority, they then and there and at that time, in my opinion, gave their definite instruction to the city officials that they should not, without consulting them (the people) attempt to alienate any part of that power. That was the first 'straw vote.' Then again we recently voted for bonds for this aqueduct power development and it was provided in the ordinance calling for the election that the proceeds of the sale of those bonds should be used not alone for the development of power, but for the distribution of it. That was another 'straw vote'; something very much more than a straw vote. In fact it was another positive instruction to the city officials to proceed to distribute to the citizens of Los Angeles the power that will be generated.

"Now, I say that the city officials have been instructed not once, but twice in regard to this matter. And that too in a perfectly legal and binding manner. This straw vote would not be a legal vote at all. It would be merely advisory and would not be binding. I have just come from Sacramento where they were discussing 'legal' and 'moral' obligations in connection with another matter, and I don't like to hear such questions unnecessarily raised. Let us not take any straw votes unless there is a positive necessity for it, and in this case I think there is no necessity. I say it is the bounden duty of the officials of the city of Los Angeles to proceed with the plan for the development of this power and for the distribution of it, and not ask any questions about it.

"Now it is a fact, gentlemen, that for months past,—and if I am mistaken in this Mr. Scattergood is here and can correct me—in the office of the Power Bureau of the Aqueduct they have been working on plans, and making estimates not alone for the development of this power, but for its distribution. They have been doing it and at the present time are still doing it and will continue to do just what it is understood they will do if we have this straw vote. It is their duty to continue to do so. What do they invest when they make those plans? They invest money in pen and ink, paper and engineering brains. That is all. They can't spend any big money until we get the money. This talk of making contracts in the near future is ridiculous. We all know no contracts can be made until we have the money to spend for the purpose, and we won't have it for a number of months. In the first place, we cannot offer those bonds for sale until we get a Supreme Court decision as to their validity, the question now being under consideration before that tribunal. In the second place, we cannot make any contracts until we have sold the bonds voted for this special purpose and have the money on hand, and you all know that it will be at least six months before we can expect to have a Supreme Court decision and go through the necessary formalities and negotiations in selling the bonds.

Must Still Proceed With Plans

"In the meantime, what is the duty of the Power Bureau? I say it is their duty to proceed with their plans not alone for the development of this power but for its distribution, and to make detailed plans and specifications. And this they have been and are doing and it is costing only a few thousand dollars,—a mere bagatelle compared with the amounts they will spend when they really get started spending money for physical property.

Salient Features

"Now, there are three propositions,—there is the proposition of developing either one or two units of the power and a proposition of distribution in this city, and they can ask for bids on all three of those propositions and get everything ready so that at a moment's notice, when we get the money, they can let the contracts for as much of the work planned as it is considered advisable at the time.

"In the meantime, what advantage at all is it to tie ourselves up body and soul so that if a proposition should come along,—a really favorable proposition—the citizens of Los Angeles could not consider it, and the Council would not be in a position where they could, without severe criticism and stultification, submit it to the citizens. Suppose the power companies make a proposition to the people, which they will undoubtedly do, and the proposition would look something like this, according to what Mr. Miller has said today and according to information I have had from aqueduct officials.

"Mr. Miller says, they are willing to pay $25 per annum per horse power and give a five cent base rate per kilowatt hour, which is the lowest rate existing anywhere in the world that I know of outside of Pasadena. I am satisfied, from my talk with the aqueduct officials, that if we were to sell this power to the power companies at $25.00 per annual horse power there would be a profit to Los Angeles of several hundred thousand dollars per annum net, and that without the expense of putting in a distributing system, building up a business and losing time and money while the business is being developed—I don't say that would be a good proposition to the city, but I say it would be such an attractive proposition that the Council would be justified and in duty bound to submit it to the citizens, and that Council ought not to foreclose the matter at this time so that they cannot submit what might seem to be a very attractive proposition.

"What will be the result if this straw vote is taken? We all know. Every man in this room, who voted on it at all, would vote against leasing any part of that power. In the way the proposition will be put up to the citizens it will be considered an unfavorable one. I say that it is a reflection on the intelligence of the citizens of Los Angeles to submit that proposition to them in the form proposed. Everybody knows when you put this question to them, 'Will you lease any part of that power or will you distribute it yourselves?' they will say 'Distribute it ourselves, of course.' They are not going to vote for leasing as an abstraction. And the result would practically preclude the submission to the people of a proposition on which there might be a reasonable difference of opinion. I believe that even then the people would vote for municipal distribution of the power; but they are entitled to have an opportunity of voting on an attractive proposition and the Councilmen, in my opinion, should not foreclose the matter by asking for this 'straw vote' at this time, because then they might be in a position where they would like to submit a proposition and could not do so because they were morally bound by the straw vote they had themselves asked for. We hold the trump card right now, the companies have got to come to us. Why throw away the trump?

Companies Should Have Fair Treatment

"I am not making any argument based on an apocal to prejudice, and I am not afraid to stand uo here, stand up in the City Council Chamber, or stand up before the people of Los Angeles and plead for a square deal for the power companies or for corporate capital in this city. These companies came here and invested their money in good faith. They have six or seven million dollars, I believe, invested in distributing lines in this city. If the city of Los Angeles comes right in and commences distribution it will, to a very large extent, confiscate—and it cannot possibly have any other result—the capital invested in distributing lines of those companies. Do we want to do that? I do not know: maybe we do. Possibly if a proposition is submitted to the people of Los Angeles they will say, 'No matter what proposition the companies make to us we will nevertheless enter into the distributing business.' But, I say, let us hold ourselves open so we can listen to a proposition. We have got them in the door, gentlemen. They cannot afford to have their plants, valued at millions of dollars, confiscated, and they must come to us with a proposition extremely advantageous to the city, and when they do come let us at least be in a position to be able to consider that advantageous proposition.

"I am not afraid of the necessity of a special election. Suppose we don't hold this straw vote on March 6th. Suppose we let it go over until May even if there is no constitutional amentment election. We can hold a special election in May for less than $10,000. It has been done before. About how much do you think that would cost every citizen of Los Angeles? It would cost every man, woman and child in the city three cents and I guess they could all afford that. Then the Council would be in a position to say to the companies: 'Unless you make us a proposition that looks exceedingly favorable we won't submit it at all.' And if the companies did submit a proposition that the Council thought worth while they could refer it to the people, and if not the Power Bureau could go right along with its plans as it is in fact doing anyhow. They have not lost a minute, and they are not losing a minute. They are making plans now, not alone for development but for distribution of power.

City Power for Railway and Street Lighting

"Now, in regard to the harbor railway proposition: Of course we want that harbor railway and we want to run it by municipal electricity. If we develop this power and sell it wholesale, we don't have to sell all of it. We can turn a certain amount of it over to the harbor railway. That goes without question. As much of that power as is necessary to operate the harbor railway should be reserved and under no consideration should there be alienation of it. Perhaps we ought to take the same stand with regard to our municipal lighting, that under no consideration will we have it done by the companies. We might want to reserve enough power for that also, but when it comes to distributing electricity to the small consumer, there might be a question of its advisability for the time being.

"I have been making some investigation in this matter in the last twenty-four hours and have talked with some of the leading people connected with the Aqueduct. If I were to tell you what they say you would be surprised to hear the positiveness of their expressions. They consider it extremely ill-advised to take a straw vote at this time and thus tie their hands so that they cannot talk to the power people or negotiate with them at all.

Must Go Slowly on Bond Issues

"In regard to the bonds of the city: I asked the City Auditor to give me a memorandum, and he says that the city has outstanding bonds at the present time amounting to $21,516,200
Aqueduct bonds unissued.. 7,788,400
Harbor bonds 3,000,000
Power bonds 3,500,000

Total $35,804,600
The present assessed valuation of the city is $333,000,000
Limit of indebtedness, 15 per cent, about..... 50,000,000

"That is, we can, under our present limit of indebtedness, issue only $50,000,000 in bonds altogether. I have been in favor of raising the 15 per cent limit. I do not think there should be any limit imposed at all. I had this up with the Charter Revision Committee but could not prevail on them to raise the limit or remove it, and it is there. Our charter limit of indebtedness will be 15 per cent of the present assessed valuation. Amendment No. 1 will reduce our assessed valuation in the city of Los Angeles sixty million dollars on account of the elimination from assessment by the city of the operative property and franchises of utility corporations. Under the conditions our debt limit will be about $41,000,000
Our present indebtedness is 35,800,000 with a $41,000,000 limit. The estimated prospective indebtedness is as follows:
Promised San Pedro.....$7,000,000
Extra power development.. 4,000,000
Power distribution 6,000,000
Water distribution and reservoirs 1,000,000
Municipal railroad 1,000,000
New city hall 1,000,000

Total $20,000,000
Add these figures to the $35,800,000 and you have $55,800,000, or about $15,000,000 more than our limit of indebtedness at present will admit. And there may be more coming that cannot be avoided. I am just showing you those figures to prove to you that it behooves us to be careful before we issue more bonds unnecessarily and that we had better go slow with our indebtedness so as to have as much margin as possible.

"My whole proposition is this: that at the present time it is not alone inadvisable, but it is unfair, to submit this abstract proposition to the citizens of Los Angeles; that the result is a foregone conclusion; that the city officials have nothing to do except go ahead with the development and completion of these plans for generation and distribution, just as they have been doing; and when they have a concrete proposition to submit to the people that they think while, let them submit it; and if no such proposition is made go right ahead with the distributing system. It is wholly up to the companies. They must come to us."

Councilman Andrews Speaks

Mr. Andrews said:

"I think the time is opportune for just a few remarks. I am extremely surprised at the logic of the last speaker." (Mr. Lissner.) "He has gone on the point that on two occasions you have absolutely made it obligatory on the City Council to follow the very proposition that he expects you to follow in the straw vote. By what reasoning, then, if it is absolutely obligatory on you and you have been instructed by the people in this matter, can you say any harm will be accomplished by the straw vote? What harm can the straw vote accomplish? Absolutely nothing. Now, if there is no advantage gained—I have heard the gentleman in the Council chamber say that if it would be properly submitted it would be a ten to one vote—what harm can be done if, as he proves by his own arguments, it is that way already? There is absolutely no logic in that.

"He has talked to you with reference to the possibility of bond issues, but I have not time to take that up in seriatim, but it is simply to show you this, if there is any condition like what he has prognosticated, that you are bound in the same line for the next three generations. You can't get out from under.

"This straw vote costs you nothing. If the companies want to make a proposition, why don't they do it? The Mayor tried to pull them out and took action to induce them to in the Council chamber meetings. It is my opinion that you could not pull a proposition out of them with a six-mule team. They don't want to give you one. They are sparring for time, absolutely. Sparring for time, and finally the time will be so short that there will be no alternative but to let them distribute it.

"Mr. Lissner says that we foreclose our chances. There is no foreclosure about this. It is a straw vote. It will show what the people want, and then if they do have a proposition it can be submitted at any time.

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE

Good Work of First Year's Administration Commended—Important Legislation Suggested.

Mayor Alexander submitted to the City Council, on Tuesday, his annual report which proved to be a document of especial interest. The Mayor gives little space to a resume of the work accomplished during the past year, but devotes the major portion of the message to a consideration of the city's requirements and suggestions for needed legislation.

After congratulating the Council on its successful and economical administration of the past year, the report sets forth the financial condition of the city and states that "in all probability, the general fund as provided by the budget committee will be more than sufficient to last through the fiscal year. In a city growing as fast as Los Angeles is growing, this is a most remarkable showing.

"All the departments of the city are doing splendidly," says the Mayor. "The street department and the engineer's department are overcrowded with work and probably will continue to be so as long as the city keeps up its present rapid growth.

"One of the difficulties that the street department has to contend with is the failure of the railway companies to promptly pave and repair the portions of the streets which, under their franchises, are to be paved and repaired by them. Some instances have occurred where the railway company has not completed its portion of the paving for a year after the rest of the street was paved. The matter has become a serious nuisance, and it is necessary for the Board of Public Works to adopt drastic measures. If the railways will not live up to the provisions of their franchises, those franchises should be forfeited. . . .

Amendment No. 1 a Pernicious Law

"Unfortunately, the people voted for and carried at the November election, Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 1. The proposer of this amendment claimed that it would separate state from local taxation. In reality, it merely separated certain public and quasi-public utility corporations from the burden of taxation for city or county and other local purposes, without entirely separating the people from the burden of state taxation. . . . It is estimated that this amendment will add a million dollars a year to the taxes of the people of this county.

"The worst feature, however, so far as the city is concerned, is the reduction of the bond limit. The assessed value of corporate property taken from the assessment rolls for city purposes by said amendment is about $60,000,000, which reduces the bond limit by 15% of that sum, or $9,000,000. Of course, this condition will be partially relieved and the bond limit extended by the natural increase in property values as the years go by.

"It has been suggested that there may be some flaws in the passage of Amendment No. 1, and I believe it would be wise for your honorable body to instruct the City Attorney to consider whether or not it is possible to defeat this amendment in the courts; and also, perhaps, to consider whether or not the property owned by the city itself can be estimated for the purpose of fixing the amount of bonds which the city can issue. The city has more than forty million dollars worth of property. Almost all of this is or will be income-producing property. This income-producing quality undoubtedly makes the bonds of the city much more desirable to the investor, and it should be good reason for increasing our bond limit."

The message here refers to the annexation of San Pedro and Wilmington and gives an account of what has been done for that part of the city.

Regarding the Harbor and Aqueduct bonds the report says:

"On February 26, 1910, $3,000,000 of bonds were voted for harbor improvements Some legal questions as to the validity of these and of the aqueduct power bonds have been raised and a suit commenced to settle those questions. Until those bond moneys can be obtained, of course, the greater part of the harbor work cannot be done. Every month's delay is a direct and a severe loss.

"I would, therefore, respectfully recommend that your honorable body pass a resolution requesting the Supreme Court to advance this case for consideration at the very earliest possible moment."

Harbor Development

The message closes with recommendations for improvements to the harbor as follows:

"As soon as the bond moneys can be obtained, our endeavor should be to develop the harbor along practical lines. As it appears to me the first work to be done is that upon the Huntington Fill; and I strongly urge that at the very earliest possible moment slips, wharves and municipal warehouses be constructed thereon; that in the meantime the municipal wharf at Wilmington should be rushed to completion and municipal warehouses established there. But these improvements will be of comparatively small benefit until there is a very material reduction in the cost of transportation between the harbor and the city; and the practical way to obtain this reduction is the building of a municipal railway. This railway should form a belt around the harbor, both at Wilmington and San Pedro, with trunk lines connecting with the main portion of Los Angeles. The location of the railway should first be determined, and rights of way should be secured immediately. It has been suggested that money for the purpose of building a municipal railway may be secured from the various transcontinental railroads that desire terminal facilities here and at the harbor. Your finance committee is succeeding in accumulating a much larger reserve fund than will be needed to tide the city over the coming 'dry months,' and, as a last resort, a portion of this fund might be available for municipal railway purposes.

"Adequate first protection must be provided for the harbor and the manufacturing and warehouse districts which undoubtedly will be established there. To this end a reservoir site at least 600 feet high should be acquired on the Palos Verdes Hills near San Pedro. By the time the Owens River water reaches us these reservoirs should be ready for use. Thus the harbor section will be supplied with plenty of water for domestic and other purposes, and will be protected from fire by a high pressure gravity water system."

MUNICIPAL CONSERVATION

President Foulke, of the National Municipal League, Advances an Idea.

Excerpt from the address, "Conservation in Municipalities," delivered before the recent Buffalo convention of the National Municipal League by the new president of the League, William Dudley Foulke.

There is a phase of the conservation question which lies at our own doors and of which we may hope to realize the benefits more speedily than from preserving our distant national domain, and this is the conservation of our municipal resources. Here, too, we have been wasteful to the last degree.

Every city, every township, every county in America is the possessor of property of great value. The streets, the roads, the parks and many of the public buildings, if they were in the possession of private individuals, could be made to produce an enormous income, and while no one will say that they should be made productive to the same extent, or in the same way, in the hands of the government, yet they ought to be made far more productive than they ever have been, and their economical management in the future, in spite of all the waste in the past, can still result in a substantial reduction of our municipal burdens.

Not long ago my wife confronted me with the startling proposition that if properly managed, a city need not levy taxes; nay, more, that if it had been always managed as it should be, it ought to pay dividends to its citizens. It struck me at first that this was a will o' the wisp well adapted to the pursuit of the feminine mind, and I dismissed it. But she proceeded to argue the question and the further the argument proceedd the more reasonable the proposition became.

If our own little city of Richmond, Ind., were not built, my wife argued, the land on which it stood might be worth $100 to $150 an acre for farm purposes. Virtually the whole present value of the land is conferred by the city, and if the city merely collected rent or interest upon the value it conferred, it could collect more than our entire taxes and would give a considerable dividend, not only to land owners, but to those citizens who owned no land.

All a city needs to do, if it starts out right, is to assess a proper proportion upon the unearned increment of the land it occupies. Now, what is this unearned increment?

If I own a cheap lot in a remote suburb and do nothing with it, but the city expands in that direction and folks build all around me, this adds to its value many times. I have done nothing myself to make it worth any more, but the folks who have built around me have done it. Yet I get the increased value which I have not earned, and the city whose growth gave the value gets nothing except a trifling tax from year to year.

The city ought to have that increase and make me pay rent upon it instead of taxing other things which I myself earn. In other words, if the city taxes what the city gives at its proper value, there need be no taxes imposed on what it does not give—upon the product of industry—buildings, improvements and personal property. This is an application to municipalities of the single tax theory of Henry George.

I have ascertained that a city actually exists in this country where there are no taxes, and where all the charges for necessary expenses are met in this manner. This is the city of Fair Hope, on Mobile Bay. It was established by some immigrants from Iowa and, after a decade and a half, this city is reported to be prospering. There are free schools, a water system without rates, a public dock, a free library and a telephone system with no charges, all established out of the ground rent after paying the State and county taxes and the cost of administration and improvements.

In general, a city without taxation can exist only where the municipality owns a considerable portion of its land and takes advantage of increased values. The city must be "caught young" to make such a result possible. Our American cities have not been caught young enough for that, but is there nothing we can do to approximate such a consummation? If we cannot eliminate taxes, can we not lessen them by the profitable investment and management of what the city yet owns or may acquire?

It owns its streets and these, under proper management, ought to be constantly increasing sources of revenue. The right to use these streets for telegraph, telephone, heating and lighting services, for water mains, for street railway tracks; in short, for any profitable purpose, ought to be carefully guarded and the utmost possible benefits obtained by franchise from any individual or corporation utilizing them.

In the past, we have always been so eager to get the new system, whatever it might be, that we granted franchises with little regard to the future growth in the value of our streets. This must now cease.

There is just as much earned increment in a system of street railway tracks, of water mains or gas pipes as these is in a city lot. Each year the value increases with the growth of the community, the increase of patrons and the establishment of new connections.

The franchise which ties up for a long period this use of the streets for a fixed amount is pretty certain to be one from which the city in the lapse of years is bound to lose.

The term of a franchise ought to be graduated so as to increase with the increasing value of the thing granted. The immediate result may seem unimportant, but it will not be long before the city begins to enjoy the providence which thus insures the participation of the public in the increased values that the municipality itself confers.

If we cannot catch our cities young, let us catch them before they grow any older than they are. Many of the most important franchises are still to be granted and should be guarded in accordance with the best models of our own country and of cities abroad, where they do these things much better than we do in America.

MIDDLE WEST LOSING

It is to be observed that the Eastern States are generally growing more rapidly than those of the Middle West. Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri and Kansas all show a lower percentage of gain than Illinois, while Iowa shows an actual loss. Not only New York but also Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island show a greater percentage of increase than Illinois. If, on the other hand, we turn to the Far West, we find a very high rate of growth, the increase in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and other centers being phenomenal. The conclusion is, therefore, that the Nation's growth in population is greatest in the Coast States, both east and west, a circumstance which suggests reflections upon the part which facilities for commerce play in the development and growth of States.—New York Tribune.

Theatre

Maxine Elliott in a Pretty Role

"The Inferior Sex" is an inconsequent little farce comedy which would be very flat but for the charm and beauty of Maxine Elliott in the chief role. Given as favorable a measurement as possible, it is only two-thirds of a play, beginning late in the evening and ending early, with two acts built out of almost nothing, and a third out of almost less.

The action all takes place on a yacht, at sea, and as solid land does not figure in it at all, except in casual references in the past and future tenses, the instability of the plot and the airy character of the dialogue may be pardoned, or even declared essential to the plan and effect.

At any rate, Miss Elliott holds attention very prettily throughout the "Firefly's" unique voyage, and proves a stunning yachtswoman as well as a man-tamer of much finesse. Her task, in the role of Eve Addison, who has been rescued from a small boat at sea by the yacht of a certain woman-hating Englishman, by name Charles Winslow, is to convince this selfish lout of his mistaken view of the relationship of the sexes, and of the happiness he is missing through his perverted belief; and you cannot blame the fellow for being completely confused and reversed by the time his uninvited passenger is through with him. Certainly, no man could be blamed for surrendering to this particular Eve.

Bonita, Orpheum Next Week

In appearance Miss Elliott is younger and slenderer than on former visits to us and in her present role she gives an effect of warmth and girlishness that transforms her calm and statuesque type of beauty into an intimate prettiness that is as charming as it is surprising.

The comedy is an English affair, and both of the principal male parts—the yacht owner and his "man," Bennett—are assumed by Englishmen, so that the native atmosphere of the play is quite well preserved. The former is adequately played by Frederick Kerr, and the impersonation of Bennett by O. B. Clarence is particularly good. The cast is unusual in that it includes a real live Japanese actor, written down as T. Tamamoto, whose fate it is (and a rather distasteful situation it must be for a whole-souled Japanese) to characterize a Chinese cook.

L. B.

Road Show Scores

Alice Lloyd, she of the abreviated bathing suit and long talent, is back at the Orpheum, "Splash Me" song and all, yes, even more. She comes back with all of the old time art and vim which proves her right to the first place on such a bill as is presented by the Road Show. She brings all of her old time song hits and has several new ones and she also introduces the audience to the latest thing in cupids and hobble gown costumes.

It is Miss Lloyd's absolute enjoyment of her work that makes her appreciated to the utmost, and in fact she is the kind of woman that has the power to get hold of her audience and keep them wanting for more. She is a capital entertainer. Her dancing is not much, her voice is nothing compared with some less artistic people who have fallen by the wayside in an effort to attain prominence in some of the side street houses; she is good looking, but there are lots of good looking girls on the stage who do not get one-fifth the salary said to be drawn by Miss Lloyd. It is the art she puts into her work, the sparkle of her eye, the rare taste she has in choosing her costume and the freshness of her songs that makes her a star in vaudeville.

If all the sailors looked like Miss Lloyd does when she dances, clad in her white sailor suit, it would not be hard to tell why "a sailor has a girl in every port."

Lew Sully, of minstrel fame, is a suitable companion on the bill with Miss Lloyd. He knows just how to act as interlocutor in a minstrel show, and in his turn he uses the orchestra as "end men" to put over some of his best work. In his burlesque of Miss Lloyd he appears in costumes that are half the battle in convulsing the audience and he wins many encores.

In "What Every Woman Wants," a play by Madge Clover and Luella Conley, Miss Lillian Burkhart has a vehicle for herself and a good company and wins much applause and many bouquets of rare flowers from her many friends here. As the sketch is of local origin and Miss Burkhart makes her home in this city, it naturally would be well received, but the play and its presentation are really meritorious and deserve much. Of course what every woman wants more than money, more than anything else, is love, and the skit is so written as to bring out this fact in a most forceful and striking manner.

Miss Burkhart plays the part of a servant girl, who has been deserted by her husband. She is mourning the fact that she is poor, that she has to support her child in an institution and cannot have silks and diamonds like the mistress of the house. It is then she learns that her employer, to whom she looks as her ideal, is contemplating leaving her husband and home for a supposed lover. In realizing the tragedy which seemingly must follow this escapade she forgets her place, tells her mistress the story of her life and urges her not to forget her home. At this time the servant girl's husband, who is the villain's secretary, comes to urge the "lady" to make haste in preparing for the elopement, recognizes his wife, and in a strong scene which follows all come to realize that it is home and children and love that counts most for all and that it is what not only women but everybody wants.

Ernest Scharff, a musician of great versatility, plays on almost every instrument in a little skit entitled "In the Music Store" and rounds out nicely the new bill.

The holdovers are Mae Melville and Robert Higgins, entertainers of merit; Howard, the Scotch ventriloquist; Charles and Henry Rigoletto and La Pia, a dainty dancer.

J. L. B.

"The Nigger"

"The Nigger," by Edward Sheldon, which has been acclaimed the greatest success of the New Theatre's season in New York, has reopened the Auditorium this week, with Miss Florence Roberts heading the cast, supported by Thurlow Bergen. Based, as its name suggests, upon the question of color as it exists in the South today, it is a powerful, closely-knit, and, if the pun is pardonable, highly-colored play, but withal an unpleasant play. In his latest work, as in "Salvation Nell," Mr. Sheldon calls spades spades and calls niggers niggers, and this astounding bluntness, together with a dramatic technique quite as fearless in its employment of the most melodramatic phases of Southern life, is sufficient reason for the stir it has created. Then there is a strong appeal to the sympathy in the story of the promising young governor whose life is cursed in the midst of his career by the discovery that his grandmother was a negress. The plucky young chap's final decision to resign his office, renounce the girl he loves, and devote his energies to the uplift of "the other niggers," is reached through a thoroughly human and understandable process during which the audience suffers, rebels, reasons, becomes resigned, and consecrates itself to the general good, with the hero. It is a conclusion painful to the matinee girl but satisfying to the idealist when the governor steps out upon the baleony of his offiee at the capitol to announce to the people and the troops who have been summoned to quell a negro riot that he has negro blood in his veins.

The grewsome suggestions of a lynching which ends the first act with a flare of horror are balanced by the charming love scene which opens the play's action, but thereafter it is distinctly a visualization of human tragedy, of hopes crushed through the "visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children." Everybody is disappointed, even the villain, who ruins the hero's worldly career but does not save his own distillery business through the anti-prohibition bill which was the price of his silence concerning the hero's ancestry.

As the governor, Mr. Bergen did not vie with Miss Roberts for honors, he simply walked away with them in a manner that left no room for doubt as far as they two were concerned. In reality, he gave no better account of himself than did George Barbier in the strongly contrasted role of Clifton Noyes, the distillery president. Mr. Barbier was a Southern gentleman to the life, and enlivened many of the gloomy scenes with a touch of ironic

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
FOURTH WEEK BEGINS SUNDAY MATINEE FEB. 5.
Lee Arthur's delightful comedy drama "THE FOX"
See it before it is taken East.
The most costly production ever given in Los Angeles. Full of laughs from beginning to end.
Nights 25, 50, 75c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday 10, 25, 50c.
Next Week—"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE."

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Week Beginning Feb. 5—Sunday Night
Lew Field's Colossal, Spectacular Musical Comedy "The Midnight Sons"
250 People on the Stage
With GEORGE W. MONROE.
Prices 50c to $2.00. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday, 50c to $1.50
Next Attraction—"THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER"

SIMPSON AUDITORIUM L. E. BEHYMER Manager
TUESDAY NIGHT, FEB. 7, SATURDAY MAT., FEB. 11
SEASON'S GREATEST PIANIST
JOSEF HOFMANN
Fifth Event Philharmonic Course
Prices 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00. Seat sale at Bartlett's

AUDITORIUM L. E. BEHYMER Manager
Theatre Beautiful
FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEB. 10, 3 O'CLOCK SHARP
L. A. Symphony Orchestra
Harley Hamilton, Director
Arnold Krauss, Violin Soloist
Prices 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50. Seat Sale at Bartlett's

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447 Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c
Beginning Monday Matinee, Feb. 6, 1911
Alice Lloyd — England's Famous Comedienne
Bonita and Lew Hearn — "The Real Girl"
Hanlon Bros. — "Just-Phor-Phun"
Lillian Burkhart & Co. — "What Every Woman Wants"
Lew Sully — "Words & Music"
Chas. B. Lawlor & Co. — "Sidewalks of New York."
Elise, Wulff & Waldorf — "After the Football Game"
Ernest Scharff — "In a Music Shop"
ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES

[illegible] Miss Roberts leaves rather a negative impression as the young Southern girl. To be polite, she is ill-suited to play the part, which is entirely out of her line.

D. R. L.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

"The Fox" has broken all records at the Burbank theatre in the last year by starting on its fourth week at the matinee Sunday. The Morosco policy is not in favor of lengthy runs unless there is a public demand in advance, as there are so many new plays on hand at the Burbank, awaiting production, that a long run is often more of an embarrassment than otherwise. The demand for "The Fox" however, has been so unmistakable, that a fourth week has been decided upon, but this will be the last appearance of the wily animal before he is caged and shipped back east for the delectation of New York and Chicago, with A. Byron Beasley to create the lovable part of Peter Delaney there as he has here. The entire Burbank production will be shipped intact, excepting for the other actors.

"The Fox" has won commendation from all sides for a variety of excellencies. It has a remarkably clever plot, dovetailed with master craftsmanship. It has several unique characters. Not least, it has been mounted in a manner that reminds one of J. Pierpont Morgan's private train.

Following the fourth week of "The Fox" the Burbank theatre will be the scene of the first performance by any stock company of Leo Dietrichstein's brilliant comedy, "Is Matrimony a Failure?" The company has been rehearsing on this piece for three weeks, and is ready for a performance at a moment's notice. Forty people appear in the cast. The comedy ran an entire season at the Republic Theatre, New York.

The Majestic Theatre announces for its attraction for one week beginning Sunday night, Feb. 5th, Lew Fields' musical production, "The Midnight Sons," with George W. Monroe and a hundred others. "The Midnight Sons" comes to the Pacific Coast with the endorsement of nearly a year's engagement at the Broadway Theatre, New York. "The Midnight Sons" contains a great variety of inviting features. It consists of farce, novelty vaudeville, pantomine, comic opera, ballet, and in addition is a big scenic production. The two acts consist of eight scenes. Two or three of these scenic surprises have become famous, notably the setting representing the interior of a complete theatre with its orchestra, tiers of boxes, balcony, gallery, and a real audience of over 300 people. Another effective scene represents the observation end of a swiftly moving Pullman train.

Mr. Lew Fields is sending to the Pacific Coast an extra big company with this attraction. In addition to George W. Monroe, who made the pronounced hit of the performance during the engagement of the play on Broadway, many of the original cast will be seen here, including George Schiller, Alma Youlin, and many others. Many of the songs have become long ago familiar to lovers of popular music throughout the country. "The Billiken Man," "The Cynical Owl," "Rings on My Fingers," have been sung and whistled on the Coast for over a year.

In addition to Alice Lloyd and Lew Sully, who remain in supremacy at the Orpheum and Lillian Burkhart and Ernest Scharff, both of whom have made individual hits, come four new acts that make up a programme for next week.

Of the newcomers, interest centers in Bonita, who with Lew Herne will present a musical skit, "The Real Girl." Bonita was brought into fame when she was voted the most popular girl in the theatrical profession at the New York Actors' Fund fair. Then she starred in "Wine, Women and Song." She has a good share of physical pulchritude. Lew Herne is a funny foil for Bonita, and the two in this miniature musical comedy should be popular.

Charles B. Lawlor, assisted by Mabel and Alice, his daughters, with a skit called "Night and Day on the Sidewalks of New York" will present a patter act.

The original Hanlons are at it again. They have condensed much of their former material, into "Just-Phor-Phun," and in this, their acrobatic ability and their funny ways are brought to the fore in tabloid.

Elise, Wulff & Waldorf come here from Germany to offer a new gymnastic turn. Their act is shown in an ordinary street in Berlin, with a kiosk kept by Elise. Two football players return from the game, and all meet here. Then the skillful work begins, and it continues to the climax.

The new pictures will be in keeping with the rest of the bill.

Alessandro Bonci, now considered one of the greatest tenors in America, has just finished a tour of the eastern states in concert and will be heard in this city on February 28.

The fourth concert of the Los Angeles Symphony series will take place at the Auditorium next Friday afternoon, February 10, at 3 o'clock. Conductor Hamilton is particularly anxious to make this afternoon the best of the series this year. Chapleigh's Symphonic Poem, "Mirage," has been chosen as one of the numbers, and Cherubini's Overture to Anacreon will receive its initial presentation. The soloist is the concert-master of the symphony, Mr. Arnold Krauss, who will play Brahms' concerto for the violin with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Krauss has lately secured a splendid old Stradivarious of particularly mellow tone and will use it for the first time in public with the symphony.

Miss Edna Darch, a singer of Los Angeles, who as a student under Thilo Becker and other local teachers several years ago created a favorable impression, will be heard at Simpson Auditorium Thursday, February 16.

For a number of months the work of Penelope Duncan and the lectures of Raymond Duncan, the exponents of Hellenic art, literature and music, have received the endorsement, criticism and scientific research of the learned of America, and the interest shown in the work abroad has been repeated among the colleges and clubs of this country. Raymond Duncan has already revolutionized dancing and brought back to life the ancient Hellenic ideal of that art; he is now striving to make a like change with music. The program to be given at the Auditorium on Wednesday evening, February 14, will be folk song of England, Ireland, China and Greece, the Hellenic sacred hymns and Chinese dramatic music by Penelope Duncan, with an introductory lecture on his discovery of the laws of folk music and the relation of music to nature by Raymond Duncan.

Josef Hoffmann, pianist, will be heard in two recitals, in Simpson Auditorium, on Tuesday night, February 7, and Saturday afternoon, February 11. Following is the program for Saturday, that for Tuesday having been given in these columns last week:

I

(a) Sonate, G Minor, op. 22 (as fast as possible, Andantino, Scherzo, Rondo); (b) Vogel als Prophet; (c) Traumswirren; (d) Carneval (Schumann).

II

(a) Polonaise A Major, op. 40, No. 1; (b) Polonaise, C Minor, op. 40, No. 2; (c) Impromptu, A flat major, op. 29; (d) Mazurka, B Minor, op. 33, No. 4; (e) Scherzo, E. Major, op. 54 (Chopin).

III

(a) Consolation D flat major; (b) Etude D flat major; (c) Legende, A Major; (d) Polonaise, E Major (Liszt).

The February program of the Ebell Club shows an intersting musical event for Monday, February 13th. On that date the club will hear the Euterpean Male Quartette with Mr. J. B. Dupuy as first tenor and director.

The Music Department work will be carried on the second and fourth Wednesday with Bruce Gordon Kingsley as instructor. Dr. Kingsley will begin the lecture recitals on Wagner's music drama "Die Gotterdammerung."

Jester's Bells

Wise Son

"And are you mama's boys or papa's boys?"

"The courts haven't decided as yet, madam. We're in litigation."—Washington Herald.

The Unkindest Cut

Father (to his son, a doctor)—"If this isn't the limit! I pay all that money for you to study medicine, and the first thing you do is to cut me off my drink."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Case for the Interstate Commerce Commission

Briggs—"Is it true that you have broken off your engagement to that girl who lives in the suburbs?"

Griggs—"Yes; they raised the commutation rates on me and I have transferred to a town girl."—Life.

Warning the Colonel

A raw recruit from a remote corner of the Green Isle was engaged for the first time in a field maneuver on out-post duty. The sergeant instructed him to look out carefully for the colonel coming to inspect the post.

After an hour he returned and asked the soldier, "Has the colonel been here?"

Receiving an answer in the negative, he went away, returning later on with the same inquiry.

A while later the colonel appeared. The recruit did not salute properly, which incensed the colonel, who, as a hint, asked him:

"Do you know whom I am?"

"Faith, and I do not," answered the recruit.

"I am the colonel."

"Begorra, you will catch it then," says the soldier. "The sergeant has been asking twice for yez already."—Tit-Bits.

His Point of View

The poet led his friend, the politician, to the top of New York's tallest tower to admire the view. The man of politics seemed stunned for a moment by the beauty of the far-flung panorama. Then he spoke in a low, reverend voice:

"Gee! what a lot of Assembly Districts you can see from here."

Maybe the Printer Knew

"My pigmy counterpart," the poet wrote
Of his dear child, the darling of his heart;
Then longed to clutch the stupid printer's throat
That set it up, "My pig, my counterpart."

—Harper's Weekly

And in the Meanwhile

Lady—"Can't you find work?"

Tramp—"Yessum; but every one wants a reference from my last employer."

Lady—"And can't you get one?"

Tramp—"No, mum. Yer see, he's been dead twenty-eight years."—London Punch.

In Resemblance

"Did the man whose auto was in collision last night give it a cursory examination?"

"It sounded that way, sir."—Baltimore American.

After a Big Haul

"Binks used to be daft on the subject of buried treasure. What's he up to now?"

"He's got up an expedition to Asia Minor to try to find the place where Methuselah stored his birthday presents."—Toledo Blade.

A well-dressed man entered a florist's shop, threw down a sovereign, and said he wanted some flowers to take home. He was very unsteady, and had evidently been looking on the wine when it was red. The flowers apparently were intended as a domestic peace-offering. The florist picked out a dozen chrysanthemums, and the customer started to leave. At the door he hesitated. "I say," he said, thickly, "watsh these flowers called?" "Chrysanthemums." The customer shook his head. "Got to have something easier than that," he said. "Gimme a dozen pinks."—Truth.

The latest French novel is the product of a dressmaker. While the author is undoubtedly well equipped for successfully carrying the thread of the narrative, it is to be feared that she will be inclined to look at life from the seamy side. Critics say it is only so-so.—Nashville Southern Lumberman.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information aoply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.

Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

. . . DIRECTORY . . .
Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

APARTMENTS
THE ST. REGIS, Housekeeping 237 S. Flower. A7336; Main 2290

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS
ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DRY GOODS
VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

EXCURSIONS
BALLOON ROUTE, L. A. Pac. Co. Station, Hill St., bet. 4th and 5th. 10355; Broadway 4000.

MEN'S FURNISHINGS
HARRIS & FRANK, 437-43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS
UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

PIANOS AND ORGANS
GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

PURITAS DISTILLED WATER
LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. Phones Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191.

REAL ESTATE
MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT
BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING
BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT SPEED SAFETY

Mt. Lowe The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

Pacific Outlook
La Follette's Weekly $1.60 Per Year

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

11 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY
CAL. STATE LIBRARY 7-26-11

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 7 Los Angeles, California, February 11, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Where Are They Going to Get the Money?

IT IS EXHILERATING TO BE TOLD that within the next five years the Union and Southern Pacific companies are to double-track their railroads all the way from Omaha to San Francisco at an expense of $75,000,000, but where are they going to get the money to do it with? Here is where. This year those roads salted, in the bonds of the San Francisco Terminal Company, $15,000,000 of surplus after interest and dividends were paid and five times fifteen is seventy-five. But are the people going to furnish the money over and above fair interest and profits on the investment and then suffer those companies to capitalize the donation and make it a lien upon the industry of the country for half a century, to be donated a second time in fifty years of interest and a third in the repayment of the principal when the bonds fall due? This needs to be looked into. The prairie schooner would prove cheaper in the long run.

Who Pulled Lodge Through?

COLONEL ROOSEVELT DID WHAT HE COULD but it was Murray Crane, that subtile shadow upon whom the mantle of sly Tom Platt seems to have fallen, who got busy just at the crucial moment and pulled Lodge through when he must otherwise have gotten stuck in the hole. What a squealing there would have been if he hadn't! A pig fast in a fence would have been to it as a harmonica to a caliope. Up to then those two men, Lodge and Crane, had hardly been on speaking terms but since then it has been "Cabot old boy," and "Murray darling," every time they meet. Once more is Massachusetts one and inseparable!

What Of It?

IT IS FAIRLY EVIDENT that at least two of the four supreme justices of California could not have read the papers filed in the Ruef rehearing case by amicus curae Metson and Attorney General Webb before proceeding to decide in favor of Ruef, but what of that? Is it to be supposed that these gentlemen so little know their own minds as to require to be advised as to how to make them up?

A More Fitting Penalty

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE that anything could have been printed by the Appeal to Reason that could justify sentencing its editor to a year in jail and the payment of a fine, but, the constitutional bar to the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments aside President Taft might appropriately have required of him that he spend twenty-four hours in cold storage with the alternative of freezing to death or keeping warm by rereading his own hot stuff. Ever after, if he survived the ordeal, his roarings would be those of the sucking dove.

What Will Become of Ruef?

HERE IS A GUESSING CONTEST worth while. That he will be granted a new trial with a prompt acquital for want of a Gallagher to serve as missing link. That the indictments against the big ones will all be dismissed after which no matter what becomes of Ruef. That if the indictments are not dismissed Ruef will follow the footsteps of Haas under superficial suicidal circumstances admitting of a reasonable doubt, but rendering it perfectly certain that Ruef can't squeal. That whatever else does happen Ruef will not spend fourteen years, less credits for good behavior, in San Quentin prison. To be pasted in the human hat for future reference.

Must Not Be Unprotected

THAT THE PANAMA CANAL must not be left unprotected no person outside an asylum, and not deserving to be inside, will deny. The question before the nation is as to which will afford the better protection, a guaranty of all the nations that no nation shall touch it or a warning from this nation to all nations to touch it if they dare? When the jingo shall have done with his vociferation it is not impossible that the plain citizen may lift his voice on behalf of a guaranteed neutrality affording the highest measure of protection for the canal that human ingenuity can devise.

They Snickered

"SPEAKING AS A PROGRESSIVE and a reformer," launched forth the oratorical Nate Coghlan in the Assembly last week, but it is to be presumed that the sentence was never finished or, if it was, that nobody heard it for everybody snickered. Honor to Wolfe and Wright of the old guard in that they at least have not pretended to be other than they have been obedient servants of the old "organization" and identified with the ignominies it stood for. Neither of them has yet spoken as a progressive and a reformer, for which thanks.

Dentist to the Poor

ARE YOU LOOKING FOR A PLACE where you can serve God and man to splendid advantage without glory or honor or thought of self? If so, and you are young, man or woman learn the profession of a dentist and go right down into the slums and go to work on the mouths of those who are too poor to have dental work done up town. Let those pay who can what they can pay, but do all you can whether they pay or not. You will be attacking disease in its citadel, will accumulate enough of poverty to last you to eternity and enough treasure in heaven to serve ever after. The mouths of half the people in any city are charnal houses.

Big Stick or Stuffed Club?

THAT THE PRESIDENT IS brandishing something over the heads of both houses of congress anent the Canadian reciprocity treaty all are agreed, but whether it be a big stick with knotty protuberances and a hard finish or only a club stuffed with eider down is subject for debate. Not since he took office has there been in the presidential eye anything that so much resembled a glitter as what is seen there now that opportunity presents itself for a progressive ten-stroke, and yet it may after all be only a fear of disappointment that there should be delay in seizing that opportunity. The uncertainties of the situation has made Congress more than half rattled.

Continental Free Trade

THE FEAR HAS BEEN EXPRESSED that reciprocity with Canada will prove but the entering wedge for continental free trade. What of it? Could anything be more in the interests of making this an ocean-bound republic, with one flag, one predominating language, dedicated to liberty, equality and fraternity from Point Barrow to the Big Ditch? Does not the heart warm to the concept? Rah for continental free trade! Rah, rah, rah!

The Way to Uniformity

UNIFORMITY OF LAWS in all the states relating to marriage and divorce is desirable and many there be who are seeking the way to that end but have found it not. They have not looked in the right place. It is in Utah that the trail is to be picked up, and the polygamous old duffers who euchered the nation with the Woodruff manifesto (for the purpose of getting the territory admitted as a state, with the immoral mental reservation of doing as they pleased thereafter) are building that way to uniformity better and broader than they know. It is about time to camp on that trail.

The Embattled Farmers

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA is to be defeated if it can be in the name of the embattled farmers of America fighting for the same right to cinch the consumers that the wool growers and manufacturers have enjoyed, and yet the products of American fields and farms have almost exactly doubled in price within the last ten years. If prices keep on climbing it will soon be cheaper for the unprotected to pay funeral expenses than to continue to live. Then what will the home producer do for a home market?

THE ROW BEGINS

We are reminded of an old Spanish proverb that one cannot make an omelet without breaking eggs. Strange that so obvious a fact should need to be formulated in words; yet we have all seen examples of people clamoring for the omelet, who drew back in terror when the cook started to crack an egg.

We may as well make up our minds to it: we cannot get a reform of the tariff without cracking a few protection eggs.

As a first step toward a lower price of living for the many, President Taft proposes a reciprocity treaty with Canada, which will admit, free of duty, a number of the most important food stuffs. What the effect of this will be on the American market is problematical. On the face of it, it would seem that if it lowers the cost to the consumer, it must cut down the profit of the producer. Under normal conditions of open competition this would be true; but a large part of the food stuff market is under trust control. Using its vast stores of refrigerated meat as ammunition, the trust is able to shoot to pieces any market that tries for independence, and after that the producer gets whatever the trust is willing to pay. According to James Wilson, the farmer gets an average of only 50 per cent of the amount paid by the consumer—the other 50 being absorbed by middle men of one kind or another. Letting down the bars between the United States and Canada may result in chaos for a time—to which the trust will cheerfully lend its aid to heighten the moral effect—but the ultimate outcome may break up the monopoly and open the free market again to the American stock raiser, and in the end he may profit by the treaty.

But no one can guarantee any such result, and it is not strange that farmers' organizations all through the Middle West are protesting with great vigor and earnestness against the President's plan.

Here is an opportunity for the "I-told-you-so" parrot of the high protectionists, too handy to be overlooked. For these Middle Western farmers are exactly the people that have been demanding tariff reform for the last decade, and their representatives in Congress made up the head and front of Insurgency. No doubt they will feel that this measure is deliberately intended as a reprisal against them. In all the wide range of the tariff, covering as it does many thousand articles, why is careful selection made of the first articles to be placed on the free list of products of the farm and range? Why not wool and steel and cotton goods? And the "I-told-you-so" artist will call attention to the fact that this is the natural working out of the revision by separate schedule plan, and will renew his declaration that the only way to save the country from the ruin of free trade is for all protected interests to stand together for revision in the mass—which means, of course, no revision at all.

After his exhibition of narrow partisanship in the matter of appointments in Insurgent districts, it is not easy to defend the President against the charge that there is an element of political malice in his choice of first tariff reduction; nevertheless, he has ample excuse in the universal protest against the increased cost of living, in which food products were the most important factor. To be consistent, however, he should give notice of an extra session of Congress and should be ready with a revised schedule for woolen and cotton goods. Every one of these revisions will be accompanied by lamentation and uproar, whether they hurt or not, just as the urchin who is about to be punished bellows loudly beforehand, in the hope of frightening off the wielder of the switch. A tariff is a private snap at public cost, and it will not be surrendered if a lusty use of the lungs will save it. We may just as well accustom our ears to the din, for it is coming right along during the next two years. It is vastly easier and pleasanter to rig up a tariff on the log-rolling plan that gives everybody all he wants and charges up the entire cost to a public that is sound asleep at the time, than to separate the special interests, one by one, from the public tap, where they have so long feasted—each one yelling like a house-afire as he is made to let go.

Since the days of James G. Blaine reciprocity has been a recognized feature of the Republican policy of protection. Only it was kept put away in a glass case where it could not do any harm. Now, just as the party is about to pass out of control, Mr. Taft proposes that they make good on the doctrine. Will they do it?

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager

C. D. WILLARD, A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing Editors

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE RECALL AND THE JUDICIARY

An independent judiciary is one of the most cherished of American ideals and time was when it came as near to being realized as any ideal we possess, but that was before the advent of government by The Interests for The Interests. The Interests soon perceived that possession of the courts of appeal meant to have and to hold the citadel of power. For half a century the higher courts have been as certainly under the domination of the great corporate and monetary interests as have the legislatures and with the result that they no longer overawe the mind of the citizen or command his unqualified confidence and respect.

It is not from any eminence above or separateness from the hurlyburly of the world that men learn wisdom or discover truth, but rather in the thick of the fight of being and living. If the will of the people be the source of law then must there be no law-making power not subject to the popular will, and only judges will pretend that courts do not make law. A judiciary, as answerable to a sober second-thoughted public sentiment as a legislature, is far more likely to subserve human needs than a judiciary stall-fed, cloistered, set apart to philosophize, whereas, deduce, draw fine distinctions and revel in subtleties, in the world but not of it, striving to make the people fit the laws rather than the laws the people. The cloistered judiciary is an ideal that the well-being of the race may force us to forego.

For the law is not a science. It is not as astronomy, chemistry, biology, whose servants are ever striving to find what the law is because it IS, because God made it what it is. The law that the courts administer is what we, the people, make it by our usages, habits, customs, our legislation and our judicial interpretation. It is as human and evanescent as our theologies and our philosophies, ever in a state of flux, yet spirally progressive, perhaps, as the race gets on. Endowments for independent research into the origins of diseases, their preventions and cures, such as Rockefeller and Carnegie have founded, are great benefactions; but similar expenditures for conducting researches in theology or jurisprudence would be of questionable value. Science has to do with the eternal verities; philosophy, theology and law with evolutionary phases of human development. Hence there is no reason in the nature of things why the Recall, if it is to be employed at all, should not be applied to the judiciary as certainly as to any other department of government.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE CONVICT'S HOPE

Omnia vincit labor, says the Latin poet Virgil, in his advice to farmers. Labor conquers all things. The poet meant material things, but his thought applies equally well in the non-material world. Labor for example, is the best known remedy for trouble—all kinds of trouble. It is the universal solvent and antiseptic. It eats into unhappiness like an acid, and hunts out despondency and makes away with it, just as peroxide chases up and destroys the germs of filth.

Who are the most unhappy being in this ill-adjusted world of men? The sick? No. The poor? No. The evil-doers? Getting warmer. The convicted criminals? They are the ones. Who could be more unhappy than those to whom all society, the world, the rest of mankind, has said, "You are not fit to live with us. You are not human beings but wild beasts. We hate, fear and despise you. Get you gone."

Do not tell us that they are callous, that their manner and attitude toward the world show that they have no feeling. These are beings who have passed through unhappiness to its uttermost depths, and have come out beyond—into desperation.

No set of people on earth are more in need of the consolation and refuge of labor than the unfortunates confined in our penitentiaries, and yet it is denied to them. Let us not fall into the error of classing drudgery as labor. If a man is incapable through his lack of intelligence and ambition to do any form of work except the simplest, that may not be drudgery to him. But the convicted criminals are few of them of the common-labor grade of intelligence. Indeed, the fact that they have dared the exploits that have landed them in trouble is evidence of force and ingenuity and enterprise. With them the deadly monotony of the work of the jute mill or the stone quarry—the only employment to which the convicts of this state have been put—aids but little in the process of physical and mental regeneration that should precede their return to society.

Some time—pretty soon now—the whole world is going to wake up to the cause of its troubles, and the story will be told in two words: "Bad politics." Bad politics means bad government. When we think of bad government we picture to ourselves the evil things that it does to us—graft, extravagance, oppression, and so forth. Mere trifles as compared with what it has failed to do for us. We ask to be forgiven not only for the things we have done, but also for those we have left undone. Slowly, dimly, faintly, we rouse to a realizing sense of what governments might have been to us, had they been held and directed by all the people, instead of by those whose sole interest in humanity was the wealth gained by its exploitation.

Who is to blame for the cruelty of cutting the convict off from the wholesome consolation of labor? Who condemned him to eat his heart out in festering idleness, or in the drudgery that was the very embodiment of despair? Labor unions? So they have always told us, these agents of bad government that owe their places to bad politics. But they were wrong.

Every time the case was analyzed it brought out the same explanation of the union's cause of complaint: 1st, that any one trade should be so monopolized by state's prisons (as the brush and broom trade has been, for example) that the new man applying for a job is straightway suspected of being a convict, and 2nd, that articles produced at low cost by prison labor should be allowed to break down the market for those that would pay living wages to free labor.

These objections are worthy of the highest respect, but given their widest scope they do not cover the field of possible labor for convicts. Wherever governments fell into the hands of intelligent conscientious men, which is to say in just about one state out of twenty, prisoners were given a variety of work and the product was sold strictly at the market price. It took some thinking to do this and the courage that is always needed for any kind of reform, but there were some state and some county institutions where it was done.

Governor Johnson of California, an exemplar of good politics in office, has called upon the Legislature, a body that now, at last, represents the people and not the Southern Pacific, to give the prisons of this state a system that will allow the inmates the benefit of wholesome, interesting and instructive labor. Instead of the jute mill and the quarry, there are to be factories where furniture and a great variety of articles needed in the institutions of the state can be turned out, the product to be used in those institutions instead of being thrown on the open market. In this way the men and women who are so unfortunate as to get at outs with society may be taught useful trades, and their time occupied with natural and wholesome industry. By this process the two institutions that now cost half a million dollars to maintain, and that graduate every year a class of the morally insane who go forth to renew their war against society, may be made self-supporting, and their inmates restored to a normal life among their fellow men.

A splendid piece of work for humanity! This alone, if carried through in the spirit in which it is begun—as it will be—will give the Johnson administration unique standing in the history of the state, and will justify all the heroic exertions that were required for the political victory of 1910.

✣ ✣ ✣

FIGHTING THE PARCELS POST

With the end of the session less than a month away, there is not much prospect of the passage of a law for a parcels post. It would be difficult to pull through a reform of so radical a character under most favorable circumstances, but with so good an excuse available for delay, nothing will be done.

And yet this is one of the very shortest routes to a lower cost of living. It would serve to bring the farmer and the consumer together, with small loss to middlemen, transportation companies and trusts lying in between. A postal card or a call on the telephone would tell the customer's needs, and a package from the farmer that day or the next would supply what was wanted at small cost for postage.

It is a mistake to suppose, however, that the only opposition to the parcels post plan comes from the express companies, just as it is a mistake to assume that the "special interest" as we know it in American politics means only the big trusts and the powerful corporations. Joined to the express companies in this instance is the special interest of the small storekeepers and the middlemen who suspect that the parcels post will interfere with their business. The storekeepers are in mortal dread of the catalogue houses, which even under the present system enter their territory and undersell them. Their opposition to the parcels post may be financed and directed by the express companies, but it is genuine, nevertheless.

However, this is one of the things that is for the benefit of all the people and it must come. In the long run it will help the storekeeper, although it may change the scope of his business.

✣ ✣ ✣

LINE-UP ON WOMEN'S VOTE

Mrs. Shelley Tolhurst, who spoke for the forces at Sacramento contending for the presentment to the voters of a Suffrage clause in the constitution, calls attention in an interview to the fact that much of the argument put forward by the opponents of votes for women was in reality directed against general male suffrage, as it was full of the usual reactionary distrust of the people and of a low estimate of politics and public affairs. She also points out that practically all of the vote finally recorded against the submission of the amendment came from members belonging to the extreme anti-progressive wing of the Legislature.

These facts are likely to carry considerable weight in the contest that will now ensue on the adoption or rejection of the suffrage amendment.

We are familiar with the line of reactionary argument that is offered by the women's organizations that oppose suffrage, as the ground is often covered in the literature they are circulating. This is particularly true of the matter sent out from the New York organization, some of which came to hand recently in the Outlook office. An argument offered by a New York woman who would be described in a newspaper as "prominent in society," that is to say her name often appears in social events, contains the statement that conditions are so bad in politics "that many of our best citizens refrain from voting."

Do they, indeed? Citizens that do not vote are not of the best, but of the very worst variety. The fact that they do not vote settles their status as citizens without further argument. Some day democracy will get around to these non-voters, and send them to jail to think it over.

This doctrine of the hopeless evil of politics did not originate with the ladies, and they are to be criticised only for taking it up. It is part of the reactionary machine-and-corporation plan to keep things in the hands of the bosses by discouraging decent citizens from participating in public affairs. We have an example of that locally in papers like the Los Angeles Times and San Francisco Chronicle, that object to the holding of elections at which questions are submitted to voters, because it "wastes" so much of the time of business men—as if business men or citizens generally could not afford to devote an hour in several days of the year to civic duty! Those who hold the people in light esteem will naturally regard the ballot as a nuisance, for that is the people's means of expression.

The final vote at Sacramento developed a line-up to which the ladies who constituted the opposition will scarcely point with pride. The most conspicuous leader against the amendment on the floor of the Senate was Eddie Wolfe of San Francisco, whose record on political issues and those that touch on morality is about as bad as it could be. In the last session he was the main standby of the race-track and liquor elements voting invariably for the machine Southern Pacific program. He must have felt that the ladies were half ashamed of his support, for he went out of his way to call attention to the fact that he had done some good work in the Legislature (accent the word some) in helping to secure the passage of the juvenile court law. Which was true enough. There are sentimentalists that rejoice and roll up their eyes to Heaven every time a bad man does a good deed. Excuse us, please, for we have watched the game long enough to understand just how that handy little trick is worked. Give us the bad man that is always bad. He is safer.

With Wolfe were others in sheep's clothing, such as Wright of San Diego who put the poison into the direct primary law two years ago, and then tried to make it work in behalf of one Spalding who could afford a senatorship. Also some of the old S. P. guard from Mr. Ruef's territory.

True, the ladies were not to blame, but there was the awkward fact, that in the line-up the progressive element of the Legislature, the people on whom we must rely for good work in law-making, were unanimous for the amendment; and the high-binders were, almost to a man, against it. The initial mistake the anti-suffrage people made, and one that will now count heavily against them in the ensuing contest, was in going to Sacramento to ask the men who were committed by the action of their party conventions to submission of the amendment to vote against the pledges. Considering the real fight that was to come later this step was the poorest kind of politics and one which their opponents are now in excellent shape to use against them.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By the Watchman

New Atmosphere at the State Capitol Returning visitors to the State Capitol agree in affirming a new atmosphere pervasive of the stately chambers and airy corridors wherein men do congregate for the making of laws. Aforetime legislators toiled as servants under bond to some overlord, now they are free. Then they groped not knowing at what moment an edict would go forth requiring them to fall into line at the call of the boss, now they walk upright and push ahead with strides of self-directed confidence. In the old days legislators dreaded to go home at the end of the session through fear that their fellow citizens, whose good opinions make public life desirable, might look at them askance or pass them by on the other side of the street in sullen disregard, now the expectation is that the homegoing will be made joyous by a universal acclaim of "well done good and faithful public servant." The records making at Sacramento are such as put the legislators in good repute with themselves and afford a salubriety to that personal atmosphere, which is an attribute of every human being, that is positively contagious. Even members of the old "organization" crowd are infected with it and are benefited by it. While in the old days these hirelings treated those who dared to be free as outlaws off the reservation, fit subjects for ridicule and reprisal, they now treat them with consideration and extensions of the glad hand. There is no question that a new atmosphere has enveloped the state capitol, something genial and wholesome and free, for which thanks.

Make One More Measure Frankly Administrative Last week The Watchman ventured to suggest that Governor Johnson might profitably include in his administration measures the bills for reforming our criminal procedures. Now he wishes to add to the administrative program the organization of the state civil service in accordance with the merit system, to which both parties are pledged in their platforms. There are strategic reasons why. Once put political patronage out of reach of political bosses and they will be hard pressed for ways of compensating their mercenaries for political services. Nearly all of the retainers of the Southern Pacific's political bureau have been compensated, by hook or by crook, from the state treasury. The merit system of appointment to subordinate positions would have weakened the machine most seriously and would have forced such men as Charles F. Curry, for instance, to pursue political ambitions along other lines than that of working their followers into official positions wherever possible. It would have made better men of such men as Curry by foreing them to use better methods for getting on. Besides, now is the psychological time in the life of California to accomplish this political revolution, for it will be nothing short of that. Action and reaction is a law of human nature and Californians may get tired of being good most any time. It is possible that the next legislature may not be as well disposed as this one. By making the merit system an administration measure that system may be provided for by the Legislature at this session and so become thoroughly well established before Governor Johnson's term expires. Now is a good time to do this good thing.

The Common Sense of Apportionment California is not to be redistricted, congressionally, senatorially and with reference to assembly districts without many heart burnings. Uneasy must rest the head that undertakes to work the problem out. Mischievous constitutional restrictions handicap the process, no portion of the state desires to yield any part of its representation and any portion deprived of a state senator or assemblyman, however useless, is likely to feel that it has been robbed, the United States census to the contrary notwithstanding. Reapportioning the state is a most unwelcome task and a task that cannot be carried out with entire justice no matter how it is done. But the state must be redistricted and there is only one right way to do it and that is to take the census statistics in one hand and the state constitution in the other, begin at the northwest corner of the state and group counties as nearly as possible with relation to population, contiguity, community of interest, and go ahead, placing the strongest emphasis on community of interest and contiguity, leaving the exact census ratio to come after these and paying almost no attention at all to political complexion of the counties grouped. The politician will wish to rank political complexion first and proceed to gerrymander. The statesman will strive to yoke those communities that will best get on together. To yoke Humboldt with Del Norte and Trinity, for instance, accords with the natural order of things, but adding Tehama makes the whole a misalliance. The legislature should proceed along the lines here laid down, make up the schedule and then let Rome (San Francisco) howl at the inevitable if it feels that it must. It is the only right way.

Which Should Own The Water Fronts? The issue as to whether the municipalities or the state should own the harbor frontages in California is engaging the serious attention of members of the Legislature. Well may it. It is a thousand pities that nation, state and municipality did not co-operatively work out the problem half a century ago, but better now than hereafter. Oakland wants undisputed municipal control of her approaches to deep water on the bay. San Francisco is fearful that if Oakland has a free hand, the latter city, in the exuberance of its enthusiasm, will be affording commercial facilities that San Francisco cannot meet inasmuch as San Francisco's harbor is in state control and the state must say "yes" every time a forward step is taken or it cannot be taken. It seems unlikely that the harbors of California can remain half under state and half under municipal control. The state without a doubt is a party in interest, but so is the nation, for whether or not there be good harbor facilities at San Francisco, Oakland, Los Angeles, San Diego, concerns half a continent as certainly as it does any one of these cities. But we can hardly hope that congress, legislature and city trustees will meet together to settle the issue. The national government will probably be content to look on. The seaport city that cannot afford to improve its harbor facilities is sure, if left to itself, to convey all its right, title and interest to some corporation that will promise to improve them. That must not be allowed. With this limitation the municipality may prove as safe a custodian of the common interest as may be found. How would it do, then, for the state to relinquish to San Francisco, San Diego and Eureka all its interest in their harbors and let them hustle for themselves in competition with Oakland and Los Angeles, subject, however, to the limitation that no franchise be granted to any private corporation with reference to any harbor for a longer term than twenty-five years? So far as the state is concerned it would prove a good riddance to a bad business, and would leave each city free to work out its own salvation.

The Building and Loan Is a Banking Business The reluctance of certain building and loan societies to be brought under the supervision of the state banking department suggests that they ought to be, for the building and loan business is essentially a banking business. In many states such associations are known as cooperative banks. The sort of state supervision the building and loan societies of California have been subjected to ever since they were subjected to any has been political, rather than financial. We have commercial banking, savings banking, building and loan banking, and the essential feature of all, which gives the state the right to supervise, is that one and all are using other people's money. Each performs a service that neither of the others can perform and there need be no more antagonism between banks and building and loan associations than between commercial banks and savings banks, and there is as great danger of unsound methods in the one case as in the other. The Watchman feels not only that those two functions of supervision should be consolidated, but that it was a mistake ever to have done anything else with them.

Fraternal Insurance Be Likewise Treated Whatever the justification for any sort of state supervision of building and loan associations it applies with equal force to fraternal insurance. The fact that such banking or insurance is cooperative, and is formed by voluntary association, emphasizes rather than diminishes the need for public supervision of both of them. Both need encouragement and the best encouragement either of them can receive is that degree of supervision that will insure their being conducted on sound business principles. Many cooperative enterprises, whether in building and loan or insurance, are in the hands of amateurs who mean well but lack sound knowledge. Fraternal insurance associations have mainly escaped public surveillance with the result that when insurance is needed it frequently isn't there. The insurance that does not insure is as fatal as the building and loan that does not capitalize. The fraternal orders have been able to scare or coax legislatures away from their plain duty, which was to turn such orders over to the state insurance department with instructions to see to it that their insurance as certainly insures as the insurance of old line insurance companies, but permitting all economies in getting business and in administering it, for only in these respects are economies possible. All forms of banking should be under the supervision of the state department of banking and all forms of insurance under the supervision of the state department of insurance. In no other way can the users of other people's money be adequately and inexpensively watched. As good a thing as the Legislature can do would be to fetch all these recreants into camp, not to harm them but to help them by protecting them from unsound methods proposed by incapacious enthusiasts.

Back With the Old Ballot Oust the Ballot Machines While The Watchman, alone so far as he knows, parts with the party circle with regret (although he never used it so much as once) his grief at the parting would be much assuaged if the legislature were to discard the voting machines also. They are in use in Alameda county and The Watchman has yet to meet the voter who is perfectly contented with their use. They are not expeditious in voting, for the reason that they are so costly that there can be only one at a precinct and whoever manipulates such a complicated machine only once in two years forgets how and bungles. It would be so were the machine as simple as a sausage grinder, which it is not. Then, too, the voter would like to see the wheels go round. He is distrustful as to what the county clerk and his band might do to 'em in the counting. The machines count expeditiously, but do they count aright? There's the rub. Sometimes they do not that voters know of. They fail to register. Their sale to the counties is believed, in most instances, to have been a job with rake-off attachment. They are very costly. The objection to the Australian ballot and the little stub was that the results could not be tallied until toward morning, but what's

(Continued to page 12)

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
HF
Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC.)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Municipal Reference Libraries: At the recent convention of the National Municipal League Horace E. Flock of Baltimore, who has charge of the Municipal Reference Library of that city, read an interesting paper on that subject, telling of the work that is in progress in various parts of the country, not only in the gathering of books on topics relative to the city, but also in the line of municipal research and the gathering of data for the practical assistance of city officers. The real problem before our cities, he thinks, is no longer the securing of honest government on which public attention has long been riveted, but the securing of efficient government. Knowledge of what has been done in other cities aids to efficiency, and yet there is, or has been, very little exchange of such knowledge. Mr. Flock recommends that the municipal reference library be a department of the city library, but be located, if possible, in the City Hall. He advises that the library be put in charge of some one specially qualified by study and experience for that line of work.

Flushing Pavements Under Pressure: In many cities where pavements have been laid under a guarantee as to length of life, the guarantee has been repudiated by the contractors if the city began to use water under high pressure for washing the streets. No case has yet, so far as we are aware, gone into court, probably because city officers are ready to admit that water under pressure is hard on pavements. An examination of the gutters after the process is over show deposits of sand and fragments of asphalt or other paving materials. The solid wooden pavements of Boston and New York seem to stand the strain best. This objection to pressure does not apply to washing by hose and brushes. It is contended that a well constructed paving will stand the wear involved in this process, and most of the big cities are returning to it.

Population Centers: If the Census Bureau carries out its plan to give with the population of each city the number included in the region of which the city is the immediate center, the Merchants' Association Review figures that this will show San Francisco as the population center for three-quarters of a million people. The area to be taken as the unit—as proposed—is that of the city of London, or 700 square miles. This, in the case of San Francisco, would extend from Sonoma and Napa on the North to San Jose on the south and would include Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, San Rafael, Mill Valley, San Mateo, Redwood, Niles, Haywards, Palo Alto, Martinez, Vallejo and Port Costa. A similar extension of the limits of Los Angeles would make a population center of 500,000.

Harmless Phosphorus: The Diamond Match Company, which was the sole owner in this country of the patent rights for the harmless brand of phosphorus, has assigned its rights to a committee consisting of Prof. R. A. Seligman of Columbia University, Chas. P. Neill, U. S. Commissioner of Labor, and Jackson Ralston, attorney for the American Federation of Labor. This committee is given power to fix terms such as they think fair with independent companies desiring to use this material. This is one result of the movement to put a stop to the use of ordinary phosphorus in match making from which come deadly diseases to the workers.

The Rights of the Children: At the opening of the Child Welfare Exhibit in New York city, President George McAneny of the borough council said that the officials of that city recognized that the municipal government should be the greatest of social workers. The exhibit lasted for several weeks, and was visited by great numbers of people. A series of meetings were held that were productive of great good in directing public attention to the work of the various agencies, church, private, educational and municipal for the protection and development of the children.

The Kingshighway: One of the most notable plans for city improvement in any American city is the project now well under way in St. Louis for a great boulevard connecting the principal parks and running the full length of the city. It is called the Kingshighway and will cost several million dollars. It measures fifteen miles in length and varies in width from 100 feet at the narrowest to 350 feet. Practically all the needed right-of-way has been secured, and nearly a million dollars worth of contracts for bridging, planting and paving have been let.

Beautifying Des Moines: Operating under the commission plan, Des Moines is able to find money to put into the beautifying of the city. Of the many bridges that span the river, only one is artistic and that was finished a year or two ago under the commission. It is of reinforced concrete, 66 feet wide and 502 feet long. Seventy-five thousand dollars has already been expended in cleaning up and beautifying the river banks. Ultimately much of the river region is to be made into a park and civic center.

Peculiar Rule: The Fire Department of Indianapolis has put in force a new set of rules which are posted in the engine houses. One of these reads as follows: "When any superior officer enters a fire station, all men are to refrain from what they were doing, rise to their feet and salute and remain standing until dismissed by their superior officer." This rule is probably not as funny as it sounds. Its purpose is laudable enough to deserve expression in better language.

Recall in Boston: Many efforts have been made to improve on the Recall, and Boston is one of the experimenters. There the mayor is elected for a four-year term, but at the end of two years the people are called upon to vote (at a general state election) whether the incumbent shall continue another two years or whether there shall be a recall election at which he may be a candidate. This looks like taking a lot of trouble to accomplish nothing at all.

First Aid Railway Car: The Red Cross Society has equipped a Pullman car to be used, both as a first aid training school and in disasters. The car is in charge of experienced physicians and nurses, and as it moves about, visiting especially the mining and manufacturing districts where disasters are most likely to occur, lectures and demonstrations are given, and at the same time the car is held in readiness for service at any place where it may be needed.

Highly Prosperous: Cohoes, New York, is a highly prosperous manufacturing town of about 25,000. It was selected by the postal authorities as the one city out of New York State in which a savings bank should be located. But for a number of years Cohoes has led all the cities of New York in the amount of tuberculosis it develops—a sorrowful reflection on its alleged prosperity.

Suppressing Tuberculosis: In the list of the ten States that are doing the most for the suppression of tuberculosis, California ranks as number nine; New York leads, with Pennsylvania and Massachusetts next. New York spent last year over three millions of public funds and a million of private. California is credited with spending only $88,000 public funds and $316,000 private. The amounts spent by all the states in 1910 were double what was spent in the preceding year, and that too was a year of great increase. These figures are given by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

After the Spitters: Cities that have had anti-spitting ordinances on their books inoperative for years are digging them up and putting them into force. Walla Walla authorities have posted warning signs with this piece of information: "A world without careless spitters would soon be a world without consumption."

St. Paul City Club: St. Paul has a city club made up on a plan essentially different from that of most organizations of this same name. Its membership is of delegates from other organizations civic and religious, and its special purpose is to secure a comprehensive city building plan and make it a practical fact instead of a mere theory.

Sewer Explosions: Erie, Pennsylvania, is one of the latest cities to have its streets torn open by a terrific explosion. The theory now generally accepted to account for these explosions, of which there have been a number, is that gasoline is allowed to leak into the sewers from garages and cleaning establishments.

Municipal Loan Establishments: A bill has been introduced into the Ohio Legislature authorizing cities to establish municipal pawn shops. Several of these are in existence in eastern cities, and they are common enough all over Europe, where loaning of money to people in bad circumstances is universally recognized as a legitimate public function.

Playgrounds in New York: The Parks and Playgrounds Association of New York City had charge last year of 36 play centers, four of which were located on roofs. The total attendance was over 150,000. This seems like a good many, but what is it among two million children?

Misstatement About Recall: The February issue of Municipal Engineering reproduces the Pacific Outlook's article in which correction was made of statements by A. L. Mason in Municipal Engineering concerning the Recall. Mr. Mason asserted that it had been used for political purposes in Los Angeles.

Total Bond Sale: During the last three years San Francisco has sold general municipal bonds with a par value of $14,512,000, for which it has received $15,738,631.50, showing a net premium of $1,226,631.50. The city's credit is in excellent order.

City Pay and Private Pay: The City Comptroller of Chicago declares in a special report to the Mayor that city employes as a rule get 30 per cent higher pay than employes in similar places in private concerns.

For Beautifying the City: San Francisco's Merchants' Association has petitioned the Board of Supervisors to establish a municipal art commission to work for the beautifying of the city.

Price of Electricity: The present price of electricity to consumers in Toledo is 9 cents. The city solicitor is contending for a 7 cent rate, and he declares that the figures show a fair profit at 5 cents.

Commission Government: The commission form was adopted by Carbondale, Moline and Rock Island in Illinois and refused by Rockford. Texarkana, Texas, adopted the commission plan.

Commercial Course Preferred: Of the 12,560 pupils in the Boston high school 5600 are taking the commercial courses—and this is the ancient home of classical learning in this country.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway
314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

Domestic-Oriental Rugs

Specially Priced

WHY not freshen up the home this spring with a new rug, while we are offering the following prices?

27x54 in. at $2.95
36x60 in. at $3.95
4x6 ft. at $6.95

Coco-Fiber Door Mats

18x30 in. plain at $ .85
21x36 in. plain at 1.50
18x30 in. with iron scraper at 2.25

The New Order of Things

By the Doorkeeper

Heney's Effective Argument Favoring Recall of Judges—Legislative Reapportionment a Knotty Problem.

Sacramento, Feb. 7.—Eight years ago E. W. Camp of Los Angeles, then a member of the lower house of the State Legislature, introduced into that body a constitutional amendment providing for direct legislation through the Initiative. The bill was prepared by Dr. John R. Haynes, who is known as the father of direct legislation. The measure passed the Assembly but was killed in the Senate.

Direct legislation and the method of its operation was then little understood by the people of California Under any circumstances the Legislature of 1903 could hardly have been expected to permit any such radical proposal as the Initiative to be voted upon by the people, regardless of the strength and volume of the popular demand therefor.

Similar measures were introduced into succeeding Legislatures, each time chiefly through the efforts of Dr Haynes, who in the meantime had organized the Direct Legislation League of California. The result was always the same. Two years ago two-thirds of the members of the Senate agreed to support the Initiative amendment, but enough of them either disregarded their promises or failed to be present when the roll was called to insure its defeat. This year, however, both houses are in control of Progressives and there is no doubt that the people will be afforded an opportunity to vote upon a provision for both the Initiative and the Referendum, and very likely for the Recall also, including a provision for the recall of the judiciary.

The Initiative and Referendum amendment which it is believed will prove most acceptable to the administration is being handled in the Senate by Senator Gates of Los Angeles and Assemblyman Clark of Oakland. In it are embodied the best features of similar measures which have been tried out in Los Angeles and other cities and the state of Oregon, but in some particulars it is in advance of any law now in operation. The judiciary committee of the Senate has unanimously approved it and a poll of the Senate indicates that it will pass that body with little opposition numerically. Its passage through the Assembly is also a foregone conclusion.

Its chief provisions are, briefly, that a petition signed by electors equal in number to eight per cent of all the votes cast for Governor at the last preceding election shall be required to secure a place upon the ballot for a proposed law to be voted upon directly by the people, or to propose a constitutional amendment. Five per cent is required to initiate a law to be proposed to the State Legislature. Five per cent is required to secure a referendum on a law enacted by the Legislature.

Consolidation in Danger

The proposed constitutional amendment permitting consolidation of city and county government for Los Angeles city and such portion of Los Angeles county as may be disposed to enter into the new political arrangement is in genuine danger of being relegated to the junk heap. The incipient feud between San Francisco and the other bay cities, especially Oakland and Berkeley, stands at the present moment as the greatest barrier to legislation enabling the formation of the city and county of Los Angeles, excepting the opposition of two of the Los Angeles Senators, Gates and Thompson.

Senator Hewitt will lead the fight for consolidation. Senator Gates will lead the fight against it. He will be strongly supported, it is apparent, by the Senators from San Francisco. It is also the current impression that certain corporations of Los Angeles may take a hand in the fight against the proposal.

If the Los Angeles city advocates of the measure mean business, It behooves them to get busy without delay, otherwise the amendment will be defeated. It now looks as if it were doomed to defeat in its present form under any circumstances. A divided delegation from Los Angeles does not tend to woo strong support for the measure from disinterested Senators. With Hewitt and Hurd favoring consolidation and Gates and Thompson opposing it the chances for the adoption of the amendment are decidedly slim.

In my humble judgment the only way in which the amendment can be pulled through will be through tremendous pressure from friends of the project in Los Angeles. The fight is on in dead earnest, and it will be a hopeless struggle without powerful moral reinforcement from the ranks of the proponents of the measure at home.

Local Option

The Local Option bill is in the spotlight this week. Possibly it may be acted upon finally in the Senate before this goes to print. If delays ensue, perhaps readers may gather some idea of how they have been brought about from the following brief statement:

This measure passed the Assembly last week by an overwhelming vote, chiefly through the efforts of Dr. Gandier, well known as the livest man on the job in California. In the lower house an attempt was made by Booze to change the unit from county to township. Under the bill the first unit is the incorporated city and the second unit the county outside of incorporated cities. By amending so as to make the township the unit Booze hoped to be able to hold at least some portion of most of the counties, giving thirsty denizens of "dry" townships an opportunity to step over into the "wet" township and get what they wanted.

The fight failing in the Assembly it is being carried over to the Senate. How far the opponents of the bill will deem it advisable to go is, of course, mere guesswork. But within the last day or two hints have been dropped in corners of the hotel lobbies that somebody had a "sack." I hardly believe Booze will try that trick. My own opinion is that it would fail miserably. The present Senate is not the sort that can be bought with money. Much as one may despise one or two of its members for the tactics they employ to encompass the defeat of good measures—bills long demanded by the mass of progressive citizens—I hardly believe that they would fall to the temptation of gold. And even Booze, which hitherto has cared nothing, apparently, for public sentiment, is catching onto the fact that it is a mighty dangerous game, this offering of money for votes.

Watch the Vote

But—if the proposed amendment to substitute the township as a unit finally prevails I would suggest to readers of the Pacific Outlook that they closely scrutinize the votes of their representatives—not on the bill when it comes up for final passage, but their votes on the amendments. This will be the test whether they are for or against local option that means anything. If the amendment prevail, those who secretly oppose local option will vote for the amendments and then, by voting for the amended bill, will go on record as supporting the measure. The fact that the measure as amended is not acceptable to the people who have been struggling to secure an effective local option bill will cut no figure with legislators of this stripe.

So, I say if the bill be thus amended and passed, make a memorandum of the way in which your representatives in the Senate voted on the motions to amend. This will be the real, the only, test of their fidelity to the cause of effective local option.

Fight on the Recall

Another measure before the Legislature provides for the recall of elective state officials, including the judiciary. Some opposition to the application of this principle to the courts has arisen among conservative lawyers, although the sentiment in its favor among the masses of people is apparently overwhelming. There is a possibility that the Recall amend-

The Emancipator

REMOVAL SALE

Pianos and Player Pianos

Before moving to our new Broadway building present assortments of high grade instruments must be disposed of. Heavy discounts have been made on our regular standard agencies. If you intend buying a Piano or Player P[illegible]s is your opportunity. Come in and get full information—prices and terms.

Geo. J. Birkel Co. Steinway, Cecilian and Victor Dealers 345-347 S. Spring St.

ment may be divided—one amendment providing for the recall of all elective officials excepting the judiciary, and one applying to the judiciary alone.

The hearing on the subject of the recall of judges held by the Senate and Assembly judiciary committee recently marked an epoch in political history in America. It is said to have been the first hearing of the kind ever held in the United States. Charles S. Wheeler, one of the most eloquent lawyers of San Francisco, appeared in opposition to its submission to the people, and Francis J. Heney and Matt I. Sullivan of San Francisco spoke in favor of the proposal.

At this moment it appears that the movement for the application of the Recall to all judges has gained tremendous impetus from Mr. Heney's argument in its behalf. The great point brought out by him was that a judge constitutionally and temperamentally equipped so as to be susceptible of being swerved from a just and proper interpretation of a statute by public opinion would be equally liable to quiver when menaced by the mailed fist of a corporation which had been in the habit of making and controlling judges. He emphasized the fact that it is no more wrong for a judge to fear the people than to stand in awe of corporations such as the Southern Pacific.

During the course of the argument made by Mr. Wheeler he declared that if the American people insisted upon the right to recall the judiciary they would find that they had established a pure democracy. The moment these words were uttered every advocate of direct legislation in the Senate chamber perked up as if to say: "Exactly what the masses of American voters expect to do in due course of time." Mr. Heney's reply indicated that the trend of public sentiment in this direction was unmistakable.

Representatives or Agents?

If members of the Legislature regard themselves as agents rather than representatives of the people, declared Mr. Heney, and entertain opinions different from those held by the people, their principals, and they vote in accordance with their personal views rather than in harmony with the views of their constituents, then we have not representative government, but government by agents; for as agents, legislators do not represent the wishes of the people. Which is worse, he asked, "mob rule" as it has been characterized, really rule by the people, or rule by the "system?"

He directed attention to the fact that though the Constitution provides for impeachment of judges of any court by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the Senate, there is slim chance that any judge of a high court will ever be impeached by a Senate controlled by a railroad corporation. This particular constitutional provision is a club in the hands of corporations to menace the courts and compel them to do the bidding of the corporations under penalty of impeachment. It is true that with the Senate constituted as at present there is no danger that the Southern Pacific or any other great corporation will be able thus to secure the impeachment of any judge, high or low, but the political history of the state has taught us the great danger in the limitations imposed by the present system.

Some Heneyisms

"If the people cannot be trusted to recall judges," said Mr. Heney, "they cannot be trusted to elect them."

"There is but one case in my memory where an incumbent on the bench was ever defeated, and that was the case of the judge who rendered a decision unfavorable to the railroad—the Fresno rate case, so-called."

Mr. Heney severely criticized the proposal of William Denman and others that judges should be nominated by the bar itself. "Why," said he, "in San Francisco a certain judge was drunk nearly all the time for three years, and the local bar association, which now wants to nominate the judges, did not dare to take action in his case."

"Though you may think you believe in the people," he said, addressing Mr. Wheeler, "you really don't unless you trust them. The only test of your confidence in the people lies in the trust you repose in them."

"The bar is too cowardly to object to a judge when he is once upon the bench. Most lawyers do not dare to sign petitions against judges, for they know that in so doing they are only signing away their clientage."

Relief for Small Cities

Senator's Black's bill permitting cities of the fifth and sixth classes to adopt provisions for the Initiative, the Referendum and the Recall has passed the Senate and possibly before this is printed will have passed the Assembly. For initiating legislation the bases is thirty per cent of the vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election, for the Referendum twenty-five per cent and for the Recall thirty-three per cent. Senator Hewitt made a splendid fight in behalf of the measure. Senator Curtin demanded a property qualification for initiating ordinances affecting licenses, etc., but the Senate voted him down. Under this proposed law every small city in the state may become actually self-governing on the Los Angeles plan, excepting as to the number of signers required for petitions.

Free Labor Bureaus Proposed

In each house there has been introduced a bill providing for the establishment, under direction of the state Bureau of Labor Statistics, of free labor bureaus, or employment agencies, in Los Angeles and San Francisco. The bill makes the deputy State Labor Commissioner manager of the San Francisco bureau and the assistant deputy State Labor Commissioner manager of the Los Angeles bureau. All services of the bureaus shall be obsolutely free to persons seeking employment. Factory and workshop inspectors shall be required to furnish reports of their work to the Commissioner, who is directed by the bill to collect statistics relating to labor conditions throughout the state, including supply and demand, wages, hours of labor, treatment, and other information, showing in what sections of the state labor is congested and where it is scarce and in demand. These statistics are to be printed and distributed for the information of wage earners.

The chief trouble with the bill as presented appears to be that ample provision for paying the expenses of the work planned is not made. With the proposed reorganization of the state bureau and the appointment of a live and competent man at its head something along the lines suggested in this bill is generally regarded as desirable; but there is a growing opinion that until the state bureau has undergone a general overhauling it will be just as well to leave the free labor bureau proposition out of consideration.

Legislative Reapportionment

The greatest of all the great fights this session is going to be over the question of the reapportionment of legislative districts, if I am not mistaken. It is a subject that requires the most careful consideration, and I am hoping that no mistake will be made. In order to arrive at an equitable basis of reapportionment there should be taken into consideration other things besides politics and the ambitions of legislators to divorce fellow-statesmen from the glory surrounding the enactment of a bill of tremendous importance to the state. I confess the problem is too deep for me at the present time, for if I am correctly informed there is as yet no official population basis by precincts. The air is filled with mutterings and threats and recriminations. If any great injustice be done to any of the most populous cities and counties the breaches will be further from permanent healing than ever before.

It is a good time to make haste slowly. It is a subject whose final consideration may well be postponed until the closing days of the session, when members may find themselves in a position where thy can concentrate their minds and their energies upon the questions of fact and equity that must be taken into consideration.

"In Wrong"

Senator Wright of San Diego and Assemblyman Clyde Bishop of Orange county seem to be "in wrong" a fair share of the time. Wright opposes as many of the progressive measures as he finds time to; Bishop makes it evident that he regards a legislator as some sort of special agent, rather than representative, of the people of his district, though I cannot quite follow his logic. The latter says he expects to come back as Senator next term or some other time not specifically decided upon. If his record in the present session parellels that in the session of 1907 I fear he will be unable to see the fulfillment of his ambitions in this direction. Bishop has a fine voice and a manly presence at times, but I suspect that he is not yet onto the fact that a new order of things political has been inaugurated in California. He probably will accumulate wisdom during the present session. Even the redoubtable Leeds of Los Angeles and his fellow-member of 1909, John N. Otto Rech, both of whom thought they had cinches on their jobs last fall, were repudiated by their constituents when the latter got onto them.

Both Rech and Leeds, by the way, have been in Sacramento this session lobbying—the first for his friend E. A. Meserve as a candidate for the shoes Judge Works had handed to him a month ago, and the latter for some legislation that he wanted pulled through. Rech got one vote for Meserve—at least, Meserve got one. Leeds was one of the loudest shouters against lobbying on the floor two years ago. His opinions on this subject appear to have undergone a radical change.

Hard Workers

W. E. Hinshaw, Assemblyman from the district which includes Long Beach, is one of the hardest worked members of the lower house. He is a member of the Assembly Committee on constitutional amendments, which this year not only has its hands full but is struggling with some pretty

(Continued to page 13)

The Home of The Famous
FAIRBANKS
PLAYER-PIANO
in Southern California.

The Fairbanks is America's Greatest Player-Piano at a moderate price.

$600 and $650 on easy terms

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO.
"The House of Musical Quality"
332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

BEKINS'
Fire-Proof Storage
1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY
Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

HIGHCLASS INVESTMENTS
MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET
RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 168x168
Southern Pacific Switch
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.
Dr. G. J. Crandall
DENTIST
Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806

The California Institute of Technology

By Dr. James A. B. Scherer, President Throop Polytechnic Institute

It seems reasonably sure at this writing that the California Institute of Technology will be established during the present session of the Legislature.

A week ago the idea of this institution in the form that is now energizing into reality was shut up in the minds of a dozen men; and yet the foundations had already been rooted deep and broadly in the new college of the Throop Polytechnic Institute at Pasadena.

A few weeks ago the deep-seated and long continued desire of the people of Southern California for an insituation of higher learning under the care of the State culminated in the going of Mark Keppel to Sacramento to agitate for a State university. Mr. Keppel, the Superintendent of Schools for Los Angeles County, is a man of large political experience; and he had not been long at the Capital before learning that the opposition to any institution which might rival the great University at Berkeley is so general and so determined as to make his project impossible. Indeed, this opposition is not confined to the northern end of the State. For my own part, I opposed it in the public press, although without any idea at the time that Mr. Keppel would transform his agitation into a movement for a State college of technology. But that is just what he did; and this new idea swept the whole State like wildfire. The multitudes of us who have a jealous regard for the University at Berkeley and an equally zealous desire to see the educational demands of the great Southwest adequately supplied, find our desires completely fulfilled by Mr. Keppel's somewhat belated inspiration.

For the moment, however, I was dumfounded by his suggestion. On Sunday morning, January 31, when I took my morning paper in out of the rain and saw in big letters the legend, "State Institute of Technology for Southern California," I exemplified the famous victim of the "solar plexus" blox. When my breath came back, however, I saw at a flash that there are tides in the affairs of institutions, as well as of individuals, which, taken at the flood, may lead on to fortune. As a matter of fact, those charged with the expansion of Throop Institute had looked forward to eventual support from the State; but within the last week we have found greatness thrust upon us, so to speak, without our having to achieve it.

And yet it may be said without boasting that the work done at Throop within the past couple of years has been great. About the beginning of the year 1908 the board of trustees determined that whereas the school had done excellent work in manual training and the liberal arts ever since its establishment by the late Amos Throop in 1891, the time had come when the rapid development of the empire of the Southwest demanded a great technical school rivaling the one at Boston (although with broader courses)—a school that should set the pace for American institutions in attempting to get even with Germany, whose marvelous commercial expansion within the past few decades has undoubtedly been chiefly due to her superb technical training.

This board comprises men of large means, wide experience, and broad horizons. One of them is Arthur H. Fleming, whose frequent visits to Germany have convinced him of the correctness of the position above indicated. Another is George Ellery Hale, easily the foremost man of science in America; a member of the board of trustees of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as well as of Throop's. A third is the chairman of the Throop board, Dr. Norman Bridge, an eminent physician and a man of large business affairs, now residing in Los Angeles. Mr. Fleming's first step was to purchase and give to the Institute, at a cash outlay of $50,000, a magnificent campus of twenty-two acres adjoining the famous Tournament Park in Pasadena, over a mile from the older Throop in the heart of the city. George Hale, whose educational experience is second to that of no other man in America, was deputed to find a president and give general direction to the scope of the school; while Dr. Bridge, with unbounded enthusiasm and splendid executive ability, directed the whole movement with the masterful ability of a lientenant-general.

I confess, however, that I have often wondered why I was called to be president of this new undertaking. Probably the chief reason was because I had imported into an old-fashioned Southern college of which I was president, a department of technology; being convinced that the needs of the South demanded not merely preachers and teachers, doctors and lawyers, but chiefly big builders. Hale knew of this movement through an acquaintance formed with me during a visit to Mr. Carnegie's castle home in Scotland. It was the desire of the board to do just the opposite thing in the proposed Greater Throop; that is to say, to import into a polytechnic college culture studies in a larger degree than has ever been done before, since it is the opinion of the best educators that engineers can hardly be too broadly cultured—especially in English, as language, the sole means of expression, is the engineer's most important tool.

In September, 1908, I took charge of Throop. In June, 1910, our first great building on the new campus was completed and dedieated. By the end of the year 1910 a second building was finished, and now the two, equipped with the best engineering apparatus in electrical and mechanical branches to be found west of Chicago, house the four regular college classes, with an able and adequate faculty pledged to the highest standards of scholarship—the whole representing the equivalent of fully one million dollars, with the older Throop in successful operation as a fitting school for the institute.

Doubtless none of us can measure the significance of this movement for the great State of our love. I do not doubt that it will be hailed throughout the country as one of the most important educational undertakings of the times.

In Southern California the conditions and the need for technical education are unsurpassed. In no part of the world is electrical engineering more highly developed, especially in the transmission of power for great distances. In hydraulic engineering, the Southwest faces undertakings of enormous magnitude. Eastern technical schools are far removed, Throop Polytechnic Institute being the only college devoted primarily to technology west of the Mississippi river. Under such conditions, and with the advantages afforded by climate, by the immediate neighborhood of mountains where water-power can be developed and experimental transmission lines installed, the new institute has a field of unbounded opportunity in carrying forward the plans of its founders.

Pasadena is not only one of the most beautiful of cities, with a climate of unapproached equability and healthfulness, but it is also noted for the morality, refinement, and culture of its citizens. Being purely a residential town, ten miles from the factories and marts of Los Angeles, it is surrounded by safeguards and privileges that fit it for the guardianship of youth. Saloons are prohibited by charter. Boys under age are shut out by statute from questionable places of amusement, such as pool rooms, of which trere are few. A curfew law keeps younger boys off the streets at night. It is known as "the city of churches and schools." It is also frequently called "the most beautiful town in the world." To be surrounded by an atmosphere of purity and beauty is no hindrance to a training in utility.

Throop Academy will remain intact. To it will go the small endowment provided by the late Amos Throop. It will be known as Throop Polytechnic Institute, and will be regarded as a preparatory school of the first rank for the California Institute of Technology. The other polytechnic high schools of the State will find a logical goal for their graduates in the courses of the "Pasadena Tech."

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP PROGRESS

Assemblyman Sutherland's measure for indeterminate franchises for public utilities is a step forward and blazes the way for public ownership without having to pay extortionate penalties when the people decide to take back what is their own. The proposed public utilities commission also is part of the plan, and the two ought to work for the public good. Much of the notion that we really do not have a free country arises from unpleasant memories of the time when we have felt the oppressive hand of the arrogant owners of public utilities and have had to submit like slaves to their demands in order to live in comfort.

Organized capital may argue that it will be hard to raise money for new enterprises on indeterminate franchises, but the investor can rest assured that if his properties are taken over by the people it can only be after a fair appraisement of the assets, which will prevent too much water being put into the capitalization.—Los Angeles Herald.

Residence Burglary Insurance

Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?

Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.

Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.

R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY

200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.

Home Phone 40444 Sunset Phone M. 7096

Prison Labor Problems

Secretary of Charities and Corrections Board Addresses City Club.

Mr. W. A. Gates of San Francisco, secretary of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, addressed the Los Angeles City Club at its weekly luncheon last Saturday in the Hotel Westminster. The subject before the club was, "The Labor Problem in Our Prisons."

As the result of years of observation, Mr. Gates claims that two of the greatest problems in California prisons today are those of teaching prisoners trades and of making the prisons self-supporting.

"Every person has certain wants that have to be supplied," said he. "It is necessary for us to have food and clothing and shelter. These wants are, of course, primitive, and they are necessities. It is the duty of every man to supply his own wants and not depend upon somebody else. Of course, there are those in every community who are mentally and physically unable to do this and then it seems necessary for those who are immediately connected with them to supply these things for them. But I lay down as a fundamental principle that this is the obligation of every man who has the physical capacity and mental ability, to supply his own wants, food, shelter and clothing. Some of us have other wants, which are acquired by habit, which must be supplied and of course it is our duty to supply those wants as well as those which are described as the necessities of life.

"As civilization grows our wants become more complicated and as civilization grows still more, our wants become yet more complex and a division of labor takes place, as it has in the present state. I lay it down in the second proposition that it is just as much a man's duty to supply his individual wants in our time under the system of division of labor as it was under the primitive system. It is not only his duty, but it is right to supply those wants in any occupation he chooses to enter. We have no right to say how a man shall supply those wants. We can modify the method; we can say a man has no right to engage in the practice of the law or the practice of medicine until he shall have qualified therefor. But, every man has a right to choose and qualify himself for any occupation which he desires and I think we can also say that we have not the right to limit the number who shall engage in any one occupation and say 'This one is full and nobody else shall enter that occupation.' If we are to supply our wants we have the right, under the system of division of labor to choose the method we wish to supply those wants.

Basis of Crime

"We have, in every community, a certain class who do not care to labor to supply their wants. They much prefer to prey on others. They prefer, instead of working, to steal or engage in something else by which they prey on the community, and for protection to the community it becomes necessary to gather this class of men together and confine them in prisons. I think we have all come to understand that the prison is not for the purpose of punishment or retribution but, on the other hand, it is to protect the community. The basis of nearly all crime is the desire to get a living without working for it.

"I hold that it is the duty of men in prisons to earn their own support just as much as the men outside; that our prisons should be conducted in a manner by which the men who are confined therein will be compelled to earn their own living.

"We must also remember that the man who goes to prison goes there for the protection of society and that he is some day coming out. What is he going to do when he comes out? Prey on society some more? Many who occupy our prisons have been denied the opportunity of learning an occupation. They have not been trained to do that which will support them. If we are to protect society against the ex-prisoner it becomes necessary to prepare him, while in prison, to go out. We are failing largely in our duty if we do not prepare a man while we have him in prison for self-support when he leaves the prison. A prison system then, that does not teach a man to be self supporting, is a failure. The first necessity of a prison system is to make it remunerative. It must first pay for the support of the men who are in there. It should be laid down as a cardinal principle, that it is the duty of those who are bodily and mentally able to do so, to earn their own support. The prisons should, for that reason, if for no other, be made self-supporting.

Prisons Should Be Educative

"In addition to that we should make the prisons educative, so that when a man leaves it he does so prepared to assume his place in society. After labor in prison is remunerative it should be educative and it should be a healthful occupation.

"Do you know that more than one half of the criminals in this country today are under 25 years of age? These are young men to whom have been denied the influences of home and the opportunity of learning an occupation. They are not prepared for life and yet have been thrown out on the sea of life to sink or swim and most of them have sunk until they landed in jail.

"Young men who are in the formative stage should be taken away from the older prisoners and put in an institution for the purpose of teaching them a trade. We have no such institution in this state.

California Prison Cost

"Let us consider the conditions of our own prisons. We have two, San Quentin and Folsom. At San Quentin we have 1900 prisoners and at Folsom 1000—2900 in all. At San Quentin the occupation is working in a jute mill. Last year 900 men worked at that jute mill and 1300 on reconstruction. The remainder have various duties around the buildings. The state lost $3600 on that jute mill in the last two years and it sunk that much without taking into consideration the cost of feeding the prisoners during the time they were working. Why? Two reasons; first we bought jute when it was high, manufactured it into bags and sold when jute was on a falling market. Again, our competitors in the jute bag business are in Calcutta, India, where labor costs only 16 cents a day. It costs us 32 cents a day to feed our prisoners.

"At Folsom we have a stone quarry. About 100 men work on the rock crusher. We made a profit out of Folsom of about $12,000. Deducting the loss of San Quentin our prison population of 2900 have earned for the state a little less than $10,000. I say it is time to stop such nonsense. They cost us in the last two years $1,001,000, a little more than $500,000 a year more than they earned. This burden is on the taxpayer.

Where Prisons Pay

"That is one extreme. Minnesota is the other. They have 665 prisoners there and they earned during the two years for which I have a report, $257,000 over and above the cost of their support. Figuring this down to a per capita basis, a prisoner in Minnesota has earned the state $197 a year more than the cost of support, while in California he has cost the state $179 a year more than he earned."

Mr. Gates called attention to the evils of the practice of giving a discharged prisoner "five dollars and a suit of clothes that every policeman in San Francisco knows," turning him loose in San Francisco with no means of support. "Every prisoner will steal before he will starve. Under our system I do not see how he can do any better."

The speaker stated that the atten-

(Continued to page 12)

Furniture Repair Works
1603 S. Main
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

Phone A-3605
Second-Hand Clothing Bought
Highest Prices Paid
Telephone and I'll Call
Junction Tailor
N. H. Sanders, Prop.
Ladies' and Gents' Clothing Cleaned, Dyed, Pressed and Repaired. We Make a Specialty of Remodeling All Garments
844 South Main Street

182nd Monthly Report, February 1, 1911

LOS ANGELES INVESTMENT CO.

333-335-337 SOUTH HILL STREET

Founded in 1866. Established in Los Angeles 1895

Incorporated under the Laws of California, May 29, 1899

RESOURCES

Balance due on houses being sold on monthly installments, mortgages, secured loans and houses under construction	$2,790,864.20
Building Material Company stock, including two lumber yards, lumber and planing mills, warehouses, shops, factories, wagons, etc.	164,740.00
Stock in "Home Makers"	40,082.90
Stock in Globe Savings Bank at par (market value $95,000)	63,300.00
Stock in City & County Bank	12,500.00
Real Estate (market value $2,455,635.00)	2,109,607.46
Fixtures	6,083.22
Cash on hand	263,679.72
		$5,450,857.50

LIABILITIES

Dividends payable (uncalled for)	$ 5,219.31
Gold Notes	51,450.00
Home Certificates and Mortgages on property purchased (not a legal liability)	193,273.13
		$ 249,942.44
NET ASSETS:
Capital Stock paid in cash	$2,065,135.00
Reserve (surplus and Undivided Profits)	3,135,783.06	5,200,915.06
		$5,450,857.50

No unpaid bills.

THE PRINCIPAL SOURCES OF PROFITS FOR 1910 ARE AS FOLLOWS

REAL ESTATE	$345 310.53
INTEREST	240,586.36
BUILDING CONSTRUCTION	11.292.36
CARRIED TO SURPLUS	1,186,322.98

There were also miscellaneous profits from architectural, legal, insurance, rental and publishing departments.

Quarterl cash dividends were divided among the stockholders amounting to $448,392.11.

NO INVESTOR IN THIS COMPANY HAS EVER FAILED TO RECEIVE ALL OF HIS MONEY ON DEMAND.

Politics and Morals

From a Lecture Delivered by Rabbi J. Leonard Levy of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain; and place such over them. (Exodus xviii., 21.)

When a citizen of the United States becomes a minister of religion, he does not, by that act, politically disfranchise himself. The subject of politics is of as great interest to him, if he is an upright minister and a worthy citizen, as it is and should be to every other honest man in the country.

The Clergy and Politics

It has often been charged that it is wrong for a minister of religion to dabble in politics. The charge is as false as the hearts of the men who have made this charge popular. Honest men and honest women seek the honest advice of the honest teacher. It is the crook, the blackleg, the corruptionist, who fears the utterances of the united clergy of a community. From the earliest times down to the present era, there have been clergymen whose names are invoked as illustrious examples, preachers who were held in esteem by their contemporaries and are still admired, who took an active part in the political activities of their age.

Such names as Theodore Parker and Henry Ward Beecher evoke spontaneous encomiums from modern Americans. Parker lived in Boston and was a preacher. He conceived it to be his duty, at great personal sacrifice, to inform the people concerning their obligations in connection with the fiercest and bitterest struggle in the history of our country. It is paying a tribute by no means too exalted when we say, in this hundredth anniversary year of the birth of "Boston's conscience incarnate," that Parker was one of the men who helped to create the issue between the North and the South, that he was one of the American fathers of Abolition.

When the United States Government found itself in grave difficulties because of the attitude of England during the Civil War, it sent Beecher over to England to preach in that land in the hope of explaining the real issue, so that the nation that had given birth to a Wilberforce and had passed the Anti-Slavery Act of 1807 might not be deceived by a misrepresentation of the facts.

Politics, Not Partisan Policies

The time has come when we should squarely face this question of politics and the right and duty of the clergy in connection therewith. Mere party issues, mere partisanship, should never be made the theme of the pulpit. Moral principles are always the rightful topics of pulpit discussion, unless we disapprove the attitude of the prophets and such preachers as we have already cited. Not parties, but politics, ought to receive the wise consideration of moral and religious instructors. Parties represent divided opinions, and many parties may be represented within the congregation. But politics represents no divided issues. For politics means "the principles of civil government and the conduct of state affairs." Only in a partisan sense can politics be construed to be other than "a special application of the principles of morality and religion." The very origin of the word indicates that it bears reference to the duties of the citizen and the life of the state, and that it has nothing to do with Republican, Democratic, Socialist, or any other kind of politics denominated by a partisan term. Politics refers to the attitude of the people toward the life of the nation which should secure for them and their offspring the ripe fruit of civilization, which should save them and their children from being robbed of their birthright. It is as absurd, therefore, to say that the clergy should not dabble in politics, as it would be wrong for the clergy to give partisan political advice to a congregation representing many political views.

Present Political Conditions

There is much in modern American political life to give us pause. Political conditions require the most thoughtful consideration of the electors if that, which the founders of the Republic and its most faithful public servants have gained for us, is not to be obliterated in a deluge of public misfortune. The citizen must remember that liberty is maintained only by the most careful vigilance. If we wish that the Republic receive no harm we must remove from us the disgraceful conditions which have come to the public notice within the past few years. The American who pays a visit to Europe in this degenerate age comes back much chastened in spirit. Leaving home he feels that there is only one nation on earth, the people whose domestic territory is bounded by the Lakes, the Gulf and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. He believes that there is only one nation in the political firmament, only one flag worthy of reverence. He believes this so truly that he wears a flag in his buttonhole, or carries one in his hand and another, in handkerchief form, in his pocketbook. When sailing for the Old World he waves the flag with demonstrations of joy; coming home he keeps his flag hidden in his pocket.

Not that the flag is not worthy of our highest regard, for every loyal American may be justly proud of all for which the flag stands. But on his journey he has learned a very important lesson. He has observed that American political methods have made our nation a stench in the nostrils of honest men abroad. He has learned that, always excluding the honorable exceptions, politicians are not leaders but bosses; that a free people lies prostrate before the will of political party dictators. He has learned that this nation, the latest political product of the human struggle for liberty, has become a by-word, a scoffing, a disgrace; not because the people are bad, nor because the country is undesirable, nor because the climate and soil are not inexpressibly grand, nor because the resources of the land are valueless; but because public affairs are often administered by men who are utterly unworthy, because political rings which are absurdly worthless have often controlled the public issues, because craft and graft have temporarily won, because the people have, in many cases, resigned their will to those who misrepresent them, because the nation is bound hand and foot by the caucus and the boss, because the nation's wishes have been made a baggage-car by railroads, and its hopes thwarted by agents of corrupt business corporations.

Moral War to the Knife

It were an unhappy day for the Republic if we were to despair in face of this distressing situation. It were still more unfortunate for the nation if we were to resign the struggle in favor of those who, no matter how worthy they be in other directions, are the enemies of representative government. The price of liberty and free institutions is perpetual watchfulness and unending peaceful warfare. Loyal American citizens cannot lay down their arms, cannot relax their constant endeavor to have the public policies maintained by methods moral and upright. It is a moral war to the knife in behalf of conscience in public life. There can be no discharge in this war,—a war in which not brute force and military power are invoked, but a war in which the righteous will of an honest people is registered in order to be obeyed by its duly elected or appointed servants.

Corruption in Europe

Nor need those who believe in the Republic despair when contracting the prevailing conditions in America and in other lands where municipal and state governments are so highly approved.

England has been as corrupt as the most corrupt district in our own land today. The French have been no more immune to the influence of the corruptionists than were their neighbors across the Straights of Dover. Reading the history of Germany and Austria, we find that the German-speaking people were no freer from corruption than their French and English neighbors.

European Lands Vastly Improved

Nevertheless, Austria, Germany, France and England have, more or less, outlived political corruption. Municipal government among these peoples is a world ideal; the general conduct of public affairs evokes the admiration of the civilized world. Where may be found the causes that produced the change? Why do men yield implicit faith to their judges in England? Why do they trust their City Councils? Why do they rely upon their members of Parliament?

The chief cause of this desirable change lies in the admixture of morality with politics. When Macklin wrote his "Man of the World," he makes the father of an aspiring political candidate urge his son to join a certain party in the hope of success. The young man protests that he cannot conscientiously support the policy of the party his father wishes him to join. "Conscience, quother," says the father, "who ever heard a man talk of conscience in political matters?" The change in public sentiment in Europe has been effected by an introduction of just this element into political affairs. What has been possible over there is equally possible over here. The day is not far distant when a moral revolution will occur in America as it has occurred in other lands. We may already see the dawn of the new day, the promise of better things. There may be temporary defeats from time to time, but the tocsin of a new age has sounded, the beginning of a new era is at hand.

Roosevelt's Immortal Service

There was graft during the period of the Civil War; who bothered his head? There was graft during the seventies; who cared? There was graft during the eighties; who minded it? There was graft during the nineties; whose concern was it? Graft has been disclosed during the first decade of the twentieth century; who is now concerning himself? Why, the country is aflame with a desire for better things! There is scarcely a voting precinct in any city from Maine to California but someone is discussing in public this matter of incapacity and corruption in public life. All over the land there is a growing demand for "able men who fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain." There is a moral awakening coming in America. There are evidences that the national conscience has been touched to the quick. If not yet, then soon, we shall see the evidence of a nation morally quickened. Political revolutions are easy compared with moral revolutions. We must, therefore, not be discouraged if improvement is slower than we wish; but we must be blind if we do not see rays of hope on the political horizon. Many good citizens have labored to effect what we are now beginning to enjoy. Many clergymen have added their influence to the efforts of public officials. Many, to their own undoing, have pleaded that the affairs of the nation must be set far above private and personal gain. But I wish to say in this presence this morning, that whether you like the man or are opposed to him, whether you trust him or fear him, whether you love him or detest him, whether you honor him or revile him, whether you follow him or denounce him,—the man who, in my judgment, has done more to arouse the political conscience of this nation than any other man, is the ex-President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt,—the man who has taken the opportunity of making as a clean-cut issue the need of mingling morality with politics. This is unpopular doctrine in certain quarters, yet I should detest myself if, fully conscious of what I am saying, I did not say what I have just said.

The Blameworthy Citizens

If there is corruption in public life, and few will deny it, who is to blame? No one but ourselves. Louis XIV. said, "L' etat c'est moi," I am the

Chamouny Apartments

Opposite Beautiful Palm Place

Corner West Eleventh and Grand View Streets

Most Attractive in Los Angeles

Contains Unusual Features—Large outside living room; sun room 18x45 feet; brick inglenook; beautiful reception room; apartments are extra large and all have French doors leading to spacious private balconies.

Elegantly Furnished

Telephone 54992. Mrs. N. Williams Anderson, Mgr.

state. American citizens may rightly say, "We are the state" The men who are in public office are our representatives. They are chosen by us. A majority of us put them where they are. Our votes elected them. We asked them to serve us. We are, therefor, as much to blame as they. "Like people, like priest," said the prophet of old. Like people, like representative, may be said with equal truth today. The government is but rarely higher in morals than the people. The people, as a whole, are little higher morally than the government. I, of course, exclude the noble exceptions. Our representatives are a reflection of us, or on us. It is the duty of each and every one of us to endeavor to realize the power of the citizen to vote into office those who will serve the interests of the few or of the whole people. We ought to regard our opportunity as a sacred duty, and we ought to be sure that we are placing in positions of importance men who are able, who fear God, who hate unjust gain. We should use the suffrage as a means of selecting men who know what they owe to their constituents and their country. Free institutions and a liberal government can only endure if the citizen is prepared to vote as his conscience dictates, and not as personal or merely party interests demand. The nation is more than the individual, and national well-being should be our first concern when we exercise the function of free, enlightened and patriotic voters.

Shall the Republic Endure?

In all seriousness the question may be put to the citizens of the United States whether they wish the Republic to succeed or fail. I commend to your attention the work of Prof. W. S. Davis, entitled, "The Influence of Wealth in Imperial Rome." The causes of Rome's downfall are at work in our day as they were twenty centuries ago. When men think more of money than of morals; when they prove that the "crooked cannot be made straight"; when they connive with venal politicians to acquire unjust gains; when they consider wealth of greater importance than the methods by which it is obtained; when men build up fortunes in defiance of right and justice; when, by base intrigue and still baser occupations, they get rich quickly; when they "add house unto house and field unto field and not by right"; when they show utter contempt for the weak and defenseless;—only one result can finally be expected: the nation will avenge itself upon the wrongdoers, revolution will replace orderly evolution, the Republic will be converted into something which, from the American standpoint, can only mean disorganization and decadence.

Economics and Morals

The economic prosperity, the business interests of the nation are important matters. I believe in the rights of property. I have always done my best to teach that those rights should be conserved. I have at all times endeavored to do what I could to have those I could reach respect those rights. The nation must have money. Every household needs money to provide food, shelter and clothing, not to speak of higher things, for its members. But that money must be obtained honestly, by occupations and methods on which we may justly ask the blessing of God. That money must be gained in respect for the moral law. It must be free from the widow's tears and the orphan's sighs. It must be honest money, not blood money. The business interests of the nation are so sacred that he who would wantonly destroy them is the enemy of the nation. But it is equally true that he who considers only business interests to the exclusion of the moral welfare of the nation is the greatest enemy a people can have, is infinitely more inimical to the country than he who, in the hope of ultimate betterment, may become the innocent means of temporarily disturbing the commercial relations of the nation.

The Jew's Interests

I am a Jew. I am speaking to a Jewish congregation and to many here today, who are not born in Israel, but who are in sympathy with our views. I plead with all of you, especially with Jewish Americans, to see that the question presented to us on Tuesday next represents clean cut issues inviting us to add morality to politics. Vote for whom you please, but let your vote be the expression of your conscientious views, let it be as honest, as between us and the state, as would be a commercial transaction. Some Jews cry aloud: "We are discriminated against. We cannot get a fair hearing. We are not wanted. We are ostracized." We have an opportunity to prove that we are wanted, that we are of great use in the battle for the right. We ought to be able to hear the unjust attitude of men toward us as faithful members of the covenant of Israel; we ought to be able to laugh at their absurd pretensions. But woe worth the day when the enemy of Israel can rise and indicate, by fact and figures, that the Jew puts himself at the back of the impure elements in American political life. Woe worth the day for the Jew, and more especially for the children he loves, if it can be truthfully shown that he aided the base, vile political "gang" whose influence must mean the ultimate downfall of the Republic, instead of supporting and standing for the things that are clean, honest and upright. I plead with you today to exercise your sovereign rights as American citizens, to vote for whom you please according to the light of your conscience; but, because I am a Jew, because I love this Republic, because America has given us the opportunity Jews have yearned for during many centuries of oppression, because this is the one country which has, from the day of its foundation, given the Jew practically all the rights conferred upon all American citizens, I ask you to vote for "able men, men that fear God, men of truth, who hate unjust gain, who are willing to set the nation's interests above their chiefest joy."

We Must Help the Cause of Decency

Some men in political life ask, "What's in it for US?" I ask the same question, but I want to have a period inserted between the letters of the word US. The question that should be uppermost in our mind at all times when we exercise the right of franchise is "What's in it for the U. S.? What will my vote mean for the Republic? How can I place it at the disposal of my country's lasting welfare? How can I serve the nation that has afforded me protection in the past and grants me opportunity for the future?" Men speak of dividends. Of course business ought to be able to produce dividends! But America was not called into existence only for the purpose of producing large dividends. America spells liberty, not license. It means opportunity, not success in cunning misdirection of commercial and political forces. America was not produced to make men rich, but to make them free, as well said Senator Cummins. Dividends are an important factor in economic life, but without character they are a deadly influence. It is nowhere commanded that a man be rich; it is written in the stars, in the laws of the universe, in the constitution of human society, that men must be honest. Therefore must we support the moral element in American public life. Therefore must we aid those who would conserve and preserve the highest interests of the nation. Such a government as that under which we live is only a vast corporation. It has its charter, the Declaration of Independence; it has its Constitution and By Laws. Its stockholders are the citizens of the United States. In electing public servants we should exercise the same degree of circumspection we would exercise if we were to elect directors of the various commercial interests in which we may be individually or collectively concerned. We must put able, God-fearing, honest men in positions of political trust. If we do not, we imperil not only the future of the Republic, but also the well-being of those dependent upon us, we invite the destruction of the peace and welfare of our children.

Principles, Not Men

In the endeavor to cloud the issues we are invited by those who, quite often, seek personal ends through political machinery, to ignore the office-seeker and regard the principles for which he supposedly stands. Be not deceived! Men who are without principles make poor advocates of party principles. An unprincipled man is unfit to plead for principles. No man of principle can serve the people if he stands for unprincipled party purposes; no party principles can be truly advanced by men who are corrupt, and the corrupt man is the enemy, not the friend, of the people. Some ask, "Why do you rage and imagine a vain thing? Don't we love our country? Don't we display the flag on the national holidays? Don't we cast our ballots? Don't we keep the national feasts? Don't we attend our political assemblies? Don't we praise our national heroes?" Paraphrasing the utterance of the great prophet whose words were read at the beginning of this address, I might say, as did he, in the name of the Eternal, "I hate, I despise your holidays, I will take no delight in your adoration of your flag. Take away from me the music of your bands, the noise of your parades, the glare of your red fire, the cheap oratory of your corrupt campaigners. But let justice flow like a river and equity like a mighty stream." With justice and equity as the anchor of the ship of state, we are safe; without them we shall drift upon the sunken rocks of deceit and founder on the fateful shoals of injustice.

Temporary Advantage and Permanent Good

We suffer from a plethora of laws and a pernicious anaemia of justice. To gain permanent security we must mean with all our hearts the tribute we pay our nation when we chant our national hymn. We must not sing "My country, 'tis of thee," and dedicate ourselves in our inmost hearts to selfish interests by meaning "My Pocket, 'tis of thee." We must learn to differentiate between the temporary advantage and the permanent good. We must add morality to politics. Only when the citizens of a free land are pledged to personal and public righteousness will their real interests be truly preserved. Honest men and upright principles must be allied. Without them we are lost. Ours is not the first Republic called into existence by the protest against special interests and special privilege. It can no more endure than did others if we invite their fate by ignoring the eternal verities of the moral law.

The great issue in American life is not Politics versus Morality, but the need of making politics moral. On this side of the Atlantic it would seem that, all too often, politics has come to be synonymous with fraud, deceit, chicanery, unjust gains and base corruption. Last year I had occasion to seek the address of an English statesman, Mr. Herbert Samuel. I consulted one of the Year Books in which I hoped to find the information I sought. I found his name therein and immediately after the name I found that his present Postmaster-General was denominated "Politician." That term is not malodorous in England. It means one who devotes his life to the service of the people, one who is faithful as a public servant. It conveys a different impression among us. It is identified very frequently with faithlessness, rather than faithfulness, to the interests of the electorate.

Honorable Failure and Dishonorable Success

We must remove this disgrace. We must seek our representatives from among the citizens who are known to be clean, decent, honest and trustworthy. If we do not this, then we deserve to suffer all the ills from which our city and other communities have suffered, and more added thereunto. I am full of hope for the future, although I do not anticipate that the cause of public honor will immediately triumph. I expect that, for a time, decency will be defeated and that ignoble politics will be in control. But it will not be ever thus. Honorably to fail is better than to succeed with dishonor. There are gains that are losses, and losses that are gains. There are victories that are defeats, and defeats that are victories. There are successes that are blank failures, and failures that become lasting successes through all the ages to come.

MAIN 3540 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY 320 MAIN ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

TYPEWRITERS
All Makes All Prices
Look over this list.

Underwoods	$45.00	$75
L. C. Smiths	40.00	65
Monarchs	50.00	65
Remingtons	20.00	75
Olivers	25.00	55
Smith Premiers	15.00	35
Densmores	15.00	20
Blickensderfers	10.00	40

Chicagoes, Bennetts, Caligraphs, Bar Locks and Hammonds, $5 to $10.
WE GUARANTEE ALL MACHINES FOR ONE YEAR
We sell, rent, repair and exchange all makes of typewriters.
UNION TYPEWRITER CO. 309 So. Spring St.
Los Angeles, Cal.
Agents for the STANDARD FOLDING TYPEWRITER

Anent Alien Ownership

Editor Pacific Outlook: In your issue of January 28th, under "Political Table Talk," I have read with much interest the article "The Problem of Alien Ownership." The article is directly in accord with my own views and with what I have expressed on several occasions in relation to this most stupendous question.

It is somewhat of a surprise to me, however, appearing as it does in your paper, because I had understood that you were against all legislation affecting the ownership of our real property by aliens. But for the last few lines of the article, wherein you suggest a commission to consider the matter for another two years, I can agree with the article in its entirety.

It does seem to me to be suicidal to put it off for another Legislature. The only objection to it of any material force comes from Japan and the Japanese representatives. Two years ago before the opening of the session the Japanese Vice Consul visited Fresno and came to my office "to talk the matter over," he said. After a lengthy conference I said to him: "Mr. Takahashi, doesn't your country prevent the ownership of your lands by aliens?" He replied, "Yes," but went on to say, "we are a thickly populated country and there is not enough room for other peoples to own our lands." What right has Japan to interfere in this matter, and why haven't we independence enough to say, not only to Japan but to the whole world, "No person shall own the soil of California unless he is a loyal subject of the United States, or at least entitled to so become."

Our people cannot possibly live on a plane of equality with the Japanese. They are aggressive, wide-awake and intelligent, but so far as social equality is concerned it should not be brought about, yet they are crowding into every walk of life—they are buying our best agricultural lands everywhere, and within the last two years a large acreage of the San Joaquin Valley has passed into their permanent possession. It creates friction and dissension wherever it occurs and an increase of the conditions will only aggravate the question. If we say to these people "you cannot have our real property because you are not and never can be subjects of our country," that will settle it for all time.

I speak of the Japanese in particular because that is the most vital question before us, yet I am as strictly opposed to any alien owning our real property as I am the Japanese, although people of another race are more objectionable than people of our own race.

I note one thing, that you speak lightly of the question of miscengenation, saying that four or five generations will cause that to disappear. I hold that this is a mistake and simply point to the pages of history to prove it. The Aryan stock has never amalgamated with any other stock of the black, brown or yellow, but to the utter destruction of the Aryan. Phoenicia, Greece, Rome, Spain, Portugal, the South American countries and Mexico, have all gone down under this curse and the United States will follow in their footsteps unless something is done to prevent such a result. We have only to look at our own Southern states to see the curse of miscegenation. It is the most withering blight that can strike the Aryan stock.

I wish your "Watchman" would urge the passage of a bill at this session of the legislature in line with the one I introduced two years ago. Both the Senate and the Assembly are ready and willing to pass it if the influence of Japan is ignored. I am opposed to anything like "jingo legislation," such as municipal segregation or school segregation, but this one piece of legislation is of the utmost importance and should not be postponed for another two years.

A. M. Drew, Fresno.

Political Table Talk

(Continued from page 4)

the hurry? Given a little stabber and an ink pad the voter can know what he does. So far as his duty is concerned he can discharge it that he knows of. Not so with the ballot machines. Anyhow the voters of Alameda county, who have used them several years, would cheerfully see them go to the scrap pile. Can the legislature do anything to facilitate their going there?

Shall the Legislative Session Be Divided? The work of legislating should somehow be so arranged as to make it possible for legislators to do their work in the light of a full knowledge of what is proposed to be done. It is not so now. Every legislator has to depend on some other legislator to tell him how to vote on most measures for the reason that there are not hours enough in the day or days enough in the session to enable any legislator to acquaint himself with one bill in ten introduced. Lack of knowledge of the subjects in hand has been a more serious drawback to sound legislation than all the lobbying that has ever been done. And it has not been possible to gain that knowledge. Senator Caminetti proposes to divide the session into a thirty day period for introduction of bills, and preliminary discussion, and take a recess of ninety days to allow members to go home and digest the stuff, then come back to take up the serious work of legislating. It will be possible under such a system for serious minded legislators to inform themselves regarding a considerable part of the legislation proposed. It is not likely that all legislators would diligently use that time, and it likely that lobbyists would be fully as diligent, meantime, as the legislators; but out of all the effort to influence and to understand, and the public discussion that would be going on the while, a good deal of light would be made to shine on the law-making process. The Watchman would like to see the experiment tried. It would be a blessing to the governor if to no one else. It would give him a chance to catch his breath between taking office and having to pass on legislation, a luxury that is not afforded him under existing methods.

The Weinstock Plan for Industrial Peace It is to be regretted, if it be true as reported, that labor leaders are not favorably impressed with Mr. Harris Weinstock's plan for promoting industrial peace It is a disgrace to civilization that society has not long since afforded a better means for adjusting industrial controversies than to permit the waging of industrial wars, and Mr. Weinstock's plan is as modest as any that can be proposed. It consists in having each of the parties choose a representative and these two choose a third, the three thoroughly to investigate and make public their findings as to the facts in the controversy, leaving it to public sentiment, when so informed, to bring what moral pressure it may to secure justice without a fight. It is seldom that the public is in possession of all the facts in such controversies. It has a right to have them. The public is an interested party and not infrequently the party having the most important interest involved. The Watchman ventures the hope that Mr. Weinstock will press his plan upon legislative attention undaunted by any misgivings labor leaders may express. His plan will afford a beginning and it is time a beginning were begun. The East Bay cities of central California have just gone through a week of warfare between milk dealers and their drivers. There have been about one hundred persons directly involved and in the neighborhood of 250,000 persons indirectly inconvenienced if not exasperated by a conflict not of their making. There have been scrimmages innumerable, at least one man was shot and the community was put to large expense to preserve order, and yet not a householder knows to this day what it was all about or which side was right or which wrong. Mr. Weinstock is asking ever so little of the belligerants in asking that the rights and wrongs of these controversies be made evident to the public in order that the rights of non-combatants may be protected. The fact that labor leaders, even of the highest character, oppose the Weinstock measure should not be held conclusive as to its merits or as to the policy or impolicy of legislating thereon.

Senatorial Log-Rolling and Board of Control Senator Sanford has expressed the opinion that the Board of Control bill, that recently passed the Assembly, will be beaten in the Senate for the reason that legislators representing communities where state institutions are located are all banded together against the measure. The Watchman has not seen the bill as it passed the Assembly but the fact that the institutional boards, and the legislators representing them, are against it predisposes The Watchman in its favor. It is a bane of the institutional life of California that its institutions are looked upon as of local rather than as of state concern. Not a legislator from a district containing such an institution but is warped and twisted and handicapped and more or less swerved from a right course by having such an institution in his district. He is expected to log-roll, cringe and crawl, if need be, in order to "get something" for his local institution to the end that dollars may be locally expended, and the same malevolent influence overshadows the local boards of control to the moral injury of their membership. State institutions are of state concern and are none of the business of the communities where located. All such institutions need to be managed with eye single to the welfare of the state as a whole and that cannot be under local boards of control, each pulling and hauling, log-rolling and trafficking for its own institution. The Watchman regrets that he is not able to speak advisedly as to the bill itself, but as to the general idea of it he has not a shadow of doubt. A centralized control of state institutions will make for the best interests of the state whereas local control cares naught for the state but is concerned only for the locality. The spectacle of so good a man as Senator Sanford walking in the shadow of the Mendocino mad-house should move his fellow senators with such a commiseration for his predicament as to prompt them forthwith to provide for a centralized state control of state institutions.

William R. Williams William R. Williams is a surprise. The Watchman well remembers how he could scarcely believe the evidences of his own senses when he first learned that William R. Williams had espoused the cause of an anti-machine and progressive Republicanism, for was not Williams also a product of the infamous Santa Cruz convention? He was. But no sooner had he gotten behind the scenes where he could see how things were working than he made a break for the exterior boundary of the "organization" reservation. His manhood revolted at what he saw and heard and the legislative session of 1907 had hardly gotten half through before Williams declared: "I am against this sort of government from this time forth if I lose out on it," and from that time forth he was against it. He served notice in all directions that, so far as his office was concerned, political pulls did not count and they have not counted. He came into the Lincoln Roosevelt camp, tendered his services, worked like a Trojan, gave of his means and fought the good fight to the finish. His appointment to the office of State Superintendent of Banking means that the banks will be superintended. He is no Carrie Nation with a hatchet. He is more of a General Grant disposed to lay down a line of action and to fight it out on that line if it takes all summer and all winter. He is a living example of the development theory. He is a growing man, capable, honest, resolute, full of fight for a good cause, yet tractable, reasonable, prudent and no stirrer up of strife for the joy of combat. The bankers will find him reasonable and self-restrained, but immovable when he once takes a position justified by his conscience and his judgment. No better selection for the office could have been made. Congratulations to Governor Johnson.

Prison Labor Problems

(Continued from page 9)

tion of state officials have been called to these conditions many times but it was not until the present administration went into office that action could be obtained but at present both the Governor and the Legislature are taking steps to remedy the conditions complained of.

Mr Gates recommended the manufacture of school desks and furniture in the prisons. "The labor unions have no objection on this score and the school desk trust is about the closest one I know of. I was told by the prison officials at Auburn New York, when I visited there, that they could not supply the demand for New York City alone. We have a furniture factory at San Quentin that has been lying idle for years. We could make all sorts of furniture for the capital building at Sacramento as well as all state institutions. If we do that alone it will go a long way to support these prisons.

"We have to have cloth for our state institutions, and cloth has to be made up into suits. Why shouldn't we turn those jute mills into cotton and woolen mills, making the cotton goods from cotton grown in the Imperial Valley and woolen goods from the thousands of sheep we have on our ranges? Our prisons should be just as healthful places to work in as any factory in the country."

Mr. Gates briefly discussed the parole system and stated that he was heartily in favor of it but suggested the elimination of the $25.00 payment which is now required of prisoners.

At the conclusion of Mr. Gates' address. President Jas. A. B. Scherer of Throop Polytechnic Institute was introduced and made a plea for the support of the City Club in the plan to turn over the property of Throop Institute to the State for a California Institute of Technology. Dr. Scherer was followed by Russ Avery, who introduced a resolution favoring the establishment of such an institution, [illegible]ation was unanimously adopted.

A resolution was also offered, by Mr. Avery, and adopted, endorsing a request of the Los Angeles State Normal School for an appropriation of $346,092 from the State Legislature. Of this sum, it is intended to use $150,000 to provide for the purchase of a new site on which may be built a Normal School properly fitted to take care of the present enrollment of the Los Angeles State Normal School, and allowing for such additions as may hereafter be necessitated by reason of its future increase; $167,200 is to be used for the maintenance of the present school for the next two years.

The New Order of Things

(Continued from page 7)

stiff problems. Though not a lawyer Mr. Hinshaw is a bully good judge of the quality of justice and fair play, and he is teaching some of his associates the lesson that laymen sometimes have ideas on the subject of justice and equity that are worth considering.

Dr. W. A. Lamb is also making good as chairman of the committee on retrenchment and reform. In the past this committee has been something of a joke, on occasion, but it is not thus this year. It is a live member with a business end to it. In spite of the fact that Dr. Lamb has been a victim of the Sacramento climate for a good deal of the early portion of the session, he has kept well in touch with the work intrusted to this committee and he is helping to save the state no small amount of money.

Assemblyman Randall of Highland Park is also a hard and effective worker. So is Henry Lyon of the seventy-third assembly district. Mr. Lyon is making good on his job. He has become a specialist on "bugs" and some of his friends have, for this reason, suggested that a new committee be named by the house, with him for chairman—a committee on legislative entomology.

Reactionary Disturbers

The remnants of the old machine, both on the floor of the Senate and Assembly and through the medium of the "faithful" newspapers, never miss an opportunity to attempt to make it appear that the Progressive members of the Legislature are growing more and more at outs with one another. If there is no semblance of cause for such charges it is easily manufactured. For example, two or three days ago the San Francisco Chronicle printed a story to the effect that Assemblyman Bohnett, who fathered the Eshleman Railroad bill in the lower house, had put one over Senator Stetson, sponsor for the measure in the Senate, by rushing it through to passage for the purpose of stealing the glory that would accrue to Stetson in the event the bill was put through the upper house first.

The fact is, as explained by Senator Stetson on the floor, that the latter asked Mr. Bohnett to expedite the measure in the Assembly so that it might be sent to the Governor at the earliest possible moment. As a matter of fact there probably isn't a single instance of the kind, involving alleged disagreements between Reformers regarding essentials on progressive measures, that has any more basis of fact than had the story of the incipient Stetson-Bohnett feud.

JOSEPH FELS TO ADDRESS CITY CLUB TODAY

At the regular weekly luncheon of the Los Angeles City Club to be held at the Westminster Hotel today (Saturday), at 12:15 p. m., Mr. Joseph Fels, of Philadelphia, will speak on "The Single Tax Doctrine"

The Jester's Bells

Getting Even

Judge—It seems to me I've seen you before.

Prisoner—You have, Judge. I gave your daughter singing lessons.

Judge—Twenty years.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Economy

A New England mother had come upon her eight-year-old son enjoying a feast whereof the components were jam, butter, and bread.

"Son," said the mother, "don't you think it a bit extravagant to eat butter with that fine jam?"

"No, ma'am," was the response. "It's economical; the same piece of bread does for both."—Lippincott's.

Different

The Candidate (having quoted the words of an eminent statesman in support of an argument)—"And, mind you, these are not my words. This is not merely my opinion. These are words of a man who knows what he's talking about."—London Sketch.

Always Behind

"Is your son still pursuing his studies, Mrs. Brown?"

"Yes; but it seems to be a stern chase."—Life.

No Secret

'Mrs. Chucksley, is your husband a member of any secret society?"

"He thinks he is—but he talks in his sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

Love of the Right Stamp

A collector of postage-stamps, possessing 12,544 specimens, desires to contract a marriage with a young lady, also a collector, who has the blue Mauritius stamp of 1847. No other need apply.—Advertisement in the Figaro.

A Problem Unsolved

The Violinist—I want an E string.

The New Assistant—Would you mind selecting one for yourself, sir? I 'ardly know the 'e's from the shes yet.—London Sketch.

Too Quickly

"Sir, I wish to marry your daughter, Susan."

"You do, eh? Are you in a position to support a family?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

"Better be sure of it. There are ten of us."—Toledo Blade.

No Gentleman

"That young man Pufferly is the rudest person I ever saw," said one young woman. "I reminded him that we were standing under the mistletoe."

"And what did he do?" asked the other.

"He simply smiled and said, 'By Jove! The joke's on me."—Washington Star.

Very Considerate

"I suppose, Jennie, you wouldn't want to go to the concert Wednesday in your old hat?"

"You dear thing—I couldn't possibly think of showing myself in it."

"That's what I thought, so I——"

"What?"

"Bought only one ticket to the concert."—Meggendorfer Blaetter.

Well Recommended

Two negro men came up to the outskirts of a crowd where Senator Bailey was making a campaign speech. After listening to the speech for about ten minutes, one of them turned to his companion and asked:

"Who am dat man, Sambo?"

"Ah don' know, what his name am, Sambo replied, "but he certainly do recommen's hisself mos' highly."—Success.

No Choice Left

A taxicab chauffeur was discharged for reckless driving, and so he became a motorman on a trolley car.

As he was grumbling over his fallen fortunes, a friend said:

"Oh, what's the matter with you? Can't you run over people just as much as ever?"

"Yes," the ex-chauffeur replied, "but formerly I could pick and choose."—Detroit Free Press.

Women, Wonderful Women

Muggins—Women are gradually usurping the places of men. I heard the other day of a woman bill collector.

Buggins—Well, if a woman is as successful in running down a bill as she is in running one up, she should be a wonder.—Philadelphia Record.

In Advance

"Bridget, why are you sweeping the parlor a second time? You did it an hour ago."

"Yes, mum; but you see tomorrow is bakin' day an' I won't have a chance to do it at all."—Boston Transcript.

All in the Name

"How did you persuade your daughter to learn kitchen work?"

"By calling it domestic science."—Washington Herald.

A Criticism

Wilson Eyre, Jr., the noted Philadelphia architect, can criticise with delicate wit architecture of which he disapproves.

A brother architect induced Mr. Eyre the other day to come and see one of his latest constructions—a flaring edifice not far from the city hall.

Mr. Eyre looked over the new building gravely and silently, and at the end of the inspection the host said in rather anxious tones:

"Well, how do you like it? It's pretty good, don't you think?"

"Excellent," said Hr. Eyre. "It only has one fault."

"What's that?" the other asked.

"It's fireproof," was the reply.—Buffalo Express.

A Lesson in Banking

The leading negroes of a Georgia town started a bank and invited persons of their race to become customers. One day a darkey, with shoes run down at the heels, a gallus over one shoulder and a cotton shirt, showed up at the bank.

"See here," he said, "I want mah ten dollahs."

"Who is yuh?" asked the cashier.

"Mah name's Jim Johnson, an' I wants dat ten dollahs."

"Yuh ain't got no money in dis here bank," said the cashier, after looking over the books.

"Yes, I has," insisted the visitor. "I put ten dollahs in here six months er go."

"Why, man yuh shure is foolish. De intrist done et dat up long er go."—Chicago Daily Sketch.

Being Fitted

"She is being fitted for the stage."

"Studying hard, I suppose?"

"Oh, no. Just being fitted with the necessary gowns."—Detroit Free Press.

His Act of Kindness

An old couple came in from the country with a big basket of lunch to see the circus. The lunch was heavy. The old wife was carrying it. As they crossed a crowded street the husband held out his hand and said: "Gimme that basket, Hannah." The poor old woman surrendered the basket with a grateful look. "That's real kind o' ye Joshua," she quavered. "Kind!" grunted the old man. "I wuz afeared ye'd git lost."—Argonaut.

The Latest Wrinkle

In a shop recently a well-known actress, who is noted for her perennial youth, asked for a traveling bag of alligator skin. The shopkeeper, who had none of that particular sort, brought out instead some of smooth leather.

"And you tell me this is alligator skin?" objected the actress. "Why, where are all its wrinkles?"

"Ah, madam," replied the wily dealer, who knew his customer, "wrinkles are out of vogue. The correct alligator bag is made from the skin of an alligator that has been massaged."—Tit-Bits.

Overheard on the Stairs

A Washington man inadvertently overheard some tender exchanges between a recently betrothed couple, who, it chanced, attended some social function at the national capital to which the aforesaid Washingtonian was also asked.

It was on the stairs that the happy pair chose to talk the matter over, and it was from the recesses of an alcove, whither he had gone to get his coat, that the Washingtonian proved to be the accidental recipient of the couple's confidence.

"Just think, dear heart!" exclaimed the young woman. "You proposed to me but twenty-four hours ago!"

"Yes, sweetheart," came in thrilling tones from the fortunate man, "and it seems as though it were but yesterday!"—Lippincott's.

Modern Weights and Measures Table

In view of the many exposures of short weights and measures, why do we persist in teaching children things in school that they will have to unlearn when they go into business for themselves? Why not revise the tables in the arithmetic to read:

14 ounces make a pound.
80 pounds make a hundredweight.
1,500 pounds make a ton.
11 inches make a foot.
33 inches make a yard.
1½ gills make a pint.
3 gills make a quart.
7 pints make a gallon.
7 quarts make a peck.
3 pecks make a bushel.

—Life.

Advice to the Judge

A colored man was brought before a police judge charged with stealing chickens. He pleaded guilty and received sentence, when the judge asked how it was that he managed to lift those chickens right under the window of the owner's house when there was a dog in the yard.

"It wouldn't be no use, Judge," said the man, "to try to 'splain dis thing to yo' all. Ef you was to try it you like as not would get yer hide full of shot an' get no chickens, nuther. Ef yo' want to engage in any rascality, Judge, yo' better stick to the bench, whar' yo' am familiar."—National Monthly.

"I see your son has gone to work." "Yep." "How is he getting along?" "Oh, fine. Anything in the way of a novelty always appeals to him."—Washington Herald.

Sophomore—Wonder what makes the telegraph lines hum? Senior—I've wired dad for dough, and I guess he's talking back.—Chicago Journal.

Theatre

Orpheum

To report the best attractions on this week's Orpheum program would be to repeat a portion of last week's review. Miss Alice Lloyd, Lew Sully and the other Road Show stars still twinkle transcendent, not a whit dimmed by any competitive lustre, even though the newcomers include the handsome Bonita and the handy Hanlon Brothers. The Lloyd-Sully combination (for though they appear separately the comedian's burlesque of the comedienne implies a friendly co-operation) is one hard to excel in the realm of vaudeville.

Miss Lillian Burkhart has returned to "What Every Woman Wants" after one performance (unsuccessful) of "Steerage."

Bonita's offering is a "condensed musical comedy," really a clever singing act, in which she has the capital comedy assistance of that funny little farmer, Lew Ahearn. She makes a distinct hit with her stunning gowns, goddess-like beauty and bigness, and the unpretentious use of her smooth low voice.

The Hanlon Brothers appear in their peculiar and somewhat old-fashioned clown pantomime stunts, a brand of entertainment which smacks of the past decade, but which they handle with unexcelled deftness. The latter part of it is gruesome, childish and stupid. Who can see anything of point or value in the "Bell Boy's Dream?"

Charles B. Lawlor and his daughters, Mabel and Alice, are hard-working and speedy in a character turn entitled "Night and Day on the Sidewalks of New York," but there is a coarseness about their demeanor which detracts noticeably from their success. When the two girls exchange their hideous East Side disguises for the dainty attire of the Irish colleens and look as pretty as the limitations of nature vouchsafes them, the applause proves that what the public likes best after all, is the lightsome, fresh and bonny.

Elise, Wulff and Waldoff end the bill with a passable fantastic acrobatic turn. The motion pictures show the industry on a rice plantation.

D. R. L.

Burbank's New Leading Woman

Miss Elizabeth Stewart, who stepped into Miss Marjorie Rambeau's place at the head of the Burbank Stock Company beginning with the Sunday matinee of "The Fox" on—presumably—short notice, is giving a very smooth performance of the role of Kate Delaney. She is a distinctly feminine young woman with appealing mannerisms and an unusually sympathetic, yet carrying, voice. Local theatre-goers will await with interest her performance in a part of greater demands and opportunities than that of the daughter of the house in this highly successful comedy of Lee Arthur's.

D. R. L.

Marie Stuart, Orpheum Next Week

"The Midnight Sons"

"The Midnight Sons," a musical comedy of very ordinary quality, was produced at the Majestic this week by a company whose numbers made up for what it lacked in talent. Like the majority of musical comedies it lacked plot or unity of action and took the place of a rather good vaudeville show.

The music of the production was nothing extra but there were times when the audience got a good laugh with George Munroe and some of his partners. Some of the comedy fell flat and there were lines which were "over the head" of the audience.

As a whole the production, while pretentious as to scenery and number of people in the cast, was quite mediocre and not up to the standard which the Majestic has shown us this winter.

A good word should be said for the "Whirlwind dance" of Rosalie and Hilarian Ceballos. These two young people besides being eccentric dancers are aerobats of a high order and their dancing while calling out their full powers as acrobats and dancers is never suggestive. They received as was their due a genuine encore.

J. L. B.

Coming Attractions

Brimming with melody and effervescent with the satiric humor of George Bernard Shaw, "The Chocolate Soldier" will come to entertain local theatre-goers with the equipment of the Whitney Opera Company including the Whitney Opera Comique Orchestra on Sunday night and for the ensuing week at the Majestic.

Not only is the melodious score of this opera by Oscar Straus real music, overflowing with the appealing sensuousness of the Viennese love music and whirling, gypsy-like marches that, if one may judge by the fragments that have preceded its coming, its plot is consistent and plausible, and the characters are human beings doing human things in an explainable way.

Viennese in tone, "The Chocolate Soldier" finds its locale in the romantic Drageman Pass of Bulgaria, and Frederic C. Whitney has brought all the quaint costuming, embroideries and martial glitter direct from that region. The company includes Antoinette Kopetsky, the little Bohemian Grand Opera singer; Margaret Crawford, formerly of the Hof-Theatres of Berlin and Dresden; Ilon Bergere as the eoquettish Mascha; Arthur Grover, an English baritone, and Frank Belcher and Edmond Mulcahy who played the bouffe roles with the New York and Chicago organizations.

The "one best bet" at the Orpheum beginning Monday matinee, Feb. 13, of course, is Clayton White and Marie Stuart, in "Cherie." "Cherie" is by George V. Hobart and is a vaudeville classic that has played here before.

Cycling of the different sort is offered by the Five Auroras. They are a feature annually with the Tower circus in London and are booked through the Orpheum's affiliations abroad.

A negro ventriloquist is sufficiently rare to be an oddity, no matter how good or bad he may be, but in proffering Frank Rogers, the Orpheum proclaims a ventriloquist who, despite his color, can conjure up rivalry with most ventriloquists.

Kennedy, Gertie DeMilt and Kennedy compose one of those teams whose expertness in passing out airy persiflage the while they manipulate nimble heels makes a joy of good vaudeville. The consequence of this is that they are prime entertainers, without attempting to be anything more.

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
Fifth Week Beginning Sunday Matinee Feb. 12, of Lee Arthur's Sensationally Successful Comedy
"THE FOX"
Nights 25, 50, 75c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 10, 25, 50c.
Next—Special Permission of David Belasco, "Is Matrimony a Failure?"

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Beginning Sunday Night, Feb. 12
"THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER"
Popular Matinee Wednesday 50c to $1.50.
Nights and Saturday Matinee, 50c to $2.00.

THE AUDITORIUM AND SIMPSON AUDITORIUM
The Home of the Behymer Attraetions

TUESDAY NIGHT, FEB. 14.
Florenee E. Maybriek
On Prison Reform
Auspices W. C. T. U.
Prices 50, 75, $1.00, $1.50

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, FEB. 16.
Organ Recital with Soloists
Clarence Eddy, Organist
Lilly Dorn, Soprano;
Gertrude Ross, Pianist
Prices 50, 75, $1.00, $1.50

WEDNESDAY NIGHT, FEB. 15
Folk Songs and Hellenic Musie
Penelope Dunean and Raymond Duncar
Seat Sale Auditorium
Prices 50, 75, $1.00, $1.50

SIMPSON
THURSDAY NIGHT, FEB. 16
The Los Angeles Prima Donna
Soprano
Edna Dareh
Olive Hurlbut, violinist;
Will Garroway, Pianist
Prices 50, 75, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447
Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c
Beginning Monday Matinee Feb. 13
White & Stuart
In "Cherie"
Cyeling Auroras
From Tower Circus, London.
Frank Rogers,
Negro Ventriloquist
DeMilt & Kennedys,
That Jolly Bunch.
Bonita & Lew Hearn
"The Real Girl"
Lawlor & Daughters
"Sidewalks of New York"
Hanlon Brothers,
"Just-Phor-Phun"
Elise, Wulff and Waldorff
After the Football Game"
ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES

The good things still on the bill from last week will include Bonita, with Lew Hearn as her foil, Charles B. Lawlor and his singing daughters; the original Hanlons in their foolishhouse episode, "Just Phor Phun," and Elise, Wulff and Waldoff, whose athletics are so good that even their German comedy fails to mar them. New motion pictures will be a feature

---

So great has been the success of Lee Arthur's comedy drama "The Fox," that the fifth week will begin with the matinee Sunday.

While one of the great points of interest in this play is the puzzle which confronts the audience at the close of the second act, making everyone guess, and almost invariably guess wrong, who it was that committed a certain burglary, the fact that "The Fox" has attracted audiences of such dimensions for so long proves that its appeal is much broader than that of a mere puzzle play, for the secret must have traveled considerably, and yet the audiences do not diminish each week. It is the character studies with which Mr. Arthur has embellished his play that give it its stability with the public.

If you would laugh, prepare to be amused, for "The Girl in the Taxi" is to be seen in this city at the Mason for an engagement of one week, beginning February 27.

America was compelled to wait two years before "The Girl in the Taxi" was presented, owing to its success in Paris and Berlin, in, which two cities it scored immense hits. It was booked for four weeks in Chicago, in the belief that a month would serve in that city. Instead, it played to capacity business for five times four weeks and was taken away to Boston only because of contracts calling for its appearance in the latter city which could not be broken.

FLORENCE MAYBRICK TO LECTURE HERE

The W. C. T. U. of Los Angeles has secured in Mrs. Florence E. Maybrick a most interesting speaker. Mrs. Maybrick is now a resident of Highland Park, Ill., and in the past three or four years, in fact since very soon after her return to America, she has been engaged in the work of prison reform, and aiding prisoners to reach real manhood and womanhood.

In the prosecution of her life work she visits prisons, penitentiaries and reformatories, and from these visits come many needed improvements. Then she appeals to public sentiment by speaking in churches, before women's clubs, Chautauquas, civic clubs, etc. She has traveled through more than twenty-eight states of the Union and has spoken hundreds of times, always to big audiences and to the intense interest of her hearers. In pursuing her line of work she has received so many invitations to speak that it is only this season that she has been able to reach the Pacific Coast, and the W. C. T. U. of this city has engaged her for one lecture at the Auditorium on the evening of Feb. 14th, where she will tell the story of her life and give some inside facts of the penal institutions of England and America.

IOWA PICNIC

The twelfth annual Iowa picnic will be held at Eastlake Park, Los Angeles, Wednesday, February 22. If rainy the picnic will be postponed to Saturday, February 25. All resident and visiting Iowans and their friends are always welcome at this annual social reunion.

That Josef Hofmann's former recitals in this city are well and enthusiastically remembered was attested by the large crowd which his recital of Tuesday evening last attracted. Mr. Hofmann is a pianist of scholarly attainments and wide experience and his recital Tuesday evening exemplified all that is highest and best in the interpretation of music through the medium of his chosen instrument. The two Beethoven Sonatas which formed part of the first program section, as well as the "Rondo a Capricioso" and the "March" from "Ruines d'Athenes" received masterly treatment, though Mr. Hofmann was no less satisfying in the Chopin number or in the six pieces by Russian composers which closed the program. The second Hofmann recital which will be held this afternoon, will be reviewed at more length in these columns.

Richard Strauss' "Comedy with Music," "Der Rosenkavalier," was favorably received at its first production in Dresden, on January 26th. It is light opera of a good type and is likely to be a popular success.

A meeting was held in New York on the evening of January 25th for the discussion of the advisability of Grand Opera in English. Among those in attendance were many whose names are closely connected with opera productions in this country as well as prominent critics and teachers. The project received strong endorsement from most of the speakers, though Henry Russel, director of the Boston Opera House, expressed some skepticism as to the public appreciation of opera in our own tongue. Speaking for the affirmative were Charles Henry Meltzer, music critic of the "American"; Tito Ricordi, head of the great firm of Milan music publishers; John C. Freund, editor of "Musical America"; Reginald de Koven, critic and composer; Sylvester Rawling, Arthur Farwell and others. A paper was also read from David Bispham.

Alessandro Bonci, the tenor, who has deserted grand opera for the concert stage, is coming to Los Angeles for his first recital program on February 28. Bonci, in his first attempt at songs in English, has proven that he possesses a better English diction, enunciation and articulation than a great many singers who use no other language. So well has Bonci learned his art that he has but the barest trace of accent, and so excellent is the enunciation that there is no need of the book of words that is usually thoughtfully provided for Italian singers. He is a most popular man in the East, and has shown that the beauty of the bel canto school will never grow stale. Bonci is the sixth event on the Philharmonic Course.

Several years ago a most promising young vocalist, Miss Edna Darch, was heard in Los Angeles in concert and every one then remarked that she had an excellent future as a vocalist and musician before her. She left Los Angeles for Europe to study. She comes back with a reputation both as a musician and a vocalist. She had the honor of singing in recital throughout Germany and Austria under royal patronage. She has been a member of the grand opera at Prague, Berlin and Vienna, and now comes home to rest for a few months and visit her friends and family. She has consented to give a welcoming home and farewell recital on Thursday evening, February 16 at Simpson Auditorium, at which time she will be assisted by Olive Hurlbut, violinist, and William Garroway, pianist. An interesting program has been arranged as the following numbers will show:

June; Twilight; Across the Hills; Ecstacy (Walter Morse Rummel)
Prayer from "La Tosca....(Puccini)
Parlai ..... (Arditi)
Zigeunerweisen..(Pablo de Sarasate)
Meditation from "Thais"..(Massenet)
Feldeinsamkeit .....(Brahms)
Dein Augesicht; Der Nussbaum....
.....(Schumann)
Neue Liebe .....(Rubinstein)
Recitative Cantabile from "Mignon"
.....(Thomas)
Scene et Gavotte from "Manon"....
.....(Massenet)

On next Wednesday evening, February 15, at the Auditorium, Raymond and Penelope Duncan will present a unique evening of Hellenic music, uniting folk songs of England, Ireland, Scotland, China and Greece, the Hellenic sacred hymns and Chinese dramatic music by Penelope Duncan.

The singing of Penelope Duncan is considered unique, and both her art and her technique and her quality of voice and profound musical education aid her in giving to the musical world a new idea of the beauty of song. Her rendition of the music of the different races is given with fidelity to the various moods and quality of intervals. She masters more than forty-five distinct scale arrangements of various degree of tones which the folk songs demand. Her delivery is simple, suited as well to the unmusical public as to those who understand the exactitude of rhythm. Mrs. Duncan sings without accompaniment of any kind except for certain of the Greek Shepherd songs and Chinese dramatic songs, which she preludes upon the native flute of these countries.

Raymond Duncan will give an introductory lecture on his discovery of the laws of folk song and the relation of music to nature, assisting in the understanding of the ancient Hellenic ideals of art.

A popular modern piano recital will be given at Gamut Clug Auditorium on Thursday evening, February 21, by Miss Lillian Adams, pianist, whose work as soloist and teacher has earned her a high reputation. She willl be assisted by Mary LeGrand Reed, soprano, and Homer Grunn, accompanist.

"I want to be well informed," said the ambitious girl. "I want to know what's going on." "Well," answered Miss Cayenne, "I would suggest that you get one of those telephones that will put you on a line with five or six other subscribers."—Baltimore American.

Knicker—Jones and his wife are singing the "Marseillaise."

Bocker—Yes; they are bracing up to discharge the cook.—McDougall's Magazine.

Mother (at lunch)—Yes, darling, these little sardines are sometimes eaten by the larger fish.

Mabel (aged five)—But, mamma, how do they get the cans open?—Ideas.

A Resourceful Diplomat

The late Lord Salishury was careful not to confer too much authority on young men in diplomatic circles. On one occasion, according to London Tit-Bits, he sent an emissary to make some demands upon a certain republic. Before setting out, the emissary, to whom his lordship had explained the exact nature of the demands, desired to be informed as to the course to take if, after he had said everything, there was a refusal.

"Oh," answered Lord Salisbury, "this is not a matter in which we have the least thought of fighting. If the President refuses, why, you will simply have to come home again."

The emissary went, and had his say to the President of the republic, who blankly refused to give in; and the diplomat retired to think things over.

A few hours later he wrote to the president:

"I regret that your excellency does not see your way to recognize the justice of the claims which I have had the honor to present. I have now to say, on behalf of her Britannic Majesty's government, that unless your excellency yields on all points which I have named, it will be my painful duty to act on the second half of my instructions."

Under this vague and significant threat the President yielded at once. —Detroit News.

What Must the Salary Be?

BUTTON—SPALDING—On the 2d inst., at Dunalley, by the Rev. F. Taylor, B. A., Leonard Claude, second son of the late James Button, of Dunalley, to Elsie Olive, youngest daughter of Henry James Spalding, of Dunalley. The funeral will leave 147, Marquarie Street, for Cornelian Bay Cemetery on Saturday.—Tasmanian Mail.

It would be interesting to learn from the Hobart Income—Tax Assessor what sort of salary the Mail pays the man who explains away this sort of thing to the indignant bridegroom. —London Pink 'Un.

Famous Musician (angrily)—"I hear, sir, that you're boasting that you studied music under me?"

Young Musician (calmly)—"And so I did, sir, so I did—why, I occupied a room under your studio for nearly a month."—Tit-Bits.

Hospital Physician—Which ward do you wish to be taken to? A pay ward or a—

Maloney—Iny of thim, doc, thot's safely Dimocratic.—Puck.

"And you really think, doctor, that you must perform the operation today?" "Oh, yes. There may be no necessity for it tomorrow."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A correspondent is very shocked at hearing that the Lord Chamberlain has removed the ban from Salome. She thinks she was already too scantily clad.—Punch.

He (tired of dodging)—Would you marry a one-eyed man? She—Good gracious, no! He—Then let me carry your umbrella.—Boston Transcript.

"What is the height of happiness?" mused the philosophical girl. "Well, in my case," laughed the pretty June bride, "he is about five feet ten."—Judge.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.
Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

. . . DIRECTORY . . .

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS
ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DENTISTS
DR. G. J. CRANDALL, Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway, Suites 805-806. Phones—Home F 2075; Main 1946.

DRY GOODS
VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS
UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, 1603 S. Main. Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

MISFIT CLOTHING
JUNCTION TAILOR, Misfit Clothing Bought and Sold 844 South Main Street. A 3605

MEN'S FURNISHINGS
HARRIS & FRANK, 437 43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

PIANOS AND ORGANS
GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

PURITAS DISTILLED WATER
LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. Phones Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191.

REAL ESTATE
MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT
BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING
BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa 22562 Broadway 3773

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT-SPEED-SAFETY

Mt. Lowe The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

Pacific Outlook
La Follette's Weekly $1.60 Per Year

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

311 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Vol. X. No. 8 Los Angeles, California, February 18, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Both Right

PRESIDENT TAFT AND SPEAKER CANNON are not in accord on the Canadian reciprocity issue, and yet they are both right. The President is right in affirming that reciprocity with Canada will not seriously hurt the American farmer and Cannon is right in affirming that such reciprocity is in the interests of the manufacturer. Reciprocity will tend to reduce the cost of living, to make Our Lady of the Snows some day the bride of our Uncle Sam and, what is very much to the point, will tend toward that general lowering of tariffs in the interests of fair trade for which the public mind has long been ready and will soon become insistent. It is time to "rezpross."

Entirely Fitting

THE RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT adopted by the employes of the late Editor Dargie of the Oakland Tribune fittingly began with, "The best friend of man is he who sees some good in all men." Entirely true. There was some good in Dargie. In fact very much. Let God be his judge. His newspaper, however, is our affair and that has stood for all that no newspaper ought to stand for and has prospered by means that no newspaper ought to employ. Not even in the presence of death are we warranted in obscuring that power to judge betwixt good and evil that has cost unnumbered generations so much in blood and tears.

Exit Electoral College

THEODORE ROOSEVELT HAS SCORED one ahead of the foremost Republican progressive on record in that he has declared for the abolition of the electoral college, which means that we should vote for president and vice president direct just as, being residents of city or county, we vote for governor of our state. Why not? There is no greater need for electing our president by states than there is for electing our governor by counties. Here in California, we all know that an advisory vote for United States senator by district is not to be tolerated, and yet we elect presidents in much the same way. Talk it up Colonel. It will make better Americans of us all to vote directly for an American for president.

A Long Time Between Baths

OGDEN ARMOUR, ET ALS, lately arrested for violation of the anti-trust law, have made the astonishing plea that, inasmuch as they were given an immunity bath in 1905, that should exempt them from prosecution in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred eleven. Isn't six years between baths about long enough for meat packers to go, the more especially as evidence shows that they have been up to their old tricks ever since the last one? And would not a good scrubbing down, such as they give at Joliet, prove a more salutary sanitary measure than bath by immunity? It is moved and seconded that its efficacy be tried.

Invading Her Rights

IN SEVERAL STATES, notably New York, legislation has been proposed for the regulation of the female hat-pin, prescribing how long it shall be, how far it shall protrude from the "creation" it penetrates, etc.—all of which is clearly unconstitutional. Woman cannot vote but the constitution of her country protects her in her right to bare arms and a hat pin with a rhinestone head on it as big as a door knob, and the sharp end sticking out half a foot the other side, cannot be regarded as a concealed weapon. What if she does thrust out now and again an eye in a street car! She would rather be out of the world than out of fashion.

Oh! Yes They Can

"THE PEOPLE CANNOT BE CHECKED," declared President Taft at Springfield, Illinois, in speaking of the demand for reciprocity with Canada and a lowered cost of living. Oh! yes they can be, Mr. President. You checked them when you signed the Payne-Aldrich tariff iniquity, also when you clung to Ballinger and discharged Pinchot. You checked them but did not stop them. The American people can be checked but—bless their devoted heads!—they cannot have the kibosh put on them so that it will stay put while the standpat politician can.

Not Much

THE THREAT HAS BEEN MADE that unless the state and national governments ease up on taxing corporations widespread disincorporations will follow and partnerships will take their places. Not much. The fact that each member of a partnership, no matter how small his interest, is by law made liable for all partnership debts whereas in corporations liability attaches only in proportion to the stock held, will cause stockholders to think twice before disincorporating. Try some other bluff. That one is bu'sted already.

Will the Governor Please?

WILL GOVERNOR JOHNSON PLEASE ORDER Attorney General Webb to take charge of the remnants of the graft cases in San Francisco and see what can be done about them? He might also send a special message to the legislature asking for a credit at the state treasury to cover the expense. When a judge like Sewell of San Francisco characterizes the conduct of a case as a farce and a travesty on justice, as he plainly did in the Halsey trial, it is time to do whatever may be done to raise the prostrate form of justice from the gutter and restore her to her rightful pedestal.

The Fair

THERE ARE MANY WHO FEEL that the Panama-Pacific Exposition is not the thing that San Francisco most needs to rehabilitate her fortunes and give that city such a basis for a solid prosperity as its citizens deserve and should achieve, but that is of the past. Now there is but one course to pursue and that is for all portions of the state to take hold and help to make the exposition a success. The state will gain greatly by the fair and San Francisco will learn much from the experience. Take hold, everybody, and help.

Trousers Are Coming

WORD COMES FROM PARIS, whence all our feminine nightmares proceed, that trousers are inevitable. If so be it, yet in mercy may we hope that the seat thereof may fit somewhat better, for instance, than the trousers that the elephant wears?

Could Not Have Done Less

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD BE LIGHTLY CRITICISED, if at all, for appointing Duncan E. McKinley surveyor of the port of San Francisco. He could scarcely have done less for McKinley has done everything the President wished him to do. He campaigned for the nomination of Taft when Herrin did his best to pull him down, and he has gone into insurgent districts innumerable to carry to them an unwelcome and unprofitable standpat message. He has policed the progressive caucusses in order to keep the President advised of what was doing. Let us be reasonable. How could the President have done less than to give Dunk about the softest snap he had to bestow?

WORKS AND THE RECALL

The desperate straits to which the reactionary papers and their disciples in the Legislature are put to find anything t capital against the progressives shows in the uproar they made over Judge Works declaration that he was not in favor of the recall of the judiciary.

If the matter was of sufficient importance to deserve attention, it was for the concern of the progressives themselves, as the recall is part of their doctrine, and Judge Works was elected Senator by progressive Republican votes.

But the matter is fundamentallv of small importance. The recall was included in the Republican platform which was dictated by the progressive element of the party—but there is room for latitude of opinion on the scope of its application and on various details in its method. A great many progressives, particularly in the legal profession, believe that there is a peculiar quality in the line of service rendered by the judiciary that distinguishes it from other kinds of public service, making it unwise to leave judges subject to the possible intimidation of recall. While we do not agree with this theory at all, we cheerfully concede Judge Works' entire right, both as a citizen and as a progressive Republican, to give the public his views on the subject and to hold such views as he has expressed. But if Judge Works had come out with a statement that he thought the government of the state should be restored to the Southern Pacific, or that he favored a fifty percent increase in the tariff on woolen goods, we should not for a moment concede his right to hold such opinions and call himself a progressive Republican. It makes a vast deal of difference whether the point of disagreement is vital or incidental.

In this connection it may be well to say that the insurgent movement has been carried on thus far, and will be carried on, by men of independent temperament who do their own thinking, and who have a habit—of questionable wisdom sometimes—of saying just what they think. In the main there will be harmony among them, but it will not be the "Order-reigns-at-Warsaw" variety of harmony that is maintained by the machine. In the big essentials there will be unity, but in respect to details it will be every man for himself.

✣ ✣ ✣

NO PEONAGE ON LAND OR SEA

When mining crazes were rampant a ship docking at any port in California was not unlikely to be deserted by every able seaman on board that they might join the stampede to the mines in search of fortune. That day has long since passed and now if sailors desire to leave their ships, with portions of their salary owing them, it is for some reason other than that which once justified hunting deserting sailors as deserting soldiers are now hunted. The justification that once may have existed for section 644 of the Penal Code, which makes it a misdemeanor to entice away a sailor from his ship, does not now exist. An effort is now making to repeal this section. It should be repealed. What greater justification is there for making it a misdemeanor to entice away a sailor from his ship than a railroad brakeman from his train, a fruit picker from an orchard when the harvest season is on? All workers should abide their contracts, but not sailors more than others so far as state authority may go. No sailor will leave his job and the hostage he has given in the form of retained wages without such justification as would appeal to any freeman elsewhere engaged. We want peonage on neither land nor sea. Besides, the law is now and again perverted to a use not intended by its makers. It is invoked to prevent going to the rescue of a sailor restrained of his liberty much as laws against larceny have been invoked by proprietary Chinese to hold women of their race in their possession for immoral purposes. It is time to value the sea-man as being as much a man as a brake-man, a line-man, a motor-man or any other man. Section 644 lags superfluous on the statute books.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK

Published Every Saturday
311 East Fourth St.
Los Angeles, California,
by the

PACIFIC OUTLOOK COMPANY

Subscription price $1.00 a year in advance.
Single copies 5 cents at all news stands.

A. M. DUNN, Manager

C. D. WILLARD, A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing Editors

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The Pacific Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in every part of the city by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

✣ ✣ ✣

AN IRREPRESSIBLE PROBLEM

It is the destiny of the little fish to be swallowed by the big ones and not less so is it the destiny of suburban cities to be swallowed by the metropolitan centers which they surround. The need of the metropolitan center for its suburbs is constant and insistant and will prove the determining factor. Self preservation ordains it. The best citizenship of every city lives outside the city and no city can be healthfully self-governing without that best citizenship.

Per contra, the suburban citizen is an alien in his own bailiwick and a non-resident landlord and master as to his metropolis. His business being in the central city his heart is where his treasure is and he scarcely enters into the civic life of his residential suburb. There is hardly a large city in the United States that does not feel, and that is not suffering because of, this anomalous state of affairs. Therefore, instead of fighting off consolidation the minds of men should be directed to working the consolidation problem out in a way that will be just to the suburb and redemptive of the metropolitan center. There must be a way to do it.

Just now Oakland and San Francisco are at war on the issue. Oakland's commercial future depends upon the development of her harbor facilities, and yet every ship that docks at Oakland means one ship less to dock at San Francisco and Oakland knows that, once in San Francisco's power, her western water front would remain undeveloped indefinitely, and yet San Francisco's political life desperately needs the infusion of the blood of greater Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Piedmont and other communities. Fighting will not help the situation and some solution for the difficulty must be found that will at once protect the special interests of the suburbs and subserve the common interests of the metropolitan district.

This is not alone the problem of San Francisco and her environs, or of Los Angeles and hers. Boston is struggling with it and so are other cities in all parts of the United States of America. The logic of events predetermines the ultimate result, but not the method of reaching it. That requires real statesmanship, and what is so rare as that?

✣ ✣ ✣

MR. FELS, WHO IS IN EARNEST

It is a satisfaction to find that there are still extant in this sane and cautious world a few men that absolutely live up to their beliefs. Most of us are more or less suspicious of the things we claim to believe in. We know that our faith has its foundation not in logic but in enthusiasm, feeling and hope. It is an affair of the heart, rather than of the intellect, and we have trained ourselves to be always on guard.

Not so with Joseph Fels, who has been visiting the Coast during the past few weeks, talking, mixing, proselyting for the gospel of the Single Tax. When he believes a thing, he believes it all over. He is satisfied that the world can be made over, poverty abolished, crime and disease reduced to a minimum, ignorance swept off the map, and an infinite number of good things made to happen to us—how? Merely by putting all our taxes on land. Pretty good stunt in believing, hein?

However, Joseph Fels is not alone in believing all this. There are several hundred thousand others. The peculiarity of his case is that he lives up to his belief. Having acquired a fortune through the manufacture of a soap that works better in cold water than most of them do in hot, and enjoying now an income of $100,000 a year, he is able to allow himself the luxury of absolute sincerity. There are plenty of people who have money enough to do the same, only most of them have nothing that they feel is worth being sincere about. But men of the Fels type are becoming more common, and the world is beginning to move a little faster as a consequence. One of these days it will get to be "the style," and then things will come with a rush. Even now we advance agents of reform have to maintain a pretty brisk pace to keep ahead of the show.

With Mr. Fels travels Daniel Kiefer of Cincinnati—a remarkable specimen of good out of Nazareth, and in that same connection the fact should be noted that Fels comes from the corrupt and contented Philadelphia. Certainly there is hope when two such men come from two such cities. Kiefer is a reformer of the type that can see right through a hole in a mill stone. Thus it was largely through his influence that the single tax people took up the fight for direct legislation—as a means to an end. It was not enough to convince the people of the wisdom of the single tax; they must be given power to carry out their convictions. Furthermore, he understands how this works backward as a matter of education: that if the people acquire the power to act, their interest and enthusiasm in the work of government is awakened, and their minds are open to the problems of human betterment.

What the single tax people are now trying to do is to get their scheme in actual operation in some region of the United States as a practical illustration of its working benefits. To that end they took an active hand in the late campaign in Oregon, where forty-odd propositions were submitted to the voters, and they succeeded in securing the passage of a law by which counties are allowed to adjust their taxation in accordance with the wishes of their people as expressed in a referendum. The cities of Northwestern Canada have adopted the land tax plan, and Oregon is near enough to be able to watch the result and be affected thereby. Vancouver, for example, began nine years ago to drop off each year twelve and one-half percent of its tax on improvements, until now land alone bears the burden. This is not the Henry George theory complete, because Canada has a high tariff and many forms of internal revenue taxation, but it is an approximation; and it is one of the best features of this particular reform that it is serviccable in pieces, and is not, like Socialism, essentially an integer. Thus the Lloyd-George English budget applies it in a dose of one-fifth: all English land is valued in the new Domesday Book and assessed to the owner at a penny in the pound (which is about what we pay the city under a dollar limit and a 40 percent valuation), but whenever a sale is made the government collects one-fifth of the increase, after allowing full value for any improvement made in the land in the meantime—such as for example, drainage, clearance, etc. This not only provides a considerable revenue, but also tends to open up land for actual use. The real horror of the situation in England lay in its huge population huddled in the cities, and the great areas of unproductive land held by the aristocracy for amusement or speculation.

We find ourselves, like many other people, ready and willing to follow the single taxer through the first phase of his plan, but not to its ultimate conclusions. That the enormous and rapid increment in the value of land in and about cities, which is the creation of the community and not of the individual owner, should be shared by the community and not accrue to the sole profit of the owner, seems reasonable enough; although it must be remembered that land is not the only form of wealth that takes perquisite from increase of population. But the climax of the George theory is that by dumping all burdens of taxation on land alone—burdens which tend toward rapid increase as the communal spirit develops among men—the holding of land for anything else than actual profitable use would cease, there would be no speculation in land, one would not be able to hold his home place for sentiment if another could use it for a store—this is offered as illustration not argument—and the entire income from the use of land would pass into the hands of the community that had made the income possible.

Not land only but all forms of tangible and intangible wealth must fall back for most of their value on the existence of a community about them. It is an engaging thought that since these values are communal, possession should be common. The single taxer sets up various forms of distinction between land and other kinds of wealth. Indeed he does not admit that land is wealth, any more than air or the ocean is. Here is where the Socialist parts company with him. If you nationalize land, why not all the means of production, he asks.

But for all that, Joseph Fels and his coworkers are helping to throw light on the privilege of the few that are destroying the rights of the many.

\+ \+ \+

THE WOMEN DID IT

The recall of Mayor Gill of Seattle was an excellent piece of work. He was elected about a year ago on a liberal platform. He had the support of the saloons, the tough element, the political machines of both parties and the "boobster" crowd that did not want "business" interfered with. Because of its nearness to the frontier of Alaska and its large traffic with the sailor man, Seattle is very much inclined to be "liberal," and those who ventured to oppose Gill running on a platform of that sort made little headway. The people thought they wanted a tough town, and "Hi" Gill, as they call him at home, was just the man to give it to them.

Seattle's point of view was pretty well illustrated by an experience Senator Frye of Maine had in that town about twenty years ago, when there was active rivalry between Seattle and Tacoma. He told the story to a group of senators, among whom was Stephen M. White, who afterwards retold it in Los Angeles. Frye said: "A reception committee showed me about the town, very proud of its growth and enterprise. Finally they brought me to a big building, like a hotel, and right out in the open, which was a combination saloon, gambling hell, dance house and red light emporium. It was elegantly gotten up and running at full blast. I was filled with horror, and felt it my duty to do a little plain talking, 'Now, my good friends,' I said, 'You seem to admire this place; but I don't. I think it is a disgrace and a detriment to your city. It corrupts the young and attracts criminals. You ought to drive it out immediately.' There was an awkward silence and the committee seemed crestfallen and unhappy. Finally one of them looked up and said: 'But, Senator, you don't seem to understand the situation at all. Don't you see that if we were to drive it out, Tacoma would get it?'"

After a year of the wide-open system under Hi Gill, things had grown so bad that the decent element had hopes that the people would be ready for a change and they undertook a recall. It is evident now that, as the case stood, they were destined to disappointment and defeat. The majority of the male voters of Seattle still wanted a tough town, even with the horrible results in the way of grafting police and an official red light district that the Gill administration was giving them. But in the meantime the whole civic situation underwent a change by the passage of a votes for women amendment to the state constitution. When the recall issue came to be tried out, the ballots of the women saved the day and the tough town business came to a sudden end.

It is not to be wondered at that the liquor element everywhere opposes the right of women to vote. Let the issue be drawn anywhere between the tough town, full of gambling and carousing, and a decent town, where youth and the home are protected, and who can doubt how the women will vote? There may be some room for argument over the question of whether women, with all their burden of domestic duty, should be called upon to carry this new responsibility, but there is no ground for debate on the question of whether they will vote for the right on the greatest issue that occurs in government—the issue of public morals. There will be in every community a small percentage of women who will fall in with the so-called "liberal" point of view, and there may be women who will vote as their husbands order them or persuade them, and there will be some bad women—although experience has shown that the latter will not vote save under compulsion—but the total of all these is far below that of the women whose chief interest in the city government will be for decency and good order and practical civic progress. On any issue in which these are at stake, a city might wisely choose to abide by the vote of the women rather than that of the men.

\+ \+ \+

A STATE CONSTABULARY

A bill has been introduced into the legislature providing, at least tentatively, for a state constabulary. It ought to be. Our method of establishing justice and preserving order is, so far as the state is concerned, clumsy, costly and inefficient. It ought not in all cases to be left to the several counties and their peace officers to speak and act in the name of the People of California. Often the people of a county are only slightly interested in the detection and punishment of criminals, whereas the interests of the state are direct and paramount. Robbers coming from far away hold up and rob a train in some county merely because convenient for the enterprise. They do not have their homes there. Are in the county and out of it between two days, and yet the onus of the crime and the onerousness of the detection and punishment of it are heaped upon that unfortunate county merely because of the accident that the crime happened there instead of in any one of a hundred other places perhaps as advantageous. Is it small wonder that such counties are loth to bankrupt themselves with the cost of running down and convicting such culprits?

Now when the state starts out after criminals it has to go with a company of National Guards, which is exactly how not to do it. The guardsmen are untrained for that service and the expense is enormous. What is needed is a band of trained man-hunters in charge of a competent chief, ready to be called into service when needed for the apprehension of that class of criminals that rob and waylay and infest first one community and then another as they pass from county to county and state to state. To supplement the state constabulary the attorney general should be empowered and required to assume full control of the prosecution of criminals charged with offenses peculiarly against the state rather than against the county wherein they operate. Thus equipped the state would soon assert its dignity and power and root out and drive out, or imprison, marauders and highwaymen, roving burglars, bank and train robbers. A state constabulary will yet become a recognized part of every state government.

The discovery of 60,000 new worlds m[illegible] us all the sadder that the ship s[illegible] crowd, the Sugar Trust and Senat[illegible] mer happened to light on this o[illegible] State Journal.

POLITICAL TABLE TALK

By the Watchman

Danger of Revulsion The Watchman is a reformer. His schedule of reformation measures runs like the royal line of Banquo beyond the crack of doom, but his advice both to the administration at Sacramento and to the reform forces in the legislature is to beware how they outrun the consensus of opinion of the people of California and so induce that revulsion of feeling to be counted on as one of the most dependable of human characteristics. Public sentiment ebbs and flows like the tides and the higher the flow the greater the recoiling ebb. Hope for progress lies in the expectation that the ebb may not quite equal the flow and the way to prevent that is not to flow too high upon the crest of any reform wave. The tardiness of Lincoln was a thorn in the flesh of Sumner, but Lincoln was, as he himself quaintly expressed it, at all times only about three weeks behind Sumner. Those were very precious weeks. They enabled the sustaining sentiment of the country to catch up and keep pace with the forward movements of the wise, prudent, sagacious, progressive "Father Abraham." If the forces of reform at Sacramento are wise they will halt just short of where further progress along certain lines is sure to cause serious divisions in the ranks of the reformers themselves. It is good, now that we are in power, to take all the advanced ground that we can fortify and hold, but not more. There appears to be at least some danger of going farther and faring worse. Something should be left to be done two years hence.

A Few Things More While We Are at It The Watchman does not wish to be understood as favoring a general halt all along the line of progress. The advance already made is splendid and should be held at all hazards and some more forward marches made. The administration and legislature ought not to fail of redeeming still other pledges in the party platforms. The merit system should be introduced for filling subordinate offices. Administrative functions should be much centralized and responsibility fixed so far as can be without changing the constitution. Amendments for changing the constitution in the interests of a shortened ballot should be prepared and submitted. The criminal procedure needs to be reformed, but the abolition of institutions may well await two years of experience on the part of those now in office. They will then be able to see more clearly and speak more advisedly as to the needs of the state.

Transformations in Governments Not only in California but in many other states in the Union the sentiment is gaining ground that the national constitution affords a much better model for republican government than do the state constitutions. New York has made some progress along such lines and is likely to make more. The department with a single head, responsible to the governor as a cabinet officer is responsible to the president, commends itself to sober second thought as preferable to a commission with a divided responsibility, interests widely diffused giving local interests rather than the many states are making ready tice a reward along lines here in railroad if California can lead the picker f will be to her glory, but season ence will be time enough ere should be a department of prisons and reformatories, of hospitals, agriculture, justice, engineering, purchases and disbursements, of public health and of education. Perhaps others. Now is a good time to prepare and submit constitutional amendments making such reforms possible that we may expend the next two years in talking them over and the two following years in working them out. This will give public sentiment a chance to keep pace with the work of reform so that what shall be gained may be held.

The NEW SKIPPER

Plenty More in the Hold, Cap't

Adroitly Done But Did It Pay? Two years ago Mr. Herrin succeeded, through the valued services of the ever serviceable Wright, in handing California a particularly juicy lemon in the form of a railroad regulation law. No doubt the consummation was appropriately signalized with hot duck and cold bottle and full many a quirk and gibe, but did it pay? In the long run was it worth while? The sober, reasonable, moderate sentiment of the state stood, two years ago, for the Stetson bill. The state would have been satisfied with it. That phase of the railroad issue would, had the Stetson bill been enacted, hardly have entered into the campaign. As it was the whole state was exasperated by the substitution of the Wright for the Stetson measure with the result that, in only two short years, a more drastic railroad regulation law has been enacted than was contemplated by the Stetson measure of two years ago. With all his sagacity Mr. Herrin failed to understand the temper of the people or to read aright the signs of the times. The politician seldom looks ahead, the statesman seldom fails to.

Don't Abolish the Printing Office It is not surprising that legislators, and others, get so angry with the State Printing Office that they would like to kick it out of existence, but it would not be the part of wisdom to do it. The state would soon find itself at the mercy of a combination of Sacramento printers as costly as the badly managed state printing office has been ever since it was established. No private firm can afford to own a plant equal to the demands of a legislative session for which there would be so very much less employment during twenty-one months out of every twenty-four. The remedy is to take the state printing office out of politics, put it under the merit system as to subordinates and under a superintendent responsible to the governor. No form of public service is likely to be as efficient and economical as the best form of private service can show, but only better at its best than any form of private service is likely to prove in the long run. There is no greater reason for despairing of the state printing office than there was of despairing of the state railroad commission. The thing to do is to find a way of getting a good management and no management can be good that is forced by political pressure to make the state printing office a home for incurables and a haven for those afflicted with senile decay. That is and ever has been a principal cause of inefficiency in the state printing office.

Demands of the State Forester State Forester Homans wants two hundred thousand dollars for the protection of private property in this state. Doesn't that jar you? The state owns no forests. It has some thousands of acres that should be forested, but it does not, outside the Big Basin Park, own so much as a wood lot. Of the forests of California about 42,000 square miles belong to the United States government and the remainder, nearly 24,000 square miles, belong to corporations and private interests, and yet California, without ownership of hardly so much as a clump of trees, has a paramount interest in all that is owned by individuals, corporations and even the national government. Both the private ownership and the ownership of the national government are as trustees for the people of California, and it is time California were insisting on that trusteeship being exercised in good faith. The national government is doing much for the protection of its forest holdings. The private owners are doing much less if not next to nothing. These owners want their forests exempted from taxation. It would be a wiser policy to subject them to a special tax for the preservation of the forests taxed. When, six years ago, the present forestry law was enacted, the friends of it were glad enough to get on the statute books any kind of forestry legislation at all, so hostile were the dominating political interests and, but for Governor Pardee and his subordinates, not so much as a beginning would have been made. Gillett, having had a logger's education and no other, was averse to strengthening the law and so conservation marked time during his administration. It is now time to go forward. Two hundred thonsand dollars for the next two years, to be expended in preserving the forests of California from destruction by fire, will not be too much, but the land that gets the benefit should bear the expense or most of it. That is a good place to stick a peg.

District Attorney in Divorce Cases A bill has been introduced in the legislature providing that district attorneys shall appear in all divorce cases in order to represent the public interest. Of course it should be the business of the courts to safeguard the public in-

(Continued on page 12.)

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Alas for San Diego! We have had for some time a suspicion that something was wrong with San Diego. Its vote last August was not at all what it should have been. It re-elected the impossible Wright—a man who talks progressive and votes reactionary—to the legislature. And it threw itself without reserve into the preposterous campaign to elect a rich man, who was nothing but a rich man, to the United States Senate. It all looked bad, but, all told, was nothing to this latest break, this voting a fifty year franchise for Spreckles street car system. The vote of last Tuesday has this merit and advantage. It shows pretty clearly just what is the matter with San Diego: it is reduced to the pitiful rank of a "one man town." Over 15 years ago J. D. Spreckels of San Francisco took over the Babcock interest in the Coronado Hotel on a mortgage and a bad debt. Then he and his crowd began systematically to pick up and take over things as they became available at low figures during the long period of San Diego's depression: the water company, the shipping and storage interests, the street car system, choice pieces of real estate here and there, newspapers, utilities, politicians and generally speaking the "control" of things. It is not a wholesome proposition for any one man to be the whole thing in a community, and it is possible only in a small, isolated and provincial community. There is an element in San Diego that is not proud of the city's position as a Spreckles satrapy, but they, it seems, are not numerous. In the final line-up, he had the commercial organizations, all the newspapers and other publications, except the one owned by E. W. Scripps, the political organizations, the labor union leaders and also not a few of the Socialists. Incredible as it seems, all these people were out working for the 50-year franchise charter amendment. Spreckles had refused a 25-year franchise on the ground that he could not finance extensions on so short a term. Joseph Fels, who happened in San Diego just at that time, offered to take the 25-year franchise and buy out the Spreckles interests at an arbitration value, but the offer was refused. Enemies of democracy will no doubt point to the San Diego incident as proof of the fact that the people are not to be trusted with power; and the argument is sound as far as it goes Nothing human is perfect and democracy makes mistakes. It is only a question of percentages. Here was a case where big business had succeeded in getting such a strangle hold on an entire community that all judgment of future needs and of the rights of their successors seems to have been choked out of them. Only under extraordinary conditions could such a result work out. However, the fight is not over yet. There are still chances to remedy the mistake. And there is a day coming, not more than ten or fifteen years ahead of us, when the courts will hold that no body of people has power to sign away their own and their successors' rights to public property for almost indefinite periods of future time.

Garbage That Is Not a Nuisance: To Minneapolis must be credited a new idea in the matter of garbage treatment. The Board of Health, which has charge of the collection and disposal of garbage, three years ago adopted a rule that no garbage would be received from the householder unless it was dry and wrapped up in paper. It took a lot of missionary work and some fighting to bring people to this program, but now they are used to it, the Minneapolis housewives say they would not think of going back to the old filthy system. All garbage is drained and rendered reasonably dry. The morning papers, after they are read, are sent to the kitchen and kept conveniently ready, and when a peck or so of garbage has accumulated it is rolled up in a bundle with several thicknesses of paper. It may be tied up with a string or the ends curled in, as the authority of the kitchen may prefer. It is then put in the garbage can. The latter is under this system kept perfectly clean and free from smell. There are no flies, and even the dogs soon get discouraged. When the bundles are dumped in the wagon they rarely break open, and there is seldom any odor or nastiness about the wagon. The whole transaction is sanitary and wholesome, instead of being dangerous and disgusting as under our present system Other cities are beginning to adopt the Minneapolis plan, and some health authorities hold that it is only a matter of a short time when it will be put into effect by ordinance in most of the cities of the Union. This brings us one step nearer toward getting rid of Mr. Fly, and with his departure will go a quantity of disease.

Saving Shade Trees in Buffalo: In 1908 Buffalo adopted into its charter a provision for control by the Park Commission over the shade trees on the city streets. A forester was appointed and war was straightway declared on the caterpillars that were destroying the elms at a rapid rate. Among other expedients adopted was that of paying school children 10 cents a quart for cocoon eggs. Each quart contains about 50,000 eggs, and 60,000 quarts were paid for in one month, which disposed of three billion of the pests. Twenty thousand trees were treated, and many that were nearly gone were nursed back to life. It costs $65,000 a year to maintain Buffalo's forestry department, but it will soon come to pass that no city in the Union will begin to compare with Buffalo in the number and beauty of its shade trees.

Narrow Roadways in Des Moines: The mayor, or head commissioner, of Des Moines calls upon the people of that city to begin a paving campaign. Less than one-seventh of the 600 miles of streets, he says, is paved, and if paving the full width of the street is attempted the burden will be too great. "There is no reason," he says, "why pavings from 18 to 22 or 24 feet in width in purely residential districts will not serve all the purposes of the pavings 30 and 40 feet wide. We can then have the parkings of double the present width, filled with trees, grass and flowers." This system will apply admirably in California cities, where the parking remains in commission all the year through.

Swell Piggies: Aristocratic and elegant Pasadena has established a municipal piggery in connection with its municipal sewer farm. It collects its own garbage and feeds its own pigs, sorting over the garbage carefully, to make sure that the pigs are kept in perfect health.

Dodging the Trust: The two paving concerns that have been doing most of the work at Washington have consolidated and raised the price about 20 per cent. Whereupon the commissioners applied to Congress for funds to construct and operate a municipal paving plant.

Danger of Officialdom: Frederick Law Olmsted thus describes what he calls the "Disease of Bureaucracy": "Every official who gets out of the well worn ruts of established routine encounters obstacles and opposition, hurts the feelings of his neighbors and friends, and gets little credit and no thanks. After he has suffered this experience a good many times, and found that he can accomplish but little good by these individual sallies, he is apt to get tired and to settle down into the habitual official attitude of 'not looking for trouble.'"

Convicts Taste in Literature: The state public library of Vermont has a number of traveling libraries, and the state's prison constitutes a station in the chain. This arrangement has existed for three years The latest report of the library commissioner contains the information that not only are the books sent to the prison given the very best of care, but the choice of reading matter is of a considerably higher grade than that of most of the other stations. Yet Vermont is a state where the general standard of intelligence is unusually high.

Tuberculin Test Legal: The Supreme Court of Wisconsin has sustained the legality of the Milwaukee ordinance requiring that all milk dealers should show certificates from reputable veterinaries of tuberculin tests for their cows. The health authorities of the state contend that 20 per cent of the cases of tuberculosis among children arise out of the use of milk from cows that are affected, and they regard this decision as one of great importance in the fight against tuberculosis.

A Good Bad Example: Galesburg, Illinois, will do service for a time as an example of municipal mismanagement of utilities. The city has its own lighting plant, to which extensive repairs and changes were necessary. Somebody blundered, the new machinery was not ready on time, and the result was two weeks of darkness for the streets, which interfered with business and made policing difficult.

Bright Idea in Chicago: They have discovered a new way to get rid of snow in Chicago. Instead of loading it in cars and sending it out of town where it must be unloaded at considerable expense, it is put into trains of returning "empties" for the southern states. Soon after the cars get over into Dixie, the snow begins to melt and there is no expense for unloading.

Bonds for Small Investors: Toledo is discussing ways and means of getting its city bonds direct to the small investor without any rake-off for the middle man. It is proposed to make the issue in $100 dollar pieces, and give the small buyer preference. Trial will be made on an issue of $110,000 for the building of a public market.

Protecting Water Courses: The town of Henderson, Kentucky, was recently haled into court by the state authorities and fined $50 for allowing its sewage to run into a water course. This will compel a complete reorganization of the sewer system of Henderson, but the state is determined to keep its rivers and creeks clean.

Low-priced Gas: The people of Springfield, Massachusetts, are paying only 74 cents per thousand for gas, and yet they are agitating for a municipal plant.

Electric Fire Motors: A hook and ladder wagon and a chemical engine and squad wagon now in use in Springfield, Massachusetts, are equipped with electric motors, instead of gasoline. They give satisfaction. As far as known this is the only instance of this form of motive power for fire apparatus.

Looking Ahead: Figuring that the life of a shingle roof is not much over ten years Boston has decreed that all such roofs must be replaced by fireproof material before the year 1920. This is to remove a common cause of fire.

Milwaukee Municipal Reference Library: The sum of $5000 is added to the annual library appropriation of Milwaukee by the city council, to cover the expense of maintenance of a municipal reference library, which will be located in the City Hall, but will be in charge of the library authorities.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

New Foulard Silks

FASHION'S favorite silk for the development of dressy gowns for the coming Summer season is Foulard. We are showing a very comprehensive assortment which includes the newest designs and colorings. A fashionable woman's wardrobe will not be complete this season without at least one dress of Foulard.

Prices Range
85c to $1.25

The New Order of Things

By the Doorkeeper

The People Coming Into Their Own —Sane Reformers at the Capitol— Legislators Should Know Their Constituents' Wishes as to Consolidation.

Sacramento, Feb. 15.—A revolution is in progress in the state of California, and few people seem to realize the fact. Never before in the history of any state in the Union, in the humble judgment of the Doorkeeper, has a historic scheme of legislation been so violently disturbed and finally overturned as during the first six weeks of the legislative session of 1911 in this state.

The reactionaries are powerless. Chaos reigns in their camp. The wrong Mr. Wright sits back and half-snarles a lonesome "no" when his name is called on the proposal to give the people a voice in framing legislation. Eddie Wolfe has been made sick, literally. "Constitutional John" Curtin plays battledore and shuttlecock with his convictions. Topsy-turveydom has conquered Sacramento.

"Where am I at, Mr. President?"

"What hit me, Mr. Speaker?"

"Won't somebody let me object?"

And then the galleries, wherein sit the common people, set up a horse laugh.

The common people—they are at the bat at last. Occupants of the bleachers for years, they are now permitted to take part in the game. And, gracious, how they are scoring runs! And so easily! Umpire Wallace, he sits back and lets the erstwhile "mob" run things. Umpire Wallace used to be one of the mob, you remember.

Bell, he of political cold storage fame, who used to cool his heels in the corner of Warren Porter's pasture, while Eddie Wolfe and Frank Leavitt, the friend of the racetrack gamblers, ate all the grass, nibbles away contentedly on the freshest and most delectable shoots, leaving the old-time pets to graze upon the husks.

Hewitt threshes out the grain, Gates gathers the roses, Thompson saws fine big chunks of wood in silence.

Wolfe and Wright, they groan. It is "too mutch," as Josh Billings said.

Reform Not Run Mad

Seriously—and it is a time to be serious—reform occupies the spotlight. And, Judge Works to the contrary, reform has not run mad. There never was a saner lot of men in action than those who have taken possession of their inheritance in Sacramento. I fear Judge Works has not yet quite caught on to the fact that this is a revolution, not the Mexican variety, either. The people WILL, and that is all there is to it.

And that brings me to the proposition to recall the judiciary. I have been reading the newspapers, and not alone the few with painted faces that have sold themselves to the highest bidders, just as some creatures made in the image of their Creator have sold themselves ever since man first lusted for things forbidden. I have been reading the honest, virtuous, unpurchased and unpurchasable press of the state—the newspapers of the interior towns, the newspapers that have consciences constructed along the lines not long ago described by Reynold Blight. These are the newspapers which reflect the real public ment in California. These are the the newspapers which see in tice issner a self-seeking boss, in Earl a creator of sordid railroa eedily after pelf, in Chespicker an anarchist who would season sacred foundations of the Frank Heney the reincarnation of the first apostle of Retribution with a capital R, in Franklin Hichborn a fool possessed of a sharp pencil, and finally in Hiram Johnson a worse than bomb-thrower.

What do these newspapers say? Whose sentiments do they reflect? They say that California's government must be restored to the people—which means that there must be a revolution, and they reflect the sentiments of the average man—and the average man outnumbers the Special Interest-bossed creature several to one.

No, Judge, reform has not run mad. A judge upon the bench is a mere man only, and in some cases we find him to be a man of that type we do not care to see projecting his legs beneath our table. We find him, in certain other cases, to be a man whose experience in the trial of cases is reckoned by the use of a zero mark. We find him to be, in altogether too many cases (this appears to be in line with the sentiment of the common people as reflected in the unpurchasable newspapers of the state) the tool of the very forces which the people have routed on other fields. We ask him to administer justice, and then we find, in a case here and there, that a comma, or a misspelled word, a failure to note that a man was a constable when he was a constable, or some equally vital fact, has so upset the equilibrium of some bench that its occupants—oh, pshaw, what's the use? We all know that four-fifths of the people are ready to apply the boot to some of their judges and that the legislature and the Governor are ready to clear the path to the seats of the mighty.

There's no use trying to beg the question. Judges, like district attorneys who kill off the blind pigs and wink at graft in higher places, must be prepared to take their medicine. There is nothing particularly sacred about a judge. If he gets drunk and disorderly, neglecting his business for years, should he be immune from criticism just because he wears a robe instead of a pair of overalls?

And continuing this desultory scrap of lop-sided conversation about the recall of the judiciary, hasn't it been in force, as a matter of fact, for years? Have we forgotten the case of a certain judge who was recalled by the Southern Pacific railroad because of his decision in the Fresno rate case? Or was it some other rate case? Did we ever hear of judges going to Boss This or Boss That to find if they could be nominated for a higher bench. Hasn't the spirit of the recall been alive ever since the Southern Pacific first reached up and grabbed the bench?

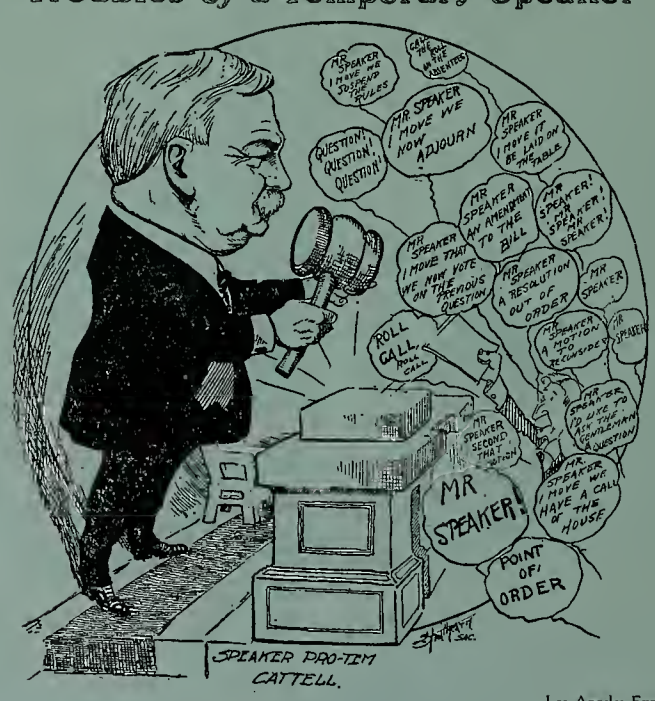
We Get It

As I started to say, there will be opportunity in the future for the people to exercise the right to reach up to the bench themselves, if they decide that they want that right. The legislature surely is going to give them a chance to say whether they wish that privilege. The provision for the recall as handed to the people by this legislature will apply to judges as to other elective officials. The sham and hypocrisy of the fight against this particular feature of the recall has been torn away.

That Word "Representative"

I had a brief talk the other day with William Denman, a lawyer of high standing from San Francisco, a man who has shown his disposition to help progressive movements more than once. Mr. Denman is a strong advocate of a non-partisan judiciary. He drew the measure known as the "Denman bill," which failed of passage in the last of the Southern Pacific's legislatures two years ago. This bill provided for the printing on the official ballot of the names of candidates for the judiciary without designation as to political affiliations.

Now comes Mr. Denman with a proposal, not yet put in concrete form, so far as I am at this hour able to learn, to have all candidates for the bench selected by the lawyers of the state. It is as near to an utterly impossible proposition as a half-radical like myself can imagine. Of course Mr. Denman opposes the application of the principal of the recall to the judiciary. I believe he fears that the adoption of this measure would result in the establishment of a pure democracy in place of the "government by agents" that we now have.



On account of his high standing Mr. Denman finds some sympathizers, as does Charles S. Wheeler, another eloquent opponent of the democratic idea. But the members of the Legislature, excepting Senator Wright, Clyde Bishop, reactionary from Orange county, and a few others, are beginning to comprehend the fact that if they are to be regarded as representatives of the people they must represent the people, not their own personal views as to what should or should not be.

Need for a Fight

This brings me back again to my good friend, Senator Lee C. Gates, who will make a fight against the plan for the consolidation of city and county government for Los Angeles and vicinity, fathered in the upper house by Senator Hewitt. Senators Hewitt and Hurd are for consolidation. Senators Gates and Thompson are against it, up to date. If the masses of voters want consolidation they should have it. It seems to me that if public sentiment in Los Angeles is strongly for consolidation, Senators Gates and Thompson will not act as representatives, but as agents of the people, if they continue to oppose the scheme.

We are getting nearer to the idea that representative government means government by men who correctly represent the views of their constitu-

Troubles of a Temporary Speaker

Los Angeles Express

WE ARE NOW LOCATED IN OUR OWN NEW BUILDING

446-448 So. Broadway

Steinway, Kranich & Bach, Sohmer, Kurtzmann, Jewett & Lafargue Pianos.

Cecilian Player Pianos.

GEO. J. BIRKEL COMPANY

ents when such views are ascertained. I am therefore moved to suggest that the residents of the senatorial districts which have sent these two gentlemen to the Legislature get busy and set forth in unmistakable terms their opinions in the matter. It is only fair to both of them that they be made acquainted with popular sentiment in their districts. If the people want consolidation and do not demand it in terms that cannot be misunderstood, they have only themselves to blame if they fail to secure it. If they do not want it, let them signify their wishes. At any rate, it is not fair that the Senators from Los Angeles should be left in the dark as to the attitude of the masses of people on this important question.

Last week I tried to sound a note of warning in regard to this matter. I trust the readers of the Pacific Outlook will pardon me for my apparent excess of zeal in touching the matter again. Here are two men who unquestionably are conscientiously opposed to consolidation. I believe they both want to represent their constituents fairly. It is obviously up to their constituents to advise them as to their desires. And time is the essence, etc.

Boom for Woman's Suffrage

The result of the recall election in Seattle has given the cause of woman's suffrage great impetus in Sacramento. The fact that a bad mayor was pulled down out of office through the votes of women has demonstrated to the satisfaction of many men here that the women may be depended upon to vote with intelligence on a great moral issue, at least. Some of the members of the legislature who voted to submit the suffrage amendment to the people declared at the time that they would vote against it at the polls. At least two of them have stated, since the Seattle election, that they were satisfied that women had sense enough to vote right with a clearly defined issue before them, and that they would stand with the supporters of this particular reform.

Election Reform

The party column and the party circle, which gave Los Angeles county another four years of John D. Fredericks, among other things, will be banished from election ballots in the future. We are to return to the original Australian ballot. On this ballot will appear the names of all candidates for office in this wise:

FOR GOVERNOR

John Adams, Democrat.
William Brown, Republican.
Henry Campbell, Socialist.
George Downing, Prohibitionist.

The voter will be compelled to use the rubber stamp opposite the name of each candidate of his choice. He cannot vote a "straight" ticket. There will be no danger of sacrificing the head of the ticket because of quarrels over candidates for local office. And when the voter comes to the names of candidates for judicial office, he will find on the ballot nothing to indicate whether a man be a Republican, a Democrat or a Socialist. This is one of the greatest reforms which will be consummated by this legislature. If the people secure nothing but the Initiative, the Referendum, the Recall (including the recall of judiciary), and the Australian ballot, they should fall to their knees and thank Herrin and the Southern Pacific for having forced the election of the present body of lawmakers.

I am beginning to believe that the best thing that can happen to a people is to have it driven to desperation. Then something will be doing. One fights hardest when his back is against the last wall.

COMES FIRST IN STATE SENATE

Los Angeles Express

Judiciary Should be Subject to Recall

Writer Gives Arguments in Favor of Its Application.

Editor Pacific Outlook:

Dear Sir: I am writing this to say a few words in favor of the recall of the judiciary.

Judges are human like other individuals and are just as liable to commit errors as any other class of people. To prove this assertion one has only to follow the course of history in order to be convinced.

It was the judiciary that condemned Socrates to drink the fatal hemlock. It was the judiciary that upheld every devilish act of Henry VIII of England. The Bourbons of France at the height of their cruelty and debauchery were sustained and encouraged by the judiciary. The judiciary sustained Charles I of England in all his meanness and kept England in a turmoil for nearly twenty years; and so it was the judiciary that said that slavery was right in this country and thus precipitated the greatest war of all time.

The idea that the judiciary is infallible and different from other people is an inherited superstition handed down from the days when kings created the judges, and as the kings were possessed of divine rights so were their judges.

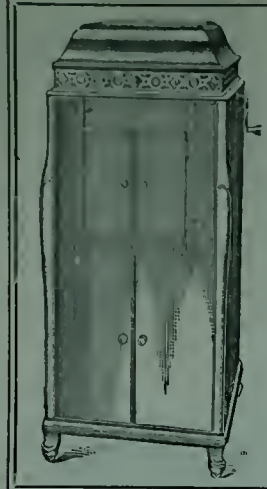
The removal of an officer by impeachment is almost impossible in this country as many instances have proved. First the articles of impeachment must be proposed by the lower house of the legislative body and then the trial must be conducted by the upper house and a two-thirds majority is required for a verdict. Politics is always injected into these trials and it is seldom that the two houses of a legislative body are in complete harmony.

To prove the futility of impeachment proceedings one has only to follow these trials in the various States where the number of convictions are as scarce as hen's teeth.

Many of us who formerly lived in Kansas still recall the case of old Judge Bodkin who was acquitted by the Kansas Senate after he had been proved guilty of almost everything in the category of crime.

One has only to follow the recent decisions in the various states and he will be thoroughly convinced that the modern judiciary is very much like the judiciary of other days. In two instances in our own state within the last three months the judiciary has been accused of violating its sworn duty.

It is also true that the judiciary always lags behind in every reform.



Those who elect the judges are certainly competent to put them out of office for neglect of duty or gross error and no one need fear that popular opinion will coerce the judiciary for the judge who could be swayed by popular opinion against doing his duty is the very one who ought to be recalled.

M. Morgan Cloud, M. D.

Roosevelt's Latest on Labor Unions

From the N. Y. Outlook, Feb. 4, 1911.

Wages and other most important conditions of employment must remain largely outside of governmental control and be left for adjustment by free contract between employer and employe, with the important proviso that there should be legislation to prevent the conditions that compel men and women to accept wages that represent less than will insure a decent living. But the question of contract between employer and employe should not be left to individual action, for under modern industrial conditions the individual is often too weak to guard his own rights as against a strongly organized body or a great capitalist. In the present state of society, and until we advance much farther than at present along lines of genuine altruism, there must be effective and organized collective action by the wage-workers in great industrial enterprises. They must act jointly through the process of collective bargaining. Only thus can they be put upon a plane of economic equality with their corporate employers. Capital is organized, and the laborer can secure proper liberty and proper treatment only if labor organizes also. It is, I trust, unnecessary to say that the most emphatic recognition of this need does not mean any condonation of whatever is evil in the practices of labor organizations. Labor organizations are like other organizations, like organizations of capitalists; sometimes they act very well, and sometimes they act very badly. We should consistently favor them when they act well, and as fearlessly oppose them when they act badly. I wish to see labor organizations powerful; and the minute that any organization becomes powerful it becomes powerful for evil as well as for good; and when organized labor becomes sufficiently powerful the State will have to regulate the collective use of labor just as it must regulate the collective use of capital. Therefore the very success of the effort we are making to increase the power of labor means that among labor leaders and among other citizens there must be increased vigilance and courage in unhesitatingly rebuking anything that labor does that is wrong.—Theodore Roosevelt.

VICTROLA

If you love good music and want to hear it as you have never heard it before—with a beauty and expression of tone entirely new—be sure to hear the Victrola.

We show the many models, in various woods at $75 to $250. Convenient terms.

Visit our Victrola room today.

Southern California Music Co.
The House of Musical Quality
332-4 South Broadway

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS

MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 168x168
Southern Pacific Switch
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall
DENTIST
Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806

State Civil Service

By WILLIAM A. SPALDING
Secretary Los Angeles Civil Service Commission

If a bill pending at Sacramento becomes law, California will be the seventh civil service state in the Union. Let us hope there is luck in odd numbers! The six predecessors are New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Illinois and Colorado. We thus have an opportunity to join an illustrious line of progressives from the Atlantic seaboard to the middle and farther West, and the transcontinental span will be effected when we drop in.

Any student of public affairs can see that civil service reform has come to stay; when it once obtains a foothold it never withdraws, but after a grim period of holding fast, it pushes forward to gain more territory. The line of advance seems to be through the larger cities, which have pretty uniformly been the badly governed cities. This is probably an exemplification of the old saw that, when matters come to the worst, they must mend. The great moral impulse by which New York City arose and overthrew Boss Tweed carried it along eventually to the adoption of municipal civil service. This nucleus of reform, holding its own against the onslaughts of Tammany and the other forms of darkness, finally moved forward and took in the entire state. It has been the same in other sections, municipal regeneration invariably leading to state redemption. And California is likely to prove the latest exemplar.

The merit system was incorporated in the charter of San Francisco ten years ago, and it has had a mighty up-hill struggle ever since. The fact is, conditions were very much against it from the beginning. The mayor under whom this reform was inaugurated signalized his devotion to principle by exempting six hundred positions which he kept as his share of patronage. Then a raid was made through the courts and a decision was handed down to the effect that, while the law applied to city positions, it did not hold as to those of the county. As San Francisco had a consolidated city and county government, that decision cut the service in two in the middle. When Schmitz came on the scene, he carved out of the forlorn relic another slice of patronage and McCarthy appropriated the commission and whatever was left. When we consider all of these circumstances, and the further fact that the atmosphere of San Francisco has nerer been wholesome for reform movements, the wonder is that there is even a vestige of the civil service system left; that its provisions have not been eliminated from the charter.

Los Angeles incorporated the merit system in her charter in December, 1902. During the eight years that have followed, the department has had a good many ups and downs, and has passed through several critical ordeals. To many earnest reformers it has appeared that the department was losing ground, or at best that it was merely "marking time"; but possibly it illustrated Milton's thought that

William A. Spalding

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

During these years the civil service was in evidence as an established, organized, nucleus of reform. During these years it graually, systematically and firmly educated city employes to the idea that they were not obliged to do politics or contribute to any political boss in order to obtain or hold positions. It also inculcated the lesson that it was a good deal more wholesome for them to let partisan politics alone. In this way the compact working organization of the machine—the Praetorian guard composed of those holding places and those hoping to gain places—was greatly demoralized.

Had it not been for this work slowly, systematically, progressively accomplished it would have been a good deal harder matter for the reform forces to capture the city government when they made their onslaught. And had the reform element failed to redeem the city of Los Angeles from misrule and corruption when it did, we should not have had the wave of reform that swept over the state in the last election.

It is thus made apparent to the thoughtful that large political oaks may be produced from seemingly insignificant municipal acorns. What the reform elements of a community most need to make their influence felt is organization; a central rallying point—an inner citadel, fixed, stable, permanent, where guards are always posted, where the flag is always flying. This allows time for the hosts to gather and encouragement for them to keep together; this gives continuity, direction and force to their efforts; this gives them, in time a victory, and "nothing succeeds like success."

The progressive movement of civil service from municipal to state organizations is then easily understood. It originates in establishing a citadel in some large center of population, then gradually pushing out the lines for larger conquest. The same record has been written over and over again in the states that are now under civil service; it is probably to be written again in California. And there are still other states where the process is illustrated in its earlier stages. Cleveland, Ohio, and Kansas City, the wide-awake, progressive and aforetime badly governed metropolis of Western Missouri, have adopted the civil service system within the past year or so. In the due course of development, look for Ohio and Missouri to take their places in the line of civil service states.

President Eliot of Harvard was right when he said, "Civil service is the cornerstone of all civic reform."

Concerning the bill that is pending in the California legislature, it will be sufficient to say that it is drawn along the approved lines worked out in states that have had the longest and most successful experience with the merit system. There is nothing very new and nothing purely experimental in the proposed California law. The New York system has been a sort of general model for the other states, because in New York the system has been longest on trial, has been adapted to the most extensive service and every essential feature has been put to the test of the courts.

Senator Roseberry's bill provides for a State Civil Service Commission of three members, with a central office in San Francisco, and a meeting of the commission must be held there once each month. The state is to be divided into three civil service districts and one commissioner is to take active charge of the work in each district and report back to the commission. There is to be a chief examiner and a secretary and such additional assistance as may be required. It is intended that the position of civil service commissioner shall be a working position and in no sense for political ornament or a soft snap. The usual systems of examinations, preparing eligible lists and certifying therefrom for employment are provided. There are the usual restrictions and inhibitions against state employes engaging in partisan politics or contributing to political funds. Tenure of office during good behavior is given to civil service employes, but dismissals are made less trying than in the Los Angeles department. The burden of proof is on the discharged employe to show that an injustice has been done him or there will be no public investigation by the commission. In other words, the discharged employe and not the head of department is placed on trial. There is a wholesome provision for checking and certifying the payrolls of all state departments by the Civil Service Commission, which enables the commission to draw the purse strings against violations of the law.

If the bill referred to is adopted by the legislature (and every friend of reform devoutly hopes it may be) there is no reason to doubt its approval by the governor, and California will have a good workable civil service law.

Support Urged for Hospital Bills

Editor Pacific Outlook:

I am writing to you in behalf of Senate Bill No. 450, introduced by Hon. L. C. Gates, and Assembly Bill No. 627, introduced by Assemblyman Butler.

These bills provide for an appropriation by the State for the purpose of establishing in Los Angeles a hospital in conjunction with the medical department of the State University now being conducted in our city. The advantages of such an institution are so numerous that it would be taking too much of your valuable space were I to attempt to enumerate all of them. However, some of the facts should be given in order that its objects and purposes may be better understood.

In the free dispensary connected with the College of Medicine there were seven thousand new patients who applied for and received free medical advice during the past year.

With the increase in population in this city in the next five or ten years the free hospital accommodations will certainly be inadequate to care for the increased number of sick who will apply for admission into the County Hospital. This will be a direct outlet for the overflow from the County Hospital and will place at the disposal of the worthy poor an institution where they will be able to receive not only medical and surgical attention but also advice upon other matters pertaining to hygiene and the proper methods of living.

The object of my writing is to arouse the enthusiasm of some of your readers who will see far enough into the future to realize the benefits to the people of this city that would be derived from such an institution. I hope that they will make it their personal business to write or otherwise communicate with the Senators and Assemblymen from this part of the State calling their attention to these bills and asking their support.

Respectfully yours,
Henry H. Lissner, M. D.

Visitor—I envy you that light and skilful hand of yours!

Young Sculptor (flattered)—And so you saw my "Amazon?"

Visitor—No; but I hear you shave yourself.—Fliegende Blaetter.

A FRIENDLY TRIBUTE TO "PACIFIC OUTLOOK"

"The Real Estate News," a Chicago publication with a large circulation, discussing "Wall Street and the Election" recently, prefaced a quotation from "Pacific Outlook," with the appreciative paragraph which follows:

"The West understands Mr. Roosevelt, and knows that nothing worries him less than his personal political future. There is a paper which visits us weekly from the extreme west, which we have commended before, and which hits the bull's eye more regularly than any other transient publication we know; so much do we like it that, in a moment of self-forgetfulness, we were about to counsel our prospective subscribers to send first a dollar to Los Angeles, California, for a year's trial of the Pacific Outlook. Affecting, as we do, a more restrained style of expression, as well as greater moderation of judgment, we experience nothing short of a riot of the senses in letting this more stalwart champion voice our secret thoughts."

The editor then proceeds to quote from "Roosevelt and the Elections" an editoriall appearing in Pacific Outlook.

Residence Burglary Insurance

Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?

Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.

Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.

R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY

200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.

Home Phone 40444 Sunset Phone M. 7096

The Single Tax Doctrine

Disciple of Henry George Addresses Los Angeles City Club

Mr. Joseph Fels, of Philadelphia, entertained the City Club of Los Angeles last Saturday with an address on the "Single Tax." Mr. Fels is a wealthy manufacturer who has retired from active business in order to devote his time and money to a propagation of the doctrine of Henry George.

Mr. Fels spoke, in part, as follows:

To explain my position, I can do no better than to read you one or two things that Henry George has written. I consider Henry George the greatest man that lived in the last century, and before this particular century is out, he will be pronounced by the right-thinking people of the world the greatest man that has lived in the last five centuries, if you will put it that way, because, as time goes on, the recognition of the good rises and the recollection of the bad drops out.

Henry George says: "In the case of the rich man today who is honestly desirous of devoting his wealth to improving the condition of labor, what can he do? Bestow his wealth on those who need it? He may help some who deserve it, but will not improve general conditions. And against the good that he may do will be the danger of doing harm. Build churches? Under the shadow of the church poverty festers and the vice that is born of it breeds. Build schools and colleges? Save as it may lead men to see the inequality of private property in land, increased education can affect nothing for mere laborers; for, as education is diffused, the wages of education sink. What, then, can the rich man do to improve the condition of labor? He can do nothing at all, except to use his strength for the abolition of the great primary wrongs that rob men of their birthright. The just God laughs at the attempts of man to substitute anything else for it." And from the bottom of my heart I endorse every word of those four paragraphs.

That being the case, my friends, I stand before you an advocate for free men by having free land and free trade.

Special Privilege Is Wrong

I do not believe that it is at all a natural condition which permits a few men to hold in the hollow of their hands the lives of hundreds of thousands of people. I do not believe that one man can get rich in a short time under present conditions by his own individual labor. I believe that, if a man gets rich in an unduly short time, he does so by making use of some special privilege, some ownership of something that belongs to more people than himself, and which a law of his country may make perfectly legal. At the same time it does not necessarily make it moral, because we have seen today, in your own discussions between your own members, that men differ, and their opinions are honest among themselves, but part of those opinions certainly are wrong, because you can't have two constructions diametrically opposed to the same proposition and have them both right.

Now, there is only one right in dealing with the privileges that are created by the people, and that is that the people shall own the privileges.

The land, I believe, was given by Almighty God, to all the people for all the people, and not to a few for a few.

We have now in Great Britain, where I spend much of my time, the peculiar situation in existence, of 1500 men—whether they be called dukes with tin pots on their heads or capitalists or what not—1500 people owning practically two-thirds of the land of Great Britain, a country, which, small in itself, is large enough to support a population of 100,000,000 and leave something to spare; a country in which, in the very city of London, a place of 7,000,000 people,—the greatest city of either modern or ancient times, so far as I know—10,000 acres of unused land within that metropolis exist today, which have not had the tickle of a spade since the plow of the yoeman ran through it; which has not had a building on it of any kind, and which is being held by that hawk who is watching for chickens—the land owner, for the unearned increment of that land. And I say it is a damnable condition which permits that.

Charity Not the Solution

In the city of London, with seven million people, we have a half a million people always on the verge of starvation; and when people come to me and say, "You should subscribe to help this orphan asylum or that hospital or that flower mission," I say, 'No; the hospitals and orphan asylums and other ingenious substitutes for justice, which you are carrying on are supposed to be saving three hundred little children's lives every month. You make a boast of it. And I say it were better for the future to let those little children die and go back to the land from which they came. The sacrifice of those three hundred little babies would do more to redeem the three hundred million people that are suffering from the present condition than any one thing that possibly could be achieved.'"

Joseph Fels, Single Taxer

I do not believe in charity, and, as I said to a lodge of my own people in Chicago, where I was invited to address them upon the subject of charity, "If this were not so sacred a place, I should say, 'Damn your charity;' and if you objected to that, I would say, 'Damn you for not damning your charity.'"

Now, my friends, I oppose any speculation in land values whatever. I teetotally oppose the private ownership of land in any one. I teetotally oppose the ownership by an individual or a company or a public utility institution or any other institution of the special privileges created by the presence of population in any community. I except none. And I say that until the very basis of the work of this City Club is brought to mean the wiping out of the original monopoly, the basic monopoly, your work will be just about like flies buzzing on a window pane in summer.

Whole People Should Benefit by Increased Values

I believe that, as the public created all the increased value of any land, by reason of the increase of population and industries and the work that the population brings to the different sections of a city or a country, those increased values belong to the people who created them, and not to the man who monopolizes the land. I say that no man can own any land. Nothing can be owned, in my opinion, except those things that are movable and can be carried away. Land occupies a peculiar position. It can neither be increased or decreased. It cannot be carried away. I say that all those values created by the public belong to the public, and the only way to get them is in land value taxation; in taking for the use of the public all that the public has created, and in leaving to the private individual everything that the laborer has created; and I exempt from taxation everything created by labor, personal property of every kind; houses, buildings; even the highest sky-scrapers we have, because it represents labor.

If you had the conditions in your town that would exempt from all taxation everything created by your citizens and by their labor and by their presence, including the hotels, the factories, the workshops, the machinery, the sky-scrapers, and everything else, and place that taxation on land values alone, you couldn't hire enough workmen to build your houses here.

What Western Canada Is Doing

I have been in twenty-four cities up to date, and was especially interested in Western Canada. In Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchawan and British Columbia there is not a penny of taxes on any personal property. In Vancouver they do not tax any buildings, any machinery, any personal property, and they have reduced the taxation to three different kinds of taxes. I will tell you what they are: A tax on liquor, because it is a dominion tax and can't be wiped out in Vancouver, or in anything short of British Columbia. The next tax they have is a tax on dogs, because they don't want dogs, and you tax those things that you don't want. The next thing they have is a land value tax.

This exemption of all personal property and buildings from taxation was enacted in Vancouver just one year ago last month. What happened? Within one month after that law went into effect, 1100 working men living in the slums and center of Vancouver began to build 1100 shacks and cottages and little houses on 1100 different lots of ground about Vancouver. They had bought these little lots of ground,—some of them only 20 by 80 feet,—with their savings, intending one of these days, if the Lord would ever give them a chance, to put up a roof for themselves. One thousand one hundred of these men moved out of the slums and the low places of Vancouver, and in one month they had put up these 1100 houses, and there were 1100 rooms or tenements or shacks in the center of Vancouver that had to be looked to by their landlords, because they wanted tenants. And they wiped out the partitions in the tenement houses and turned them into better places for living, and a better class of people have moved into them. The whole taxation in Vancouver is 20 mills on land values, and 20 mills on land values supplied all the public money that was needed last year for the city of Vancouver. So far as I know, they didn't go into any additional debt. The result of this was that, during that 12 months, the citizens of Vancouver erected buildings to the amount of $13,156,000 as against a little over 7,000,000 in 1909; and I am told by the building inspector, that the people of Vancouver had always been more or less in the habit of lying as to the values of houses, when they were taxed on them; and so he considered that the $13,156,000 was 30% under the actual amount of cost. So you see Vancouver put up seventeen million and odd thousands of dollars of buildings during 1910. As the town is only 110,000 about one-third of the population of this city, unless some Los Angeles people lie about their population,—I don't know,—about one-third of the population of Los Angeles put up $17,000,000 worth of new buildings. Did you in Los Angeles put up $51,000,000 of new buildings in 1910? I say, No.

Not only in Vancouver is this single tax beginning to take root, but Edmonton and Prince Rupert, the new terminal of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway of Canada, and Nanaimo, and several other towns have done the same thing, and all of them report the same progress.

Now, I want to appeal to Los Angeles to exempt in whatever way she can all the product of the labor of her people from any kind of taxation, and to put that taxation where it belongs, on land values.

Home Rule in Oregon

In Oregon there is a man by the name of U'Ren, and I call him the law giver of Oregon. U'Ren has been working in Oregon for the single tax for nearly twenty years. He is quiet, unostentatious, diffident. And he has succeeded, with the help of the Fels Fund Commission and the $16,000 and odd dollars that we subscribed to the Oregon work, in getting home rule in taxation in Oregon, so that every county in the state may assess its taxes in any way which it wants to, if they so vote in 1912, when the next election is. And we propose to say this: that we shall continue to wage a battle in Oregon, to be decided next year, which shall put that state in the line of the first state in the United States to have he single tax. And when that is done, my friends, I want to say that, if Washington State and California don't come into the line, you blessedly quickly will move to Oregon.

Mr. Fels related an experience he has had in land speculation in Philadelphia. Garnishing his talk with many humorous asides, Mr. Fels told how, through a real estate friend, he was induced to invest $32.700 in 11½ acres of farm land in Philadelphia, and how, ostensibly, to pose as a philanthropist, he had settled forty-four poor men on the farm and loaned the farm house to a working girls' club. That was seven years ago.

Furniture Repair Works
1603 S. Main
Cane and Rush Seating
Upholstering and Refinishing
Phones: Home 24387 Bdwy 4382

Since then he has been offered $50,000 for the land, then $75,000, then $100,000, and finally he was told that if he held it two years longer the property would bring $125,000. He is still holding, and will continue to hold until he gets a profit of at least $90,000, and this he will devote to the propagation of the single tax philosophy.

"Now, said he, "I want to ask this gathering who created that $90,000 profit that I am going to get as certain as the laws of the Medes and Persians? Who did it? Who increased the value of that land from $32,700 to $125,000?

"I say, first the fact that 3000 poor men went out there and built their 3000 houses during the six or seven years which I held that property did that; that through them the city of Philadelphia did that; that through the city of Philadelphia the state of Pennsylvania did that; and through the state of Pennsylvania the United States did that; and, I believe, the whole people shall ultimately have such profits."

Shifting the Burden

Father (sternly)—"Can you support my daughter in the manner she's been accustomed to?"

Lover—"Yes, sir, I'm sure I can."

Father—"Well, I can't do it any longer, so take her, my boy."—Judge.

"I'm glad they're going to take the pork barrel out of Congress," said Mrs. Bliggins, who had just returned from the ladies' class in current events.

"Indeed?" said her husband.

"Yes; members of Congress may not be able to compromise on their lunches so easily, and they'll give more thought to the cost of living."—Washington Star.

Socializing Commercial Ethics

Graham Taylor in The Survey

Very surely, though all too slowly, American business men are squaring themselves and their methods to the new demands of the ethics of the group. In unexpected quarters and by their own associates, they are faced with the imperative mandate of a changed situation. The open resentment or silent cynicism which such facts would have met a few years ago have given way to a seriousness and responsiveness which surely indicate a change of front.

There have been three remarkable instances of this changing attitude in Chicago recently. Before the Commercial Club, the most influential and wealthy group of men in commercial, banking and manufacturing interests of the city, Alfred L. Baker, one of their most highly appreciated members, faced this issue perhaps more fully and fearlessly than had been done before in their presence. Addressing himself to the problem of harmonizing great corporations with democratic institutions, he urged the necessity of establishing ethical standards applicable to the relations between them. He demanded right of way for "collective rights," which he defined to be "the highest good of the community as a whole." He insisted that business men cannot consider lightly the derelictions of politicians, even when personal interests are not adversely affected; nevertheless moral and political progress is blocked in Chicago and Illinois by business men's toleration of dishonest politicians. He urged them to get out of such "corporation politics," and enter into such public service as the protection of the safety and health of working people, the abolition of child labor, educational progress, park and playground extension, safeguarding of immigrants, fostering continuation or vocational schools and city planning, in which latter cause the Commercial Club has already taken the most advanced action of any public body.

The Chicago Association of Commerce, the largest and one of the broadest and most progressive commercial organizations in the United States, honored itself in hearing four men who came from the firing line to address them. In simple, manful fashion Rudolph Spreckles told the story of his fight for the integrity of San Francisco against the commercialized politics of its exploiters:

"There never was a political crime committed that business was not at the back of it. Cut off that supply, and let the managers of these corporations take their stand and say, 'No bribe money.' If we find in operating our property that political bosses propose to hold us up, we are going to the people to get our redress and to get our rights. My experience with the people has taught me that they are fair and just and will give you what you are legitimately entitled to. It is right that you should know your own affairs and above all scrutinize the affairs of the corporations in which you hold stock, not only because you ought to know the source from which come your income and profits, but because it will pay you in money dividends, increased and saved."

Alderman Charles E. Merriam, who is professor of political science in the University of Chicago and is urged to become a candidate for mayor, spoke to the same effect out of his experience as chairman of the city council's commission on municipal expenditures. "Good government," he said, "is not a liability; it is an asset. It is economy, not expense. You will one day find it a necessity rather than a luxury."

Boston contributed its message through Robert A. Woods, who was introduced by the president of the association in the words of the president of Harvard in conferring upon him the degree of master of arts, "A man who labors to raise his fellow men, trusted alike by those who toil and those who think; a knight of Christ's chivalry, without fear and without reproach."

The only solution of the problems of good government, Mr. Woods contended, is to be found in "a city plan and policy that will include all the people, in which racial, class and religious distinctions shall be lost in the movement for civic advance, and a new start shall be taken from the doorsteps of the people." He also affirmed that "our failure to apply our personal efforts to our human relationships results in the loss of the individual's moral sense."

Gruesome facts were cited by S. S. McClure of New York in evidence of that assertion. He inquired why our American civilization turns out so badly in having the largest proportion of deaths and injuries by accident, the greatest number of murders, and the unparalleled combinations between vice and business. He accounted for our being "in so great arrears because we have not a trained

CHAMOUNY APARTMENTS

Northeast Cor. W. 11th and Grand View Streets
Opposite BEAUTIFUL PALM PLACE

MOST attractive and home-like apartment house in Los Angeles. Will have a wide expanse of lawn, flowers and shrubbery. Has a large outside living-room, fine reception room with brick inglenook. Third floor contains an amusement room, 18x45 feet, with immense balconies on either side. Apartments contain 2 and 3 rooms, are extra large, and all have French doors opening on spacious private balconies. Extra services provided such as the washing of dishes, etc.

NOW READY FOR OCCUPANCY. ELEGANTLY FURNISHED. Telephone 55203

MRS. N. WILLIAMS ANDERSON, Manager

[illegible] of men in official positions. We do not have them because, of all the occupations that a young man may enter in the United States, the occupation that affords him the least of honor of income, of certainty, of permanence, employment in government is the worst."

"We cannot have a government by crooks and have a moral community. Moral welfare is absolutely dependent upon government. Any civilization can well be judged by how many chances a baby has to live its first few years and by how many chances that baby has, as it grows up, of becoming a good man or a good woman."

The Illinois Manufacturers' Association has heard less of such talk than any of our commercial bodies, until its last meeting. Gov. W. R. Stubbs of Kansas was expected to reinforce the manufacturers' fight against increasing railway rates, but he included in his vigorous indictment every alliance between professional politicians, corporation lawyers, and financial and commercial interests, which is concerned in shaping state and federal legislation to serve its own special interests, as a menace to the welfare and life of our republic." And he added that "the relation of the federal government to the unlawful commercial institutions organized for spoils and plunder is one of the most humiliating and disgraceful chapters in American history."

A still more personal warning and appeal were incisively uttered by Gov. Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey. Appealing direct to the very instinct of self-preservation in the captains of industry, he emphasized the dangers to business and the public alike in the exploitation of either in these ringing sentences:

"It will not do to exploit the public. The trouble with business in this recent period of extraordinary expansion has been too much exploitation and too little regard for the permanent interests of society. Since workingmen are being dealt with in bodies, they must be dealt with on principles of reciprocity and partnership. We are working in the interest of business and not against it, when we oblige all to regard its action as a process of service, not exploitation."

What a whirlwind is rising against the exploiters who are sowing the wind he thus graphically describes:

"What are some men doing? They attend peace congresses and sit on the platform in order to sustain the speakers and give them their moral support and applause, and these very men, engaged in business, are exploiting the Orient in such fashion as will inevitably bring on war, because they are ignoring every national prejudice of the people they are dealing with, and they are sowing the seed of passion which some day will spring up in a great crop of absolutely irrepressible bloody strifes."

Our refuge and resource he finds in the kind of politics which "adjusts all affairs to the common interests, and concerns itself with the forces of business." Because of their failure to do this, he declares that "our political parties have come to a day of reckoning and are dissolving. If somebody could draw together the liberal elements of both parties in this country, he could build up a party which could not be beaten in a generation, for the very reason that we would all join in." By "liberals" he meant "the men whose votes you cannot predict."

Despite these very imminent perils to our public and private interests—and the more because of them—there are signs of a better day dawning. The boldness of such utterances as these, and the unchallenged or responsive way in which they are received by hitherto self-assertive or silent bodies of men, betoken the daybreak after the dark night which has so long settled over our moral sense in industry, commerce, and politics.

There are waymarks of progress by which we may measure the advance. One was registered by a little group of Chicago friends of William Kent, Congressman-elect from California, in welcoming him back to his old home on his way to the National Capital. The ease with which he was elected to Congress as a progressive was contrasted with the difficulty with which he was elected to the Chicago city council twelve years ago on the issue of common honesty. The overwhelming majorities in Illinois for the Initiative and Referendum in the last election were recognized to be the legitimate consequence of those first Municipal Voters' League campaigns for integrity and independence in Chicago's city politics. The gloom under the shadows of the black bribery in the election of a United States Senator by the State Legislature, and the shame of the local failures to convince either the legislative bribers or the jury fixers, was lifted a little by the glimpse into the future which was afforded by this glance into the past.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MR. ICKES

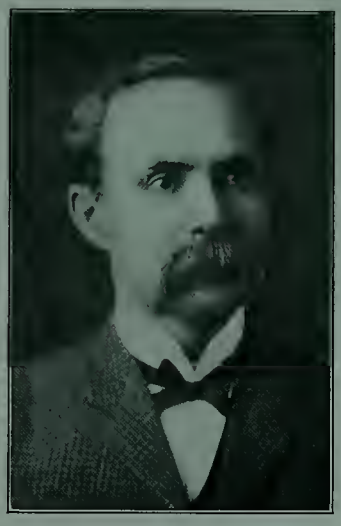
(Good Government, New York)

The following letter from one J. M. Ickes, of Columbus, Ohio, received in answer to an invitation to membership in the National Civil Service Reform League, was printed in the December issue of Good Government:

"Your invitation to membership for myself in the National Civil Service Reform League has fallen very stony ground, and I fear the hot sun of my contempt for much of the work of the League will wither and blast the sprout.

"Civil service, as applied by Theodore Roosevelt and his kind, is a handmaid to monarchy and has no place, in my judgment, in a Republican form of government. The merit system mentioned in your letter is all right, but civil service as applied and understood is a fore-runner of New Nationalism, which eliminates the spirit of our Republican form of government, paving the way for Rooseveltism, alias New Nationalism, alias Monarchy.

"My observation and experience teaches me that civil service appointments secures mostly the molly-coddles and diminishes the efficiency of the average working force about 20 per cent; creates an office-holding class, which means a civil pension list and is something that the founders of our government never contemplated and which is, in my judgment, contrary to the spirit of the Declaration of Independence and Bill of Rights."



Shortly after publication of the above letter, the office of the League received a letter asking if this could be the same as Joseph M. Ickes, formerly postmaster at Newark, Ohio, who was indicted in 1894 for both soliciting and receiving political contributions in a public building and fined $400, which he paid. Information from responsible sources shows that J. M. Ickes, of Columbus, Ohio, and Joseph M. Ickes referred to by the League's correspondent, are identical. These facts as to Mr. Ickes' "observation and experience" with the operation of the civil service law may explain the origin of his "hot sun of contempt for much of the work of the League."

SENATORIAL SKITS

Number 2

By The Onlooker

Who is the shaggy party to the left as soon as you enter the Senate Chamber? That, ladies and gentlemen, is Dormant Dynamite, from Amador. As you behold it now, it is as harmless as a sucking dove, and as quiet as the waters of Hog Creek on a stilly night. But touch this peaceful object with a pin, otherwise, I say, tread upon one of its sacred rights or its hallowed traditions, and 'tis dormant not—no more. You may now retire the qualifying adjective on a pension and retain the descriptive noun. It is now Dynamite—only this and nothing more—Dynamite after the fuse has burnt out and the cap exploded—Dynamite in full action, a sort of human Vesuvius and Pain's Fireworks in one, a mixture of molten speech and Catherine wheel gesticulations, shattering the frighted air with yells of protest and racking reverberations of tortured sound. In brief, as we were about to remark, this is A. Caminetti, senior warden of the ancient and honorable Democracy, the lone oak of Amador, the Minority of the minority, sic semper tyrannis, and lineal heir to the principles of Thomas Jefferson, deceased. We refer to Jefferson when we say deceased; we emphatically do not refer to A. Caminetti, who is not deceased, surceased nor any other ceased—far, far from it, as far from it as a live wire carrying 40,000 volts is from being a dead one.

The Amadorable C

Strangers, ere you have made this same mistake. They have made it once, only. They contemplate a repetition of the experience with that same buoyant joy which thrills the soul of a man who has picked up a red hot poker by mistake when he contemplates a repetition of that act. Starting Brother Caminetti up out of his retreat behind the brush heaps of his unshaved countenance is exciting while it lasts, but not conducive to desire to try it on again.

We referred to him just now as the Minority of the minority. Technically correct, but substantially in error. No metes nor bounds confine him, no simple adjective or phrase describes his mighty independence. He is nohody's minority save his own. He is not "a" minority, he is "the" minority—sole, single, singular, one and indivisible, the original political game of solitaire. And he has every card in his deck, too, excluding the joker.

We may as well now as later pay Senator Caminetti the deserved compliment we must inevitably confer upon him: He is about as good as they make them. He is Old Reliable when it comes to the vote. Prior to that event, he is not averse to a little light exercise for his vocal chords; he joyously flays his political opponents with the sharp knife of sarcasm; he cheerfully and noisily claims that every good thing in public affairs was stolen bodily from the Democratic platform; but when a good measure comes up for passage, A. Caminetti is there with one large vote for it, every time.

Will he fight? Gentle stranger, watch him till the cruel majority treads once upon his toes. In one second, divided by one hundred—hold a stop-watch on him—the air will be full of fireworks, grizzled moustache, gold-rimmed spectacles, sixteen pairs of arms if you try to count them, and you will be asked to pick from the shattered atmosphere the hurtling fragments of the Constitution, the Ten Commandments, the Civil, Political and Penal Codes and the choice morsels of an active and ripe intelligence. Suddenly the tumult will cease, and the Caminetti smile will beam forth, and you will feel safe once more.

Don't think, however, that he is only wind. This person has a head that has been in constant use, on his shoulders; he is one of the hardest workers—one of the very hardest—in the Senate; and he has a record, both for sense and conscience, that he isn't ashamed to hang out on the line where the neighbors can see it when he goes back to his district.

A Veteran

Lawyer—"The cross-examination did not seem to worry you. Have you had any previous experience?"

Client—"Six children."—The Truth Seeker.

MAIN 3540 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT'L BANK BUILDING
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
332 MAIN STREET LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191

San Francisco's New Polytechnic High School

The Polytechnic High School, to be erected on Frederick street, San Francisco, between Willard street and First avenue, will comprise two buildings—an academic building fronting on Frederick street and a manual training and shop building facing on Carl street.

The following description of the proposed buildings is given by the Municipal Record of San Francisco, from which paper the accompanying illustration is reproduced:

The exterior design will be purely classic, modified to meet modern requirements. The ornamental cornices, belt courses and cast-iron work will be simple but ornate and in detail will lean toward French Renaissance. The construction will be of reinforced concrete, steel, brick and terra-cotta, with fireproof staircases.

The academic building, of three stories, basement and attic, will have a frontage on Frederick street of 350 feet and a depth of 81 feet, exclusive of an auditorium, which will break back in the center, with an additional depth of 70 feet and a width of 98 feet.

The manual training building, one story in height, will have a frontage on Carl street of 326 feet and a depth of 54 feet, with a wing at either end 51 feet by 100 feet, and two stories in height. In the center between the two buildings will be a paved court 100 feet by 200 feet.

The buildings will have complete lighting facilities for both gas and electricity, while a modern power plant will provide a sufficient supply of both power and electricity.

In the basement of the academic building will be a large gymnasium with locker rooms, showers, etc., attached, general locker rooms, large lunch room with kitchen, pantries, bake ovens, etc., also rooms for the heating plant.

The first floor of the building will accommodate the science department, with laboratories, lecture rooms, store rooms, closets, etc., also a public waiting room, principal's and teachers' rooms, library, and the main floor of the auditorium, with a seating capacity for 1500. The second floor will be devoted almost entirely to regular class rooms, of which there will be 16 on that floor. The third floor will have additional regular class and drawing rooms, and a portion of the domestic science department, with cooking rooms, sewing rooms, lecture rooms, etc.

The attic floor will be a full story, and will be given over in part to the domestic science department, and the remainder to drawing rooms and art departments, equipped with all facilities for the study of arts and crafts.

The manual training building will be devoted entirely to the mechanical arts and mechanical drawing. For mechanical drawing five large light drawing rooms, with blueprint, dark room and store rooms will be provided. For the mechanical art will be provided a large carpenter shop, cabinet and pattern making rooms, machine shops, foundry, blacksmith shops, plumbing shops, electrical shop. All the rooms will be thoroughly equipped with the necessary machinery to facilitate training along such lines to the fullest extent.

Contracts will be let and actual construction work begun within the next thirty days. The school and equipment will be paid for out of funds derived from the sale of $600,000 honds authorized at a special election held in June, 1909.

How the School Will Look When Completed

Political Table Talk

(Continued from page 4)

terest in divorce cases, but judges, having no one before them to remind them of that duty, often fail of attending to it. The public is a very real party in interest. Neither marriage nor divorce solely concerns the contracting parties and this is specially true of divorce. Setting aside the sacredness of the marriage relation. and treating it as being wholly a matter of civil contract, nevertheless the public's interest in the contract is very real and needs to be looked out for, if for no other reason than for the purpose of seeing to it that the contractural relation does not descent to a semi-legitimized species of concubinage. Whenever a travesty is made of justice, or a burlesque of marriage, society suffers injury and to what better use can a district attorney be put than to see to it that the public interest in every such case is adequately represented to the court? Divorce made too easy results in separations by whim.

Marriage of First Cousins A bill has been introduced into the legislature prohibiting the marriage of first cousins. It is a good subject to let alone for want of sufficient knowledge to justify interference with liberty of contract. Occasionally the product of such marriages is unfortunate, and yet not out of proportion to the ratio of consanguineous marriages to those that are not. Students of insanity, feeble mindedness, epilepsy, and other forms of defectiveness in progeny regard consanguinity as a negligible quantity and, strange as it may seem, if there be any taint attached to it at all it applies more frequently to marriages between second cousins than first. Where there is a taint in the blood unfortunate results are not unlikely, but that is just as true of non-consanguineous marriages as of those related even to the extent of uncles and nieces. No person tainted with insanity should marry and with that taint in the blood on both sides, whether consanguineous or not, the most lamentable consequences are not unlikely to result. More than half of all the deaf-and-dumbness in America has been traced to four families that settled on the Atlantic Coast back in colonial times and there is scarcely an institution of importance for defective humanity in the United States that does not contain some member of one of those families, and yet they have not inbred more than have other families. The more delicate the mechanism the greater the danger of misadventure and in all the world there is no mechanism more delicate or more susceptible to derangement than that by which human beings come into this world. It is this peril, and not that of consanguinity, that hurts and legislators who legislate without knowledge are likely to do a hundred times more harm than good. This is a good subject for the legislature to let alone.

Remodeling the Direct Primary The Direct Primary law is being "revised by its friends" with results more fortunate, it is to be hoped, than attended the revision of the tariff by its friends. The law was made by those who were opposed to any such law at all and the wonder is that it worked at all. Doubtless it will need amendment at every session of the Legislature for ten years to come before it will get whipped into such shape as the light of experience shall make requisite, but much will be done for it at this session. At all events it will make the nomination of judicial candidates non-partisan, will give us a state-wide advisory vote on United States senator, simplify the petition system, remove restrictions from candidates as to how they voted theretofore, afford full liberty of choice to the voter and afford a better method of announcing the party platform. In the judgment of The Watchman the Berkeley idea of making the primary election conclusive as to all those who receive a majority of all votes cast might be adopted with advantage, the special advantage being the bringing out of a full vote of all parties at the primary election. The danger always is that a primary election may go by default, but if that election is to be final as to those candidates who receive a majority of all votes cast, the primary vote will be as big as the one at the general election and we shall have no more of such mere going through the motions of a primary election as the Democrats afforded us last August. If our legislators do not, at this session, make our primary law a model for other states it will be because they fail of proving equal to the opportunity the friends of the idea now enjoy.

Why not Local Option and State License, Too? The Wyllie local option measure is good, the Sanford state license measure, at least in its general purposes, is not bad. Why not have both of them? First let all communities and counties that wish to do so rid themselves of saloons and then let the state and the cities and counties in which saloons are permitted to exist step in and tax the rest. Indiana seems likely to impose a general tax of $1,000 upon all saloons. The saloon business will stand such a license in the aggregate and still leave enough saloons to insure the state against drouth. Whisky should repay what whisky costs. It costs the county a great deal of money, it costs the city or town a whole lot and it is a principal source of expense to the state. It costs the county in the trouble and expense of convicting men of whisky crimes, it costs the cities and towns to the extent of more than half their police protection and it costs the state roundly in prisons, orphanages, hospitals and homes of one sort or another. Let whisky repay what it costs and the best way of making it repay is to tax the cost up to the saloons. Why should there be controversy between the Wyllie and Sanford measures? Give us both of them.

Utilities Commission Discussed by the City Club of Los Angeles

Committee Appointed to Study Provisions of Sutherland Bills—Passage of State and County Civil Service Bill Urged.

The intense interest which is following the Utilities Commission bills, of Assemblyman W. A. Sutherland, in their passage through the Legislature, was evidenced by a discussion which took place at the Los Angeles City Club meeting last Saturday.

Dissatisfaction has been expressed in this city over some of the provisions of the bills, and with the object in view of making a thorough investigation and report, in the interest of the club, Meyer Lissner, President of the Board of Public Utilities of Los Angeles introduced the following resolution:

"Whereas, Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 6, and Assembly Bill No 671, both introduced in the Legislature by Mr Sutherland, both dealing with the creation of a public utilities or public service commission for the state of California, seem each of them to be objectionable and subject to criticism in a number of particulars,

"Now, therefore, be it resolved, by the City Club of Los Angeles, that the President of the City Club be, and he is hereby authorized and instructed to appoint a special committee of nine, who shall consider said bills and the subject of state regulation of public utilities, and make a report and recommendations for a course of action at the next meeting of the club."

Substitute Resolution

Before the club had an opportunity of taking action on Mr. Lissner's resolution, a substitute resolution was offered by A. F. Southwick, placing the club on record as being strongly opposed "to any part of such a law as may propose to take from the city of Los Angeles its power to deal for itself with regard to rate-fixing, franchise-granting and general supervision of public utility concerns within its own municipal limits or within its jurisdiction."

These resolutions precipitated a general discussion, President Finlayson, Messrs. Lissner, Southwick, Lorin A. Handley, Lewis R. Works and others taking part.

City Clerk Handley made a speech in favor of the Southwick resolution, claiming that out of the five public service commissioners to be appointed three will live north of the Tehachapi, which would mean that our rates for public utilities would be fixed by men not in sympathy with the South. "I despise the feeling that exists betwen the north and south in this State," said he, "but it is a condition not a theory." Mr. Handley also condemned the feature of the proposed law whereby rate hearings must take place in San Francisco.

Mr. Lissner's Argument

In support of his resolution, Mr. Lissner explained that the subject was one requiring much study and deliberate action. There were some features of the bills which he condemned, notably that which provided that all actions in connection with public utilities should be heard in the San Francisco Courts, but he believed the City Club should keep an open mind on the subject and have a committee investigate the proposition.

"We cannot condemn the idea of a state utilities commission," said he, "without thoroughly studying the work done in Wisconsin and New York. I am not arguing, particularly, in favor of either local or state control of rates. All I ask is that we do not put ourselves on record as condemning any feature of the bills without due deliberation."

Lissner Resolution Carries

After the assurance of Mr. Lissner that the proposed measures had only gone to first reading in the Legislature and were now in committee and that there could be no final action taken during the week, the president put the motion as to whether Mr. Southwick's resolution should be substituted for Mr. Lissner's, and the motion was lost.

The original motion, on the adoption of Mr. Lissner's resolution, was then put and carried, and the president appointed the following committee: Wm. J. Hunsaker, chairman; James A. Anderson, Lewis R. Works, J. M. Hunter, H. W. Brundige, Meyer Lissner, Thos. E. Gibbon, C. D. Willard Tracy C. Becker.

Opposition to Civil Service Bill

Dr. Francis B. Kellog told the members of the club that the proposed State and County Civil Service Bill, now before the Legislature, was in danger of being killed through the strong influences working against it and he appealed to the members for support in the bill's favor.

After the reading of letters from State Senator L. H. Roseberry and Assemblyman H. Stanley Benedict, which set forth that the opposition has developed largely from state and county officials, the following resolution was offered by Dr. Kellogg, and unanimously carried:

"Whereas, it has come to the knowledge of the City Club that the bill prepared by the committee upon the merit system for state and county service has drawn the opposition of state and county officeholders, whose influence is being exerted upon the Legislature to prevent its passage, and,

"Whereas, the merit system protects the public by giving a square deal to all applicants and securing for the public the best available service, and is a guaranty that the public money shall not be used to further any interests except those of the public,

"Therefore, be it resolved by the City Club of Los Angeles that the Legislature be and hereby is requested to give to the said bill for the merit system its early and favorable consideration."

"FORTY-FIVE YEARS OF SUCCESSFUL CO-OPERATION"

The Los Angeles Investment company has just issued a neatly printed, 32-page prospectus, in two colors, entitled "Forty-five Years of Successful Co-operation." This is the first authentic story of the Los Angeles Investment company, its past and its plans for the future.

It covers the growth of that company from 1858 to the present time, gives details concerning its tracts, development work, its land holdings and the plans for its development.

It also tells of the organization of the company, its Broadway bank and office building, the Guarantee Fund, Home Certificates, Gold Notes and a short sketch of the company's directors. It contains statistics covering the past twelve years and statement of the company.

The company has also in print another edition of its Bungalow Book, this book being in its 160,000th.

WHY THE RECALL SHOULD APPLY TO THE JUDICIARY

If the people can be trusted with the election of those who shall govern them they are to be regarded as having the necessary knowledge to select proper officials.

It stands to reason that if the people be entrusted with power to elect judges, they are entitled to say whether judges shall continue in office after they have rendered decisions against popular will. The only logical conclusion is that the people, possessing enough discrimination to decide who shall be their judges, shall also possess the privilege of saying whether any judge not performing his duty shall be continued in office.

Can you show me any reason why the judiciary should be excepted from the general rules which apply to any other elected officer I agree with Senator Bourne in his letter on the Arizona constitution advising judiciary recall, when he said that judges are but human and the recall is a precautionary and a demonitory measure which may steady the hand of justice.

The argument that the law, an exact science, needs exact scientists to apply it, it does not change the necessity for watchfulness against failure of substantial justice.—Governor Johnson, in Los Angeles Record.

PROTECTING GIRLS AND WOMEN FROM OVERWORK

There are before the Senate several bills to regulate the employment of women and girls.

There is much opposition to any such legislation, particularly from laundry proprietors, who urge that they cannot compete with Asiatics if put upon a compulsory eight-hour basis, unless wages be correspondingly reduced. Canners also are actively opposing it.

It is certain, however, that public sentiment calls for restruction of hours of labor, especially of females, to reasonable limits, and twenty-eight states have enacted such legislation. The fact has been proved that overworked women, particularly those obliged to keep on their feet all day, are made unfit physically to be mothers. This is an injury to society against which it has a right to protect itself.

Consequently it is believed that the courts everywhere would and should sustain such legislation, despite the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the New York bake-shop case.

In that case legislation reducing hours of labor was held to be an interference with "freedom of contract," the court entirely overlooking the fact that such freedom is commonly merely theoretical, the employe, as a matter of fact, usually being under the necessity of working as many hours as the employer or combination of employers may require. This is especially true in the cases of girls and women not members of a labor union.

The bake-shop decision Roosevelt criticized as bad, and he was right. The law was upheld in the lower Federal Courts, on grounds of public health and the general welfare.

Every working girl or woman should be protected by the state from being required to labor more than ten hours out of twenty-four, no matter how light the employment. And there are numerous trying callings in which eight hours should be the limit.—Sacramento Bee.

URGE TRAINING FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

Through its committee on education, The New Jersey State Civic Federation has appealed to the managers of educational institutions in the state to establish a course of civics for the training of young men for the proper handling of public questions.

In the letter sent out the Federation says:

"The records of various municipal governments, as disclosed in public print in the last three years, have been such as to call serious attention to the inadequacy of present methods of administering public funds and recording these in a straightforward accounting to the people. Realizing that the only remedy lies in an educated and expert management and control of municipal affairs, the New Jersey State Civic Federation suggests the establishment of a course as shall prepare young men for an intelligent grasp of the powers and duties of the administrative side of a municipality, and fitting them to assume, as experts, the problems of accounting in city affairs."

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES

Harris & Frank (INC)
Leading Clothiers
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

TYPEWRITERS

All Makes All Prices

Look over this list.

Underwoods	$45.00	$75
L. C. Smiths	40.00	65
Monarchs	50.00	65
Remingtons	20.00	75
Olivers	25.00	55
Smith Premiers	15.00	35
Densmores	15.00	20
Blickensderfers	10.00	40

Chicagoes, Bennetts, Caligraphs, Bar Locks and Hammonds, $5 to $10.

WE GUARANTEE ALL MACHINES FOR ONE YEAR

We sell, rent, repair and exchange all makes of typewriters.

UNION TYPEWRITER CO. 309 So. Spring St.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Agents for the STANDARD FOLDING TYPEWRITER

JESTER'S BELLS

When a noted Irish orator was in America a few years ago, says the National Monthly, he appeared at a meeting in St. Louis and delivered an address on the subject of "Home Rule for Ireland." There were 6000 of his countrymen in the audience. At the close of his remarks the chairman asked:

"Would any one like to ask the speaker a question?"

A man in the rear of the hall, who was quite evidently under the influence of liquor, arose and said:

"Will the gentleman tell me if there is any reason why the Irish should not be wiped off the face of the earth?"

Immediately pandemonium reigned. The disturber was attacked from every quarter. Calls of "Down with him!" and "Let me at him!" came from all directions. Finally he was rescued by policemen, and, torn and bleeding and in an unconscious condition, was placed in an ambulance which had been called. Order was in a measure restored. While the audience could still hear the clatter of the ambulance and the sound of its gong as it conveyed its burden to the hospital, the chairman stepped forward and asked:

"Would anybody like to ask another question?"

"Sixtane shilluns a day did they charrge me for my room at the hotel in Lunnon!" roared Sandy, indignantly, on his return to Croburgh Burghs from a sight-seeing expedition. "Ou, aye, it wasna cheap," agreed his father; "but ye must 'a' had a gey fine time seein' the sichts." "Seein' the sichts!" roared Sandy. "I didna see a sicht a' the time I was in Lunnon. Mon, mon, ye dinna suppose I was going to be stuck that much for a room, an' then no get the proper use o't!"—Tit-Bits.

She—They say that an apple a day will keep the doctor away. He—Why stop there? An onion a day will keep everybody away.—Tit-Bits.

Sub-editor—A correspondent sends us a full account of a cock fight, with photographs of the steel spurs used, the cockpit, spectators, birds in battle, etc., with every round described.

Great Editor—Gracious! Get it all

Sub-editor (doubtfully)—But this is a moral Sunday paper.

Great Editor—Y-e-s, I know. Head it: "A Brutal Sport—Where Were the Police?"—Royal Magazine.

Savants tell us that the hobble skirt was fashionable among the Egyptians 5000 years ago. However, it is not mentioned among the plagues of Egypt.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

"Johnny," said the minister, reprovingly, as he met an urchin carrying a string of fish one first-day afternoon, "did you catch those today?" "Ye—yes, sir," answered Johnny. "That's what they got for chasin' worms on Sunday."—Chicago News.

"S'pose my face is dirty," said the office boy in the elevator, "what business is it of yours? You ain't my dad." "No," replied the elevator man; "but I'm bringing you up."—Boston Transcript.

She: "Yes, I like Ted; he is so extravagant." He: "That is hardly the best quality for a husband, is it?" She: "Of course not; I am not going to marry him."—Boston Herald.

Warden: "No'm; the guy that killed his family ain't here no more. The gov'nor pardoned him." The Visitor: "What a shame. I've brought him a lot of roses! What other murderers have you?"—Cleveland Leader.

Dear Old Lady (with a view to a little moral teaching)—"Now, do either of you little boys say naughty words?"

Elder Brother—"Well, mum, I ain't much of a 'and at it myself, but young Bill here is a treat. Cuss for the lady, Bill."—"The Butterfly."

Mrs. Muggins—Don't you ever try to save any money? Mr. Muggins—Sure. I saved $4 today. Borrowell struck me for $5, and I only let him have $1.—Philadelphia Record.

"It was to satisfy your extravagant tastes," cried the desperate man, "that I committed the forgery! The crime is upon your head!" The woman started and gazed at him wonderingly. "Is my crime on straight?" she asked.—Success.

McRooney—How long was Pat sick, Mrs. Clancy? Mrs. Clancy—Only two days, Mr. McRooney. McRooney—Sure Pat was always a hustler!—Puck.

Foreman Sweepey—No more ov yer sass, Moriarty. From now on I'll have nothin' from ye but silence, an' but little o' thot."—Truth.

"Is it true that Maude refused a man worth a million?" "It is." "Was she crazy, or in love?" "Neither. She accepted a man worth two million."—Boston Transcript.

Weary Walter—I lost 'arf a crown yesterday. Tired Timotheus—Did you 'ave a 'ole in yer pocket? Weary Walter—No; the bloke wot dropped it heard it fall.—Tit-Bits.

Mrs. Highup—Your husband has changed so that I didn't recognize him. Mrs. Blase—It isn't that. I've changed husbands.—Puck.

"Your wife has received some sudden shock. What has happened?" "I don't know, doctor. I came home early last night——" "Ah, that presumably accounts for it."—Washington Herald.

Young Lady—You say you were on a raft for six weeks, and had nothing to eat but mutton. Where did you get the mutton from? Old Salt—Well, you see, miss, the sea was very choppy.—Tit-Bits.

The Lady—I thought you said you were looking for work. The Hobo—Well, I am, mom. But I don't want to get it right now. I'm a detective, yer see, an' I'm jest after clews today."—Toledo Blade.

"Do you think I could keep the wolf from the door by my singing?" asked the musical young man. "You could," replied Miss Mayenne, "if the wolf had any sort of an ear for music."—Washington Star.

"Your friend is rather indelicate," remarked Mrs. Wombat. "Says she gave her husband some panatellas for Christmas." "What's wrong with that?" "I wouldn't think of mentioning sleeping garments in public."—Pittsburg Post.

Dissatisfied Patron—Gentle disposition! Why, he wants to bite the head off every dog he meets. I've been swindled! Dog Merchant—You didn't ought to keep dogs at all, mister. The animals you ought to keep wiv your temperament is silkworms!—Punch.

Theatre

"The Chocolate Soldier"

"The Chocolate Soldier" has broken all records at the Majestic, reflecting credit upon the Los Angeles public, which appreciates a masterpiece when It is music which kindles one at the many points of excellence in this comic opera is Oscar Strauss' music. It is music which kindles one at the very start, unfolds exquisite variations of melody and harmony while maintaining perfect unity of theme, mounts up to a superb climax at the end of the second act, and tapers off with the same theme echoing and dying like a thrilling bugle-note, until every mother's son of us is humming "My Hero" on his dazed, illuminated homeward way.

As everybody accedes, "The Chocolate Soldier" is the best of its kind since "The Merry Widow." Just why it does not and never will appeal as widely as did that enchanting lady it is hard to say. Certainly the music, taken as a complete entity, is superior.

Hugh Lloyd, Orpheum Next Week

George Bernard Shaw's hammer-like satire hits squarely upon the head of bombastic militarism and surface heroics, puncturing one's sense-delight in the song, color and sentiment with acrid little appeals to the humor and intellect. Of horseplay there is none There is an abundance of piquant romance, and picturesqueness a-plenty in surroundings and costuming.

Adapted from "Arms and the Man," "The Chocolate Soldier" tells the story of one Lieutenant Bumerli who, pursued as a spy, seeks refuge in the room of a Bulgarian girl. When he first bursts through the door of her balcony, he meets with a hostile reception, but his brass buttons and engaging audacity combine to break down Nadina Popoff's reserve, and she shields him from the inquisitive soldiers who file through the apartment, overlooking the one particular portiere like any modern detective. Her mother and cousin Mascha have sharper eyes, howver, and before Bumerli leaves he has received timid amatory advances, and a photograph, from each of the three ladies. Much fun results from Bumerli's casual narration of the adventure, later, to Nadina's father and fiance, whose relationship to the maiden he doesn't suspect, and from the ladies' distracted efforts to recover their photographs. Of course Bumerli's charming insolence and wheedling conceit triumph eventually, and he wins Nadina from the equally conceited but not so dashing Alexius, her "Hero."

John R. Phillips plays the debonair "Chocolate Soldier" role in most amusing fashion, using his splendid baritone as effectively as he does the whimsical play of his mobile features. Miss Antoinette Kopetzky, a dainty little miss whose voice is pleasing despite a tendency to flat, is Nadina, and acts with sweetness and humor. Miss Ilon Bergere is bewitchingly impudent as Mascha, and Miss Margaret Crawford suffices as the mother. The "Hero" of Harry Davies is unnecessarily strained.

The concerted work of the chorus is capital, and the settings, two for the three acts, are attractively foreign.

D. R. L.

Orpheum

In the week's bill at the Orpheum, the holdovers are as prominent as the new numbers, but the second-weekers ar generally so amusing that they are well worth seeing twice.

Of the new numbers, the widely-known skit, "Cherie," featuring Clayton White and Marie Stuart, is the leader. It is abundantly entertaining and keeps the audience in a delightful state of giggles.

Kennedy, De Milt and Kennedy, "that jolly bunch," make a lot of fun, and the young lady member of the "bunch" is good to look upon.

Despite the fact that cycling stunts have lost their novelty for vaudeville audiences, the Five Cycling Auroras hold the attention by some clever new feats. This troupe is about the best in its line that has appeared on the Orpheum boards.

Frank Rogers, colored ventriloquist, is quite good.

The plump and languorous Bonita continues her fascinations in "The Real Girl"; the Hanlon Brothers keep right on with their phantastic rampage, "Just-Phor-Phun," Chas. B. Lawlor and daughters repeat their character singing, and Elise, Wulff and Waldoff again take up time rather unprofitably for the audience with their acrobatic stunt, 'After the Football Game."

The biograph pictures were especially fine. They gave a graphic reproduction of Buffalo Jones and his band lasooing wild animals in South Africa.

L. B.

Coming Attractions

"Is Matrimony a Failure," a comedy by Leo Ditrichstein, will be given its first Los Angeles production at the Burbank theater next week. It was given for an entire year at the Republic Theatre, New York, under the direction of David Belasco, and is now being played in London. While the title of the comedy propounds a problem as old as the world itself, the proposition is not treated as seriously as to assume the aspect of a debate. It is all for fun, and if the wise ones can read a little philosophy into the merriment they get that much added enjoyment from it.

"Is Matrimony a Failure" takes its name from the title of a play which the leading character in it, Skelton Perry, has written. This play declares that matrimony is a failure, and when its authorship is discovered, it causes a tremendous sensation in the little town where Perry lives. He is denounced by everyone, including his own relatives. Suddenly it is discovered that a great many of the marriages in the town have been illegally performed and the couples are free. Perry has previously declared that if the matrimonial shackles were removed very few would willingly resume them, and events justify his belief. The remainder of the play has to do with the complications which follow the separation of the erstwhile married couples. There is no cessation in the fun until the final curtain.

For its headliner the week beginning Monday matinee, Feb. 20, the Orpheum will offer one of the strangest sketches in vaudeville: It is called "The Visitor," was written by Oliver White and is interpreted by Porter J. White, his brother, and a company. The sketch is a mystery whose plot does not become clear till the very last line, yet throughout it is said to be of much interest.

Hugh Lloyd comes to do some stunts on the suspended rope. Lloyd carries no balance pole and scorns the usual umbrella, but his balancing tests, rope walking and the like are declared to be distinctively achieved by him alone.

The Victoria Four is one of the newest of the good quartettes to come this way. The men eschew the usual farcical makeup, and appear in fitting evening clothes with top hats, but this does not prevent a large injection of comedy material into their efforts. One of their stunts is the singing of a number in Hebrew, Irish, German and Italian, all at the same time, each man taking one of the dialects.

Arthur Borani and Annie Nevaro will furnish the new comics. They are a pair of patterers, with some new dance twists, turns and frolics.

"Cherie," with Clayton White and Marie Stuart holds over. Others who remain are the five Cycling Auroras, Frank Rogers, the negro ventriloquist, and Kennedy DeMilt and Kennedy, who sparkle with fun.

"The Girl in the Taxi," which comes to the Mason Opera House for the week of February 27th, was originally presented in Paris, although the play was written by a German playwright, its first production was at the French capitol, and had a run of over 1000 nights. The American adaptation was made by Stanislaus Strange, who is well known in this country through his musical comedy writings. Strange in his adaptation has retained all the original French atmosphere.

"The Merry Widow" will be seen at the Majestic beginning Sunday, Feb. 26. Franz Lebar, who wrote the music, has established himself as the only living successor to the line of light opera writers beginning with Offenbach and ending with Sullivan. He combines the abandon and riotous melody of the former composer with the scholarly and emotional effectiveness of the latter. The book is ingenious and witty. Mabel Wilber will be the Sonia, with Charles Meakins as the Prince Danilo.

Playgoers who find delight in color, refined comedy and good singing in musical comedy, will be amused with "The Arcadians," which holds forth at the Mason Opera House week of March 6.

Sponsored by Charles Frohman, and after a two years' run in New York, "The Arcadians" comes to this city with the same company which ended its engagement in the metropolis recently. The girly galaxy and the male choristers of the play are said to bring the cast in its entirety close to one hundred people.

MUSIC

The second Hofmann recital last Saturday afternoon showed that the fame of a distinguished artist such as Hofmann has long since proved himself can make an enthusiastic Los Angeles public ignore the most adverse weather conditions, and can bring them in crowds through the pouring rain to enjoy the feast provided. In spite of wind and weather Simpson Auditorium was crowded with a damp but none the less appreciative audience to hear this truly great artist.

Hofmann's playing Saturday afternoon was characterized by a tonal richness, an imposing volume of sound, a phenomenal strength and elasticity of touch, a technical perfection which stirred his hearers to considerable demonstration of appreciation. If any criticism could be made it would be that on this occasion Hofmann was carried away by his own enthusiasm to the point of sacrificing something of delicacy and refinement to the almost orchestral effects with which he astonished us. A program of more contrasted character would have been grateful to the musician's ear. In the "Vogel als Prophet" and also in one or two of the "Carneval" themes Hofmann gave a glimpse of his capabilities in the line of graceful and delicate playing.

Never has the writer heard such truly gorgeous tonal effect in a piano recital as characterized Hofmann's interpretation of the "Marche des Davidsbundler contre les Philistins" which concluded the Schumann "Carneval."

The Chopin "A Major Polonaise" was given with dash, and a strongly marked rhythm which might almost be called exaggerated. The remaining Chopin numbers as also the Liszt group were enthusiastically received.

Hofmann is one of the pianists of foremost rank and is also an artist of wide information and an experience extending over a considerable period. Angelenos will look forword with the anticipation of a high artistic enpoyment to his next appearance here.

M. R. T.

What promises to be an enjoyable musical event is the recital to be given by Miss Lillian Adams, pianist, assisted by Mrs. Mary Le Grand Reed, soprano, in the Gamut Club auditorium next Tuesday evening. Miss Adams is a Los Angeles girl who returned from Germany about two years ago, after studying with Baumeister. Since then she has given only one concert. She has selected an interesting program for Tuesday evening, her final number being Tschaikowsky's "Slavischer March," originally composed for orchestra. The program in full is as follows:

Etude, Op. 10, No. 3, Waltz in E minor, Butterflies (Chopin) Miss Adams; "Jewel Song" from "Faust" (Gounod), Mrs. Reed; "Hark, Hark the Lark" (Schubert-Liszt), Concert Staccato (Rubenstein), Miss Adams; "Ah! Love but a Day" (Beach), "Like a Rosebud" (La Forge), "Beat Upon Mine, Little Heart" (Nevin), "Love Has Wings" (Rogers), Mrs. Reed; Slavischer March (Tschaikowsky), Miss Adams.

Three, of a series of five modern plays will be interpreted at Cumnock Hall by two readers, Miss Cora Mel Patton and Mrs. Kate Wisner McCluskey, during this week and next. The series includes the following plays: Today, Feb. 18, "The Great Galeoto"; Feb. 21, "Strife"; Feb. 23, "The Blue Bird." The readings will begin at 10.30 in the morning and will attract students of modern drama. "Chantecler" and "The Lady from the Sea" were given on Tuesday and Thursday, respectively, of this week.

Miss Patten comes from Chicago, and is notable for her interpretations of the best literature.

Mrs. McCluskey, of Evanston, has a wide reputation for true and subtle interpretations, coupled with a charming personality and rich voice.

In "Deep Woods," on his farm at Peterborough, Edward MacDowell built a log cabin, surrounded by enormous pines and facing, through a lovely vista, Monadnock and the setting sun. Here came into existence all the MacDowell music written within the last five or six years of his working life, "The Norse" and "Keltic" Sonatas, the "New England Idyls" and "Fireside Tales" and many songs and choruses. His surroundings were a source of inspiration to him and now his wife has established the MacDoweil memorial Association for the assistance of students at this home, and is devoting her life to winning the recognition which the American public should have given to the husband whose work placed him at the head of American composers.

Mrs. MacDowell is now in Southern California speaking before the various clubs, and a MacDowell program will be given either on Friday evening, Feb. 24th at Simpson Auditorium, or Sunday afternoon the 26th at the same place. Lantern slides will be used to heighten the vividness of the story, and Miss Zerlina Bartholomew of New York, a lyric soprano whose specialty is MacDowell songs, will sing a group of the composers songs, Mrs. MacDowell playing the accompaniments. In addition to this artist Miss Margel Gluck, violinist from London, and her accompanist, Miss Ivimey, will present a group of MacDowell instrumental numbers.

Bonci, the famous lyric tenor, in his endeavor to reach in an educational manner, the students and the public of America, has renounced his operatic work to tour the country in concert. He is actuated by two reasons; one to demonstrate the benefits to be drived from the practice of bel canto, of which he and Tetrazzini are the best known exponents, the other to study music conditions throughout this country. If he finds as a result of his tour that the lovers of classic music are sufficiently interested he will endeavor to show that grand opera in English can be assured, and will make public a plan upon which he has been working for the past year, which will eventually end in the establishment of an institution that will go far toward assuring for the United States, grand opera sung in our own tongue by our own artists. Bonci will give a concert at Simpson Anditorium Tuesday evening, Feb. 28th. The program follows:

Spiagge amata (Helen and Paris).. ..... Gluck
Caro mio ben.....Giordani
Chi Vuol la Zingarella.....Paisiello
On Wings of Music.....Mendelssohn
Who is Sylvia.....Schubert
Hark, Hark the Lark.....Schubert
Aria, M'Appari tutt' Amor (Marta) ..... Flotow
Piano solo, Allegro appassionate... ..... Saint Saens
Vieille Chanson .....Bizet
Romance .....Debussy
Embarquez-vous!..... Godard
Aria; Che gelida Manina (La Boheme) ..... Puccini
Long Ago .....MacDowell
A Maid Sings Light.....MacDowell
Mattinata .....Leoncavallo

The second recital of the Harry Clifford Lott series will be given at Cumnock Hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 23rd. Mr. Lott's first recital was a miscellaneous one. The second program will be a decided novelty and devoted exclusively to the musical settings of poems by Rudyard Kipling. In the Barrack Room Ballads are found many artistic poems suitable to the aggressive ideas of Walter Damrosch, Arthur Foote and Arthur Whiting, who early discovered the possibilities of surrounding the Kipling works with artistic musical settings. The first half of the program will be given over to these, the latter half reserved for the "Just So" songs by Edward German. Mrs. Lott will preside at the piano.

Mary Garden has been engaged by an eastern impresario for a short concert tour at the end of her engagements with the operatic companies in New York and Philadelphia.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447 Mats. 10c, 25c, 50c. Night, 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c
Beginning Monday Matinee, Feb. 20, 1911
Porter J. White & Co. "The Visitor"
Hugh Lloyd On the Bounding Rope
Victoria Four Storm, Reals, Billbury, Moon
Borani & Nevaro "Dandy Dude Tramp"
White & Stuart "Cherie"
5 Cycling Auroras Wonders awheel
Kennedys & De Milt "That Jolly Bunch"
Frank Rogers Negro Ventriloquist
ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
Beginning Sunday Matinee, Feb. 19
SPECIAL MATINEE WEDNESDAY, WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY
First Time in Los Angeles of the great Belasco Comedy Success
"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE"
Prices—25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees—Sat., Wed., Sun., 10c, 25c, 50c.

Suburban Home
FOR SALE
MUST BE SEEN TO BE APPRECIATED

HOUSE—38x56 on ground, six large rooms on ground floor, also bath, screen porch, and cement porch 8x38; two large bedrooms, bath room, and sleeping porch large enough for two full-size beds on upper floor. Built last year. Also a good-sized garage.

GROUNDS—215x248 feet, comprising one-half of an oval block, over 600 feet of frontage on oiled street with curb and sidewalk all in; 7500 square feet of lawn; twenty full-bearing walnut trees; forty to fifty trees in family orchard, mostly citrus; grape vines, roses, flowers and palms planted during past year.

LOCATION—In beautiful Eagle Rock Valley; 30 minutes from post-office, on Eagle Rock Valley car line; half hourly car service. Situated on high ground, over-looking valley and new Occidental College site. Three hundred feet from and facing Colorado Avenue, the new foothill highway from Pasadena, through Glendale and Hollywood to the ocean.

PRICE—$8000; terms to suit, to responsible party.
Inquire,

A. M. DUNN, 311-319 E. 4th St.

SALT LAKE ROUTE

NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS

LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.

Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.

AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.

Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES PACIFIC — SHORT LINE TO THE SEA — ELECTRIC

Los Angeles Pacific Company
Electric Railway

The Shortest and Quickest Line between

Los Angeles and the Ocean

TO SANTA MONICA, OCEAN PARK, VENICE, REDONDO BEACH, SOLDIERS' HOME, SAWTELLE, SHERMAN, HOLLYWOOD AND COLEGROVE.

Balloon Route Excursions
One Whole Day for One Dollar
101 Miles for 100 Cents

Showing some of California's finest scenery including 36 miles right along the ocean. A reserved seat for every patron and an Experienced Guide with each car.

The Only Electric Line Excursion Out of Los Angeles Going One Way and Returning another

FREE ATTRACTIONS: An Ocean Voyage on Wheels—The Excursion Cars running a mile into the Ocean on Long Wharf at Port Los Angeles, the longest pleasure and fishing wharf in the world. At Santa Monica, free admission to the Camera Obscura, an exclusive attraction for Balloon Route Excursionists only. FREE ADMISSION to the $20,000 Aquarium; and a FREE RIDE ON THE L. A. THOMPSON SCENIC RAILWAY, the longest in the world, at Venice. (Sundays excepted during July, August and September.)

Last car leaves Hill Street Station, between Fourth and Fifth, LOS ANGELES, at 9:40 A. M. DAILY.

Nothing Like It Anywhere

PACIFIC ELECTRIC — COMFORT-SPEED-SAFETY

Mt. Lowe

The Great Scenic Railway Trolley Trip. Most wonderful of them all in diversity and beauty of its scenery and scope and variety of its views. Two hours from Los Angeles to the crest of the Sierras.

Other Points of Interest to Tourists:

Pasadena, San Gabriel Mission, Founded in 1771; Monrovia Sierra Madre and Glendale

. . . DIRECTORY . . .

Index to Business Houses, Professions, Etc.

CUTS AND ILLUSTRATIONS
ARISTO ENGRAVING CO., Citizens National Bank Bldg., 3rd and Main Sts.

DENTISTS
DR. G. J. CRANDALL, Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway, Suites 805-806. Phones—Home F 2075; Main 1946.

DRY GOODS
VILLE DE PARIS, 10893; Main 893 317-325 S. Broadway, 314-322 S. Hill

FURNITURE REPAIR WORKS
UPHOLSTERING & REPAIRING, 1603 S. Main. Phones: Home 24387; Bdwy. 4382

MISFIT CLOTHING
JUNCTION TAILOR, Misfit Clothing Bought and Sold 844 South Main Street. A 3605

MEN'S FURNISHINGS
HARRIS & FRANK, 437-43 S. Spring. 10891; Main 9477

PIANOS AND ORGANS
GEO J. BIRKEL & CO., Steinway, Kranich and Bach, Cecilian and Victor Dealers. 345-47 S. Spring.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA MUSIC CO., Chickering & Pianola Agents, 332-4 S. Broadway.

PURITAS DISTILLED WATER
LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO. Phones Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191.

REAL ESTATE
MINES & FARISH, 353 S. Hill St. High Class Investments.

STUDIOS TO RENT
BLANCHARD HALL. Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. 233 S. Broadway; 232 S. Hill.

STORAGE AND MOVING
BEKINS, 1335 S. Figueroa
22562 Broadway 3773

Pacific Outlook
La Follette's Weekly $1.60 Per Year

Sunset Main 1566 Home F-1853

Wayside Press

Largest and Most Up-to-date Printing Establishment in the Southwest

311 EAST FOURTH STREET LOS ANGELES

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK

A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Vol. X. No. 9 San Francisco and Los Angeles, February 25, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

FOREWORD

With This Issue the Name of Pacific Outlook Changes to The California Outlook.

There are a dozen or more weekly papers published in San Francisco and Los Angeles, nearly all of which are subsidized by the interests and thoroughly reactionary. The need for a progressive publication to counteract the gutter weeklies is self-evident. The California Weekly, published in San Francisco until recently, did splendid service during its existence, and was of great aid to the progressive movement. The only other weekly published in either the northern or southern metropolis that measured up to the requirements was the Pacific Outlook of Los Angeles.

The subscription lists of the California Weekly and the Pacific Outlook have been consolidated, as have also the names of the two publications and the newspaper will be known as The California Outlook. The California Outlook will be the only weekly published in the state having a substantial circulation both in the north and south. It will have the backing of the leading men in the progressive movement in California, and it will endeavor to reflect the sentiment of that movement. A. J. Pillsbury, formerly editor of the California Weekly, and Charles Dwight Willard of Los Angeles, editorial contributor to the Pacific Outlook, will be the editorial contributors to the new publication. There are no more able, vigorous, intelligent, or fearless commentators on public events in this state than these two men. Mr. Pillsbury will continue to write, in addition to his editorials, the page on state political gossip under the title of "The Watchman," and Mr. Willard will also continue to furnish a page for the new publication each week on Civic Affairs, in which he is a recognized expert. In addition, there will be each week articles by other well qualified writers on subjects of current interest, and the effort will be in every way to publish a high class paper devoted to progressive principles and supporting men and measures in this state toward that end.

The California Outlook has been financed by subscriptions from a hundred of the leading patriotic good government men of the state who have appointed a committee of five to direct its affairs. The paper will not be printed for financial profit and should it become more than self supporting its surplus will be expended in extending its field of usefulness in the cause of civic righteousness.

In this effort we ask the support and co-operation of every right-minded patriotic, progressive citizen of California.

By C. D. WILLARD

C. D. Willard

I began to write editorial on the "Pacific Outlook" in June of 1909, and a brief calculation shows me that I have turned out over 500,000 words in that period of 90 weeks.

It would seem that with such a number of words at my disposal I ought to have been able by this time to express in full any little ideas that I may entertain on things in general.

So it happens that with this number I bid farewell to the readers of "Pacific Outlook," having promised to write no more for that periodical.

But let the reader be not too hasty with regret—whichever his expresson of joy or he was minded to hand out. This is an era of rapid change, of wheels within wheels, of holding companies and trusts, and of things that are not what they seem.

I cannot write any more for "Pacific Outlook" because it exists no longer under that name. It goes to join "The California Weekly," that passed out with the end of 1910. But in their place we have herewith "The California Outlook." Note the ingenuity of the name. Meyer Lissner thought of that. He has thought of a good many things in the last three or four years, and some of his "thinks" have made history in this state.

For this new periodical, "The California Outlook," I propose to jot down a few ideas, such as I may have left unexpressed—say a million or two of words. In fact Mr. Pillsbury and myself will do the editorial—like ale and porter, 'alf 'n 'alf. May it always be as refreshing and as harmless!

I am a bit sorry for Pillsbury, however. He lives up north, which gives me the first whack at the space.

The best way to tell our articles apart is this: if you find anything that you disagree with so violently that you are tempted to go around and lick the editor, why, Pillsbury, he wrote that.

Coming back to those 500,000 words already remarked by me, I am reminded of an incident that dear old Colonel Will Harris told me he witnessed in a Tennessee court room. An eminent member of the bar of that state had spoken for ten consecutive days on a case before a jury: At the end of the tenth day, he said: "Having now given you the general outline of the points I wish to cover, I will begin the main body of my speech tomorrow." Whereupon, one of the jurymen rose suddenly in his chair and sank back, dead.

Please don't.

By A. J. PILLSBURY

A. J. Pillsbury

Fresh from two and a quarter years of ineffectual effort to make The California Weekly stick, a becoming humility would dissuade me from speaking with over confidence of weekly journalism, and yet I should have been dull indeed had I not learned something from that experience. That there is a field of great utility for some such a weekly periodical as The California Weekly was I have not a doubt. Only time and capital were needed to develop it, perhaps five more years of time and not a little of capital.

It is not sufficient in my judgment that "a" paper be made to live. There are already papers enough and to spare, such as they are, and whoso merely makes two, such as we commonly have, live where one lived before is far from being a benefactor of his race. In my judgment a weekly paper, in order to justify its existence, must perform some public service not now adequately performed by the journalism we have.

Daily papers are hastily written to be hastily read and, "To-day's dailies kindle tomorrow's fires." The weekly papers should interpret the events of the week in sober second thought. Daily papers commonly voice special clienteles, interests or parties and are relatively little relied on as sources of painstaking information or sound opinion. The weekly paper should supply both these needs. We have in California no daily with a state-broad outlook and sympathy. The Los Angeles dailies are devoted to Southern California and the San Francisco dailies are put to it to see with sympathetic vision so far as across San Francisco Bay. If The California Outlook would justify its existence it must speak for California as a whole, yes "From Shasta to San Diego and from the Sierras to the sea."

But above all else the weekly paper, if it would vindicate its right to live, must take the whole people into its confidence. It must dare to be free. No subject that concerns the state must be tabooed. Eschewing that personal journalism that assaults character unjustly and but reechoes the carping criticisms of the day, the weekly must strike telling blows for Right Things no matter who is hit and, if it can muster the prophetic ability, it must strive to lead public sentiment rather than follow it, whereas legislation, if it would not provoke reaction, must follow public sentiment rather than get in advance of it.

Hoping and anticipating that The California Outlook will not be content with being the mouthpiece of any individual, or the organ of any faction, but will sedulously follow the lines herein broadly laid down, I have undertaken to contribute to its columns and do urgently commend the new enterprise to the friends of The California Weekly, and all others, in the expectation that if the friends of Right Things in San Francisco and Los Angeles unite in its support The California Outlook will vindicate its right to live and to serve.

✣ ✣ ✣

INDETERMINATE FRANCHISES

Most California city charters that have been either adopted new or revised by amendment during the last ten years have a 20 year to 30 year limitation on the life of franchises granted by the city to utilities. Some of them have a provision that the city may buy the physical properties of the company after 5 or 10 years have elapsed.

San Diego has recently made itself a striking exception to the general rule by adopting a charter amendment for a 50-year franchise, with a purchase clause operative at the end of 25 years. This was done to please John D. Spreckles, who owns the street car system of that city—not to mention various other utilities and enterprises—and who refused to go on with his "development" of the town unless this concession was granted him. Of course that city has, like all other cities, a large class of boomers and boosters who cannot see beyond the middle of next week. They have real estate to sell and they want to see the dirt flying right now. What may happen to the city fifteen or twenty years hence is a matter of utter indifference to them. The extraordinary feature of the San Diego case, however, lies in the fact that these Fly-by-nights seem to be in the majority—showing that

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES

Published Every Saturday

Subscription Price $1.00 a Year, in Advance.
Single Copies 5 Cents at News Stands.

A. J. PILLSBURY, C. D. WILLARD } Contributing Editors

A. M. DUNN, Manager
311 East Fourth St., Los Angeles

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—The California Outlook is mailed to subscribers through the Los Angeles Post Office every Friday, and should be delivered in San Francisco and Los Angeles by Saturday's post. If for any reason it should be delayed, or be delivered in poor condition, subscribers will confer a favor upon the publishers by giving them immediate notice.

Entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

it is not a real city but rather a real estate tract.

Twenty years ago the 50-year franchise was all the vogue for public utilities and that was regarded as a great improvement over the 99-year and 999-year franchises that had been given out liberally by cities when utilities first came into existence in the years before and during the civil war. In some cities in the East and South perpetual franchises were granted. But the courts have held that a perpetual franchise is in effect alienation and have canceled many of them when the question of their legality has been raised. Evidently there is a suspicion on the part of the utility people that franchises of 99 years or over are in danger of going up against a similar construction, for many cases are recorded of the surrender of long time franchises in return for those of shorter terms.

The most advanced thought on the subject of length of term for utility franchises now favors the indeterminate form, with power of revocation for purchase or transfer vested in the city. Thus, if at any time the city desires to go into the business of the utility, it can by arbitration (terms of which are described in the franchise) take over the physical properties, or if the city is dissatisfied at the way the company is serving the people, it can require a sale (under arbitration for value) to some other company. Sometimes the repurchase and transfer provisions are not operative during the first ten years, and always they are slow of operation, rendering a snap judgment impossible. There is always provision for open bookkeeping and usually for the city to receive a percentage of receipts. The latter is not essential, of course, if the city retains power to reduce fares and gives the public the benefit of excess profits in that form.

From the uproar that has come from certain quarters on the reduction from 50 years to 20 or 25 in period of franchises, it might be supposed that bond holders or bond buyers would object to franchises that have no term whatever to run and live only at the city's pleasure. On the contrary these have preference over all other forms of utility securities. A financial article recently appearing in the "Saturday Evening Post" called attention to this, and gave as an explanation that investors felt the enterprise was in less danger from popular feeling and resentment. The fact is a public utility is a vulnerable concern if the people are stirred to an attack, and the mere length of term of its franchise will not save it. Of course, if the company can elect the city officers all may go smoothly; but the moment people take matters in their own hands the company is really at their mercy. They can smother it with restrictions and regulations and can hound it into the hands of a receiver in spite of all the protection the courts can legally give it. Nothing stimulates resentment against a utility company like the existence of a long time franchise. People look upon it as a cinch, a jug-handled contract, obtained by a species of fraud—for most of these long term franchises run back to the days of political-corporate control of the city governments.

Under the indeterminate franchise the worst that can happen to the bond-holder is that his loan may come to an end through the return of the principal, but even that is unlikely, for in any transfer or in purchase by the city the indebtedness would probably be carried along. As for the city, it is of course better off under this arrangement than with any franchise of a definite period of years, however short. The fundamental principle is that of applying the "recall" to franchises.

✣ ✣ ✣

SIZING UP NEWSPAPERS

"Collier's" is publishing a series of able articles by Will Irwin on the American newspaper, in which the good and bad characteristics of our most important national institution are set forth in interesting shape. But the result is only half satisfying. It is not what the average reader of Collier's would like to see—we venture the opinion—or at least it is not all they would like.

We have witnessed the muck raking of our national, state and city governments and of the officials thereof, and also the overhauling of the trusts and the railways, and the showing up of patent medicines and fake food products; we have been allowed to gaze on the inside workings of Wall Street and the great financial flimflam—everything in short that is of much importance has been opened up and exhibited to us—except the most important thing of all, and that is the newspaper. There have been articles enough about newspapers in general, but they have not been properly and specifically muck raked. Thus, when we used to read editorial denunciations of the Senate for its subserviency to the special interest, we were entirely calm; but when Phillips and Baker and Russell began to talk about Aldrich and Penrose and Lodge and Smoot, we began to listen and feel of the edge of the knife. In a general way we knew Wall Street was rotten, but when Hendrick gave us the inside of the looting of Metropolitan and of the raid on Illinois Central, then our ideas grew clearer. Also we have listened to many Jeremiads on the subject of the decadence of the press, its sensationalism, subserviency to advertisers, its vulgarity and untruthfulness, but we know that there are wide differences between papers in our own town, and we assume that there are still greater differences throughout the general field of American journalism.

Suppose that some sincere and disinterested newspaper expert should make a thorough study and analysis of the papers of the country, visiting the various cities to learn how each was regarded in its own habitat, and then describe them to us on their merits in comparison one with another. It would make mighty interesting and wholesome reading.

Charles Zubelin, the sociologist of Chicago University, published last summer a magazine article on American newspapers in which he listed twenty or thirty of the best and worst. At the top of the list were the Springfield Republican and the Indianapolis News, and at the bottom the Cincinnati Enquirer and the Los Angeles Times. Of course the people of Los Angeles have long known that the Times was the meanest, the most untruthful and the most obscene journal in the country, but they had not appreciated how generally this fact was understood. No doubt people in other cities would be similarly surprised if they knew the status of their newspapers in comparison with the press of the whole country. One glances at the papers of other cities, now and then, but he does not read and analyze them critically, as is necessary to make a comparison.

Now there is a job of muck raking that would call for real courage, for the magazines are much beholden to the newspapers for "notices." We are hopeful that some periodical will soon undertake the work.

✣ ✣ ✣

A POSITION OF MUCH DIFFICULTY

There are murmurings in the legislature and out of it with reference to the state university. Some fear that it is coming to be dominated by that spirit which characterizes the retainers of special interests to the neglect of the common welfare and that young men are being trained to meet the needs of centralized industry rather than of an industry democratized or freely competitive. Doubtless all the influences that are at work outside the university are at work inside it, but the wonder is that the University of California has been subverted as little as it has. With the exception of the Pardee administration from time immemorial the government of the state university could, at least, have been dominated by the same influences that dominated courts and legislatures to their hurt. That forbearance which has kept on the board of regents such men as Dr. Rowell and Senator Bard, when all such places might have been filled by Hellmans and Crockers, is more easily appreciated than understood, but there they are and others like them. Of the sixteen appointed members of the board of regents not above four or five are objectionable by reason of being in sympathy with successful rascality and out of sympathy with the common people. In the faculty of the university are found men of all shades of opinion and all qualities of character from the obsequious toady to the radical come-outer. To handle this diverse body in a way to provoke the minimum of friction against the university has been President Wheeler's special charge and right well has he acquitted himself. Neither his head nor his hand is often seen above the surface of affairs, but just underneath both are busy smoothing down and glossing over, not so busy making friends as preventing the making of enemies. He has obeyed the constitutional mandate to keep the university "independent of all political and sectarian influence," and has so far succeeded as to exasperate some but gratify many. His position is one of much difficulty. Those of us who are anxious to see the university don the armor of righteousness and come out into the open to fight for Right Things regardless of consequences will probably have to rest content if it does nothing positively retrogressive, while those who would shut the mouths of all radicals in the faculty will probably have to content themselves with muffling their roarings rather than stilling them altogether. Along political and sectarian and sometimes even moral, lines the University of California will be a non-combatant. If we are not satisfied that it shall be so then must we change the constitution and—the president of the university.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE TRUSTS, AT HOME AND ABROAD

One of the most notable articles of the February magazine crop is by Gilbert Holland Montague, Esq.; of the New York bar, in the Atlantic. He is an intelligent and forceful writer, who has devoted a good deal of study to trust problems, and his present article contrasts the treatment given to industrial combinations, and the attitude of the public toward them, in this country and in Europe, particularly in Germany and England. In neither of the foreign nations are they regarded with apprehension, and no attempt is made to break them up. The government of Prussia has, indeed, given them its direct endorsement. And in these foreign countries the trusts do no harm—which accounts for the absence of any public sentiment against them.

Why do they do no harm? Is human nature so different in Germany and England from what it is in America that men can be trusted with the power to make prices both for the raw material they buy and the manufactured article they sell without the stress of competition, and yet the public suffer no injury?

Not at all. Mr. Montague explains in rather an airy and incidental way that the government regulates them so that they cannot use their position of absolute control to oppress anybody. It sounds perfectly easy and simple, as he tells it, and one is quite prepared for the logic of his conclusion: that we are making a great mistake in this country in fighting the trusts and in the effort to break up combinations, for the combination is really a money saver to everybody, steadies industry and industrial securities stops the waste of competition and reduces danger of panics; and all that is needed—if anything is really needed, and on this Mr. Montague is a bit vague—is merely that the government should regulate the trusts and see that they do no wrong.

Just a little thing like that!

All that is necessary to put us in shape to do what foreign nations do, or may do, in these matters, is to revise the national constitution, make over the fundamental laws of all the states, change the point of view of all the judges on the bench, take the national and state governments away from the special interests and give them back to the people, and reorganize public sentiment from top to bottom on what constitute the rights of property and the limitations thereon.

"The proverb," says Hamlet, "is something musty—but while the grass grows" —he does not finish, but we may infer that the poor old horse cannot wait and will starve to death.

Now we belong to the class of cheerful lunatics that believe all the miracles enumerated above are going to take place, but our lunacy does not carry us to the point of expecting it all to happen instantly. In 1852 the world burst into tears over "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and a million people wondered if slavery would not end immediately. It took ten years and tens of thousands of lives and several billions of money to do the work, however, and yet the problem of the slave was simple and easy as compared with the problem of the dollar. And in the meantime we must live somehow. We know competition. It is an old friend of the people. It was competition between the Barons and King John that gave us Magna Charta. We, the people, got a good deal battered up in the melee, but we emerged with the capital prize of the middle ages. It was competition between the big taxpayers of London and a fool, named Charles Stuart, that gave us parliamentary government. It is what remains now of competition in business that keeps the price of living from doubling once more. Great waste of energy, no doubt, but it is better than riots and burials in the Potter's Field.

Consider the nature and the origin of these European governments as contrasted with our own. They grew out of unlimited monarchies, where every kind of power over the life and property of the subject rested with the ruler, that is to say, rested with the government. One by one these powers were taken from the monarch and held by agents and representatives of the people. It is just as natural now for the Prussian minister of commerce to fix a price on potash (made by a trust), which price shall be low to the unprosperous farmers of one district and high to dealers that may ship it out of the country, as it once was for the king to seize all the property of a subject with whom he was displeased. A few of the king's prerogatives have been culled out and specifically destroyed, but in the main the government is his residuary legatee.

When we cross to this side of the Atlantic, we find a government that was neither a growth nor an inheritance, but a tour de force, a thing made and fashioned by a jealous and doubting people out of such fragments of authority as they felt the individual could spare. It was in the epoch of revolutions, and the air was filled with a sentiment of resistence to authority. Nothing but the anarchy that trembled beneath their feet brought them to the point of union, and they protested with Jefferson and Tom Paine that that government was best that governed the least. The spirit of democracy was there, but it was not communal but fiercely individual.

Thus it came to pass in the United States, as in no other country on the globe, that almost the entire industrial and business fabric—based primarily as it is on the right of the individual over his property—has grown up outside the realm of government and untouched by it Our laws and our courts protect property, but they do not control it. There is little or no machinery for that purpose, and no way to construct the machinery, without going back to the very beginning of things to take on powers that we do not now possess.

All this is possible—but it is little short of a revolution. Ca ira. It will come. But in the meantime here are the trusts, whose roots go down into the very core of our industrial system. We know one way by which they may be curbed, and we will try that. They are combinations in restrain of trade, and as such are partially subject to control. That is, we hope so. The supreme court will tell us presently.

Now if Mr. Montague were a schoolmaster, or a minister, or just a plain magazine writer, we might accept his article as a sincere offering. But when a New York corporation lawyer, who has frequently written in defense of the trusts, and who presumably understands the problem and its relation to our form of government, proposes blandly that we abandon the effort to control trusts through the establishment of competition, we may be pardoned perhaps if we express doubts of the good faith of the performance. C. D. W.

✣ ✣ ✣

FOR JUSTICE TO OFFICE-HOLDERS

The people of Los Angeles county were recently much astonished at a verdict for heavy damages against a member of their Board of Supervisors for injury to a pedestrian on a country road where the sidewalk section of the road had been washed out. This opened the eyes of everybody to an alarming feature of the law, whereby a supervisor might be held responsible for hundreds of miles of highway which it would be impossible for him to inspect and keep constantly in perfect repair.

The immediate effect of the decision was a threat on the part of the three financially and morally responsible members of the Los Angeles county board that they would resign, unless steps were taken for their protection. Arrangements were finally made through the co-operation of many citizens that induced them to remain in office, and an effort was made to amend the law and bring this absurdity to an end.

It is entirely right that officers who accept responsibility should be held responsible, but they should not be called upon to perform miracles and be financially ruined for their failure. Under the construction given the present law by the jury that gave damages to the plaintiff in the case against Supervisor Pridham, the official who is clothed with the power to care for a road will be financially responsible for accident on the road, if there is any money at the time available to put the road in order. To make good on such a theory of responsibility the supervisor must be clothed with omniscience to know where any break or washout has occurred, and with omnipotence to be able instantly to mend it. There are only two ways to get around a law of that sort: one is to have supervisors that are judgment proof, either through poverty or rascality, or else to spend every dollar of road money the instant it accrues, so that the fund is always overdrawn. And under political conditions as they prevailed in the past these two alternatives, one or the other or both, were usually carried out.

Under the proposed amendment, which is in the care of Henry Lyon in the assembly and Chas. W. Bell in the senate, the official will not be held responsible unless he has received notice of the break, and he is given reasonable time in which to make repairs. This law should be adopted not only to do justice to office holders but also for the real protection of the public, for an impossible law, like the one now on the statute books will never be enforced.

✣ ✣ ✣

MORGANIZATION OF MAGAZINES

The dispatches stated last week that J. Pierpont Morgan had acquired ownership of several of the popular, muck-raking magazines and was seeking to acquire a controlling interest in the great national news companies through the instrumentalities of which these periodicals reach the people. This is important if true. It is almost equally important even if not true, inasmuch as it shows what easily may become true if Morgan, or any other great organizer, be so minded. And yet it is to these very magazines, McClure's and the American, Hampton's and Everybody's, to which we are chiefly indebted for an inside view of The System by which the American people have been exploited to their harm. It has long been known that the Harper publications and the North American Review are Morganized. Hence their fall into inconspicuous desuetude. If the other magazines named, or any of them, have gone the same road they will share the same fate. The blight of that ownership cannot long be concealed. Although serious, not until the country press shall have been subjugated by special interests will the situation become alarming. Nothing, except his shirt, gets next to a man quite like his home paper and as long as that paper stays true the citizen cannot be altogether misled even by the Morganization of the literature of the nation.

✣ ✣ ✣

A SENATORIAL CURIO

Upon his demise, if not sooner, Senator Eddie Wolfe should be embalmed, placed in a glass case and put on exhibition in the foyer of some muscum where all may gaze upon the likes of what nowhere else exists on land or sea, or has existed before or since the flood. He holds, in effect, that where the liquor business is under bann there may one look for drunkenness and licentiousness running rife and for sobriety and chastity only where the bowl is ever flowing and doggeries adorn the four corners of every city block. No option, local or otherwise, for Eddie Wolfe. His moral nature, such as it is, revolts at the idea. Because the daughters of teetotal Turkey are sold into matrimony, like so many American heiresses, Eddie sees in the advance of prohibition a menace to the American family. A curio for sure! His place is not in the California senate, but in a museum.

✣ ✣ ✣

HARANGUE HANG-OUTS

The contention of the I. W. W.'s, that their rights are being invaded when they are denied the privilege of holding street meetings wherever they want to and whenever they want to, at Fresno, or elsewhere, is unsound. Streets are for locomotion, and yet whatever community fails of providing suitable harangue hangh-outs for the free use of all men with messages of which they would be delivered, lacks common prudence. No better safety valves can be invented. Never mind what is said. If some wild-eyer, leather-lunged genius feels like chewing soap and expectorating suds, suffer him to do so. Conch-shell rostrums with good carrying power should be erected at public cost for the convenience of agitators, and over the proscenium of each should be emblazoned in electric lighted letters the legend, "Say What You Please, but Be Almighty Careful What You Do." Barking dogs seldom bite, but beware of the dog that is muzzled. The harangue hang-out should be an institution in every municipality and there should be as many of them as needed, not inconveniently placed. Let there be no seats provided or permitted. Make them take it standing and the crowd will soon move on.

✣ ✣ ✣

REGRETTABLE

It is regrettable that there should be conflict betwixt state and municipal rate-fixing for public service corporations. It is inherently unsound that either the performer or the recipient of a public service should determine the rate. The rate-making should be done by persons as nearly disinterested as it is possible to have them and a state commission appointed by a governor who is elected by all the people of the state after being nominated by a direct primary, comes as near to the ideal of impartiality as we shall ever get. The fact that any one community is satisfied with the present irrational arrangement should not stand in the way of the adoption of a sound principle of rate-making. Of the future we cannot be fully assured, but this much we do know. Whatever now is is sure not always to be so. Change is an exorable law of being.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE RIGHT TO CONTRACT INVADED

Ring the fire bell! Sound the alarm! Tremble for your liberties oh ye people! The right of freedom of contract has been invaded. The Great Republic is on the toboggan! The bow-wows will get you if you don't watch out! The supreme court of the United States has decided that a railroad trainman may not bargain away his right to recover damages inflicted upon him through the neglect or carelessness of the employing company. It was hoped by these great moral agencies which, under providence, are doing most of the big business of the country, that a few words in fine print inserted in each contract of employment, (which the would-be employe was free to sign or not sign, as a condition precedent to working or not working and living or not living), the high contracting parties, being equal before the law, would hold the employers free from all harm no matter what befell the employes or by whose fault. Now the supreme court has made that cake all dough and sour dough at that. What are we coming to? Next thing we know this august tribunal may be holding, not only that there are days so long that women and children shall not be free to contract to work longer, but that a minimum wage may be so low that no one shall have the right to contract to work for less, or a standard of living so humble that it may not by contract be reduced. Verily, the American judiciary "do move," albeit some fifty years behind schedule time! And what shall be said of the corporation that took that issue up? Was it officered by some of those "Christian gentlemen" who, "by grace of God," are "wisely charged with the well-being of mankind," or are they plain, ordinary, grabbers? We have our suspicions.

Hard to Handle There is no gainsaying that government by, of and for The People is the most bothersome kind of government that ever was invented. There is something stewing every minute and on the verge of boiling over. Eternal vigilance is not only the price of liberty but of everything else, efficiency, integrity, economy, security. What a bother The People have had with their legislatures! In former years the law makers stayed on and on legislating and talking against each other and against time as long as the treasury contained a sou marquee that could be "coppered" into the contingent fund and wouldn't go home. They did it every year. Then The People ordained that the law makers should come together only in biennial sessions, but that did not halve the difficulty. They had been so long from the crib that the law makers could not be pulled away from it once they got to it until they had "raked her" again, so The People rose in their wrath and limited the pay of legislators to sixty days, a time within which it was declared to be impossible to do their necessary work, so, finally, The People of California voted the law makers a lump sum for each legislative session and told them to stay as long as they needed to and go home when they got ready. But now that they can stay until their work is done they don't seem to want to, and an effort is making to force an adjournment at the end of the sixty-second day of the session.

Legislative Limitations Even under the best conditions legislatures leave much to he desired. To begin with just plain, old fashioned human nature predominates. Legislators bristle with it like a feline meeting a canine while coming through the rye. Collectively, men are seldom superior to themselves. Individually they sometimes are. Collectively they are eternally wanting to do something they ought not and legislation is not that purely intellectual process that it should be. However, the chief limitations of legislation are two: lack of knowledge and lack of deliberation. A state capitol is a poor place to go in search of knowledge, unless one goes when the legislature is not in session, and a legislative session is as poor a place as a boiler factory in which to indulge the contemplative faculty of the mind. To The Watchman's way of thinking a thirty day session, in which to open the issues and get them piled on the table, a sixty day intermission to go home and think things over, and thirty or forty days after returning to do the work of legislating should prove about the best arrangement possible. But whether this is done or not the thirty-ninth session of the legislature of California should not adjourn until it has left on its calendars no business unfinished that needs finishing. This should be resolved upon even at the cost of smothering Nate Coghlan in a butt of sack. It will be proper to adjourn when the necessary work is done and not before. A splendid record is being made by the present legislature. Let not its record be marred by refusing to stay with the job until the work that needs to be done is done.

Two Fundamental Propositions In championing the cause of the recall of the judiciary Milton T. U'Ren laid down two propositions that deserve to be written in letters of gold over every public institution from "calaboose" to capitol and to be carried as a "running head" across the tops of the pages of every law book, school text book and official document printed for public information. These are: "This is a self-governing commonwealth," and "The people are able to govern themselves." By dinging these two declarations into the public ear from the cradle to the grave, and never letting up on it, a general realization of their importance may come at last to be understood and the prophecy which they are, rather than the realization, to be fulfilled. We can make these things so by saying so. A fundamental fault of our time is that so many people do not believe that these statements are true. If reported correctly our very learned Chief Justice Beatty is about ready to throw up his hands and conclude that, with the advent of the present legislature (the first free legislature he has seen during his life in this state) orderly government went to the demnition bow-wows. He more than half expects to see the present supreme court ruthlessly torn from the bench, all precedents disrgarded and orderly procedures displaced by judicial chaos. Grove L. Johnson, in his argument before the committee, frankly confessed that the people of California are unstable and unfit to be entrusted with power and, in so doing, he voiced the sentiments of all those who, like himself, for the better part of half a century, have been content to be governed by a railroad. The so-called conservative business interests of this state are of like opinion, not because those interests have seen popular government fail, but because they have not seen popular government at all. It has not, since the advent of the old Central Pacific railroad into politics, until this present year of grace, been true that, "This is a self-governing commonwealth." It is small wonder that those who have never seen self government, distrust it and question among themselves as to what it is to prove like. But they can smoke this in their pipes: Belief in the ability of the people to govern has taken such hold upon the people that they will not again submit to any other form of government. No, never again! Good or evil they will have that form of government or none. Outside of darkest Africa the sun does not now shine upon any race of men whose necks are not bowed and backs bent preparatory to a heaving upward in the determination to assert themselves and make their influence felt in the affairs of men. What will become of this movement God knows, but it will be a thousand times better to keep up with it than to be left behind by it wringing the hands in impotent lamentation.

Los Angeles Express

What Will They Do to That Supreme Court There are two particulars in which the Supreme Court of California has been subjected to criticism to such an extent as to have marked the forfeiture of the confidence of the people in that court. They are, that by its conservatism, by its stickling for precise procedures, it dispenses more law than justice; that at least three members of the court are political judges. Now the truth or falsity of these charges is not to be ascertained by a legislative investigation. It will he difficult for the committee to make evident to the legislature, what common report believes to be true, viz: That Justice Henshaw has long been a political lieutenant of William F. Herrin; that Justice Lorigan is first of all a politician and that it was by the political ladder that Justice Melvin elevated himself to the highest court in the state. Finally, that the particular kind of politics with which these justices are identified are the politics of the political bureau of the Southern Pacific company. It is in the public mind that judicial officers so affliated are untrustworthy, and the most that committee or legislature can do will probably be to express a lack of confidence in these men, and that without either of these men being charged with any overt act of malfeasance or misfeasance or their being convicted of any specific wrongful act. The fate of these men should be that of the British ministry at times, they should be subjected to a vote of lack of confidence and, as with the British ministry, such a vote by the legislature should put them out of office.

Case of Justice Beatty Is Distinctly Different Although Mr. Justice Beatty has been the protege of the Southern Pacific company throughout his judicial career it is to be doubted if any considerable number of citizens of this state harbor the smallest suspicion of his judgments being warped by Southern Pacific influence. In his rectitude all believe. He has been unwittingly serviceable to the Southern Pacific, and conservative interests generally, by reason of his type of mind which is conservative to a degree. Honest, sincere, straight forward, courageous enough to espouse the unpopular side (and much inclined so to do) at all hazards, he splendidly exemplifies that never ending cause of friction betwixt public and judicial sentiment that proceeds from the inability of the judiciary to keep pace with the requirements of contemporaneous needs. He abhors innovation. He reveres the law as something sacred. He delights in its subtilties as another might in a philosophical system of his own devising. He would make the institutions of men fit the law though it made their bones crack under the pressure. He feels that society would fall apart if the juridical machine were tampered with. Its being a product of antiquity is, in his mind, conclusive as to its wisdom. Little he recks though justice fails so that the law be preserved, whereas contemporaneous civilization demands that justice be done, the guilty convicted and the public welfare preserved from harm little caring how the fabric of the law may fare. The people have use for law only as it subserves justice. If there be a Holy Grail to be sought at all times and at all cost that Grail is jus-

(Continued on page 14)

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Pasadena and Annexation: Pasadena is about to have a municipal election. The principal issue before the people lies in the attitude of the administration toward the city lighting enterprise, and William Thum, who until recently was the only candidate for mayor before the people, was put up by the Municipal Lighting League, and is known as an ardent advocate of the public ownership idea not only with respect to light but also with respect to other utilities, where it can be practically applied. His opponent, R. L. Metcalf, has also declared himself in favor of municipal lighting. Efforts have been made to create an issue out of consolidation with Los Angeles, although, as this is a question that must ultimately be settled by vote of the people themselves, it is difficult to see what the candidates have to do with it. A great many people in Pasadena seem to enjoy lashing themselves to a frenzy of wrath against Los Angeles on the ground that the big city is seeking to gobble them up. As there is no process by which Pasadena can be annexed save by the vote of the Pasadena people, it seems like a great waste of good anger. For an intelligent, high-grade city, full of clever people, Pasadena is in rather an unhappy state of mind. Its people seem unable to get together on anything. The most important bond issues are voted down, apparently out of spite. This perpetual frenzy against Los Angeles and terror of consolidation seems to be a feature of the city's neurotic condition. It is to be hoped that this election may clear the atmosphere somewhat and put things on a saner basis.

Free Water in Cleveland: The people of Cleveland are to be supplied with water free of charge, the cost of service to be paid for out of general taxation. This system is advocated by some health authorities, who contend that water is a necessity to the health and cleanliness and general welfare of the people of the city, and that its cost should be met out of general taxation. Many European cities, particularly on the continent, make no charge for water rates. The experiment has been tried in a few cities in this country, and it has not resulted in the wasteful use of water that many have expected. It is sometimes argued that water used strictly for household purposes should be provided free, but that water for lawns and flowers should pay by meter. Others contend that the beauty of grounds are enjoyed by all, and the cultivated yards and open spaces benefit the people. When the Los Angeles water system was taken over by the municipality Fred Eaton who was running for mayor at the time proposed that it should be supported by taxation, not by rates. Thus far, however, the water system has not only paid its own expenses, but it has also paid interest and principal on the indebtedness incurred by its purchase. In addition to that it has made many payments on the Owens River indebtedness.

Great Record for Municipal Ownership: Monroe, Louisiana, has had the same mayor for twelve years and the city has, during that time, made an amazing record of progress, chiefly through its management of public utilities. When A. A. Forsythe became mayor in 1899, the population of the city was about 4000. It owned property valued at about $20,000, and its credit was so bad that it could purchase nothing unless it produced the immediate cash. Today the population is 10,000, and the city owns property valued at $750,000. Its taxes are much lower than other cities of the state. Included in its ownership are: Nine miles of electric car lines, water works, electric lighting system, gas well, natatorium, city hospital, and all the equipment in the way of sewers, parks, bridges, school houses and paved streets of a modern up-to-date city. All public service corporations are owned by the people in common.

Report on Fire Cause: Ohio has a state fire marshal. He says in his annual report that over 500 fires with a cost of about two hundred thousand dollars were caused during the past year by matches, most of them by children playing with matches. He recommends legislation against the friction match, putting it out of use. He also recommends that it be made a felony for parents to go away leaving children alone locked up for the day. As this is done chiefly by poor women going out to work, such a law would be impossible of enforcement.

After Municipal Ownership: Detroit, Michigan, and Des Moines, Iowa, are both intent upon acquiring and operating their street car systems. In each city the mayor has recommended to the state legislature the passage of an enabling act, whereby the lines could be condemned and taken over and operated. The proposed Iowa act makes the bonds a lien on the utility alone and not on the city.

To Reduce Cost of Living: Cleveland has a municipal cold storage plant as a feature of its public market. It is now proposed to enlarge this, and rent its space to grocers, butchers and individuals generally, so that produce may be carried over from times of cheapness to times when it is dear, and the market be thus equalized. It is believed this will foil the food trust and reduce the cost of living.

Successful Big Bond Sale: New York city recently floated an issue of $60,000,000 bonds at 4½ per cent on a premium of $100,904. This was considered very satisfactory. The issue was oversubscribed five times. New York's credit has improved since it managed to tear loose from Tammany.

Refrigeration by Electricity: A New York electrical engineer of high standing predicts that within a few years electricity will be used in the summer months to produce refrigeration in homes and places of business, cooling the air for comfort just as it is now warmed by fire in the winter.

Tarring the Old Shell Roads: Southern sea coast cities have many famous old roads made of crushed sea shells. Some of these are going to pieces under the automobile. Experiments with the use of tar as a binder have been very successful, and many of the roads will be thus treated and saved.

For a Municipal Laundry: The new electric lighting plant of Petoskey, Michigan, generates more power than is needed, so the mayor suggests that a public laundry be established.

Deal Gently with the Erring: The police of Berkeley, California, use soft clubs and employ the golden rule. The two ideas seem to fit appropriately together.

Cinnamon Trees in the South: The park authorities of New Orleans are surprised to find that cinnamon trees will stand the climate of that city, and they think they will make an important addition to the beauty of parks and streets.

Marking the Alarm Boxes: Some time ago a fire in Rochester gained great headway because a citizen hunting a fire alarm box at night in the dark was unable to find it. Now all the Rochester boxes are surmounted with red, incandescent globes, so they can be found without any difficulty.

No More Horses: New York and Philadelphia, following the example of Rochester and Buffalo, have announced that no more horses will be purchased for fire apparatus, and that as rapidly as practicable they will dispose of those they have and replace with self-driven motors.

Commission Form in Michigan: The legislature of Michigan is favorably considering a measure that will allow cities to adopt the commission form of government, similar to the law of Iowa and Illinois.

More Commission Cities: Four Illinois towns adopted the commission form of government last month, in each case by good majorities. These are Ottawa, Decatur, Dixon and Elgin.

State Roads: Colorado proposes to put $1,500,000 into the beginning of a state system of good roads next year, the state to provide one-third of that sum, and the counties the other two-thirds.

Tacoma Municipal Light: In 1910 the receipts of the Tacoma Municipal lighting plant were $455,944, and its expenditures $425,496, of which $122,837 was spent for construction work. The margin of profit was $30,447.

Latest Style for Traffic Squad: New York city has put leather leggings of the puttie pattern on its traffic squad. It is neater and makes it plain to the drivers who is in charge of the corner Against Voting Machines: After a trial of several years New Jersey has decided by a vote of 323 districts out of 336 to discontinue the use of voting machines.

Underground Railway: The streets of Buenos Ayres in Argentina are narrow, and traffic has become so congested that a general underground system has been decided upon.

Over the East River: Statistics of travel between New York City and Brooklyn taken by the Public Service Commission shows that half a million people pass each way every day.

For the Unfortunate Little Ones: Chicago has just completed a $150,000 hospital for crippled children.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway
314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

New Foulard Silks

FASHION'S favorite silk for the development of dressy gowns for the coming Summer season is Foulard. We are showing a very comprehensive assortment which includes the newest designs and colorings. A fashionable woman's wardrobe will not be complete this season without at least one dress of Foulard.

Prices Range
85c to $1.25 Yd.
Los Angeles, Cal.

WE ARE NOW LOCATED IN OUR OWN NEW BUILDING
446-448 So. Broadway

Steinway, Kranich & Bach, Sohmer, Kurtzmann, Jewett & Laffargue Pianos.
Cecilian Player Pianos.
GEO. J. BIRKEL COMPANY
Los Angeles, Cal.

SENATORIAL SKITS
Number 3
By The Onlooker

And now, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the senate, as I pause to think upon the glories of their sex, upon the softness of their charms, upon the radiance of their eyes—I say, Mr. President, when I consider how fairer than the lilies and how sweeter than the rose they are, how can I find it in my heart to deny them their hearts' most fond desire? And when, again, I ponder on their loyalty, their courage, their sublime devotion, my thoughts turn to that noble group in marble that adorns the entrance to these halls to that munificent gift of the late D. O. Mills, to that statue of "Columbus and Isabella," and I recall with mingled pride and gratitude that here woman is portrayed, that she alone could follow across the ocean the dream of the navigator, that the gift of the continent of America was a woman's gift to the world! And—" As we were about to remark, Senator Lee C. Gates, of the Sunny Southland (name copyrighted), has the floor. Can he sling the sounding periods? Well, can he not? Had ye but been upon this floor when yonder suffragettes were here, and heard the limpid limp of Senator Gates' dulcet eloquence, you would have joined us in the exhilarating sentiment, 'He is the noblest Romancer of them all." (How they did blarney those blessed suffragettes!)

Senator Gates

Fact is, Gates is about the only man on the floor of the senate with whom our old female friend Miss Eloquence feels safe to take a walk without a chaperone. And we are violating no sacred confidence when we make that a little stronger and say that there are several—and then some—of the other senators whose cruel and inhuman treatment of English pronunciation and English grammar is enough to make old Noah Webster scream.

But to return to Gates. Others upon the floor take short flights upon the acroplane of oratory, but most of them either venture only a short distance out of the hangar, or they get a spill trying to do the spiral glide back to earth. Gates alone has perfect control. He can make the critter do eagle soars that lift his hearers to the skies on flowery beds of ease, and he can make her turn aerial handsprings that catch the thoughtless groundlings. And through it all he preserves the integrity of his own self-confidence, the poise and grace and suavity, the what the French call savoir faire, that charms and wins the spirit while it subtly persuades the mind. (With a little practice, believe we could do a turn ourselves.)

We remark upon Senator Gates' verbal felicities largely because they are almost unique in the present legislature, and hence are, as it were, the perfume of a rather thorny flower. But we should add that they are not hurled hourly at the heads of suffering and undefended men. So far, the Gates of his eloquence have been opened only about three times in the whole session, which is doing mighty well for a man with such a gift. Imagine William J. Bryan trying it.

Gates is a hard worker. He is chairman of the important committee on Roads and Highways and a member of such other committees as banking, corporations, judiciary and others. He is not allowing any "Demosthenes of the senate" talk to cobweb his consciousness of the eternal fitness of things, nor to head him off from the path of hard work that leads to results.

Right here it may not be amiss to recall the sad discomfiture of little Eddie Wolfe in one of his brightest schemes to tangle up the reform forces. Little Eddie, it should be remembered, is the same little fellow who shone so at the last session as co-boss of the senate with Frank Leavitt. It was perfectly simple to be a co-boss at that session because the machine had the track and all a boss had to do was to sit on the cow-catcher and yell. But "our Eddie" finds the senate this year a veritable Lonesomehurst. It is no such job to be a boss now, when there's nobody who's asking for orders. So Eddie has tried a new tack. He just dotes on reform now ,and he is so fond of reformers he can hardly refrain from hugging them.

But what has this to do with Gates, you say?

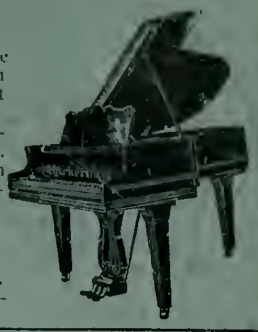
Gently, and you shall hear. When Gates made a few remarks in somewhat the vein of the opening paragraph of these lame and halting lines, "our Eddie" sat as one entranced. Later, he made a few verbal thrusts and parries, a sort of rhetorical passage-at-arms with Gates. Then he arose and with honeyed words, and tones of rant admiration, expressed his exalted admiration of the one who, so young in legislative experience, had at one sitting proven himself master of the arts of the orator, the parliamentarian and the debater, and ended his felicitations with an euphemistic invitation to imbibe later, which invitation we have reasons to believe was accepted. But why the honeyed words and honeyed wine from "our Eddie?" Of the answer I have only a "hunch," and of the denoument only "hunch No. 2," but:

1. What is so tiresome as an irrepressible "orator?"
2. What so easy as to flatter a man along to further speech?
3. How easier to kill off a strong opponent than with just such kindness?
4. But why, we wonder, did Gates not bite; why did he not "orate" except when the subject fitly invited it?
5. And whence came "our Eddie's" grouch of recent date?

These be questions too deep for us but we wonder—we just wonder—if "our Eddie" overlooked a wee bald spot on the back of Gates' head, and that the snows are beginning to drift a little round his temples. Perhaps, beneath the savoir-faire is a bed rock of experience, capped with a liberal supply of brains, that makes Gates about as hard a man to fool, as well as about as constructively useful a man as sits in the senate today.

"FOR THE ENEMIES HE HAS MADE"

Among other misfortunes under which the city of San Francisco has suffered for many years is the existence in that community of several weekly journals of the "gutter-snipe" species, whose presence in any community is a detriment to it. These weeklies all lined up on the side of Calhoun and his associate bribers and grafters during the abortive attempt lately made by our sister city at housecleaning. It was currently talked and believed that their support could be accounted for by liberal donations from the Calhoun war chest, and it is certainly a fact that they have always been found upon the side of corruption and indecency in the politics of their city and state.



These publications hate Meyer Lissner from the bottom of their corrupt and shriveled souls. They hate him for the great service which he has rendered in eliminating from the politics of the state those infamous forces whose financial contributions have, in the past, constituted an important part of the income of these wretched disgraces to journalism.

Lately these papers have apparently been getting a lot of satisfaction out of analyzing Mr. Lissner's character, and they have unanimously reached the conclusion that Lissner is a man of "cold and unresponsive nature," who has no friends and only exists by virtue of being a sort of frigid mechanical force in the politics of the state. This sort of characterization of Meyer Lissner brings a smile to the faces of the men who have known him and worked with him for years in promoting good government in this city. These men know that among all their comrades there is no one more truly warm-hearted and genial and responsive to all the amenities of friendship than is Meyer Lissner. His intimate friends who know him well can point to a hundred instances where in the quiet, unobtrusive way which characterizes the man, he has rendered some office of friendly consideration and assistance to his friends. Among his friends in Los Angeles who have stood shoulder to shoulder with him in the battle for decent government which they have waged, he is affectionately known as "Meyer," and no man whose friends habitually address him by his given name can fit the description of the cold, clammy personality which the San Francisco boodle weeklies seem to have found so much satisfaction in fitting to Meyer Lissner.—Los Angeles Herald.

The So. California Home of the

Chickering pianos

Is at This Store

To own a Chickering is to have reached the highest point in piano satisfaction—possession is made easy under our convenient payment plan.

We invite you to visit our Chickering salesrooms to view the many styles of Uprights, Baby Grands and Parlor Grands, priced from $600 in Uprights and $750 in Grands and upwards.

Southern California Music Co.
The House of Musical Quality
332-4 South Broadway Los Angeles, Cal.
Branches at San Diego, Riverside, San Bernardino and Pomona.

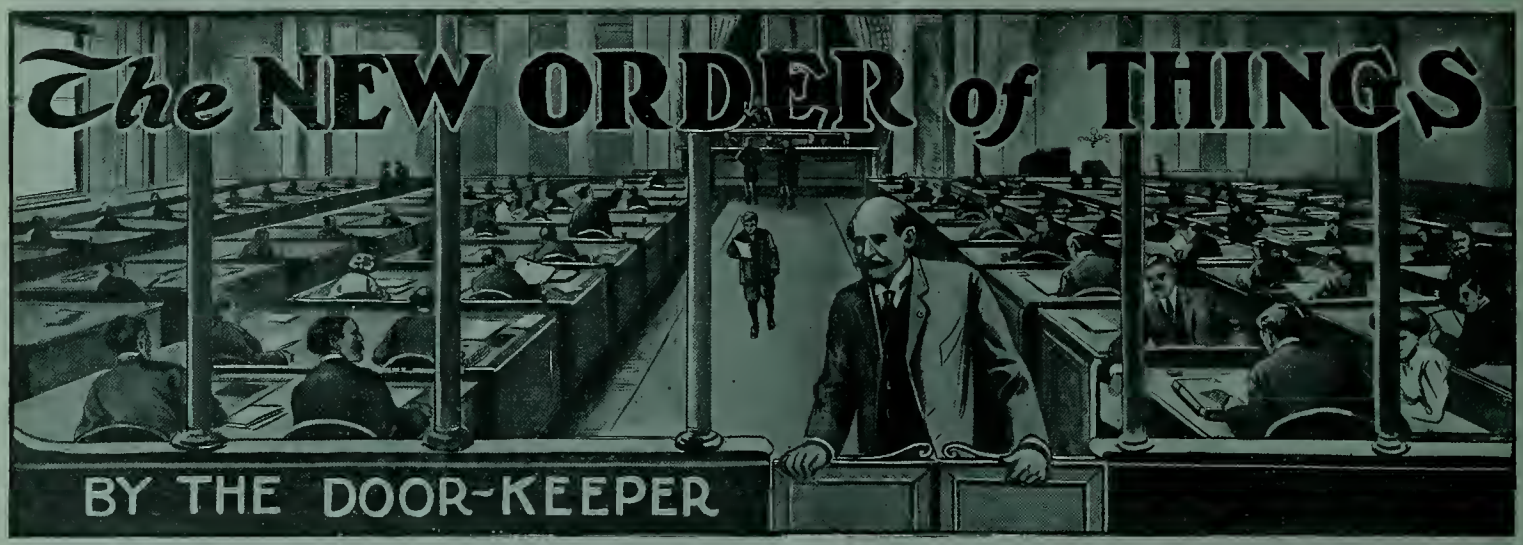
BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.
Los Angeles, Cal.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS



MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES
Los Angeles, Cal.

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 168x168
Southern Pacific Switch
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12 Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall
DENTIST
Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806
Los Angeles, Cal.

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 21—While it is unquestionably true that the present legislature will go down in the political annals of the state of California as the most progressive and the most courageous known to history, it is equally true that there have been some distinct disappointments in the ranks of the men whose previous legislative records have been such as to entitle them to the highest esteem. In the cases of men inexperienced in legislative matters much may be forgiven until they have become able to follow the trend of the most advanced public thought. Some of the men who are recognized as reform legislators have allowed themselves to be trapped and fooled, on occasions, but as a rule they have all hewed pretty closely to the line. While there may have been some question as to their records on unimportant measures, on the real issues the progressives, so-called, whether democrats or republicans, have so deported themselves in the transaction of the business of law-making as to win just praise.

Once in a while there have been what I am disposed to regard as lapses from the clearly-defined path of genuine progress. Sometimes these digressions may have been deliberately entered upon; at other times they have been the obvious outcome of errors in judgment.

Stumbling Block Removed

One of the most recent instances of departure from what most real friends of popular government seem to think to be the correct attitude lies in the action of Senator Juilliard as a member of the senate judiciary committee during the consideration of the proposed constitutional amendfent providing for the recall. In passing let it be noted that Senator Juilliard is a man of brilliant attainments with a record that will compare favorably with that of many of the other progressive members of the senate. He has had previous legislative experience, having served in the assembly two years ago, and on occasion puts up a pretty strong fight for that which he believes to be right. In this particular instance he doubtless believed himself to be on the right track. Others who have given the subject of direct legislation considerable attention do not uniformly agree that he is.

The committee had under discussion certain proposed amendments to Senator Gates' constitutional amendment providing for the recall. Senator Larkins had introduced an amendment to the amendment providing in effect that every signer to a recall petition should make affidavit that he had voted for the official sought to be recalled. When it was pointed out to Senator Larkins that such a provision as this would render a miscarriage of the intentions of the voters comparatively easy he withdrew the amendment. The opportunity for gaining fraudulent signatures and the violation of the secrecy of the ballot was palpable.

Senator Larkins having withdrawn his amendment upon the showing made against it, Senator Juilliard proposed one of almost if not exactly identical character. The committee—wisely, in the humble judgment of the Doorkeeper—voted it down, deciding to report the measure in essentially its original form.

On other occasions members of either house have voted for or against certain measures in partial ignorance of the intent of such measures when, had they been able to take the time to learn their provisions, they would have voted differently. But as a rule few of the progressives "get off wrong," according to the average progressive sentiment, on measures of more than passing concern to those actively interested in the movement toward actual government by the people.

Far be it from the intention or desire of the Doorkeeper to question the sincerity of Senator Juilliard. It is his judgment as to the working out of his proposed scheme that appears to be at fault. Men who have given the subject of the recall great thought and attention with rare exception are agreed that the plan proposed and suhsequently rejected by Senator Larkins and afterward attempted to be revived by Senator Juilliard would make this particular instrument more or less of a farce. At any rate it is a somnolent issue. It will die unless an endeavor be made to secure consideration of it upon the floor.

Shortening the Ballot

Senator Boynton's proposed constitutional amendments providing for simplifying the official ballot are in line with the platform pledges of the republican party. They may be made the subject of minor amendment before they are put upon passage, but the indications now are that they will go through substantially in the form in which they have been presented.

These amendments provide, briefly, that the offices of secretary of state, treasurer, controller, attorney-general, clerk of the supreme court, state printer and surveyor-general shall be filled by aopointment by the governor instead of by election by the people, as at present. All are either clerical or administrative. Besides furnishing a hallot which the average voter can handle with a fair degree of intelligence, the effect of the amendments will he to allow the governor, whoever he may be, to surround himself with officials in harmony with his own views, as is the national plan.

It is pointed out that the plan proposed will in effect do awav with much of the semi-scandal attaching to some of the state departments at variout times in the past. There has been no little rivalry among some of these departments, and the effect upon the public service has not been of the hest. With practically every administrative office filled by gubernatorial appointment it is easy to see that greater harmony of action will be possible. It is a simple business proposition, and though an innovation the scheme probably will receive the necessary support.

Reaching After the Bench

An investigation of the official acts of at least one of the members of the supreme court of the state of California—Mr. Justice Henshaw—appears inevitable. The whole court has demanded that it be investigated, and there seems to be no way out of it. While of course the inquiry may, though not necessarily, cover the entire supreme bench, there is current in Sacramento an opinion that the center of the stage, or the legislative bar, or whatever it may be, will be occupied by the members of that august body mentioned by name by Wil-

No Machine Needed

Sam Denman the other evening when he appeared before the senate judiciary committee in opposition to that portion of the proposed recall amendment affecting judges. The names of these judges mentioned by Mr. Denman are Henshaw, Lorigan and Melvin. Specifically, Justice Henshaw appeared to be the central point of the Denman suggestion.

No attempt will be made to impeach these judges. If they are pried from the bench, one or all three of them, it will be the result of the adoption of a concurrent resolution, which means that both houses of the legislature must act favorably upon it—not favorably from the standpoint of the judges themselves, but favorably as viewed by quite a number of voters in California who believe the supreme bench is not exactly what it should be.

Mr. Justice Henshaw, it will be recalled, is the gentleman who figured prominently in a certain photograph of a certain dinner now commonly designated "The Shame of California." Ex-Governor Gillett, Abe Ruef, Walter Parker, George Hatton, Judge John W. McKinley and other men once in vogue politically in this state—recently become political nonenities, barring the gentleman on the bench, of course—were there. It was the famous—or shall I call it infamous?—Santa Cruz Southern Pacific republican state convention banquet scene.

Will Mr. Justice Henshaw be removed by concurrent resolution? He may not be.

Mr. Denman suggested to the members of the senate judiciary committes that such an act on the part of the senate required "nerve."

The machinery for the inquiry has been set in motion. Perhaps it may run down or wear out. Well, let it, says the Doorkeeper for one. Let it, and then see what the people of California themselves will do.

No Time for "Playing Politics"

I don't believe the plain citizens of California are in the mood to shout their approval of "playing politics" or temporizing in this matter. And I don't expect to see any, persistent rumors to the contrary notwithstanding. I think the inquiry will be the real thing. It may be—and doubtless will be—that all sorts of obstacles to a determination of the matter will be hurled into the path, and the result be far from satisfactory to the masses of indignant people. But if anybody expects to see this legislature do that which we commonly call "whitewashing," in this particular case, I predict they are doomed to disappointment. The progressives in the legislature may be depended upon to see that the inquiry will be the genuine thing. That is my belief.

Oh, yes, there will be pressure—plenty of it, heavy and unremitting, cruelly strong. But I think I know some senators and some assemblymen who possess in great abundance that certain quality described by Mr. Denman as "nerve." There are others who lack it. There is going to be a great separation of the sheep and the goats, if goats there be.

If any judge on the supreme bench has unjustly become the object of suspicion he certainly has nothing to fear as the outcome of a searching investigation into his conduct. The atmosphere must be cleared. I believe it will be. And I hope that when it is clarified none of the members of the legislature will be found absent as Mr. Denman calls the roll of the men of nerve. I should hate to be a member and be absent at that roll call.

A Game of Chess

Inasmuch as the San Francisco delegation in the assembly is almost a unit in "putting it over" the Los Angeles members, when the appropriate opportunity for so doing appears to have arrived, I am surprised that the Los Angeles delegation does not get together and do some "putting over" itself. What the southern men need is caucus, program and team work on measures affecting their own section.

There are two or three fair and courageous men in the San Francisco delegation in the assembly—Henry Beatty, who is known to many of the active men of Los Angeles not now at Sacramento, and Arthur Joel, who, thanks be to heaven, displaces Al Wheelan, about whom as a legislator the less said the better. Joel and Beatty are more than decent about bills introduced by the Los Angeles members. All they want to know is whether a measure be a worthy one. Once satisfied that it is desirable and proper, they support it. But most of the other members from San Francisco appear to taken keen delight in "swatting" a Los Angeles man.

The other day, for example, Stanley Benedict tried to get through a really meritorious measure, providing that leases for building purposes might be made for ninety-nine years. The existing limit is forty-nine years. The bill, once enacted, would be as beneficial to the business interests of San Francisco as to those of Los Angeles or any other progressive city. With that rare intelligence which distinguishes the average act of the average San Francisco member "the boys" rose en masse and gave Benedict the ha-ha. Now some of them, realizing what a stupid blunder they made, are willing to apply balm to that portion of Benedict's political anatomy which they so roughly scourged with the swat stick.

Other rebuffs will emanate from the San Francisco people. Jealousy is an attribute of the small man, and there is little danger that such peerless leaders at Nate Coghlan and Milton Schmitt are intending to offer a slight to any good opportunity to demonstrate their broad calibre when it comes to the consideration of a pet measure in the hands of a Los Angeles man.

A Different Type

On the other side of the capitol—in the senate—things are not quite so bad. Passing by Wolfe, who does not count for much at this session, anyway, his influence being calculable by a big fat zero mark, and others who are not particularly active on the floor, we find Burnett, who is not only decent and fair, but courageous. Now if any of us regard "courageous" and "blustery" as synonymous terms, Senator Burnett must plead innocent to the charge of being courageous, for he is a quiet, unassuming man, six feet three, and every inch a gentleman. And he is not up to the daily trick of trying to "put one over" on Los Angeles or any other spot.

Senator Burnett, by the way, used to live in Los Angeles, and perhaps this accounts for his courteousness and his disposition to treat everybody squarely.

Then there is Bryant, a new man and a young man, ambitious to make a good record, on which he has made the right start. Bryant, too, is not up to the trick of "putting one over."

The result of all this will be, if the Los Angeles delegation in the two houses get together in daily caucus and decide upon a practical program of team work that Senators Burnett and Bryant and Assemblymen Joel and Beatty are pretty apt to receive greater consideration than most of the other members of the San Francisco delegation, when it comes to the consideration of bills. It looks to me, though a rank outsider, as if the time for Los Angeles to do politics—honest politics—had arrived. This game of swat is one which the San Francisco team should not be permitted to monopolize for the entire session.

City and County Government Scheme

I have thus far seen published no explanation of the intent and purpose of Senator Hewitt's constitutional amendment (No. 42) relative to consolidation of city and county, and made applicable to Los Angeles county alone. This is a subject in which the people of Los Angeles are vitally interested. As I have pointed out, the voters of Los Angeles will have nobody but themselves to blame if the votes of their senators and assemblymen are cast contrary to their wishes, unless these representatives are put wise to popular sentiment. To enable voters to gain a fair idea of the intent of the amendment proposed I want to call attention to some of its most vital points.

"Any two or more cities," it reads in its present form, "or a city and county with other cities, or any city or cities and part of a county unincorporated or otherwise, may consolidate and form one consolidated city with one set of officers and with the combined powers of a city and of a county government . . . whether such cities and territory are situated in the same or different counties, provided, that the largest municipality thus consolidated shall contain a population of at least three hundred thousand inhabitants. . . . In no case shall any municipality or territory become a part of such consolidated city unless a majority of the electors of such municipality or territory voting at any election shall so determine."

A petition signed by electors equal in number to twenty per cent of the whole number of votes cast at the last preceding election is sufficient authority for the council of the largest city to call the consolidation election. A majority vote in each city or other territory is to decide the question. "If a majority of the votes cast in said largest city and in any petitioning city or territory shall be in favor of such consolidation, . . . such cities and territory or both or either, as the case may be, shall be deemed to be annexed to and consolidated with such largest city, and the entire county government and the city governments within such consolidated cities and territory shall be deemed to be merged and consolidated and shall thereafter and until otherwise changed continue to exist under the freeholders' charter or other general municipal law under which said largest city shall have theretofore existed and operated, and said freeholders' charter or general law governing said largest city, and, until repealed, the ordinances of said largest city shall be deemed to be extended over the consolidated cities and territory."

The amendment further provides, in brief, that city officials in office at the date of the consolidation election shall continue and exercise all the powers of their offices, and the legislative body (council) shall create such additional offices as may be deemed necessary. Such consolidated government shall exercise all the rights and powers of a county and of a city. It shall assume the indebtedness of all cities and territory consolidated.

There is an alternative proposition in the amendment as submitted by Senator Hewitt. There may be a charter convention, composed of delegates appointed by the legislative bodies of each city, in the proportion of one delegate to each ten thousand inhabitants, which shall have power to frame a charter for the territory proposed to be consolidated. The election shall be called within sixty days after the publication of the proposed charter. The other propositions in the alternative plan are, in the main, essentially those of the first scheme. The new city and county is to take the name of the largest city within

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC.)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS
Los Angeles, Cal.

SALT LAKE ROUTE
NEXT TIME YOU GO EAST TAKE ONE OF THESE TRAINS
LOS ANGELES LIMITED—A palatial train of de luxe electric lighted drawing room and compartment sleepers, dining car and observation-library buffet car. Three days Los Angeles to Chicago via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern.
Also through sleeper to Denver in two days. Leaves daily at 10:30 a. m.
AMERICAN EXPRESS—A new limited train of sleeping cars, leaving Los Angeles daily at 2:00 p. m. for Chicago, Denver and Kansas City. Has dining car to Salt Lake City.
Tickets and Information at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

Residence Burglary Insurance
Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?
Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.
Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.
R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY
200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.
Home Phone 40444 Los Angeles, Cal. Sunset Phone M. 7096

the territory consolidated, which of course is a familiar name.

Booze Triumphant

Now I want it distinctly understood that in employing the general term "booze" I intend no affront to any of the estimable gentlemen in the state senate who felt called upon to assist in delivering what I believe to have been a knockout blow to the local option bill as it passed the assembly by an overwhelming vote. "Booze," brethren, is a term which, in Los Angeles at least, from time immemorial has been made applicable, by common consent, to not disinterested opponents of saloon regulation, local option, etc. There is nothing personal in the term, so far as I am concerned. This by way of parenthesis.

There is no news in the statement that the local option bill has been amended to death in the senate. The daily papers have carried the message. As I indicated in my last letter, amendment by the senate so as to permit the adoption of the township unit instead of the city unit and the county unit has been interpreted by practically all of the earnest advocates of an effective local option measure as a move toward the nullification of the plan dear to their hearts. Feeling as they do about it, the chances that they will consent to accept the horribly emasculated measure left on the field of battle by the senate are slight indeed.

But I am getting a little ahead of my short tale.

The fight against the bill as it left the assembly centered chiefly about the unit. The amendments proposed by Senator Juilliard included a change from the city and the county unit to the township unit. Senators Juilliard and Wolfe and our own Hurd led the fight for the township unit. The opposition—the fight to retain the city and county units—was led by Senators Gates, Hewitt, Larkins and Estudillo, the latter sponsor for the bill in the upper house. Gates led off on the heels of Wolfe and handsomely trimmed the San Francisco advocate. The Royal Arch lobbyists who hung against the lobby rail, diaphanously delighted with the talk put up by Wolfe and Juilliard, reflected lowering spirits as Gates ripped and punctured and shredded the sophistry of Wolfe.

But the fight apparently had been settled before the forensic battle began. Local option with the city as one unit and the county outside of the city as the other was treated by the majority as Gates had treated the specious argument of Wolfe. The odds were twenty-three to seventeen against it. It took the count, and is still wondering how it all happened.

Surprises and a Shock

There were some surprises and one shock, to me, in the vote on the amendments changing the unit from city and county to township. As to Senator Hurd of Los Angeles, I doubt very much if he represents public sentiment in his district—but that is something he will have plenty of time to ascertain. Senator Caminetti, the war-horse of the democracy, for years one of the most earnest and vociferous advocates of submission to the people of questions affecting home rule, voted for amendment. So did Holohan and Sanford, both democrats and earnest and, like Caminetti, sincere and conscientious men. It is hard for me to bring myself to believe they fully comprehended popular sentiment—state-wide sentiment—on this proposition.

But I said I received one shock. It was when I heard Senator Stetson vote "aye" on the motion to amend. I don't know exactly why, for every senator has the right to vote as he pleases at any and all times, but somehow or other I, for one, had banked on Stetson as sure to vote for the county unit.

The bill now goes back to the assembly. In understand that body will absolutely refuse to concur in the senate amendments. This will mean that it will go to a conference of committees of both houses, and this may mean anything. The chances are about a hundred to one that the local option bill of 1911 has gone the way of its predecessors.

For the information of those who have taken more than a passing interest in this really big moral issue, here is the vote on the motion to substitute the township as a unit:

For the township: Beban, Bills, Birdsall, Bryant, Burnett, Caminetti, Cassidy, Curtin, Finn, Hans, Hare, Holohan, Hurd, Juilliard, Martinelli, Regan, Rush, Sanford, Stetson, Tyrrell, Welch, Wolfe and Wright—23.

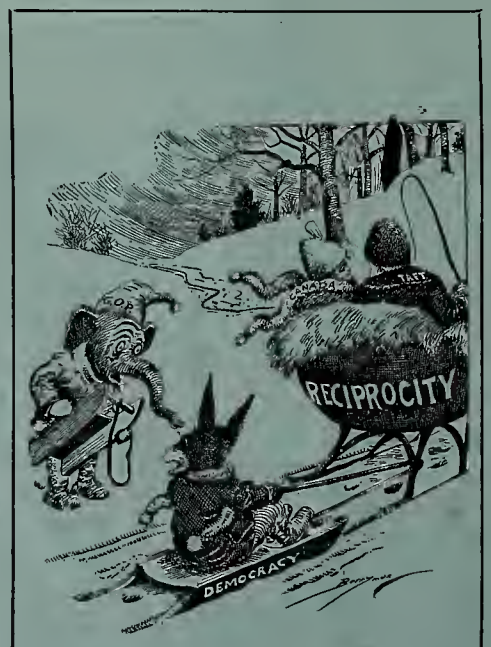
Against the township unit: Avey, Bell, Black, Boynton, Campbell, Cartwright, Cutten, Estudillo, Gates, Hewitt, Larkins, Lewis, Roseberry, Shanahan, Strobridge, Thompson and Walker—17.

Why, Indeed?

He—What would you say if I should kiss you?

She—Why ask for a mere guess when you can so easily get the exact facts?—Boston Transcript.

PICTORIAL COMMENT ON THE RECIPROCITY SITUATION



New York Herald

LOOKS GOOD TO ME

Washington Star

TAKE YOUR CHOICE

Washington Star

WILL HE BE LEFT BEHIND?

Sacramento Bee

RECIPROCITY LOOKS GOOD TO ME

Proposed Public Utilities Legislation

Speech of Thos. E. Gibbon Before Los Angeles City Club

Proceedings at the weekly luncheon of the Los Angeles City Club last Saturday, included an address by Thos. E. Gibbon, a paper from Horatio A. Foster and the adoption of a resolution by the club; all on the subject of public utilities. Mr. Foster's paper and the club's resolution, passed on recommendation of a special committee, will be found elsewhere in this week's issue.

Mr. Gibbon took for his subject, "Proposed Public Utilities Legislation," and spoke as follows:

I regard the matter before us today as, in its essence, involving probably the most important consideration of the functions of government that is now before the people of this country, whether as the citizens of the nation, the citizens of a state, or the citizens of the various subdivisions and especially of the municipalities of the state.

I think that no reasonable man informed of the progress of this country within the past fifty years, can deny the statement that probably more injustices have been inflicted upon the people of this country within the last half century by public service corporations than from any other one source.

Under the methods of corporate organization which have been developed by our laws, the people of this country have given to public service corporations, in the last fifty years, of values which are almost beyond the power of computation. In fact, if you endeavored to put them into the figures indicating the dollars which they were worth, they would reach a sum so huge that no human mind could comprehend those values.

Those values have been capitalized, and in most instances the things that have been given by the people have been used as the principal basis of the issuance of securities for the purpose of raising the money to furnish the facilities for public service. In many instances, these privileges, which the people have given, have been used as a basis for raising sums of money vastly in excess of the cost of all the facilities provided by these corporations as the consideration for the great gifts that have been received from the public. These same public service corporations, year after year, have increased the burden which the people really have imposed upon themselves by the improvident manner in which they have granted those rights. When the corporation incomes reached an amount above a fair return upon the supposed investment, they, by some financial jugglery, which they were doing in secrecy until a few years ago, have increased their output of capital stock or bonds, upon which it was necessary to pay, or supposed to be necessary to pay interest from dividends. They have taken advantage of the increased income to do that, and then they have turned around and taken advantage of these increased securities as a reason for again increasing the income. And that process has been repeated over and over again, ad infinitum, by the public service corporations of this country, until it has become an absolute necessity that the people, for their own economic salvation, should consider very carefully, some method of regulating the charges and burdens which have been imposd upon them; so that the regulations shall not amount to an absolute confiscation.

Invested With Tremendous Power

Under our present economic system, men have to travel for the purposes of business, the breakfast table of the ordinary family represents the collections from two or three continents; the suit of clothes that a man stands in represents things that are collected from all over the continent and probably from Europe, and the power to transport those things to him is the power to go down into the ground and levy on his hoarded gold, because it forces him to bring it out and pay it to the corporation which operates the transportation line, through appeals to his physical necessities. And, therefore, I say that the power that controls transportation, as one illustration, has vested in it a power of effective taxation that never was dreamed of before in the history of the world or in the experience of mankind.

The regulation of that power is about the most serious thing that we have to consider today as a function of government. We don't, as free men, want to live subject to any such power, and the only way to prevent that condition is to control those things ourselves; and hence all this talk about control of public utilities.

Physical Valuation Essential

Any intelligent and effective control of a public utility necessarily involves three factors: First, a physical examination of the property, because we must, in this control, be absolutely just. Whether they have been just to us, the great public never can afford to be unjust to them, because, when government is unjust, you strike at the very root of the organization of human society, for the moment government is unjust, it is deprived of the respect of all good men.

Issuance of Securities

Second, we must have control of the issuance of securities, so that we may do away with the excuses for imposing burdens, which exist now and are urged by public service corporations, who say, "Yes, this stock and these bonds may represent some water; they may represent some millions of dollars that never wnt into the service, but they have gotten into the hands of innocent purchasers, widows and orphans have paid their money for them and therefore you must not confiscate that property and destroy the living of the widows and orphans."

Gentlemen, we have been dreadfully careless about our business in that respect, else we never would have allowed those great issues of watered stock and watered securities. We have gotten into the hands of innocent people, and we have got to take our medicine, as far as that goes.

But we want to find out just what the physical values of those properties are. Then we want to stop any issuance of securities that doesn't give full value to the people. If the people are going to pay the interest on those securities in the form of rates, then the people must, and they have a right to, demand that every dollar that come from those securities go to their service.

Third, is the regulation of rates.

Those are the three things upon which all proper regulation and effective and just regulation of public service corporations is based. They involve profound study and they ought not to be entered upon by men who have not given deep study to them. There is a chance for a great many mistakes, and there is a chance for mistakes which might make our last condition worse than our first, if we don't mind what we are doing.

If we pursue the course on which the legislature has entered in some of these matters, the chances are that we may wake up and find that our last condition is worse than our first.

State or Local Regulation?

There is a great difference of opinion in the matter of the regulation of corporations whose services are confined almost entirely within municipalities, as to whether or not they should be regulated by the state or by local bodies, which have the most interest in the subject to be regulated. There is a great deal to be said in favor of either side. In our state the bad state government we have had for the last fifty years, since the question of regulating public service corporations became a live issue, has made it impossible for us to look to the state government for any effective relief in such matters. So the idea has grown up in the state of local control of those things; and that local control has been provided for, first, in our constitution; second, by various cities in their charters. Our own city, I am glad to say, has gone farther than any other city in the state in securing, as a part of its charter, the power and right to establish a board of public utilities, and it has done a great deal of good. You will find a great many people throughout the state of California who believe that the right to regulate public service corporations, which are organized principally to serve the people of municipalities, is a right of local self-government, which ought not to be surrendered under any circumstances or conditions.

The arguments in favor of the one or the other probably will present themselves in considering the legislation that is now before the legislature, and particularly the most vital and important part of it, entitled "Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 6," which seeks to establish a state board of public utilities with statewide authority to regulate public utilities of all kinds, including railroads.

Of course, we must all admit the logical force of the argument that the three necessary powers in order effectively and justly to regulate a public utility,—the power of making a physical valuation, the power of limiting the issue of bonds and stocks, and the power of making the rates,—should be all held and used by one body. Nobody can avoid the force of the logic of that. And nobody can avoid the force of the argument that the state is in the best position to do at least two of those three things: one is to collect the data for physical valuation. It is hardly possible without an enormous expenditure for any municipality to collect that data as thoroughly as the state can do so. And the matter of regulating the issuance of securities is also a matter of such broad significance that it is a matter that might be, probably, exercised by a state board, which can view the whole of the state as a single field, better than by a municipality.

But some of us think that we are not ready for that just at the present time; and in so far as the arguments in support of that position will suggest themselves in reviewing this proposed constitutional amendment, I desire to call your attention to some of the matters which I conceive most objectionable in it.

Amendment Not Well Drawn

In the first place, the thing that impresses any man who has studied these matters at all, I think, in looking over this, is that this proposed constitutional amendment, as well as the act which has been introduced in the legislature upon the same subject, indicate a good deal of crudity of thought. There is a contradiction in some of their terms; an evident failure to comprehend the full meaning of some of the provisions; that suggest the fact that they have not been digested by the man who offered them as well as they should have been.

There is a provision which, it seems to me, we cannot afford to tender to any sort of commission. It gives this commission control over the storage and wharfage facilities either directly or indirectly used to or for the public.

I don't believe we can stand for that. Of course, it might not, with the proper change there, at any rate, involve the control over muncipally owned facilities. But I think we ought to insist on always retaining in this city the right to establish the rates for the use of those wharf facilities, whether controlled by private individuals or not.

These are two objections to the amendment as it stands, and, of course, neither of them go to the real matter of the control by a state board, investing it with the great power of fixing the rates. In my judgment, gentlemen, we are not ready for that sort of thing. While I admit the logic of this matter, that one body is better able to use all these powers than to divide them, there are two considerations which at the present time make me absolutely opposed to this sort of thing.

Ill Feeling Between North and South

One is,—and there is no use of our blinking at it at all,—there is an absolute opposition between the two sections of the state. Now, we have been so busy with our development down here that we don't appreciate the attitude of the northern part of the state towards Los Angeles, until we wake up to the fact that the representatives of San Francisco are opposing the perfectly reasonable control of our harbor that we are asking, because, they say, if we get it, our enterprise in using it will injure their harbor.

That is the sort of thing that we have to contend against. We have got to reckon with it as a force in our existence in this part of the state for the future.

Commission for Each Section

As long as present conditions exist of local jealousies in this state, I nev-

(Continued on Page 14)

MAIN 3340 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY 320 MAIN STR. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191
Los Angeles, Cal.

LOS ANGELES CHARTER AMENDMENTS

By George H. Dunlop

Mr. Dunlop was chairman of the committee appointed by the Good Government Organization of Los Angeles to make a study of the proposed charter amendments and report on same to the City Central Committee. This article embodies all the important features of the committee's report in brief form.

Amendment No. 1

This amendment enlarges, in a number of ways, the powers which the legislature authorizes the city of Los Angeles to exercise. The principal increase in power authorized is for the purpose of facilitating the city in carrying out its plans for electric light and power distributing plants, and has reference to the city's right to issue bonds. The city has already voted $3,500,000 of bonds for the purpose of beginning the installation of an electric generating and distributing plant. Much more money, however, will be necessary to complete the system. Because of certain unnecessary restrictions in the charter as it now stands, the city can vote no more bonds in connection with its electric light and power plans. The city's hands will be tied unless these restrictions are removed, which removal is accomplished by this amendment.

Another provision in this amendment authorizes the city, in case it wishes to buy the poles and wires now used by the private companies for distributing purposes, and if the companies are unwilling to sell them at a reasonable price, to bring condemnation proceedings in the courts and force a sale of the property at a price to be fixed by the courts.

Around these two provisions will center the chief opposition to the proposed Charter amendments. The opponents of a municipal lighting system will not attack these amendments as such, for to do so would only be to make them the more popular, but they will seek to defeat these provisions by saying nothing about them and by throwing cold water on the amendments as a whole, possibly seizing upon some other amendments as a particular ground for criticism.

Amendment No. 2

This amendment seeks to introduce the "short ballot" into our city elections, by reducing the number of officials to be elected at each election, from twenty-three to ten. This is accomplished by making appointive three of the offices that are now elective, namely the office of City Clerk, of City Treasurer and of City Tax Collector, leaving twenty officials to be elected, and then making the terms of these twenty officials four years instead of two years, as at present, with an election every two years, and half of the city officials to be elected at each election.

Should any official elected for four years prove unsatisfactory, it will be an easy matter to recall him at the end of two years at the regular city election, for no special election will be necessary for that purpose. They are, of course, subject to special recall at any time.

This amendment also improves a number of the details of the initiative and referendum features of our city government, and extends the application of the recall to appointive officials, the recall now being applicable only to elective officials. This extension of the recall, making it apply to all appointive officials such as the Chief of Police, members of the Water Board, Board of Harbor Commissioners, Board of Public Works, etc., is very important in a city like Los Angeles, that has so many lines of public business that, of necessity, must be carried on by appointive commissions. The amended recall provision also provides definitely that a recall election shall be held in any case where an officer, against whom a recall petition has been filed, resigns subsequent to the filing of the petition and prior to the holding of the election, on which point there is an unfortunate omission in the present Charter.

An exceedingly important feature of this recall amendment is that it provides for the nomination of candidates at a recall election simply by filing a petition for each candidate, signed by one per cent of the electors, without the necessity of a primary election to place candidates in nomination for the recall election. Owing to a conflict, which now exists between the present Charter provision for the recall and the charter provision requiring a primary election at all city elections, there is not time between the date of the filing of the recall petition and the date prescribed in the Charter for holding the recall election thereunder, in which to hold a primary election, and any attempt at the present time to recall a public official would result in such litigation in the courts as might entirely nullify the application of the recall.

Provision is also made in this amendment for a recount of votes in any contested primary election, the present law providing only for a recount in the case of the final election.

Amendment No. 3

This provides for various improvements in the different city departments and commissions, the chief of which are that the Mayor is given more direct control over the police, fire and health departments, and that the heads of the various departments are given a more efficient method of dismissing civil service employes, who by reason of indifference, discourtesy or other disqualification have shown themselves to be undesirable public servants. This more efficient method of dismissing unsatisfactory employes is now in use in most of the large eastern cities and is recommended by the National Civil Service League.

Amendment No. 4

This fixes the official bonds of various city officials and also raises some of the salaries. The salary of a future councilman is raised from $100 per month to $200. Salaries of the Mayor, City Attorney, etc., are raised in less proportion. The increased salary schedule will still be below the average of salaries paid in equally responsible positions in private life.

Amendment No. 5

This amendment prescribes the duties of various city commissions. It gives to the Board of Public Utilities the right to fix the rates (not simply recommend, as at present) of the privately owned public utilities of the city, the rates fixed by the Board to be subject to revision by a two-thirds vote of the Council. Members of this board are appointed by the Mayor, subject to the approval of the Council, and may be removed at any time by the Mayor and Council. They will also be subject to the provision for the recall of appointive officials if Charter amendment No. 2 is adopted.

This amendment elaborates the functions of the Board of Harbor Commissioners, placing them in a position to properly take care of the Harbor, and also changes the name of the present Water Board to the Department of Public Service, giving to them, under their new name, charge not only of the Water Department but also of the electric light and power business of the city. The proper handling of the city's electrical interests requires ample authority in some branch of the city government to look after these interests, and this is provided for in this amendment.

This amendment contains a number of important restrictions on the sale of the city's water and electric power. Electric power can be sold to private persons or corporations for purposes of resale only on a vote of two-thirds of the electors of the city in favor of the contract. No water can be sold for purposes of resale except to other cities. Any contract with another city for the sale of water or power to said city must be approved by a majority vote of the electors of Los Angeles city and must be at rates not less than those charged the consumers inside of the city. Such contracts must not be made for a longer period of time than for fifteen years and shall be subject to cancellation by Los Angeles city at any time on three years' notice. This amendment makes no important change in the Water Board's present authority to conduct the Water Department.

Provision is also made in this amendment for the Board of Playground Commissioners and for a Municipal Art Commission.

Amendment No. 6

This amendment specifies the detail and the manner in which the various city departments shall spend the money appropriated to those departments and authorizes the city council, by ordinance, subject to referendum by the voters of the city, to sell certain classes of city property, the sale of which is not otherwise prohibited in the Charter. This section has no reference to the sale of water, electric power or harbor frontage, restrictions on the sale of these latter being provided for in other sections of the Charter.

Amendment No. 7

This amendment is intended to enlarge the city's authority in the matter of compelling the owners of new subdivisions of land to make their streets conform in location and grade with already existing city streets, and with streets that have been planned by ordinance.

Amendment No. 8

Provides some of the details of making up the tax levy and of paying the city warrants.

Amendment No. 9

This amendment provides a number of restrictions upon the handling of the harbor frontage intended to limit and regulate the granting of temporary franchises on the frontage and reserving those portions of the water front necessary for the municipally operated wharves and docks. The amendment provides that until Los Angeles city shall come into the ownership and possession of 10,000 lineal feet of water frontage no permit or franchise of any kind shall be made of any portion of the water front except by a two-thirds vote of the electors. When the city shall own in excess of 10,000 feet of water front it may as to such excess, by ordinance, subject to the referendum, grant permits or franchises on the alternate frontages 2000 feet long, for periods of time not exceeding fifteen years and not more than one such 2000 foot frontage permit or franchise to be granted to any one firm or corporation. Provision is made that all franchises or leases shall go to the highest bidder but in every case all bids may be rejected.

Amendment No. 10

This amendment authorizes the granting of franchises for subways or elevated railroads for a period not exceeding forty years, subject to the city's right to purchase the railroad at any time after twenty-one years, and conditional upon every such franchise, before it is granted, being specifically approved by a vote of the electors. Before any franchise for an elevated railroad can be granted, even by the express vote of the electors, it must be petitioned for by fifty per cent of the property frontage in front of which it is to run.

Amendment No. 11

This amendment fixes the height of all business buildings at 150 feet, the present height of our tallest business blocks. The voters of the city, however, may by ordinance approved by them, subject to such regulations as may be included in the ordinance, provide for the construction of towers, domes, etc., above the 150 foot limit, provided the additional space is not used for commercial purposes.

Amendment No. 12

This provides that should Los Angeles city annex any territory with regulations on the liquor traffic, which said territory wishes to retain, those regulations shall remain in force until changed by vote of the voters of such annexed territory.

Amendment No. 13

This amendment authorizes the city to provide for pensions for firemen and policemen.

Amendment No. 14

This is intended to take the granting of franchises by the city out from under the operation of the State law, which is unsatisfactory in several respects, and to place the granting of franchises under the provisions of the Charter.

Amendment No. 15

This amendment authorizes (does not require) the city to publish a newspaper, leaving it within the power of the city to determine what kind of a newspaper, if any, it will publish. The politics of a large city are almost completely dominated by the newspapers, and this amendment was asked for by the Good Government Organization, the Central Council of Labor, the Church Federation Council

TO THE VOTERS OF LOS ANGELES CITY:

The Good Government Organization recommends to the voters of the city that they give their support to all of the fifteen amendments to the City Charter that are to be voted upon Monday, March 6th. Some of the amendments are very necessary if the city is to successfully carry out its plans as to electric light, electric power and the deep sea harbor. We believe that all of the amendments will result in some substantial gain to the city and urge the voters to vote yes on all of them.

GOOD GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION.
S. C. Graham, President.

others in order that we might have in this city one newspaper controlled by the citizens of Los Angeles. This amendment will make it possible, if the voters of the city so desire, for the city to publish a daily newspaper which shall give particular attention to local municipal affairs, the most important feature of the paper to be, however, that in every issue one column shall be set aside for the free use of each political organization that polls three per cent of the total vote of the city, the matter that the different political organizations hand in to be printed in their respective columns to be subject to no censorship by the general management of the paper except that such matter must concern public affairs and be lawful for newspaper publication. This provision will be a guarantee that such a municipal newspaper will tell the truth in its other columns, for any misstatements in the general columns of the paper would be corrected the very next day in one or another of these independent columns. The people of this city should provide one avenue of publicity for public affairs free from the restraint and control of private ownership.

Public Service Commissions

By Horatio A. Foster

Following is the gist of a paper by Horatio A. Foster, which was read by him before the City Club of Los Angeles at last Saturday's luncheon at the Hotel Westminster. Mr. Foster speaks with authority on this subject. He has been in the engineering profession for twenty years and has had much to do with Public Service Commissions, having been connected at various times with the Commissions of New York and Massachusetts. Mr. Foster is associated with Bion J. Arnold, electrical engineer of Chicago, and is at present in Los Angeles making an appraisal of the value of the Southern California Edison company's plant.

It is probable that the idea of Public Service Commissions originated from the Railroad Commissions of former days, one of the earliest of which—the Railroad Commission of New York—was appointed in 1855 and continued in service for two years.

The next Railroad Commission, the one which still retains the most permanent position, was that of Massachusetts, organized in 1868. In 1884 the Gas and Electric Light Commission of Massachusetts was organized, and has now been operating for 25 years.

New York Commission

One of the earliest of these newer commissions to be organized was the Public Service Commission of New York, consisting of two separate and distinct divisions, that of the First District, having charge of all public utilities in New York City and its immediate vicinity and the Public Service Commission, Second District, which covers all public utilities in the remaining portion of the state. The appointment of this commission took effect July 1, 1907.

The Public Service Commission, First District, is one of the most important bodies of its kind. Following is a resume that will show something of the extent of its authority:

1. To examine into the general condition, capitalization, franchises and management of public service corporations; to compel the production of all records, documents and papers, and to summon witnesses.
2. To establish a uniform system of accounts and records and prescribe the form of annual, quarterly and monthly reports.
3. To order repairs or changes in corporate property, the use of additional facilities, or the adoption of improved methods of operation, in order to secure safe and adequate service.
4. To test gas and electric meters, approve types of meters, and establish standards of quality for gas and electric service.
5. To fix just and reasonable rates to be charged by public service corporations, to prevent unjust discrimination, and to require two or more carriers to establish through routes and fix joint rates for through service.
6. To entertain complaints and after due hearing make such order as will remove the cause of complaint.
7. To grant or withhold the certificate needed by a public service corporation before it can begin new construction or exercise a franchise or right not already exercised.
8. To approve or disapprove the transfer of a franchise, or the making of a contract relating to a franchise.
9. To give or withhold permission for the issuing of corporate securities, or for the merger of existing companies; but not to permit the capitalization of any merger or franchise itself.
10. To grant or refuse permission for the transfer of stock in a public service corporation to a similar corporation, or for the acquisition of more than ten per cent of such stock by any corporation.
11. To grant, subject to the approval of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, franchises for rapid transit railroads, whether subways, tunnels, elevated roads or continuations of trunk lines (such as the recent Pennsylvania Railroad extensions.)
12. Subject to the approval of the same board, to lay out municipal rapid transit routes, prepare plans, obtain contractors, supervise construction, and secure operators, for such routes, or under certain conditions to operate them directly.

All freight and passenger tariffs, including joint tariffs and the names of participating carriers, and all contracts or arrangements relating to transportation, must be filed with the commission. The commission has also required the rate schedules of all gas and electric companies to be filed.

Wisconsin Commission

The next state to take up the public service commission idea was Wisconsin, which increased the powers of its Railroad Commission so as to place upon it the handling of all questions and complaints regarding the public utilities corporations of the state. This commission has started out with very original ideas and has passed judgment on many cases and made some very notable decisions. The public service commission idea has been adopted in various other states, which in many cases have followed the example of Wisconsin and given their railroad commissioners or commissions increased powers, so that they might cover all questions connected with public utilities companies.

Many other states are considering the organization of Public Service Commissions.

Benefit of Commissions

One of the chief benefits of Public Service Commissions arises from the fact that they are ordinarily composed of men who become experts in a business which is technical, difficult, and subject to frequent changes of conditions. Such a commission also stands as a buffer between the capitalists who desire to sell as many securities as possible, and the public, which desires as low rates as possible, and it is only by having such a buffer that low rates can be firmly established and the companies can be prevented from over-capitalizing their property. Incidentally, it takes the companies out of politics and in every way tends to render their securities more stable, more desirable of purchase by the public in general, and more salable because they are secure; thus funds for legitimate development can be obtained easily.

In order to control the growth and equal prosperity of a community there can be no doubt that its citizens through its officials must have complete control of

(a) Adequate service.
(b) Rates
(c) Rehabilitation.
(d) Extension and improvements.

This control can only be had through the agency of a properly organized Public Service Commission, and so far as I have any opinion at all on the subject, it seems to me that a State Commission holds a better position and gets a better perspective of the entire situation than can any purely local body.

On the material side of the case, commissions can very often assist a city in preventing the unnecessary duplication of overhead lines on the streets, and the unnecessary tearing up of streets for replacing and repairing the conduits under ground, and, in fact, such a commission can bring about much more satisfactory conditions between city officials, the public, and the public utilities companies than can any local body working separately and alone.

Should Control All Issue of Securities

The public service commission of the proper kind should control all franchises and permits to conduct business. It should also control the issue of new securities, including bonds, stock and debentures, and see that there is no over-bonding or watering of stock.

Publicity of Accounts

No better result can be obtained in any manner than that which comes from the publicity of a company's accounts, a publication of its operating records, and greater yet, a publication of its future intentions.

Commissions can prescribe a proper uniform accounting method so that detailed comparison of business can be made between companies in the same line, and they are enabled by this means to suggest economies and improvements in operation which a local body would overlook, and which local companies themselves have become blind to, although outsiders will discover room for these economies off-hand.

Compelled to Keep Houses in Order

Public Service Commissions have been the means of compelling the companies to put their houses in order and to be ready at all times to place before the public such information as may be asked for and may be required for a proper understanding of the workings of the companies, both for the guidance of stockholders in handling their investments in the securities of public utilities corporations, and for the benefit of the general public which desires to know what rates it is possible to make with such corporations, and it is always possible for the public service commission to make rates which should be mutually satisfactory to the public and to the companies, although not always as low as some people would like. For instance, in many cases such as that of small telephone companies in Wisconsin, where subscribers have demanded lower prices for telephones, the commission, upon examination, has determined that the income obtained from the then existing prices was so low as not to allow for depreciation, and in such cases it invariably raised the prices to a point where enough profit could be made to allow writing off depreciation annually. Such a commission also becomes fitted to wrestle with problems of depreciation, obsolescence, amortization, etc., problems which must be considered in the future very much more than they have been in the past, in order to properly regulate rates and fix values; and right here it may be said that the public utilities companies are fast recognizing the fact that they must have appraisals made of all their physical and intangible property for which securities have been, or may be, issued. But it must be understood that valuation does not necessarily settle the case, and it is probable that no better statement of the matter can be made than that by Theodore Roosevelt in his speech at Indianapolis on Decoration Day, 1907, Roosevelt said:

"At the outset let it be understood that physical valuation is no panacea; it is no sufficient measurement of a rate; but it will be ultimately needed as an essential instrument in administrative supervision. . . . Therefore the physical valuation can never be more than one of many elements to be considered; but it is one element, and at times may be a very important element, when taken in connection with the earning power and business possibilities in reaching an estimate on the property and rights of a corporation as a going concern.

"The effects of such valuation and supervision of securities cannot be retroactive. Existing securities should be tested by the laws in existence at the time of their issue. This nation would no more injure securities which have become an important part of the national wealth than it would consider a proposition to repudiate the public debt. But the public interest requires guaranty against improper multiplication of securities in the future."

A public service commission should always be formed of men of the highest character, and either of expert technical knowledge or clear judicial training. It has been a question among many people as to which of these two classes of men form the best commission, but it is probable that the preponderance of opinion is in favor of the appointment of men of judicial training who can hire all the expert advice required, thus rendering their own judgment adequate. Such commissioners should receive proper pay so that the best talent may be obtained. Those in New York now receive $15,000 annual salary each, and devote their entire time to the business of the commission. No other arrangement should ever be made than one requiring that the commissioners who are appointed for this very important position should devote their entire time to the work of the commission, and therefore men of high class must be paid adequate salaries for the work.

Should Be Given Ample Powers

Such a public service commission should be given ample powers, as instance those of the New York Commissions related in a foregoing part of this paper. As a matter of fact the more clearly defined their duties and the more nearly they become the court of last resort in all questions affecting the public utilities the better will be the results. In the more than forty years of the existence of the Massachusetts Railroad Commission its findings have been seldom carried to higher courts.

The Right to Regulate Rates

The regulating of rates is another important power resting in a public service commission and such regulating of rates must be on the basis of a fair return on a fair investment. If such regulation is in effect there is no necessity for competition and in fact competition must be prevented. Lack of competition leads naturally to combinations which mean monopoly, the natural condition of all public utilities each in its own separate line. If this monopoly is to be expected to furnish adequate service, to maintain its property at its highest efficiency, to improve and extend its system in accordance with public necessity and demand, and to furnish service at practically cost plus a fair return, then the investment in its security should be practically protected by the same power that regulates the rates. For this purpose the Public Service Commission is invaluable in seeing that such a combination is made on a fair basis of value and capitalization, and that both sides get a square deal.

In connection with the lighting problem, franchises are generally obtained for a whole municipality at once but the subject of extensions to new outlying districts has been the cause of much contention, and here a public service commission is found of very great advantage both in getting the service for the people who need it, and in protecting the company from unreasonable demands. In spite of the fact that a community presumes and believes that it knows best what is good for it, and that it can best handle questions of local bearing, yet the fact is that it quite often stands in its own light, gets a poor perspective, and such questions, when handled by local officials, are apt to be biased one way or the other by politics or friendship, and can be far better handled by an independent body.

There can be no doubt then, that public service commissions have come to stay, even though in some states the corporations have been worried by them very considerably. The people will never allow the abolition of such commissions, as the work already done has appealed greatly to the public and they would very much resent any attempt being made to abolish them.

Political Table Talk

(Continued from page 5)

tice. Nothing short of it will content any people of intelligence having confidence in themselves. Whoever stands betwixt a growing civilization and justice occupies a position of peril. It affords a progressive people small comfort when they see justice dethroned, cast into the gutter for the dogs to defile with their slime, to be assured that the symmetry of the law has at all events been preserved, that the wise rules ordained for the preservation of decorum have not been departed from. And this is the only consolation Mr. Justice Beatty has to offer! For himself it is all sufficing. For his time it is not, and that is why he finds himself out of joint with his time and why the consensus of progressive opinion is that he lags superfluous. The medical treatise that is ten years old goes to the junk room. The law book equally antiquated should keep it company. Civilization is a going concern. The judiciary is not always. It averages twenty-five to fifty years behind civilization's main advance, a fundamental reason why there are strained relations between people and judiciary. The judiciary don't keep step.

Proposed Public Utilities Legislation

(Continued from page 11)

er would vote to put the public utilities or Southern California in control of a commission, the majority of whom are selected from the northern part of the state. That can be obviated, as has been suggested, by doing what they have done in New York, providing for two commissions and giving one jurisdiction over the southern part and the other jurisdiction over the northern part of the state; which, of course, is a complete answer to that objection.

But there is another objection: we don't know just what sort of a state government we are going to have two years or four years from now. I have every confidence in the government in power now. That may be perpetuated, and I hope that, under the good election laws which will be given us, it will be. But we don't know that, and I am not ready, on account of two months of good government in this state yet to trust to the state government, which for thirty years has been unworthy of that trust, the great powers we have asked for in this legislature. I can't do it. If two years from now we send a legislature as good as this one is, and probably two years from that we still have another, good governor and another good legislature, I might then be perfectly willing to consider the matter of statewide control of public utilities; but not now.

There is one advantage which we can, in my judgment, get out of the public utilities at this session of the legislature and which it will not be necessary to change the constitution in order to obtain. I believe that the legislature has submitted a law now giving a board of public utilities statewide control of the issuance of securities by public utilities; and, second, to take a physical valuation of the properties of public utilities and permit that valuation and all the data to be used by municipalities in solving the problems of regulation of those utilities which are in their borders.

I was told the other day by a man who is personally interested in the matter, who speaks by authority, that one of our most prominent and important public utilities of this city was now preparing for a twenty million dollar bond issue, and that ten million dollars of that was going personally to the man who has the largest control of that institution. There is ten million dollars that is going to be imposed on you in the way these things are juggled; and if we may constitute a commission invested with power so that it can come down here and say, "Let us look over your books before you issue this ten million dollars of securities; we want to see what you are going to do with it," it would be the best thing possible in this state.

Now, I want to say that such a bill should pass, and it ought to pass just as quickly as possible, and that in the bill this body might very usefully be vested with the right to regulate the prices charged by public utilities to consumers outside of the municipalities, because those people have no protection now. Its functions ought to be confined to those three things: physical valuation of the properties, the regulation of the issuance of securities, and the control of rates outside of local governments that are constituted and have power to do those things; and I believe that that can be done by the present legislature without any change in the constitution whatever, and, therefore, I think that what we all ought to stand for is the absolute abandonment of this proposed constitutional amendment, and the enactment into law of that same bill.

State Regulation of Public Utilities

Los Angeles City Club Condemns Sutherland Constitutional Amendment and Assembly Bill.

Affirming their belief in the principle of a state utilities commission but protesting against the state fixing of rates, at this time, the Los Angeles City Club last Saturday adopted a report embodying these views. The report had been prepared by a committee of nine appointed by President Finlayson to study the question. It recommended the abandonment, by the legislature, of Constitutional amendment No. 6 and of the provisions of assembly bill No. 671, both introduced by Assemblyman W. A. Sutherland. The legislature is asked to provide for the creation of a state public utilities commission composed of six members, three from the north and three from south of the Tehae After some discussion as to the merits and demerits of the report it was adopted unanimously by the club. Following is the report in full:

To the Members of the City Club:

Your committee to whom was referred consideration of assembly constitutional amendment No. 6, and assembly bill No. 671, introduced in the legislature by Mr. Sutherland, has considered these measures and investigated so far as it has been able the whole subject of state regulation of public utilities and submits the following report and recommendations:

We find that assembly constitutional amendment No. 6 contains many objectionable features wholly aside from the question of whether public utilities can best be regulated by a state board or by the municipalities. We believe it should be abandoned. Upon the broad question of state or municipal control of public utilities, a difference of opinion exists in your committee. Mr. Hunsaker and Mr. Anderson are opposed to any jurisdiction of a state commission in the matter of rate fixing or physical control of utility corporations in municipalities. The rest of your committee agree that upon a purely logical basis a state board having control of the issuance of stocks and bonds of public service corporations, with the means and the ability to secure a physical valuation of the property also should have the rate fixing power now lodged by the constitution in the municipalities of the state. It has been stated that those states which best regulate public utility corporations do so through state control. In none of these states, however, are the municipalities given the powers vested by our constitution in municipalities. Having so long enjoyed the largest measure of home rule, and possessing among other things the right to fix rates to be charged by public utilities for services rendered, your committee believes that the people of California residing in municipalities would not be willing to surrender this power to a state board even if assured of the successful operation of state boards of control in Wisconsin, in New York and elsewhere. We therefore have come to the unanimous conclusion that it would be unwise to attempt so to amend the state constitution at this time as to transfer the rate-making power from the municipalities to the state.

We believe, however, there should be a state board of public utilities which while not exercising the right to fix rates in municipalities, can perform much other useful and necessary work. Such board can be formed, in our opinion, by legislative enactment and without the submission of constitutional amendment. This commission should not be connected with any other commission now in existence, this reference being practically intended to apply to the railroad commission of California. This commission should be empowered by the legislature to have supervision and regulation of the issuance of stocks and bonds by all public service corporations. To this end it should be empowered to make a physical valuation of all properties of public service corporations privately owned and it should be its duty to fix rates to be charged for services outside the municipalities. The data collected by the public utilities commission should at all times be available to the various municipalities of the state which under this plan would retain the right to fix rates. There should be a provision in the bill that when called upon to do so by any municipality the state public utility commission should be required to furnish to such municipality the data collected by it, touching upon physical valuation of public service corporations, and to recommend to the municipality what it deems to be fair and equitable rates for the services rendered. The power to accept or to reject the suggested rate would remain in the municipality.

We therefore move the adoption of the following resolution by the City Club:

Whereas, assembly constitutional amendment No. 6, and assembly bill No. 671, both introduced in the legislature by Mr. Sutherland, dealing with the creation of a state public utilities commission, seem to be objectionable and subject to criticism in a number of particulars,

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the City Club of Los Angeles that it recommend to the legislature that assembly constitutional amendment No. 6 be abandoned, and that no attempt be made to pass it at this session of the legislature; and

Be it further resolved, that assembly bill No. 671 be amended by striking out all of its provisions except the enacting clause, and that there be substituted for the sections so stricken out certain new sections which will provide for the creation of a state public utilities commission of six members, three of whom shall have supervision of privately owned public utility companies in those counties of California north of the Tehachapi range of mountains, and the other three to have supervision of those public utility companies privately owned in the counties south of the Tehachapi range of mountains. There should be conferred upon such commission the power to require all public service corporations to make report to such commission; to prescribe uniform system of accounts to be kept by such corporations; to examine into and regulate the issuance by such corporations of their corporate bonds and mortgages and stocks; to make and keep on file for the information of the public and municipalities physical valuation of the properties of such corporations and when requested by municipalities to advise with such municipalities concerning the fixing of rates but not to fix any such rates in cases where the power to fix such rates is now being exercised under authority of law by municipalities. The power to fix rates in unincorporated territory should be in such commission.

Respectfully submitted,

(Signed)

Lewis R. Works, Tracy C. Becker,
H. W. Brundige, T. E. Gibbon,
M. Lissner, J. A. Anderson,
J. M. Hunter.
W. J. Hunsaker (per J. A. A.)
C. D. Willard (per M. L.),

Amusements

Henry W. Savage's production of "The Merry Widow," the famous Viennese operetta, will be the attraction at the Majestic next week. The company which will be seen here is said to be one of the best of the organizations by which "The Merry Widow" has been interpreted. The players in the company to be seen here were selected from the New York, Boston and Chicago casts and the greetings they have received from press and public emphasizes the fact that "The Merry Widow" has in this, its fourth season, a hold upon the playgoers as strong as ever.

"The Girl in the Taxi," a melange of music, which is the attraction announced for a week's engagement beginning next Monday, February 27, at the Mason Opera House, comes with a record in this country and abroad.

The story concerns the escapades of Mignon, wife of a perfume manufacturer, and the efforts of Bertie Stewart to keep an appointment with her for a midnight supper at the Cafe Churchill. Papa Stewart, Bertie's father, goes away to the same restaurant to meet a couple of chorus girls. Bertie's cousin from Philadelphia, Percy by name, turns up at the same dining place to keep an appointment with a vaudeville artiste. Father, son and nephew meet under rather embarrassing and laughable conditions and confusion runs rampant. The third act unravels the mix-ups in a way least expected and all guilty parties swear with hands upraised, that it will never occur again.

The cast embraces such well known farceurs as Bobby Barry, Nicholas Judels, George Richards, Harry Hanlon, Dick Bartlett, Chas. Pierson, George Winfield, Pearl Sindelar, Helene Salinger, Cecile Breton, Amanda Wellington, Edna Esmeralda, Helene Veola and others.

There will be Wednesday and Saturday matinees during the week.

Every devotee of motoring, everyone who has dodged an auto; everyone who loves the smell of gasoline, should visit the Orpheum the week beginning Monday matinee Feb. 27, there to enjoy the miseries of "Motoring," as elucidated by Harry Tate's English comedians.

A set of trained wild animals has not been seen at the Orpheum in ages, so the coming of Mme. Vallecita and her leopards will be an innovation.

Maxim's models are a variant on the usual posing act, in that in this case pictures and not statuary are taken as subjects. A corps of experts in posing, with suitable backgrounds and scenery, in a huge frame, show the famous paintings of the world, and the colors, poses and effects are all the duplicates of the originals.

Neff and Starr come in a typical vaudeville song and dance number, but with a difference.

Remaining another week are Porter J. White & Co. in "The Visitor," Hugh Lloyd, the Victorian Four, and Borani & Nevaro, and with new motion pictures, they make up a varied bill.

"Is Matrimony a Failure," has been such a success at the Burbank theatre, that it will be given for another week, beginning with the matinee Sunday. "It is persistently, explosively funny all the way through," said one critic; "a riot of funny situations" is another's comment; "much that is amusing and not a little that may prove instructive" says another; "Whatever matrimony is, the comedy is a hit" is the opinion of a fourth; "The two big audiences Sunday were kept in a merry mood through each of the three acts" is the view of the fifth, making the opinions of the Los Angeles dramatic editors unanimous regarding the play.

Next week, Viola Allen's success, "The White Sister," a dramatization of F. Marion Crawford's novel of the same name, will be given its first stock presentation. This production also will witness the inauguration of Thursday matinees at the Burbank.

MUSIC ... ...

As an opera singer Alessandro Bonci has been admired for four years. With all his operatic appearances Mr. Bonci has ever unswervingly practiced the austere art of technical probity, and stylist truth when he enters into the Elysian fields of song.

Bonci is one of the few singers who can really sing, and his breaking away from the Metropolitan Opera Company excited the attention of the entire world. When he did so, it was with a well defined reason, one which, according to the tenor, should have a strong bearing upon the most important condition which faces the singers of today—that of singing grand opera in English.

Bonci is regarded by the musical world as one of the greatest living exponents of the art of bel canto.

His first concert in Los Angeles will be at Simpson Auditorium on Tuesday evening, February 28, the program of which was given in these columns last week. On Thursday evening, March 2, he will be under the joint management of Mr. Behymer and the members of the Los Angeles City Teachers' Club, 800 of whom have arranged to take that number of seats to listen to the educational features of this great tenor's work.

The next concert of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra will be given Friday afternoon, March 3. The date has been changed from March 10, owing to the fact that Tillie Koenen is not coming to America, and to secure the valued aid of a soloist who is worth while, the Symphony concert was moved up to meet an engagement with Signor Bonci, who will render two operatic arias at this recital.

Mr. Hamilton's next concert is one of great interest. It is the first time a Richard Strauss composition has been given by the Los Angeles Orchestra. Mr. Hamilton has waited until his men were in proper trim to do something of such deep interest as the Strauss Symphonic Fantasy from Italy, op. 10.

In addition to this number, the Irish Rhapsody by Stanford, and Goldmark's Overture to Springtime will be given.

The program numbers follow:

Symphonic Fantasie from Italy, op. 10 .....Richard Strauss
1. On the Campagna (Andante).
2. In Rome's Ruins (Allegro molto con brio).
3. On the Strand of Sorrento (Andantino).
4. Finale, Neapolitan Life (Allegro molto).

Una furtiva lagrina (L' Elixir d'Amore) .....Donizetti

Intermission

Irish Rhapsody, op. 78.....Stanford
Celeste Aida (Aida) .....Verdi
Overture Springtime , op. 36.....
..... Goldmark

Ferrucio Busoni, the distinguished Italian pianist who has returned to this country after several years absence, and for whom the Los Angeles public has waited several seasons, will be heard in two recitals in this city on Tuesday evening, March 14 and Friday evening, March 17 at Simpson's Auditorium.

Busoni's marked individuality is the first impression one receives from him. He produces a volume of tone that is astonishing and ranks with Paderewski as a pedalist, with an inclination towards the interpretation of Beethoven's famous compositions.

Busoni is an Italian by birth and ancestry, German by adoption, cosmopolitan by his sympathy and interest, scholar, philosopher, and artist.

Bruce Gordon Kingsley is arranging a season of organ recitals to be given at the Auditorium, the first of which will take place Friday afternoon, March 17 at 3 p. m. He has arranged programs of merit and will be assisted by some clever artists. The soloists for the afternoon will be Miss Lillie Dorn, with Mrs. Gertrude Ross, pianist, and Mr. Oscar Seiling, violinist.

Arrangements have been completed by Roland Paul, the tenor, and Mrs. Edith Haynes Kuester, composer and pianist, for an evening of music at Cunnock Hall on Friday night, March 3.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

SIMPSON AUDITORIUM — L. E. BEHYMER Manager
The World Wide Accepted King of Tenors
ALESSANDRO BONCI
In Two Wondrous Evenings of Music
Tuesday Night, Feb. 28 — Philharmonic Course
Thurs. Night, March 2, Auspices L. A. City Teachers Club
Seats now on sale at Bartlett Co. Prices 75, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 and $2.50.

THE AUDITORIUM — "Theatre Beautiful" — L. E. BEHYMER Manager
Friday Afternon, March 3, 3 o'clock sharp. Fifth Concert of the Season
L. A. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
A Strauss Afternoon. Harley Hamilton, Director.
The Management Announce as the Soloist
ALESSANDRO BONCI, the world's most famous TENOR.
Seat Sale at Bartlett Co. Prices 50, 75, $1.00 and $1.50

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER — Main Street Near Sixth
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company
Second Week, Beginning Sunday Matinee, Feb. 26
THE LAUGHTER EVENT OF THE SEASON
"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE"
Nights 25, 50, 75c. Matinees Saturday and Sunday 10, 25, 50c
Beginning Thursday, March 9, there will be matinees every Thursday at the Burbank

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER — Broadway Near Ninth
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr.
Beginning Sunday Night, Feb. 26
HENRY W. SAVAGE OFFERS
"THE MERRY WIDOW"
With the Original New York Cast
Prices 50c to $2.00 nights and Saturday Matinee.
Special Matinee Wednesday, 50c to $1.50
Coming—Frederick Warde in Shakespearean Repertoire.

ORPHEUM THEATRE — VAUDEVILLE — Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d, Los Angeles, Cal.
Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447 Mats. 10, 25, 50c. Night, 10, 25, 50, 75c
Beginning Monday Matinee Feb. 27
"Motoring" Harry Tate's Comedians
Vallecita's Leopards Great Animal Act
Maxim's Models Famous Paintings
Neff & Starr "The Telephone Girl"
Porter J. White & Co. "The Visitor."
Hugh Lloyd Bounding Rope
Victoria Four Storm, Reals, Billbury, Moon
Borani & Nevaro "Weary Waggles"
ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES

MASON OPERA HOUSE — W. T. WYATT Manager
Broadway bet. 1st and 2d Sts.
Week commencing Monday night, Feb. 27. Matinee Saturday. Special Ladies' Matinee Wednesday. Prices, 50c, 75c, $1. Seats now on sale.
A. H. Woods presents the Sensation of Paris
"THE GIRL IN THE TAXI"
Xceeding the speed limit—a laugh registered every 30 seconds. If you have a laugh anywhere in your system, "The Girl in the Taxi" is sure to get it out of you.
Prices: Night and Sat. Mat., 50c to $1.50. Coming—"The Arcadians."

IF YOU WANT TO HELP

This publication, get as many of your friends as possible to sign and mail subscriptions on these blanks. We want to double our circulation in 30 days. It can be done with the help of the good friends of the Progressive Movement.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

San Francisco and Los Angeles

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 311 E. Fourth St., Los Angeles.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

San Francisco and Los Angeles

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 311 E. Fourth St., Los Angeles.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

San Francisco and Los Angeles

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 311 E. Fourth St., Los Angeles.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

San Francisco and Los Angeles

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 311 E. Fourth St., Los Angeles.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

San Francisco and Los Angeles

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 311 E. Fourth St., Los Angeles.

IN THIS ISSUE | Franchises "During Good Behavior"

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK

A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Vol. X. No. 10 | Los Angeles and San Francisco, March 4, 1911 | 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Autocracy in the Zone

A DISGRUNTLED JUSTICE, late of the supreme court of Panama, declares that there is no law in the canal zone save that of the will of the President before which all procedures and statutes must give way. Quite likely. They are busy down there digging a big ditch and the work in hand would scarcely be expedited if a flock of lawyers were invited to swoop down to get out attachments upon patented machines, sue out writs of habeas corpus, procure continuances, garnishee wages and salaries and otherwise clog the mechanism of construction. Autocratic methods are un-American and orderly processes vindicated by time have much to commend them but, really, the canal zone is a busy place, and it is important that dirt fly with as little as possible to hinder. Besides, it is gratifying to know that there is a somewhere in which the will of the President does count for something. Let the good work go on. Those inalienable, constitutional safeguards and guarantees can wait.

Table of Contents

	Page.
Editorial	1-3
Political Table Talk	4
Making Good, a Record of Legislative Achievement	5
The Torrens Act	5
Municipal Affairs	6
Senatorial Skits	7
The New Order of Things	8
The Telegram That Never Came	9-10
The Indeterminate Franchise of Public Utilities	11-14
Charter Amendments	15-16
Amusements	18
Jester's Bells	19

Addicted to Didos

IT IS OUR OWN FAULT. We deserve it. None the less it is a bit humiliating to know that, immediately after congressional or executive action in relation to issues in which the Pacific Coast is interested, the East commonly watches to see with what antics, capers, and cuttings of pigeon-wings we receive what's done. No sooner was the Japanese treaty approved by the United States senate than the President felt called upon to telegraph out here: "Hold on there, you Californians! Don't kick over the traces and stir up a fuss. Stick to your bargain to behave. You are not hurt. It will all come out in the wash." It will. This coast is not to be flooded with brown men. If it comports more with the dignity of Japan to have coolie immigration restricted by a gentlemen's agreement rather than by hard and fast treaty stipulation what's the odds so that such immigration be restricted? What is hurting us is our general reputation for always going off on the half-cock and making a thunderingly disagreeable noise.

After the Muck-rakers

DOUBTLESS THE MAGAZINES with nation-wide constituencies should pay a higher rate of postage than dailies and state weeklies circulating in narrowed spheres. The fact that the haul of the one averages a thousand miles while that of the other averages three hundred justifies a separate classification. An approximation to the zone system is inherently sound and if ever we have a parcels post something analogous to that system will have to be at the foundation of it. But why not meet the issue fairly and openly by a special bill rather than by a "rider" tacked onto an appropriation bill, always the method of a boss determined to jam a measure through anyhow so that it be somehow gotten through? The reason is not far to seek. They are after the so-called muck-raking magazines to which The People have had mainly to look for inside information concerning governmental and financial affairs. Other excuses there may be, but that is the purpose. The success of this attempt to stifle the voice of the magazine is not unlikely to swamp Taft and his administration. There is not in the success of Canadian reciprocity enough of virtue to atone for the high-handedness of this onslaught.

Orphanage to White House

THAT CHARLES D. HILLES, of Dobbs Ferry, New York, is to be private Secretary to the President raises the question as to the adaptability of an orphanage as a training school for managing a president, for Mr. Hilles has for half a dozen years or more been superintendent of the New York Juvenile Asylum, and a right good one he has made. The institution over which he has presided is a model of its kind, or for all kinds of orphanages for that matter. Mr. Hilles hails from Out West somewhere, perhaps from Indiana, and if the President is becoming as petulant as reports indicate his orphanage training may exactly fit Mr. Hilles for the position he is about to fill.

A Hard Rub

THE INSISTENCE OF THE PRESIDENT upon having a national commission to keep watch and ward over the Panama-Pacific Exposition may be easier to understand than to explain. Is he fearful that the representatives of foreign nations will not be courteously treated while in San Francisco unless placed under the protection of such a commission? Was the conduct of our boosters while in Washington such as to raise in the presidential mind doubts as to whether or not we Pacific Coasters know how to behave? Was the example set by the mayor of our exposition city disquieting? Or was the President moved to take this step through the reflection that a city that refuses to punish its successful rascality will bear watching lest, peradventure, a great undertaking culminate in a great scandal? Whatever the justification assigned for the appointment of that commission the rub is a hard one and scatters black eyes over San Francisco as thick as blackbirds on a plowed field in April. It is a hard rub rubbed in.

Good Time to Fix Roads

WE ARE NOT UNACQUAINTED with the breaking down of the law by force of hard cash but the purpose of the I. W. W. to accomplish a similar result by force of numbers possesses novelty. Fresno erred in its treatment of this brotherhood of jabberwoks, but it scarcely merits the invasion of hosts thousands strong to convince it of its error. Spring is at hand and the public roads need fixing. The advent of the I. W. W.'s in force is not inopportune. The counties through which they come should have their chain gangs ready. The invaders are vagrants and if convicted and judicially "floated" from county to county in bunches of suitable size the mob may be much attenuated by the time it has reached Fresno and the chuck holes may be all filled. If the business be put into the hands of Adjutant General Forbes he'll see to it.

THE JUDGE AND THE PEOPLE

The public debate over the application of the recall to the judiciary has done one important service: it has given us a somewhat clearer view of the function of the judge and his relation to the general body politic.

Because most of us come in contact with the court when it is serving as an arbitraor between persons or interests in dispute, we are likely to overlook the great part it plays in the actual administration of the government.

The man who objects to the recall principle as applied anywhere in our scheme of government is entirely consistent when he objects to the recall of judges; but the man who accepts the recall idea as applied to legislators and executives, but objects to its application to judges, can scarcely appreciate, it would seem, the broad legislative and executive powers that rest with the courts under our present system.

Occasionlly we hear denunciations of the courts for their assumption of these functions. It is often referred to as a "usurpation" of power. It is, however, the natural and inevitable outgrowth of a plan of government based on a written constitution and elaborately outfitted with a system of checks and balances.

Our government began business 122 years ago with a document containing about 8000 words—less than are needed to cover one page of a newspaper. The British constitution is made up of countless acts of Parliament and decrees of the monarch, supplemented by an infinite mass of customs, precedents and traditions, some of them too vague and intangible to be put into words. If all these parts were gathered up and printed, the resultant mass would be to the American constitution as a thousand to one. And yet the underlying system of the British constitution is simple, while ours is a thing of infinite complication. Knowing that they had to deal with vast powers in small compass, our great grandfathers were cautious, as men are who handle dynamite. The English system checked and balanced itself, through custom; but with us a definite tribunal apparently was required for that purpose. Starting with a written instrument, to which all law, and all action under the law, must conform, there was need for an interpreter clothed with extraordinary powers, who should sit in judgment above the one who made and the one who undertook to execute the law. No similar functionary exists under the English system, nor in continental countries. Parliament and the Reichstag are their own supreme court. Judges are experts as to what law exists, not as to what law should exist. They arbitrate between this litigant and that, not between the people and the law makers or the law administrators. Their function is technical not political.

Because the American people recognized that an element of governmental power was vested in the judiciary, they retained in most states the right to elect. There are some states where judges are appointed, and it is quite conceivable that a better class of men can be secured by this process than through the ordinary channels of political nomination and election. To some people this fact, viz., that better men are, as a rule, obtained through appointment than election, settles the issue as to the proper method of choice, but not with all

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

LOS ANGELES, 311 East Fourth St.
SAN FRANCISCO, 1018 Phelan Building.

Published in LOS ANGELES Every Saturday

Subscription Price $1.00 a Year, in Advance.
Single Copies 5 Cents at News Stands.

A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing
C. D. WILLARD } Editors

A. M. DUNN, Manager

PACIFIC OUTLOOK entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Application made for entry for THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK in the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, as second-class mail matter.

—not, we imagine, with those who are true believers in democracy. It is not essential to democracy that a large number of officers should be elected. The point at issue with respect to any particular officer, as to whether he is to be chosen by the people or appointed by some other officer, turns on whether he exercises original and fundamental powers of government. This seems to describe the judges at the same time that it excludes many other officers that are now elected. The fact that existing bad political conditions, under the rule of partisan machines and special business influences, have led frequently to the choice of less able men than have been sometimes and in some places obtained through appointment is not of profound importance. Democracy is learning through its mistakes and will presently be done with the party nonsense and the rule of the special interest. And the real needs of the people may be more zealously guarded by a man of moderate attainments, chosen by popular vote, than by one of the highest professional reputation but with small understanding of his fellow men. In the gigantic struggle that is just ahead of us between the rights of men and the rights of property, the judiciary must play the leading hand. Judges chosen by direct primaries and an honest count of votes, whose term of office may be ended by a popular recall, will represent the people. Judges appointed, and free from the operation of the recall may represent the people, or they may represent business interests.

If one accepts the principle of the recall and if he admits that judges should be elected, it is difficult to see how he can escape the conclusion that the people should have the right to undo what they have done. The recall will give us in the end either a life term or a very long term for our judges, which is eminently desirable in a line of work that has so large a technical element. There is no guarantee that the people will never go wrong in its use; confidence in the ultimate judgment of democracy must not lead us into any theory of an inspired electorate. But it is better that here and there some one just judge should suffer, than that the whole people should be thwarted in their struggle for industrial and political freedom.

C. D. W.

WHO IS DOING IT?

Bates & Chesebrough are trying to establish a bona fide water transportation service between the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts wherein there shall be rational competition between a water route and transcontinental railroad lines. They are being savagely fought and undercut in rates by a combination of the transcontinental lines with two steamship companies. Bates & Chesebrough cannot permanently do business at a loss. The steamship lines subsidized by the railroads can continue indefinitely to carry goods for less than a living price. The end of Bates & Chesebrough is inevitable unless their patrons do what patrons never did before, continuously pay a higher rate than other carriers offer them and a rate higher than their competitors pay. Now suppose that the cutthroat competition of the allied transcontinentals and their subsidized steamship lines kill off, not alone Bates & Chesebrough, but all other adventurers into that traffic, nullify the competitive quality of the world's highway, make the Panama canal, when it is completed, without commercial effect, and so take over for the benefit of the combination the net results of the commerce and industry of the Pacific Coast, what is to be done about it? Unless rate regulation by the interstate commerce commission can be made effective as to such combination, the alternative is for the United States government to establish a steamship line or lines plying between the two coasts of this country. But that will be socialism! Exactly, but who is doing it? Certainly not the Socialists.

The city of Berkeley finds, what any other city will discover to be true if it make the necessary investigation of mortality among bottle babies is shockingly high and that their deaths are due to impure, stale or doctored milk furnished by assassins in the guise of milk vendors. Municipalities have seemingly done their uttermost, short of hanging delinquent dairymen to lamp posts, to secure supplies of good, clean, fresh, wholesome milk. What is the next step? Manifestly there is but one recourse, that of a municipally owned and operated dairy. But that, too, is Socialism. Exactly, but who is forcing that issue upon the baby-loving citizenship of American municipalities? Certainly not the Socialists who do little except talk, and talk little except to tell one another their dreams.

Our street car companies resist and resent every effort made to safeguard life and to make transportation speedy and comfortable. They ally themselves politically with the basest elements in the life of the community which they exploit rather than serve, and they do not hesitate to buy privileges they should not possess at the cost of corrupting the life of city and state. They have flooded the markets frequented by the unwary and unknowing with securities which, if held valid, place the industry of the community under perpetual mortgage far beyond the value of the plant, and which, if invalidated, rob the innocent purchasers of their stocks and bonds of their hard earned savings. What is the alternative between perpetual exploitation and the rectification of these wrongs? There cannot be two opinions as to the answer. Relief lies in the municipalization of urban transportation. But that is Socialism! Exactly, but who is forcing that alternative upon an unwilling civilization, a civilization which stands in almost as great dread of the remedy as of the disease? Certainly not the Socialists with their heads in the clouds and themselves in thorough agreement upon no two propositions in their own creed, if they can be said to have a creed.

Time was when men almost universally believed that no free society, no society not blighted by the curse of royalty and divine right, could resolve itself into an aristocracy and a proletariat; when all men believed that the free interplay of natural forces would guarantee human society against the rapacities of autocracy, feudalism, aristocracy, privilege and vast riches for the few and a debased poverty for the many. No publicist or doctrinaire now dares defend the laissez faire school of economics. The end of it is plutocracy, the vilest form of social mal-order that ever cursed the world, and dull is the comprehension that does not so understand.

But The People do not want Socialism. They dread the hazard of that fortune. They still want a free society, competitive on a willing to-let-live as well as to-live basis; furnishing a broad field for individual enterprise, yet drawing the line on the safe side of exploitation and extortion; but those who scan the horizon, as one who would foretell tomorrow's weather, can hardly doubt that the time will come when men must make their choice between Socialism and Plutocracy. But who is forcing the issue? Certainly not the Socialists who are vociferous rather than enlightening and are able to command corporal's guards to listen to them only on street corners. If we would find the propagandists of Socialism we must search among the apostles of unrestrained greed and among the enemies of equal laws and even handed justice. Their name is Legion.

A. J. P.

✣ ✣ ✣

COLLEGES SPECIALIZING

We have in this country, in round numbers, 500 colleges with 150,000 students. These institutions have 20,000 instructors and an annual income of over forty million dollars. Throwing out the engineering and polytechnic schools and the institutions devoted to some special line of professional work, we have about 300 colleges of the same general purpose and character, giving the same degrees and competing with one another for students and for public support.

Educators have for some time recognized that this state of things is illogical, uneconomical and not productive of the best possible results. The argument has generally taken the form that there ought not to be so many small colleges. On the general theory that business can be transacted at less expense on a large rather than a small scale, it is proposed that the big concerns should devour the little ones. But there is another side to that. The small college has some lines of advantage over the large, on the social and perhaps moral side that, in the opinion of many people, quite offset the small margin of economy that comes with the larger institution. Experience has shown, moreover, that the small colleges will not submit to any absorption scheme, and so if this competition and illogical doubling of work and expense is to be corrected, it must be by some other method than the one so popular with the trust promoters.

In a recent number of the New York Outlook Mr. Roosevelt calls attention to a report and a project put forth by a committee of the alumni of Amherst college which will interest college men and educators, as suggesting a feasible plan for specializing among the higher institutions of learning. It is not put forward as a general scheme applying to all colleges, but merely as a plan to give Amherst a unique standing; and Mr. Roosevelt commends the idea only as applied to Amherst; but if other colleges should follow suit, results of great importance in the field of higher education might be achieved.

The plan proposed by the alumni is that Amherst should abandon all idea of competing with other colleges in scientific and technical work, and devote itself to classics, literature, and what may be called the "humanities." It would still give science courses, as a knowledge of science is necessary in any well-rounded education, but it would not outfit its laboratories nor provide expert instructors with a view to turning out experts. It would, indeed, no longer give the degree of Bachelor of Science, nor any of the special degrees in that line of work. The money which it is now spending to equip and maintain those expensive departments could be put into increase of salaries for instructors in the classics and in literature. It is recommended also that the number of students be limited, and if applications exceed the limit, that entrance examinations be competitive. Amherst has now about 500 undergraduates.

Competition between colleges is the direct cause of much of the financial strain from which they suffer—a strain that has two bad results: First, the low salaries paid the general run of teachers, and second the transformation of the college president into a toady to the rich. This competition begins in the fact that each institution attempts to cover all the ground covered by all the others. To give the great variety of degrees, courses and equipment must be provided covering every line, and a huge corps of instructors is required. It is easy to add new burdens and hard to cut them off. The model which the modern college has set up is evidently that of the department store, where everybody may go and get everything that he needs. But the analogy between business and education halts in many places, and every city, while it has some department stores has also many successful concerns that set forth only hardware, or only books, or only dry goods.

It is not to be expected that state universities, nor the old and wealthy institutions like Harvard and Yale, will fall in with the Amherst idea. But there are one or two hundred colleges with an attendance each of from 200 to 500 pupils that are straining every nerve to cover the whole field of university effort, that would be greatly benefited by adopting some special line in which they could then do better work with higher prestige.

C. D. W.

✣ ✣ ✣

SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS

At present writing a special session of congress seems inevitable. It can be held only at considerable cost and inconvenience to the government and to many individuals. It must be noted also that as it must deal with tariff questions the effect on business will be worse than doubtful.

Why is there a special session? Because the senate talked for ten weeks instead of acting.

What did it talk about? Two things, chiefly. Mr. Lorimer of Illinois and the direct election of senators by the people.

The curtain is just about to descend on the last acts of the old regime. And was there ever a worse exhibition of its inanity and utter obtuseness, its far removal from an understanding of public sentiment, and its pompous estimate of its own importance. Probably never again shall we behold such a combination of conceit, pig-headedness and utter indifference to the nation's real welfare, as we have in the present republican stand-pat senate. Nero fiddling while Rome burns, Canute ordering the waves to stand still, Louis XVI laboriously making worthless locks, and Secretary Stanton predicting a sixty-day civil war, all shine as models of sanity and usefulness, compared with Aldrich, Depew, Penrose, Burrows, Bailey, Smoot—well, we will not come any farther west than Utah with the list—defending Lorimer and defying the people. A miserable spectacle, and one that we should make haste to forget!

✣ ✣ ✣

PASSING OF THE GOULDS

It is evident that the Gould family, like the Vanderbilts, have lost their grip as financiers and are about to enter upon that stage as butterflies of pleasure which precedes absorption into the human mass from which they sprung. Unfortunately for humanity, though they do their spendthrift worst, neither the Goulds, the Vanderbilts nor the Astors can seriously deplete their huge fortunes. We must look to land and inheritance taxes, and to the beneficent intervention of Morgans, Harrimans and other merciless sharks of their own class, ultimately to restore that equilibrium of family fortune which must come to pass if we are not to have society resolved into an aristocracy and proletariat forever. We Californians may, however, thank our fortunate stars that the Western Pacific was constructed before the Goulds went out. We are so much ahead anyhow.

✣ ✣ ✣

HOSPITALS FOR MEDICAL COLLEGES

Every medical college needs a hospital adjunct, not that the students may experiment upon pauper patients, but that they may learn by object lesson as well as by rote and by note. For state medical colleges there is still another use for hospital annexes. The state has many wards, especially in the orphanages, that require surgical treatment in order to give them an equal chance with other children. There are adenoids to be removed, bowed legs to be broken and straightened, hair lips, bent spines, cross-eyes, paralytics, diseased glands, malformations in many forms. Such states as New York, Massachusetts, Iowa, Michigan, send all such children as are state charges to state hospitals where the best of surgeons perform the operations, the best of nurses attend them and where students can learn by seeing if not by doing. Not many wards are needed in such institutions but only some. Not only should the medical college at Los Angeles be so equipped but the one at San Francisco also. In not making this provision California has been derelict.

The prospect that the consumer will shortly be able to consume something is about the rosiest outlook upon the national horizon.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Reconsideration of Old Traditions For a century or more bimetalism was accepted as a fact. Now we know that it never was a fact; that always there was a shifting standard of value, but not a double; that it was either silver or gold but never silver and gold that measured our values, and so we reached the single, gold standard for to keep. Similarly, we started out with the proposition that government should be administered by and through three independent, equal and coordinate departments,—legislative, executive and judicial, allowing no one of these preeminence over either of the other departments. It is time to reconsider the workableness of that theory of government and to readjust our institutions to a truer concept. Great Britain, from whom we derived the three-fold concept of government, long since discarded it and definitely placed the legislative department of government in supreme authority and all of Great Britain's colonies, except the United States, has followed the example of the mother country. We have made the judiciary supreme and have permitted it to seek to place itself, not only beyond supervision and answerability to that public sentiment which assumes to dictate to the other two departments of government, but also beyond criticism. At this moment we are all waiting to learn, not from president and congress, but from the supreme court of the United States, what our national policy is to be regarding trusts, monopolies, restraints of trade, rights of natural and artificial persons respectively. Under the guise of interpreting law this unresponsive, cloistered cult has proceeded to enact more than half the law we live under. The question before state and nation is, is the judiciary to be the predominant instrument in government or is it not? The trend of the last decade has been toward exalting the executive to the primacy. That way lies danger, for it was from a supreme executive that freedom revolted to fight for generations on behalf of a predominating legislative function. We are now to have the initiative and referendum in the hands of the people for the governance of the legislative department. Why not address ourselves to an application of these residuary appliances to the five-to-four national, and four-to-three state, decisions of courts of last resort? Where great principles are to be enunciated why should not the people determine for themselvs which interpretation they will have to be the law? Is the will of the people the source of the law? If so then why not, in crucial judicial cases, ascertain the will of the people, directly, summarily and as specifically as possible? For we may hold this truth to be self evident: Some one factor in government will become predominant. The Watchman proposes that that factor be the will of the people directly expressed whether as to the legislative, executive or judicial departments thereof.

What Progress We Are Making How splendidly are we vindicating the ability of the people to govern. All other forms of government have failed. There is not a government on earth that is successful except in proportion to the influence which the people of that government exert upon it. The "interests" speak of the present forward movement as a popular unrest and they attribute the lack of quietude to the sensational press and muck-raking magazines, but it is more than an unrest. It is a determination to right wrongs and reestablish the square deal in a land where special privileges have usurped ascendency. On every side we see evidences of this determination. The reactionaries are seeking cover; the interests are apologetic and profuse in promises for better behavior; our conservative President has become broadened and emboldened and has so far divested himself of fetters to the Republican "organization" that he has publicly accepted, with whole-hearted satisfaction, the aid of Democrats in securing reciprocity with Canada. The outlook is perfectly bully for our side.

One Thing Is Not to Be Overlooked Except the people be instructed, educated, taught to think and equipped to understand, they cannot govern themselves. Is the present legislature doing all it can to aid our school system? We have a compulsory education law, but it does not "compulse." Only here and there is it enforced. The suggestion that the public school fund be distributed to the schools of the state in proportion to average daily attendance is a good one. Why distribute according to the census roll when the census children are not in school? Our school system is as inefficient as our judicial. Our legislators cannot do a better thing than to make effective the school laws we have. In the multiplicity of reforms that beset them let not this one be overlooked.

Why He Could Not Join the Church He was an esteemed citizen and for long years he had sat under the instruction of one of the most eloquent and popular pulpiteers in all the Bay district of California. He had attended the mid-week meetings and ever and always had seemed devout, interested, exemplary, but had held his peace in the experience meetings and had not joined the church. By and by the pastor spoke to him in relation to coming into full membership in the church. He seemed interested, confessed that he had been thinking seriously of taking such a step but was not quite sure that the members of the church would wish to take him in, to all of which the pastor protested, declaring that his welcome into the fold would be most cordial and that the hand of fellowship would be extended him without reservation. The esteemed citizen shook his head and said he didn't know, could not be as sure of it as his pastor seemed to be. Pressed for a reason he said, in substance, "You see I am a salesman for a large San Francisco house. Our customers are the counties of the state and in the regular course of my business I have to bribe county boards of supervisors to buy our goods. If they don't get a private rake-off from us they don't buy from us and I am out of a job, and I have thought that, perhaps, if this were generally known there might be some who would hesitate to receive me into the church." The pastor admitted that that probably would be likely to make a difference to some if generally known and thought that perhaps the matter might be deferred until he changed his job or found some less objectionable method of dealing with boards of supervisors in the transaction of public business. The esteemed citizen is still outside the fold, but a regular and interested member of the congregation. San Mateo is not the only county in California in which the private rake-off is the open-sesame to placing large orders with boards of supervisors. If the books of the bridge-building and court house-furnishing firms of San Francisco could be experted they would without a doubt a tale unfold.

Washington, D. C., Herald
READY TO MAKE A CHANGE

Ignorance as Costly as Supervisorial Venality The venalities of supervisors are generally of petty-larceny quality, but their ignorance of structural requirements is often colossal. When building bridges, court houses, jails, halls of record, putting in fire proof vaults, constructing and equipping hospitals, etc, they are children in the hands of architects, engineers and conspiring contractors. Often the contractor furnishes the plans free, but the plans are so drawn as to give him a sure advantage in the bidding, or his estimate of the cost is excessive and by pooling with other contractors, bothersome bids are either not submitted or submitted as a highest bidder rather than lowest. If competitive plans are advertised for, the board has not the technical knowledge requisite for making a wise choice between them, and when plans are chosen, the bids exceed the appropriations and changes have to be made which the board has not the wisdom wisely to make. The upshot of incapacity, or venality, is that public buildings and bridges need a deal of repairing very soon after construction and taxpayers are out and injured. Not all of these things are true of all counties, but all of them are true of some counties and some of them are true of all counties. They all need some sort of expert engineering supervision of public construction prior to the final awarding of contracts and acceptance of the completed public work. And what is true of counties is equally true of small cities and towns.

A Sad Mistake of the Long Ago It is something like thirty years since William Ham Hall undertook to organize an effective state engineering department for California. He had large ideas and expansive tastes and proposed to plat and map all the protuberances and depressions on the face of California, to the end that development might proceed advisedly. The work he did was no doubt of the highest value, work that for some years has been done cooperatively by state and nation, and he proposed to make an engineering department, Ham Hall advise wherever engineering information might be needed. Now nothing fuddles the average legislative head like figures and the legislatures soon wearied of paying Ham Hall's bills for figures they could not understand, and so, at a single stroke, cut out the engineering department Ham Hall

(Continued on page 17

MAKING GOOD

A Remarkable Record of Legislative Achievement

The following is an interview with Congressman elect Kent, and a resume of the work already accomplished by the Johnson administration, together with that on the legislative slate. The article is by E. A. Dickson, special correspondent of the Los Angeles Express at Sacramento, and appeared in that paper last Saturday:

"The work that Governor Johnson has accomplished in the short time that he has been at the head of affairs almost paralyzes me," declared Congressman elect Will Kent, in discussing the new administration.

Kent has been East since the November election, and passed several weeks at Washington just prior to his return to California. National affairs have commanded most of his attention, but he has kept a close eye on the progress of things in California. He stopped off at Sacramento for a few hours to look into the legislature and see how things are running.

"If the senate and assembly keep up their present lick of grinding out constructive reform measures," he said, after reviewing the work of the session, "California's legislature of 1911 will be distinguished as the most effective lawmaking body in the country.

"Right at this time the eyes of the entire country are riveted upon California's legislature, and I may add, upon our splendid governor. I tell you, it makes a man feel proud of his state to be able to point to men like Johnson and to show what actually is being accomplished."

What Congressman-elect Kent says of the present administration is borne out by a glance at the work already completed or in process of development. More has been done up to this time in the way of placing progressive legislation upon the statute books than can be credited to the entire session of any former legislature in this state.

Here is a list of the things already accomplished and out of the way:

Anti-racetrack gambling bill.
Eshleman railroad regulation bill.
Initiative and referendum constitutional amendment.

THE PRIZE HEN

Woman's suffrage.
Convict labor bill.
Anti-street-railroad monopoly bill.
Act removing Bank Commissioner Anderson.
Full crew bill.
Endorsement of income tax.
Endorsement of popular election of United States senators.

Of the more important measures that have passed the senate and only await favorable action by the assembly are the following:

Australian ballot, doing away with party circle and party column.
Nonpartisan judiciary.
Direct legislation for all cities of fifth and sixth classes.
Bill for correct weights and measures.
Reform of criminal procedure.
Divided sessions of legislature.
New direct primary act.
Election of United States senator by Oregon plan.
Recall of all election officials, including judges.

Measures that have passed the assembly and now before the senate:

Board of control.
Short ballot.
Local option.
Ninety-nine year lease law.

Measures upon which no action has yet been taken by either house, but which in all probability will be enacted into laws, are as follows:

Freeholders' charters for counties.
Public utilities control law.
Eighteen million-dollar state highway act.
New inheritance tax law.
New building and loan act.
Weinstock industrial strife inquiry act.
Reformatory for first offenders.
Conservation of natural resources.
Employers' liability.
Indeterminate franchises.
Civil service.
Parcels post.
Establishment court of commerce.

The above list of subjects embraces merely the more prominent measures. There are numerous splendid bills dealing with matters of less general interest, but nevertheless of great importance.

THE TORRENS ACT

Proposed Simplification of Land Titles

Our system of recording deeds was invented long ago and is suited to a social order that discouraged transfers of land. The Torrens system, on the other hand, while by no means new, is modern in spirit and designed to facilitate sales. Under it the court decides once for all who is owner and directs the issuance of a certificate of ownership. This certificate the recorder keeps in a bound book and gives a duplicate to the owner. At the bottom is a memorandum of every lien or adverse interest. Subsequent liens are from time to time noted on the certificate. When land is sold the certificate and duplicate are canceled and new ones are issued to the new owner. Realty transactions are thus reduced to the simplicity of dealings in personalty and land can be transferred as readily as certificates of stock.

This is the way of holding title in Australia and New Zealand and in certain parts of Germany, Hungary and Switzerland, where it has been used for centuries. It is used in the city of London, in most of Canada, and in Massachusetts, Illinois, Minnesota, New York, Colorado, Washington, Oregon and California. But burdensome conditions, inserted into the act when it was adopted in California in 1897, have impeded its usefulness here; although, since the San Francisco fire of 1906, several pieces of valuable land in that city have been brought under the act and are held by virtue of the Torrens certificates. The validity of the law was established by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Robinson v. Kerrigan, 141 Cal. 40.

Certain amendments have now been drafted by the plaintiff, Robinson, in that case. They have been introduced as assembly bills at the present session of the legislature and are Nos. 476 and 477. These were prepared after experience had shown the defects of the act and after careful study of the law and its practical workings in other states and countries.

Bill 476, without destroying any proper safeguards, permits several persons owning separate parcels of land to join in one proceeding, dispenses with notice to occupants not tenants under a recorded instrument, with surveys where the land can be identified on an official map, and with abstracts of title in certain cases, and corrects an ambiguity with reference to the bond required.

Bill 477 proposes an insurance fund, making a state title insurance. The fund is accumulated only from those using the act. This bill is drawn after laws in successful operation in Massachusetts, New York and Minnesota, and will undoubtedly serve its purpose well.

Advocates of the act have spent much time and money in placing the opportunity before the people. It is desirable that the legislature should assist the public by amending and adding to the law substantially as proposed in these bills. Indeed the changes are such as would have been incorporated in the act when it was enacted in 1897, had it been possible to include them at that time.

The Torrens act places titles beyond dispute and keeps them up to date, dispenses with abstracts, their delays and expenses, and puts away for good all ancient irregularities which lawyers and title insurance companies resurrect and re-resurrect to no purpose. Real estate men favor the act because it makes unnecessary preliminary contracts and their attendant risks; sellers and buyers favor it because an hour will suffice to conclude the transaction and pass the title. Borrowers can obtain their needful the very day terms of the loan are settled. All these will also favor the amendments which will put the benefits of the law within easy reach of the people who need it, without in any degree lowering the necessary safeguards.

APPRECIATION FROM SACRAMENTO

Sacramento, Feb. 24.

The California Outlook,
Los Angeles.

Gentlemen: I am glad to note that the California Weekly and Pacific Outlook are to consolidate their publications rather than to go out of business. Each of these papers has served a very useful purpose and anything that I can do to assist the enterprise shall be done with great pleasure.

Yours very truly,
(Senator) G. W. Cartwright.

NOT SO UNOBSERVANT AFTER ALL

A teacher of English, in order to disprove the charge that high school pupils know little about the really vital things that are going on around them, gave a test in which she asked for definitions of such terms as: tariff, reciprocity, the labor problem. In the paper of a fifteen-year-old she found this: "The labor problem is how to keep the working people happy without paying them enough to live on."—La Follette's.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Department Conducted by Charles Dwight Willard

Hospital for Los Angeles: The state legislature is considering a request from Los Angeles that $250,000 be appropriated for a hospital to be built on the University of California grounds in that city, on the understanding that an endowment fund of equal proportions be raised to maintain the institution in proper form. Two years ago the State University received from Los Angeles citizens a gift of a considerable tract of ground on North Broadway and a group of buildings suitable for a branch of the medical department of the university. The value of this plant was about $150,000. One feature of this is the Selwyn Emmett Graves Memorial Dispensary where 7000 people received medical aid and advice last year. The amount of this relief shows the need for a hospital such as is proposed—something between the free county hospital and the high-priced concerns that are established for profit.

Stay-at-home Vote: Boston recently had an election for school directors and councilmen, and the Good Government association has been looking into the matter of the stay-at-home vote. There were 52,000 votes cast out of a registration of 110,000, and the non-voters ran from 35 per cent in the best ward up to 55 per cent in the worst. The largest discrepancy was in the suburban sections. Only men are allowed to vote in Boston, and men, it will be remembered, are sometimes deeply concerned over the question whether women will turn out and vote if they are given the chance. Although the ballot was "short," in the sense that but few places were to be filled, they averaged 11 per cent of blanks—a total of 18,500 places where no checking was made.

Increase of Unemployment: For the first time in its two years of existence the Municipal Lodging House of New York was swamped with applicants during nearly the whole of January of this year. It holds 700, but sometimes the excess turned away went over 200. The unemployment was largely caused by the ending of various municipal enterprises that had provided work for several thousand men as unskilled laborers. Many of those applying for lodging are confirmed tramps and inebriates. New York will probably soon establish a farm for all such.

Gigantic Cost of Smoke: Smoke Inspector Bird of Chicago has been figuring up the loss entailed by the oceans of soot that are poured down upon the people annually and he puts the amount at $21,000,000 or $10 per capita of population. This condition could be remedied in a few years, he says, if funds should be provided for active prosecution of the violators of ordinances.

Municipal Concerts in Denver: Recently 22,000 people in one day attended the concerts given in the great municipal auditorium at Denver. This auditorium is one of the striking features of the intermountain metropolis. It seats 12,000 people and is used for concerts, theatrical performances and big public gatherings. As it is owned by the city it is a source of great pride and pleasure to the people. The municipal concerts are given without any admission fee. Most of the concerts are of the popular variety, but some are intended to be educational.

As to a "Republican" Form of Government: Direct legislation has been assailed in Oregon on the ground that it is contrary to the provisions of the national constitution guaranteeing each state a "republican" form of government. The supreme court of that state has recently held (Kiernan vs. City of Portland et. al.) that this means a government by the citizens en masse, acting directly, through rules established by the majority.

Attractive Street Decorations: Pictured in the accompanying illustration from the Municipal Journal and Engineer is an innovation in street decoration for which the credit falls to Antwerp. Flower baskets of unobtrusive style are attached to the trolley poles and light standards. The effect is decorative and the street view is not obstructed.

MAKING THE TROLLEY POLE A THING OF BEAUTY

Right on Time: South Bristol, Maine, bought a chemical engine, and while some members of the volunteer fire force were unpacking and inspecting their purchase fire broke out in the annex of a summer hotel only a few blocks away. Ropes were hastily fastened to the machine and it was dragged by hand to the fire, where it did effective service and saved a general conflagration among the summer cottages about the hotel.

Progressive Modern London: In addition to being the largest city of the world, London will now undertake to become the greatest port in the world. Engineers have been studying the water traffic problem of that city for years, and now a plan is entered upon, which will involve an expenditure of $70,000,000 and will provide a channel of the Thames 1000 feet wide and 30 feet in depth with many miles of docks.

Commission Government: Illinois towns are voting on the adoption of commission government after the Des Moines plan. As a rule the saloon and machine political interests fight the innovation, and in some cases, as for example, at Monmouth and at Sterling and at Quincy, they carried the day. Kewanee, Illinois, and Guthrie, Oklahoma, recently came into the list of commission cities.

The Crux of the Whole Business: Guizot says that the proper subordination of general and local government is the last and highest development in the evolution of popular government. We need not wonder, then, that there are so many and such trying problems in the adjustment of the relation of state and local governments and the balance between nation and state.

Work for Idle: The mayor of Topeko, Kansas, believes that the city should provide work for all that are idle, by keeping certain lines of improvements always ready for the employment of all such. The work of trimming trees will keep great numbers busy, he says, and the branches trimmed off can be cut up into firewood and sold to help pay expenses.

Drink Does the Business: The police authorities of Chicago say that three-fourths of the cases they have to handle are due to drink, and the chief and the mayor and the head of the house of correction have joined in a proposal that the city establish a municipal drink cure. Incidentally, it might be wise to shut down on some of Chicago's 5000 saloons.

Complete Municipal Scrapbooks: A very important feature of the detective department of Denver is a set of scrapbooks, in all 30 large volumes covering with newspaper clippings every event of importance that has happened in Denver since 1878. They are carefully indexed and are found of great service in the work of the department.

Limiting Height of Buildings: In the down-town district of Chicago no buildings may hereafter be erected over 200 feet in height. Unfortunately the city council of Chicago has changed its mind so often on this subject that builders and architects lack confidence in the permanency of this last ordinance.

Loss of Use of School Buildings: Somebody has figured it out that the school plant of this nation is worth a billion dollars. This plant is at work only eight out of the fourteen hours of the day. At five per cent on the investment this figures a loss of over twenty million dollars.

"S. R. O." Signs to Go: Henceforth there will be no more "Standing Room Only" signs in New York, as no standers will be permitted, by order of police board on a recent supreme court decision.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway
314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

New Foulard Silks

FASHION'S favorite silk for the development of dressy gowns for the coming Summer season is Foulard. We are showing a very comprehensive assortment which includes the newest designs and colorings. A fashionable woman's wardrobe will not be complete this season without at least one dress of Foulard.

Prices Range
85c to $1.25 Yd.
Los Angeles, Cal.

WE ARE NOW LOCATED IN OUR OWN NEW BUILDING
446-448 So. Broadway

Steinway, Kranich & Bach, Sohmer, Kurtzmann, Jewett & Laffargue Pianos.
Cecilian Player Pianos.
GEO. J. BIRKEL COMPANY
Los Angeles, Cal.

SENATORIAL SKITS

Number 4

By The Onlooker

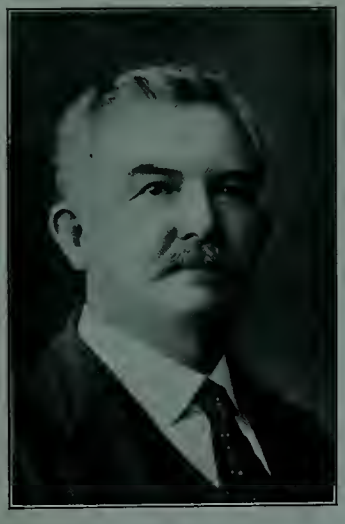
The Cautious Larkins

If there ever was a senatorial district in California to which the democrats thought they had the Yale lock, and the key thrown away, it was the Thirty-second, that district which embosoms in its breast the soft climate of Bakersfield and the lucent charms of Visalia, to say nothing of Tulare. And this faith of democracy wasn't such a bad hunch so long as Ed. Miller chose to view with alarm the state of the state. Whenever Ed. ran, Ed. won. As Harry Lauder says, it got to be more than a habit wi' him, it got to be a gift.

But at last the fatal day came, that day for which the republicans long had sought, the day the democrats long had feared—Ed. Miller wouldn't run. No, sir, never again: not even the voice of the peepul, not even the extremities of democracy, could move him from that path. Run he would not.

At about this psychological moment there arose from the tall grass of Visalia the substantial form of E. O. Larkins, and synchronously there arose upon the palpitating air, in tones soft, a little frightened, a voice proceeding from the same general direction as the form before alluded to. And the voice said, "May it please your honor, I'll run."

From which you may gather that Mr. Larkins was a lawyer. He was. He is. But more of that later. Of course he meant to say "fellow citizens." But Mr. Larkins is a cautious man, and he was somewhat shaky about that Miller declination; he rather had an idea that the Miller boomerang would go whistling past his head if he made that voice too loud. But the Miller declination stuck, and the Larkins announcement stuck too, and the battle was on.



And truly 'twas a merry fight. The democrats went after this republican upstart, red-eyed. We may add that most of the other apostles of "red-eye" followed suit, you see, Mr. Larkins' district is something like the Siamese twins, as described by Mark Twain. The Visalia and Tulare part of the district is as mild as a sucking dove, milk shakes are more in favor than high balls, and when you say "option" there, they ask you instinctively whether you mean business or booze. On the other hand, the Bakersfield end of the district is not so slow as it might be—in fact, they do say that it's a hummer of a country, and that a brewery agent does more business there in a day than Visalia's dairies do in a month.

Now you can see with the naked eye what a position this puts a candidate in. Visalia asks him if he is forninst the demon rum; Bakersfield asks him to have a drink. This condition confronted the cautious Larkins. He finally decided that, though he took an occasional nip himself, he had better back the virtue of Visalia than the "liberality" of Bakersfield.

And so the battle raged. Larkins kept cool in the August heat, sipping lemonades and sitting on the shady verandahs of his neighbor's home, while his opponent steamed around in the hot sun down Bakersfield way. When the ballots were counted, Larkins was found hanging on to an election certificate, while his opponent was hanging on to the recollection of a hot time in August sun. Hence the third seat in the second row to the president's right is now adorned by the substantial form hitherto mentioned.

We remarked that Senator Larkins was a cautious person. We did so, that we might add what follows. He rose a few times to give the senate the benefit of his views on questions of the hour, and was each time greeted with cries of "Louder." Whence the impression got around that he was not only cautious, but timid. Hence these tears. Several senators shared this illusion until one day Senator Larkins rose to relieve his system of his thoughts on the subject before the house. Draping a volume of the codes over his left hand, and his spectacles over his right, Senator Larkins cleared his throat and was promptly "greeted with the cry" of "louder." He put on a few more pounds of steam, when suddenly he trod on the corns of Senator Wolfe, who rose with cutting sarcasm to ask if the senator felt that the state was in safe hands now that he and the other reformers were there to correct its morals. Senator Larkins here turned on the calliope pedal to reply, with hearty emphasis, that the senator from San Francisco was right, that that was exactly the way he felt about it. Which squelched Wolfe.

The Larkins flow was damned (intentional) again a few moments later when Senator Strohridge interrupted to inquire if the senator would kindly name the newspapers whose editorials the senator was then eulogizing, and suggesting that newspapers were rather piffle anyhow. The senator came back with an inquiry as to what Strobridge was doing reading all those papers at breakfast every morning, and did a little suggesting on his own account, to the general effect that a party of Senator Strobridge's apparent state of mind at that moment ought to read all the papers—they might help him. Which finished Strobridge.

SENATOR LARKINS

Two or three other senators took a gay fling at the members from Visalia, and each retired to nurse a regret that he had done it. When Larkins sat down he was being plainly heard all over the senate chamber, and he hadn't geared his voice up any either. And since that day anybody in the chamber can tell you right where Larkins sits, which is more than can be said of a good many other members.

As we have said, Senator Larkins is a lawyer—a country lawyer of the better type. He shows it in the senate. But he is getting his gait and the hang of his new job in steady style, and is being looked on as a solid and useful member.

REPORT ON LUMBER INDUSTRY

The urgent need of conservation of natural resources is strikingly shown in the report of the Commissioner of Corporations Herbert Knox Smith on the condition of the lumber industry in the United States.

The report contains astonishing information—much of which has been unknown to the public—and it should serve as an incentive to immediate action on the part of congress and the several states in order that the small balance of the people's once vast heritage may be conserved.

Mr. Smith finds that 195 holders, many of them inter-related, have practically one-half of the privately owned timber in the area investigated, which contains about eighty per cent of all available timber.

Three vast holdings alone, the Southern Pacific Company, the Weyerhauser Timber Company and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, own 238,000,000,000 feet, or about eleven per cent of all privately owned timber.

The Southern Pacific Company owns 106,000,000,000 feet along 680 miles of railroad between Portland and Sacramento.

In fact, practically four-fifths of California's timber is in private hands, held for speculative purposes or being ruthlessly cut down to quickly enrich its owners.

How has this heritage of the people been so rapidly given away in less than forty years?

Through enormous grants to railroads and canal and wagon roads made by the Federal government.

Through government sales in unlimited quantities at the ridiculous price of $1.25 an acre.

Through certain public land laws assembling great tracts in spite of legal requirements or small holdings.

Through bare-faced thievery and the rankest kind of jobbery.

These facts should hasten the Federal government to take action looking toward the conservation and proper use of what is left of the nation's timber.

California is framing laws to protect the little that remains of its timber and the Legislature, now in session, should let nothing prevent it from enacting those laws immediately.

The land grabbers are very wide-awake and always busy.

In two years from now there will be no timber in California to conserve.—Oakland Enquirer.

Caller—Will the cashier be away long? Office Boy—It depends entirely on the jury.—Boston Courier.

No Need to Wait for Your

Victrola

We are in a most fortunate position in regard to Victrolas. While the factory is unable to supply the demand, we are at the present able to offer every style, size and price. We urge every prospective Victrola buyer to come and select from our stock now. You will find us provided with every style, finish and price—$75, $100, $125, $150, $200, $250.

Southern California Music Co.
The House of Musical Quality
332-4 South Broadway
Los Angeles, Cal.

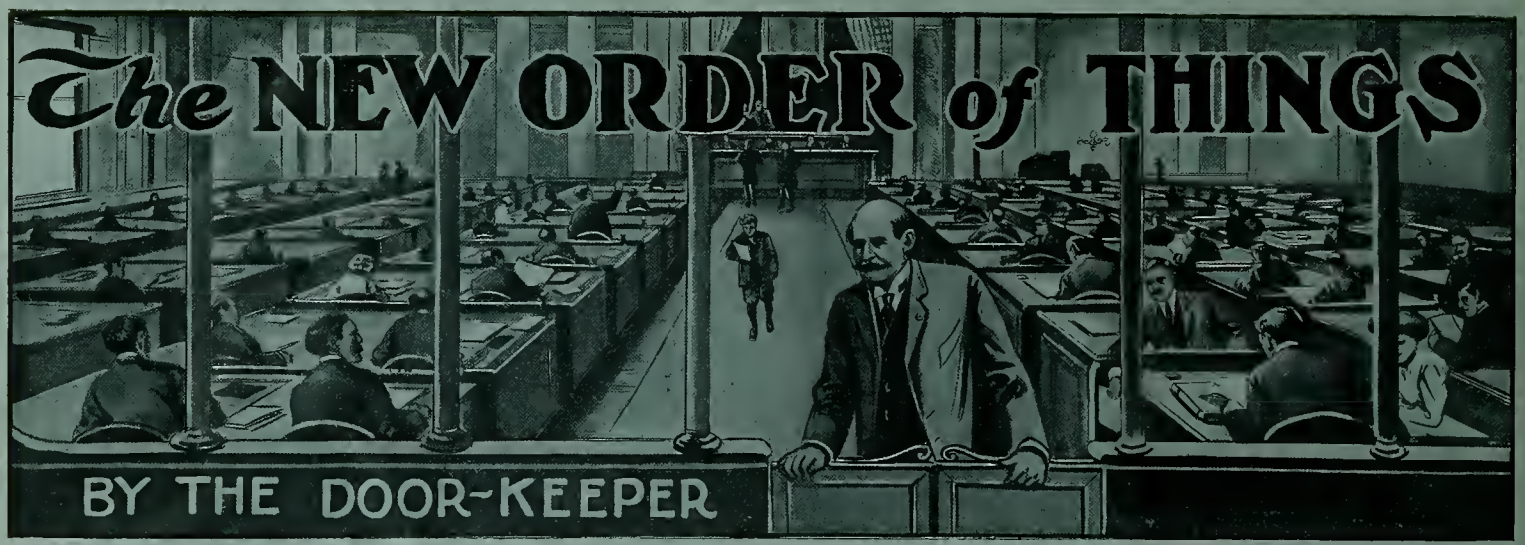
BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.
Los Angeles, Cal.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS



MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES
Los Angeles, Cal.

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 168x168
Southern Pacific Switch
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall
DENTIST
Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806
Los Angeles, Cal.

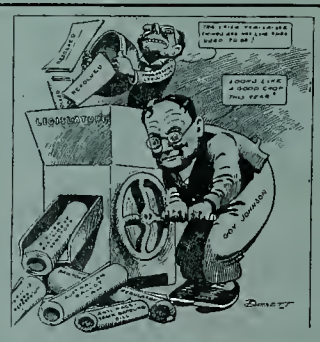
Sacramento, Feb. 28.—Los Angeles gets control of her harbor tidelands and sundry and divers other things in connection with the harbor proposition that she has been fighting for. That is really the big news of the past week in the legislature, so far as Los Angeles is concerned.

Within twenty-four hours after the delegation of Los Angeles citizens left home the harbor problem was practically settled. It is true that the matter has not yet been passed up to the legislature itself, but as the opposition of a certain San Francisco contingent, such as there appeared to be, has been withdrawn, there is no doubt that the Hewitt bill and the Hurd bill, both of which must become laws if the position of Los Angeles is to be assured, will now go through both houses.

There appears to have been a lot of misunderstanding in regard to the real attitude of San Francisco in this matter. As a matter of fact such opposition as has been in evidence rested in certain members of the San Francisco delegation in the legislature. That these members have not correctly represented the attitude of the business interests of the big city on the bay became apparent as soon as the Los Angeles people had a heart-to-heart talk with the representatives of the big commercial interests of San Francisco.

The hearing before the judiciary committee of the senate Friday evening was little more than a mere formality. Before the hearing the question had been settled, so far as that committee was concerned. Nevertheless the hearing was a good thing. It cleared the atmosphere. There were several things that should have been said in regard to the attitude of Los Angeles, her aspirations, her relations to the rest of the state and the mooted but really vapory differences between the business interests of the two cities, and they were said.

So far as the cities themselves are concerned, there has been and now is no serious difference. There has been and will be a spirited rivalry in trade matters, which is natural and healthy; but there is nothing in this spirit of competition which should result in anything but the friendliest feeling between the two big cities of the coast.



Unfortunately some of the petty politicians misrepresenting the real San Francisco spirit have gone out of their way to brew mischief—misunderstanding, jealousy and bitterness—but there is now little doubt that the two cities are nearer to an amicable basis than ever before. And this is due entirely to the visit of the Los Angeles delegation last week.

One thing has been learned: When Los Angeles wants to know the real attitude of San Francisco on a matter vitally affecting either city, it will have to confer with the business men of the northern city, and not with Senator Wolfe or Assemblyman Schmitt; and vice versa.

"Pygmies"

The San Francisco Chronicle is awake to the necessity of San Francisco's sending to the legislature men of stature, if San Francisco is to be properly represented in state affairs. In a recent issue of that paper there is a reference to the San Francisco delegation in the legislature as "pygmies." Along with it goes a compliment to the members sent up by Los Angeles. The Chronicle has at last realized that if San Francisco is to maintain her prestige and influence in legislative halls, she must select to represent her at Sacramento, men of calibre.

In this connection a remark made

Los Angeles Herald
THE WILLING WORKER

the other day by a well-known banker of the metropolis during the course of conversation with a legislative correspondent here indicates the pending revolution in the political attitude of that long-suffering and badly misrepresented city.

"I have been here but a few days," he declared, "but I have had my eyes opened to some things. One thing is plain as day to me, and that is that if we of San Francisco are to hold our own we simply must send to Sacramento a type of men different from that which we have allowed to come up here in the past. When I learn the character of the men Los Angeles is sending to the legislature I shudder to think what may happen to San Francisco if we do not profit thereby.

"Take Benedict and Randall, for instance. Why, if we had two or three men of their type in the Assembly in addition to Beatty and Joel we would get somewhere. San Francisco must get wise to the situation, or we shall be in a deplorable condition, politically, before long."

The Recall Wins Easily

The "fight" over the Gates Constitutional amendment making provision for the recall, including the recall of the judiciary, was hardly to be dignified by the term I have quoted. It wasn't a fight. It was a massacre. As a matter of fact, were the truth known, there never was much ground for calling it a fight.

The administration measures, so-called, are going through this session. Here, in this recall proposition, was a bully chance for the opponents of the Johnson policies to demonstrate their strength, if they possessed any. They bluffed a lot and blustered loud and long. They threatened and pleaded and cajoled. They pawed the air and dared the recallers to come to the scratch. With their toes to the mark they made one pass, then wilted.

It wasn't a fight. I apologize for calling it a massacre. It was nothing more nor less than a farce. You have heard of the difficulty of taking candy from a "kid"? That was about what it amounted to.

I have heard Senator Gates do some orating on occasion, but I want to admit now that he put it all over himself during his remarkable debate on his pet measure. When he had finished there was nothing to add. The opposition had not a leg to stand on.

Before roll-call there was talk of a vote of thirty-two to eight for the amendment. That might have been the result if the roll had been called without debate, but Gates made it thirty-six to four.

The full strength of the opposition to the provision making the principle applicable to the judiciary developed on Wright's proposed amendment excepting judges. Those voting with him to exclude the judiciary were Senators Boynton, Cassidy, Curtin, Cutten, Estudillo, Finn, Hewitt, Martinelli, Thompson and Wolfe. Those voting against the measure after the proposal to exclude the judiciary had been rejected were Senators Curtin, Martinelli, Wolfe and Wright.

There has been some honest difference of opinion among the progressive senators on the subject of including the judiciary in the general recall amendment. Some of the senators who favored applying the principle to all elective officials thought it best to submit two separate amendments, one to apply to all elective officials except judges, the other to apply solely to judges. Hewitt and Thompson of Los Angeles were among the latter class. So was Estudillo of Riverside.

Railroads as Speculators

Senator Bell has been having a hard time to secure consideration in the senate judiciary committee of his bill (Senate Bill 169) providing that damages in condemnation proceedings where the right of eminent domain is exercised by a railroad or other corporation shall be assessed at the date of trial instead of the date of issuance of summons. Naturally the bill is strongly opposed by the railroads—at least Jere Burke is fighting it tooth and nail, and he is some railroad. Strangely one or two of the members of the judiciary committee who are strong for the people as against predatory activity on the part of the railroads do not regard the bill as wise.

There is much to be said in favor of this bill. Sometimes years elapse between the date of summons and the date of trial. Where there is found a great increase in the value of the property sought to be condemned it would appear but just that such increase should go into the pocket of the original owner of the property rather than into the treasury of the railroad corporation.

For example, suppose Brown owned a bunch of city lots worth five years ago, $100,000, and that at that time the Southern Pacific railroad commenced condemnation proceedings. Under the existing statute the price set for the property would be $100,000. Suppose the railroad itself put obstacles in the path of a speedy adjudication of the proceeding—and railroads have been known to do such things—and managed to keep the case from coming to trial until now, five years after it had instituted proceedings. Suppose in the meantime the value of Brown's property had increased from $100,000 to $200,000 or even $300,000, as might be the case in Los Angeles. On trial of the case a property worth $200,000 or $300,000 would be subject to condemnation at $100,000. The injustice of such a proceeding is apparent to any intelligent man.

There are but six other states, according to Senator Bell, in which the existing California statute is to be found. That is no defense of his bill, of course, but it illustrates the fact that California has been slow in securing a simple act of justice to its Browns.

Medical Monopoly Proposed

One of the bills before the assembly which is of vital concern to the parents of every pupil in the public schools is that providing for the establishment of boards for the supervision of the development and health of children attending school. I do not believe that the proponents of the measure fully comprehend the extreme limits to which the "regular" medical profession might be able to go, were the bill to become law.

(Continued on page 17)

The Telegram That Never Came

By Thomas E. Gibbon

I have been asked to write for the readers of The California Outlook, the story of the "Telegram that never came," one of the most dramatic and critical chapters in the people's contest for a free harbor at San Pedro; a contest which during the ten years over which it extended, abounded in dramatic and critical incidents.

In 1871 the United States government made its first appropriation for beginning the development of a harbor for the city of Los Angeles at San Pedro.

In 1890 through the efforts of Senator Stanford and Representative Vandever, the Board of U. S. Engineers, commonly known as the Mendell Board, was appointed to locate a deep water harbor for this city, and in December 1891 that Board reported to congress substantially the scheme for the deep water harbor which has since been carried out by the construction by the government of the breakwater at San Pedro. From the time that the first appropriation was made for San Pedro Harbor in 1871 until the date when the report was made in favor of the deep water harbor at that place in 1891, all the influence of the Southern Pacific company had been used in favor of the development by the government of the harbor at San Pedro. On the first day of January, 1891, I filed in the office of the Secretary of State, the articles of incorporation of the Los Angeles Terminal Railway company for some St. Louis capitalists, headed by Hon. R. C. Kerens, now our ambassador to Austria. This enterprise was originally started with the idea of providing in the city of Los Angeles and upon its proposed harbor at San Pedro, railroad terminals to be used by the Union Pacific company which, under what was known as the Adams management, was then building a line through the state of Nevada that was intended to reach the city of Los Angeles.

In February, 1892, I appeared before the Commerce Committee of the United States senate to urge a favorable report by that committee upon a bill that had been introduced by Senator Felton, to make the first appropriation to commence the construction of the deep water harbor that had been recommended by the Mendell Board. When the committee met, with Senator Felton and myself before it, Senator Frye, the chairman of the committee, produced a telegram from William Hood, chief engineer of the Southern Pacific railroad company, which warned the committee that the holding ground in the anchorage area of the proposed deep water harbor at San Pedro was rocky and not safe, and that his company for that reason, had abandoned San Pedro and had entered upon the construction of a wharf at Santa Monica for the accommodation of its ocean business.

This telegram resulted in the defeat of the Felton bill, as it was intended it should, although it was absolutely false in its statement concerning the holding ground at San Pedro, as was afterwards determined by two boards of government experts who were appointed to investigate this, among other features, of the proposed deep water harbor at that place. It was true, however, that the Southern Pacific company had, shortly after the Los Angeles Terminal Railway was incorporated, and had begun constructing its line between Los Angeles and San Pedro, commenced the construction of what was known as the Long Wharf at Santa Monica. Mr. Hood's telegram was the first indication of the hostility of the Southern Pacific company to the harbor at San Pedro, and the determination of that company to divert all government appropriations for the deep water harbor for Los Angeles to its own location at Santa Monica. From that time on until 1894 no government appropriation was obtained, although continuous efforts were made to keep the agitation for a deep water harbor alive and to further that enterprise.

In 1894 the Long Wharf was completed, and Mr. Collis P. Huntington while visiting Los Angeles to inspect it, in the early part of that year, called at the Chamber of Commerce and asked for a conference with some of its officials. Mr. Dan Freeman was president, General Chas. Foreman, vice-president, and Mr. C. D. Willard, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at that time. Under the vigorous management of its president and secretary it had already begun to assume the position as the leading factor in the development of Southern California which it has since maintained, and had constituted itself to a very large extent, the mouthpiece through which the business interests of Los Angeles found expression. It had been the center of all harbor effort for some years, and had used its utmost endeavors to forward the improvement of San Pedro Harbor. Mr. Huntington in company with Mr. J. M. Crawley, traffic manager of the Southern Pacific Railway company for this city, had an interview with Messrs. Freeman, Foreman and Willard at the offices of the Chamber of Commerce, and urged that that body should come out and vigorously support Santa Monica as the future harbor for Los Angeles. All Mr. Huntington's persuasive eloquence failing to secure from the officials of the Chamber any promise to urge the government to make appropriations in favor of Santa Monica harbor, he finally appeared to somewhat lose his temper, and bringing down his fist on the desk where he sat, said, "Well, I don't know for sure that I can get this money for Santa Monica—I think I can—but I know damned well that you shall never get a cent for that other place." This of course, was intended to be a final declaration of war, and was so accepted by every one. In the meantime, Hon. Stephen M. White had been elected U. S. senator and had taken his place as such about January 1st, 1894. On March 7th of that year Mr. Crawley appeared before the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce with a petition to congress, asking that any deep sea harbor appropriation which should be allotted to this section, should go to Santa Monica instead of to San Pedro, and this petition was signed by eighty-three of the leading merchants of Los Angeles, particularly those interested in wholesale trade and importing. This incident throws a pretty strong light upon the power of the Southern Pacific company at that time to coerce people into doing whatever it wished, and the ruthless way in which it used that power. The discussion which this petition produced in the board of directors very soon showed that the power of the Southern Pacific company to coerce men had been so effectively used as to produce a serious division among the board of directors between Santa Monica and San Pedro. The matter was adjourned several times, and the discussion continued at various meetings until it became pretty evident that if the board had to decide the question as to which place the Chamber of Commerce would support, a majority of them would vote for Santa Monica. Had this occurred, there is probably no doubt that the doom of San Pedro as a free harbor for the city of Los Angeles would have been sounded, and the Southern Pacific harbor at Santa Monica would have received whatever assistance the government saw fit to render in the development of a harbor for Los Angeles. For, without the assistance of the Chamber of Commerce, the strenuous harbor contest which followed for years afterwards would undoubtedly have been lost. Fearing to leave the matter to the decision of the board, some of the members, headed by General Edward Bouton, taking advantage of a provision in the constitution of the Chamber which provided for the submission of questions to a vote of the members, started a petition addressed to President Freeman asking that a vote be taken by ballot among the members of the Chamber, as to which site that organization was to advocate. The president fixed the date for the election less than a week after the petition was filed. It was decided to hold the election under the Australian method of secret balloting, so that the power of the Southern Pacific company to coerce the votes of members, could not be effectively used, and a lively campaign followed. The writer prepared and issued at the expense of the Los Angeles Terminal Railway company, a copy of the report of the Craighill Board of U. S. Engineers—the last government board that had reported in favor of San Pedro—which was mailed to every member of the Chamber. The members were showered with circulars and letters from advocates of each place, and excursions were run by the Southern Pacific and the Terminal Railroads to Santa Monica and San Pedro. Red hot articles appeared daily in the newspaper champions of each place, and the city was stirred to fever heat over the contest. The supporters of San Pedro realized the seriousness of the situation, and that if the vote should be in favor of Santa Monica it would practically end all chance of a free harbor being developed by government aid for Los Angeles.

THOMAS E. GIBBON

"WELL, I GUESS WE DIDN'T GET IT"

I have never in my life spent a more anxious six days than the six days intervening between the filing of General Bouton's petition and the day of the election. The president of the Chamber, Mr. Freeman, and Mr. Willard, its secretary, were recognized champions of San Pedro, and I had daily consultations with Mr. Willard at the offices of the Chamber concerning the contest. On the afternoon of the day before the election was to be held I called for a final talk over matters. I very well remember that it was a cold, cloudy, rainy and most depressing day, and as I was feeling none too well assured of the ability of the champions of the free harbor to overcome the terrific power of the Southern Pacific company, which was being used without stint and without scruple by the officials of that company who were managing the Santa Monica end of the campaign, my spirits reflected a good deal of the character of the day when I entered the Chamber. I was asked by Mr. Willard's assistant to walk into a small private office which he had back of the main office. When I entered this room I found President Freeman and Mr. Willard sitting on each side of a grate in which a little coal fire was burning, made necessary by the inclemency of the day. They both looked as anxious and disheartened as I felt, and when I walked up to them, Mr. Willard without saying a word, handed me a telegram. Upon reading it I found that it was a message which the Chamber had just received from Senator White in Washington, and which said that owing to the great assistance which the power of the Southern Pacific company would be in securing harbor appropriations from the government, he would advise the Chamber to decide in favor of Santa Monica. When I read the telegram I felt my heart sink about as low as my anatomy permitted, and I could see the end of our contest, and the destruction of all our hopes for a free harbor for our city. Senator White was deservedly very popular with his people in Los Angeles. They had the utmost confidence in his judgment, and I knew that this word from him, if it became public, would absolutely settle the result of the election, and insure a tremendous majority in favor of Santa Monica. I was well assured that with the great power of the Southern Pacific, backed up by an expression favorable to Santa Monica on the part of the Chamber of Commerce, all hope of securing government appropriations for San Pedro would be absolutely ended. After reading and re-reading the telegram, I handed it back to Mr. Willard and dropped into a chair, saying: "That settles it." I think we three must have sat for five minutes without a syllable being uttered, when Mr. Willard, reaching his hand containing the telegram over the little fire in the grate, dropped it in and said, "Well, I guess we didn't get it." As the sheet of yellow paper began to smoke and burst into flame, and crumbled into a film of ashes, I went through what may very aptly be described as a transition from the deepest despair to the height of hopefulness. In a moment the chilling air and weeping clouds outside were forgotten, and I seemed to see in the brightness of the flame which destroyed this terrible menace to our success on the morrow, a promise of what the morrow would and did bring forth. I believe no living human being in Los Angeles, outside of the three of us, knew that the telegram had been received for a long time afterwards.

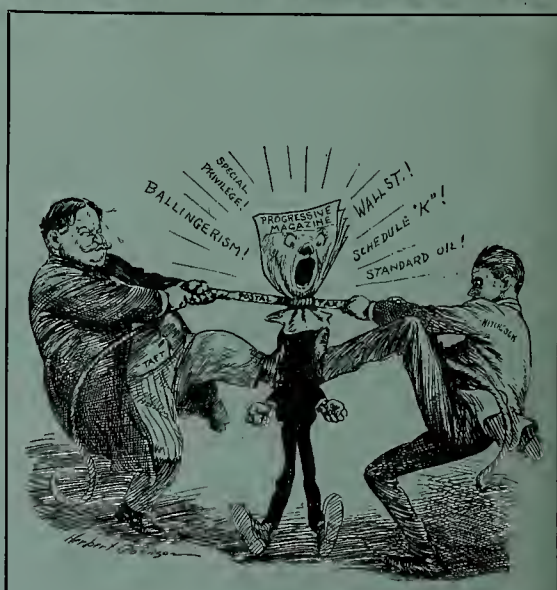
The next day opened bright and beautiful. The election was held—459 votes out of a membership of 550 being cast—and when the ballots closed, the count began. The friends of San Pedro were still uncertain of the result, although from the atmosphere which surrounded the ballot box during the day as the voting proceeded, we had received distinct encouragement to believe that we had won a victory. We could not, however, until the last ballot was counted, conceive that we had been so fortunate as to receive 328 votes for San Pedro to 131 votes for Santa Monica. This ended the contest so far as the Chamber of Commerce was concerned, by aligning that body up fully for San Pedro. After this overwhelming expression in favor of San Pedro on the part of the membership, no board of directors would have dared attempt to commit the organization to the rival place, and from that time on the Chamber was the center of the firing line of the harbor battle which was waged for years and until the Walker Board finally decided the matter in favor of San Pedro and submitted the plans upon which the breakwater was afterward constructed.

It is safe to say that the action of Mr. Willard in committing Senator White's telegram to the handful of live coals in the grate, in place of filing it as a part of the records of the Chamber, resulted in the possession by Los Angeles at the present day of a free harbor for the free commerce of a great city, and in its ownership of what will, some day, by its enterprise and energy, be made the most significant factor in the commerce of the Pacific Coast.

I am sure not a dozen men in Los Angeles knew of this occurrence until a couple of years ago when in making a speech upon San Pedro Harbor before the City Club, I felt that I was justified in relating the incident. It is certain that in the complete and authentic history of the "Free Harbor Contest" which Mr. Willard afterwards wrote and published, he neglected to mention this most effective blow in favor of the people's free harbor at San Pedro which he struck upon that occasion and it gives me pleasure to accord to him the credit that is due for having saved the cause of a free harbor by his prompt and courageous act.

His Innings

On a recent examination paper in civics was this question: "If the president, vice-president, and all the members of the cabinet should die, who would officiate?"



Robert, a boy of twelve, thought for some time, trying in vain to recall who came next in succession. At last a happy inspiration came to him and he answered, "the undertaker."—The Housekeeper.

CURRENT PICTORIAL COMMENT

The Evening Star, Washington

HOW HE DOES GROW!

Philadelphia North American

CHOKING HIM OFF

Pittsburg Dispatch

THAT UPLIFT MOVEMENT IN OHIO

New York City World

PRESSURE

THE INDETERMINATE FRANCHISE OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

or, Tenure During Good Behavior

From a Report by MILO R. MALTBIE of the New York Public Service Commission for the First District

The search for a form of franchise or of a lease which will protect the interests of the public and yet stimulate private initiative has absorbed the attention of many cities and states. The pendulum has swung from perpetual franchises with no restrictions to short-term franchises with every restriction it was possible to devise. Under perpetual franchises many cities have been robbed of valuable rights which they should have retained. Others, in order to avoid a similar result, have rushed to the other extreme and have bound the industry so tightly that it could not progress or expand to meet the needs of the community. It is easier to release a captive than to hind a fugitive; and the city which has too severely restricted a public service corporation can more easily increase the latitude allowed than can the city which has bargained away in perpetuity its power of control recover such power. The short-term franchise is preferable to the perpetual franchise with no provision for reversion to the city; but experience has clearly shown that each has certain objectionable features which the ideal franchise should not possess. The indeterminate franchise in the main avoids these, and combines the desirable features of the short-term franchise by protecting public interests and of the perpetual franchise by stimulating private initiative. In one form or another it has been tried in many cities and found satisfactory. The principal questions now under discussion relate to the details of the plan and its adaptation to the needs of each locality.

Definition. — The indeterminate franchise, or tenure during good behavior as it is sometimes called, briefly defined, is a franchise which may be terminated by the proper authorities at any time upon the payment of a fair compensation for the value of property thus taken, exclusive of franchise. There are many other provisions of importance which are necessary to the practical operation of the plan; but the fundamental principle is the right of acquisition at any time at a reasonable cost. This is the only way whereby a community can always and continuously control its own destinies and direct its own growth. Governmental supervision of corporations is an effective weapon, but there are times when the desired results can be obtained only by the complete elimination of a given corporation or group of men, and then the right of purchase, to be followed by governmental operation or lease to another private corporation, is the only adequate remedy.

General Principles

Before proceeding to analyze more in detail the shortcomings of the perpetual franchise and of the short-term franchise, and the corresponding advantages of the indeterminate franchise, it may be well to summarize without elaborate discussion the general principles relative to public utilities which have been established in the hard school of experience.

1. Public utilities requiring special and permanent fixtures in the streets have a strong and inherent tendency to become monopolies, and in most cities the control of one service and often of competing services is already in the hands of one corporation or one group of men.

2. Competition is, therefore, either absent or inadequate as a force for the regulation of rates and service; monopolistic corporations tend to become indifferent to the public, slow to adopt new inventions or processes, and inclined to accumulate larger and larger profits at the expense of the consumer.

3. Consequently, a complete system of regulation or control is absolutely necessary for the protection of the interests of the community and of the individual and frequently of the corporation itself.

4. In metropolitan centers the demands for space upon, over or under the streets for an increasing variety of uses make it imperative that the public authorities should maintain a much more direct and elastic control over the puhlic highways and places, unhindered by any irrevocable special franchise or franchise rights, than has been reserved ordinarily.

5. The welfare of a community requires that the service of every public utility shall be continuous, uninterrupted, extended over as wide an area as possible, constantly expanding with the increase of population, as efficient as the state of the industry will permit, and constantly progressing in efficiency.

6 Public welfare also requires that all public services shall be supplied at the lowest rates that will yield sufficient return to pay operating expenses, taxes, depreciation, etc., and a fair profit to capital. Otherwise worded, this means that the right to use the public streets under a special permit or franchise shall not be made the means for levying a special tax either for public use or private gain upon those who ride in the cars, or who use water, gas, telephones, electric current, or any other public utility.

Perpetual Franchises

The objections to the perpetual franchise from the point of view of public welfare are so generally understood that it is almost unnecessary to speak of them. At this stage of our political development, it is difficult to find anyone outside of the direct beneficiaries of franchises who would argue that irrevocable and perpetual grants should be made. Few persons will even attempt to justify the theory which would uphold as binding upon present and future generations a grant made when the Pyramids were erected; yet that is the theory of the perpetual, irrevocable franchise. The error has often been perpetrated in the past because it was not seen that public utilities are affected by a public interest and are not purely private.

The streets of a city are not the property of a single generation which it has the right to harter or give away without limit. It would be no more foolish for the city to part with its police power than for it to part irrevocably with its control over the streets. A franchise is justifiable only for so long a time as it inures to the public benefit, and every generation and age should have the power, so far as possible, to work out its own destiny unhindered by limitations unwisely imposed by previous generations.

Short-Term Franchises

The limited-term franchise may differ from the perpetual, irrevocable franchise only in theory. The grant that is to run for 999 years is limited, it is true, but for all practical purposes it is the same as a perpetual franchise, at least for several hundred years to come. A franchise for ninety-nine years has fewer points of resemblance, but the greatest dissimilarity appears when a ten, twenty or thirty-year franchise is compared with one in perpetuity. In other words, as the term increases, the specific objections to the short-term franchise tend to disappear; likewise its advantages. As these fade away the objectionable features of the perpetual franchise appear and become more and more distinct as the term lengthens. In order to contrast the limited-term franchise with the perpetual franchise, which is irrevocable except through the power of eminent domain, a short-term franchise of twenty or thirty years should be considered.

Usually such a franchise contains a provision that at the expiration of the term the company shall cease to have any rights in the streets and may be required to remove its fixtures without compensation, to surrender all claim to them, or to accept a fair compensation for the physical property, unless the public authorities shall choose to renew the franchise. It would be futile to consider the first of these alternatives, for all of the principal public utilities have come to occupy, so far as we can foresee, a permanent and essential place in the life of every city. It would be an unpardonable error to grant a franchise for ten, twenty or fifty years on the theory that at the end of that period the fixtures in the streets would be removed.

The general objections to the short-term, limited franchise, revocable at certain fixed times, are the following:

1. Public utilities are deterred from developing in an orderly and continuous way. The life of the community is apt to be interrupted at periodic intervals, arbitrarily selected. From time to time, changing conditions will necessitate a readjustment of relations between city and company, but who can tell in advance when such necessity will arise? Further, what is the probability that it will come at the end of a fixed period of ten, twenty or thirty years? Conditions and needs change so rapidly and with such irregularity in our modern cities, that often long before the expiration of a franchise there is need for some radical change in construction, equipment or operation. The company may or may not find it advantageous to make the change immediatcly. If it does not, the puhlic may have to suffer from inadequate service.

The change demanded may be a change of motive power such as that from animal power to electricity or from steam to electricity; it may be the joint use of tracks by different companies, the establishment jointly of through routes over the lines of two or more companies, the better co-ordination of existing lines, or a unification of the entire transit system under a single management.

There is nothing more vital to a community than transportation. If transit facilities are poor, not only are commerce and industry seriously handicapped, but the moral and physical well-being of a large portion of the population is menaced and the happiness of all is seriously affected. No city should so part with its effective control over the transit situation that under changed conditions it will be helpless to secure the most efficient transit system.

2. As the date approaches when the franchise expires, the company is tempted to go into politics, being anxious to secure a renewal of its rights, especially if its property in the streets is to revert to the city without compensation at the termination of the franchise. Indeed, years in advance of this date the company is likely to watch its opportunity and seek quietly to elect city officials favorable to its interests in order to secure a renewal far in advance of the time of expiration, and at a time when the public is not prepared to meet the situation. Renewals in advance are sometimes made necessary from the standpoint of the company because of the demand for the extension of its lines or the reconstruction of its road, requiring the issue of bonds which cannot be sold unless the franchise is renewed because of the short period yet remaining. Sometimes also improvements are held up by the companies simply for the purpose of forcing renewals. Under such conditions, the company can bring up the question of renewal at any time, waiting for the most propitious moment, hut the city must wait until the specified date arrives; it has no option. The company, also, may try and try again; the city but once, until another period has passed.

3 Toward the expiration of a limited-term franchise, unless the company has assurance that its rights will be renewed, plant and fixtures are naturally allowed to run down and service to deteriorate, until in many cases conditions become intolerable. If the franchise provides that at the expiration of the term the property shall revert to the municipality without payment, these results are almost inevitable and conditions are especially bad. In such cases the community suffers for years from poor service and the municipality gets a worn-out property of little or no value. These results are utterly at variance with the idea that each public utility ought to be continuously progressive, and they must result in checking the orderly development of the economic and social life of a community.

4. Under a franchise for a short definite period, it is usually impossible for the city to secure the construction of extensions or the adoption of improvements as the date of expiration approaches. The company naturally does not wish to invest capital in extensions of its lines into new territory or in experiments when it will have only a few years in which to operate. In this case again, the situation is made much worse if the property reverts to the city without compensation.

5. Because of these uncertainties, the franchise companies necessarily aim to get back their capital investment during the period covered by the franchise, or so much of it as possible. If all the property in the streets is lost to the company without compensation at the expiration of the grant, a sinking fund must be accumulated year by year to wipe out the capital at the end of the period, in addition to the annual dividends and interest. This leads to exorbitant charges and poor service.

6. The limited-period franchise is usually accompanied by elaborate provisions in regard to rates and service, which have been the outgrowth in part of the recognition of the above facts. These provisions are formulated upon the assumption that a franchise is a contract and that the city can foresee the requirements of the public for the entire period covered by the grant, and that the company also can foresee the obligations which it may safely undertake. Experience has proved that this assumption is unwarranted. The exigencies of twenty, thirty or fifty years in relation to the uses of the streets and the improvement of public services cannot be foreseen and are so uncertain that they cannot be adequately provided for in detail in advance by any contract, no matter how elaborate. This is particularly true of transportation matters.

7. The uncertainties of the limited franchise tend to disturb investments, to unsettle business conditions, and to encourage loose accounting and slipshod methods of finance. The companies capitalize their hope of renewals and then use whatever methods may be necessary in their attempt to make this capitalization good.

8. Companies which are required to perform specific services, such as paving and repairing streets and removing ice and snow from their tracks, are quite certain to neglect these obligations toward the expiration of their franchises, so that the surface of the streets gradually deteriorates and the public safety, convenience and health are endangered.

9 Whether it may be considered an advantage or a disadvantage, nevertheless it is true that the limited-term franchise forces a community to consider at periodic intervals the question of renewal or revocation. No matter how satisfactory the operation of the company has been, the question must come up and be decided. The natural result of a short-term grant is inferior service, and when the question of renewal is up, the company is charged with this bad service, although it may be only partially at fault.

The prineipal advantage of the short-term franchise as compared with the perpetual grant is the possibility of municipal purchase and of a readjustment of operating methods to public needs at short intervals. The failure to foresee exactly what will happen is not imposed as a burden upon all ages to come. Like a contract between landlord and tenant, which runs for short terms or provides for periodic readjustments, so a franchise, which is the leasing of certain public rights to a private company, should provide some way by which the relations between city and company shall represent actual conditions. The short-term franchise may do this very effectively, but at the expense usually of good service and low rates.

The question naturally arises whether there is not some form of franchise which provides for such effective control and also encourages good service at reasonable rates. Probably no form measures up to this standard fully which does not provide for, or is not supplemented by state laws which provide for efficient regulation by a public administrative body, but the indeterminate franchise does approach more nearly the standard than the short-term or the perpetual franchise.

The Indeterminate Franchise—Its Advantages

There is a radical difference in theory between the fixed-term franchise and the indeterminate franchise. The former is a special privilege to use public property for profit during a limited period. The essentially public nature of the service performed is not emphasized. The indeterminate franchise on the other hand is the expression of the idea that a public utility is affected with a public interest in such a vital way that when it ceases to be operated in the public interest the franchise may be terminated, and that the representatives of the people may determine, and not the company, when that point has been reached. The service is to be steady and continuous, the only change to be in the actual operator, it being within the power of the city to determine whether the existing company shall be allowed to continue, or be replaced by another company to which the property will be leased or sold after purchase from the original company, or be followed by operation by the municipality itself. Either course may be followed, and if another company is given an indeterminate franchise, its grant may be terminated in like manner if it proves unsatisfactory.

Relation to Public Regulation.—The theory of the indeterminate franchise fits well with the theory of public service commissions. With a permanent tribunal to compel adequate service at reasonable rates, there is no need for the elaborate terms and conditions with which many franchise grants have been loaded down, and most matters can be handled satisfactorily by that tribunal without a revocation of the franchise. But when a case does arise which cannot be properly dealt with through administrative regulation, then the power to terminate the grant forthwith comes into play most effectively. The power to retire from business any particular franchise-holder who proves inefficient will probably cover every case which regulation cannot promptly reach.

Fair to City and Company.—The indeterminate franchise, with provision for the purchase of the property of the company in case the franchise is revoked, is based upon the theory of limited risk and limited profit. The city is protected from the danger of having its interests sacrificed for a definite period of years or in perpetuity by the careless or corrupt action of city officials at any particular time. It desires adequate service at reasonable rates and continuous control. The company runs no risk of losing its property without compensation, or of having its investment rendered valueless through the termination of the franchise. This is brought about not by granting a perpetual franchise but merely by the proviso that the company shall be paid for the property taken at a fair valuation, either by the city or by another company licensed by the city.

Compensatien Paid.—It is safe to assume that under no terms of purchase or reversion will the city secure much more than it pays for. If the property reverts to the city without payment at the end of a specified period, the city will in all probability receive a worn-out property of little value. If the property can be taken over at a price not properly compensatory for necessary expenditures, such expenditures will either not be made or economies of other kinds will be adopted to the detriment of the service. By guaranteeing a fair price, properly defined in the grant, the city insures the permanent upkeep of the property. This places the city in a good position, for if the city decides to operate, it purchases a plant in first-class condition and not one so run down that it practically requires reconstruction and large outlays to render it efficient. On the other hand, if the city desires to interest a new company in the franchise, it can do so much more quickly and on better terms than it could if the plant were in such condition as to require a large additional investment to put it in serviceable condition.

The Indeterminate Franchise Puts a Premium Upon Good Serviee.—A company naturally wishes above all things to keep its franchise and to make large profits. The most effective way to accomplish both ends is to please the public in every way; so long as it does so, in all probability the franchise will not be terminated. This is the feature which has led to the description of the grant as "tenure during good behavior." "Good behavior" includes not merely the running of many cars, for example, but satisfactory service throughout, the construction of extensions in newly developed areas, the adoption of the latest inventions and improvements, prompt compliance with all requirements of law and ordinance, etc. So long as the public is satisfied in these regards; that is, so long as the company is responsive to the demands of the public, no question will likely be raised as to the continuance or termination of the grant. It goes on as a matter of course until the attitude of the company arouses dissatisfaction. When the dissatisfaction becomes so great as to warrant a readjustment, then and only then does the question come up, and even then if the eompany wisely recognizes the new conditions and responds, its existence will not be terminated. Could there be a stronger incentive to vigilance and intelligent administration?

Another Important Feature is the Promptness with which Relief can be Secured when Needed.—In the case of the perpetual franchise, there is no time of readjustment except by voluntary action or through the right of eminent domain. Under the limited-term franchise, one must wait until the the end of the period; but when the indeterminate grant is in force, there need be no delay; immediate action is possible. The city is in control all of the time; it has never abdicated. In the case of transportation lines, it can secure their prompt reorganization if necessary, their co-ordination in a new way, the joint use of tracks, the establishment of through routes over the lines of different companies, the unification of the entire system and its adaptation to urban needs.

Charges will be Lower.—If the city pays for the property it takes, if it ever takes any, the necessity for fixing charges high enough to provide, in addition to operating costs and a fair profit, a sinking fund charge to wipe out the capital invested at the end of any given period, will not arise. This must be done in the case of limited-term franchises where the property is to revert to the city at the end of the period free of charge, for capital cannot be secured unless there is full assurance that it will be returned intact, together with a fair return for its use. If, however, property is not forfeited, but is paid for, then the charges for service need not cover a sinking fund charge, and they may be made that much less than they otherwise would have been. To state it in a different form: The charges may be the same as when a sinking fund is necessary, and the amount of this charge turned over to capital in addition to the usual profit. This would make an additional attraction to capital which would not exist under the short-term franchise where the property in the streets is to revert to the city without compensation.

If it is urged that the property of a public service corporation should revert to the city at some time free of cost, one must ask upon what grounds? Why should the present generation be burdened to accumulate a fund from which it gets no benefit in order that some future generation, a future class of users, may have the use of property free of charge? Why is it not just that each generation should bear its own burdens and pay the full cost of the services it uses and of the benefits it enjoys? Should not this theory be applied in short periods so far as possible, so that year by year the user would pay the actual cost, as nearly as it may be apportioned, of the service rendered to him? Attention may again be called to the point already noted, viz., that if property is to revert to the city without compensation, the company will endeavor to leave as little value as possible in the property so reverting. The bad results attending such a policy have also been noted, and more than outweigh the advantages which may accrue from a limited franchise with a reversion of the property at the end of the period.

Objections That Have Been Urged

The most frequent criticism of the indeterminate grant is that the possibility of termination will prevent expansion, the introduction of improvements and a thorough attempt to give good service. Experience, to which reference will be made shortly, shows that such is not the case; and the principal reason is that if the company is to be reimbursed and if tenure is based upon satisfactory management, there is every inducement to be progressive and little reason far failing to make expenditures. There is some uncertainty, it is true, but not one tithe of the uncertainty which exists in a competitive business where profits are elusive and where there is the possibility of losing one's entire investment. Only gross mismanagement can bring a loss of investment here, and the possibility of a loss of profits is reduced to a minimum, owing to the lack of competition and to the continuing demand for public utilities. The low rate at which profits are capitalized to determine the market value

OUTING SUITS

Time is at hand when the Outing Suit becomes very desirable.

We make suits to measure for men and women of Govt. Khaki, Fustian Cloth and Corduroy. A card will bring you a nicely illustrated catalogue post-paid.

The Wm. H. Hoegee Co. Inc.

138-142 So. Main St.,

Los Angeles

Home 10087 Main 8447

of stocks and bonds of public service corporations is evidence of the correctness of this conclusion. It is true that a perpetual franchise may, and probably will under the same circumstances, cause greater expansion and greater enterprise at least momentarily, but the price which must be paid—the loss of control over public services and the tendency toward ultimate stagnation, overcapitalization and unreasonable charges—is too high. Very few communities now favor the perpetual franchise; they are unwilling to bargain away the interests of the future for a possible temporary advantage. Expansion and enterprise may be obtained at too high a price. A birthright should not be sold for a mess of pottage.

It is also urged that the possibility of terminating the grant at any time will force the public service corporations into politics and compel them to work for the selection of officials who will represent their interests. If this result is more likely to be brought about by the indeterminate grant than by the limited-term franchise, it constitutes a serious objection. It is most desirable that corporate influence should be eliminated, not increased. Let us see what are the facts.

If the objection is valid, one would expect to find that when grants have been made in perpetuity, the corporations would be entirely out of politics, for then they would be most secure from attack. But every one knows, and abundant proof has often been found, that they are very potent factors in politics and do not leave the field when a perpetual franchise is secured. The reasons are not hard to find. In the first place, the company seldom gets all of the rights it desires; it needs franchises for extensions from time to time. Political affiliations are useful in such cases. Secondly, conditions are constantly changing, and the company is desirous to have alterations made by ordinance or statute. Thirdly, some control is always vested in an official body of some sort, and if the company is going into politics, it will most certainly try to control the supervisory authority. Furthermore, the original grant of perpetual rights is such a valuable prize that corruption often runs rampant when a franchise is about to be given.

It is not easy to believe that the issuance of a right terminable at any moment would lead to more corruption than we have seen in connection with other grants. All the facts are against such a probability. The stake played for is not so large. With proper regulation, the value of the right itself, and therefore the retention of it, ceases to be enormous. Then, too, the successful bidder may lose it if he does not serve the public. But if the company still is determined to play the political game, it must be at it all of the time, and it must control not only a few men, but also a majority of the electorate. This is becoming extremely difficult if not quite impossible; and at any moment the company may lose control of the situation, be ousted from its field and lose all it has been scheming to retain. Indeed, it is probable that any corporation would see the folly of attempting to play politics and would decide to deal openly and fairly with the public and depend upon the general desire for fairness to protect its rights. Few corporations have ever tried to combat "strike" measures by openly appealing to the public, but those that have have done so successfully when their own hands were clean.

There is one further aspect of this phase of the subject. If franchises are perpetual or limited, the opportunity for political corruption is not eliminated. If the public will tolerate corrupt relations and if the corporations have a liking for that sort of thing, it will develop under public regulation, where there are as great possibilities as under an indeterminate grant alone. If the existence of an opportunity is sufficient to condemn the idea, then public regulation must go, all franchise grants must go, municipal operation—the only substitute we know of for company operation besides public regulation—must go. As all of these plans may be subject to political manipulation, the only alternatives are to allow the companies to do as they please without let or hindrance, or to do without public utilities entirely. One is as bad as the other. The corporation in politics is not only a possibility, but it will be a reality in some form so long as the people will tolerate it and the corporations are inclined to it. The battle must be fought and won, and it is far preferable to make the fight when the principle fought for is worthy of support in all other essentials.

Has the Indeterminate Franchise Been Tried?

The question has doubtless occurred to the reader: To what extent has the indeterminate franchise been tested by actual experience? In the minds of many who are afraid to accept logical conclusions unless they have been verified by experience, this is an important question. As approval with them is dependent upon demonstrated success, the experience with indeterminate franchises is summarized in subsequent pages. Only a few instances need to be given here:

It has been in operation in a simple form in Massachusetts ever since the introduction of street railways. Probably nowhere in the world has there been a greater development of street railways, and it has been attended with fewer evils and with more satisfaction to the public generally than elsewhere. Capital has been attracted and yet overcapitalization has been avoided to an unusual degree. Service has generally been considered good and rates ordinarily reasonable.

In Washington, D. C., the street railways hold their rights subject to alteration, amendment or repeal at any time—a more rigid qualification than is contemplated usually under the indeterminate franchise—and yet the system has developed rapidly and was the first to be changed to the "under trolley." In legislating for Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, Congress extended to these colonies the policy that has worked so well at the Capital, and the development of public utilities seems not to have been retarded thereby. This fact is important, for, if the indeterminate idea will not work well anywhere, it is where political and economic conditions are unstable and the future uncertain.

The Public Utilities Law of Wisconsin not only provides that all future franchises must be revocable at any time, but also allowed any company which received originally a limited franchise to exchange it, prior to July 1, 1908, for an indeterminate permit. Forty-six companies with a total capitalization of $14,167,400, representing over one-quarter of all the utility companies in the state, took advantage of this latter clause within the eleven months allowed for the change. The new Constitution of Michigan, approved November 3d last, recognizes the principle in another way. It prohibits local authorities from granting franchises without ratification by popular vote, unless such grants are revocable.

There are numerous instances where the indeterminate idea has been adopted in one form or another. Probably the most interesting case, as well as one of the most recent, is the grant to the street railway companies of Chicago which became effective in 1907. The struggle between the city and certain of the companies had gone on for several years. The service was bad, the roads had been greatly overcapitalized, the public had been exasperated by constant disregard of its wishes, the people had voted by a large majority for municipal ownership and millions of dollars were needed to rehabilitate the worn out lines. Under the indeterminate grant, arrangements have been made for the infusion of a large amount of new capital, the work of reconstruction is under way, the service has been improved, and it would seem that the situation is being adjusted to the satisfaction of all.

New York City has had some experience in the direction of indeterminate grants. At least eleven important franchises were originally issued with the express reservation of the right to amend or repeal, and in two instances purchase by the city was specifically provided for. As the courts have held that many of the earlier franchises were invalid and yet have allowed the companies to continue operation, these provisions for municipal purchase or repeal of the grant have been ineffective; but they do show that the desirability of a revocable franchise was realized fifty years ago. If the courts had held that the grants had been made by the proper authorities (this was the point upon which the grants were upset), the street railway situation would now be somewhat simpler than it is. In the case of the McAdoo subway under Sixth avenue running to New Jersey, the city has gone back to its earlier practice, reserving the right to purchase the property under that avenue at any time after twenty-five years have elapsed.

Essentials of an Indeterminate Franchise

If one were to analyze in detail the experience of the many cities where the indeterminate grant in some form or other has been or is being tried, he would find that in order to secure complete success several elements are essential. These are:

1. The grant should be subject to termination on purchase of the property, either by the city or by another company specially authorized by the city, at a fair valuation. The provision for purchase by another company is necessary because municipal operation may be neither feasible nor desirable. Of course the same result may be accomplished indirectly by municipal purchase followed by a sale or lease under an indeterminate grant to a private company, assuming that the city has the power to purchase and the financial means to pay for the plant temporarily. But direct methods are preferable to indirect methods, and if the city has not the power to operate or may be prevented from purchase because of financial disability, there must be a way to transfer the property directly to the lessee company or the right of revocation will be practically worthless.

2. The principles according to which the property is to be appraised and the method of determining the valuation should be stated. They should take into account every legitimate cost, depreciation of every kind and nature, and expenses of organization, promotion and development of business.

3. As profits may be small or non-existent during the first few years of a new enterprise, and as some time may be required to get under way and show what can be done, there ordinarily would be an initial period during which purchase may be made only on payment of a prescribed bonus in addition to the actual value of the property taken and possibly a very short period in which purchase may not take place at all, if the scheme is a big one. A similar bonus should be provided for on all new capital expenditures for extending the undertaking, if purchase takes place within a short time after such expenditures have been incurred. A plan for varying the bonus inversely with the time that has elapsed since the expenditure was incurred is desirable.

4. Provision should be made for the revocation of rights and the removal of pipes, mains, tracks, etc., from particular streets where, owing to changed service conditions, they are no longer required.

5. Provision should also be made for the relocation of fixtures in streets when, owing to changed conditions, such relocation becomes necessary.

6. Continuous control and supervision by a state or city authority should be provided for either by franchise or by general statute. This control should include approval of plans of construction and equipment and of subsequent changes; power to adopt and enforce general or special rules and regulations in relation to construction, operation and service; regulation of contracts, rates and transfers; and control of capitalization, accounts and transfer of powers. This presupposes the existence or creation of an authority having an adequate organization for the continuous, intelligent and effective exercise of such powers.

7. It is assumed that the undertaking, under the powers reserved as above, will be so regulated as to render the best possible service at the lowest rates that will yield a sufficient return to pay a fair profit on the actual investment. Theoretically, therefore, there will be no excessive profits and no occasion for a money payment to the city as compensation for the franchise. There may be instances where it may seem desirable to provide for a sharing of the profits with the city, but ordinarily rates should be lowered instead of taxing the users of a service to defray the expenses of government.

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
HF
Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS
Los Angeles, Cal.

Residence Burglary Insurance
Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?
Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.
Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.
R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY
200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.
Home Phone 40444 Los Angeles, Cal. Sunset Phone M. 7096

Resume of Experience with the Indeterminate Franchise

Massachusetts.—Although the indeterminate idea in a most elementary form had been in use in Massachusetts ever since the introduction of street railways, the question of the relative merits of the indeterminate and the fixed-term franchise first received serious consideration in the report of the Massachusetts Special Committee on the Relations Between Cities and Towns and Street Railways, published in 1898. After carefully comparing the experience of Massachusetts under the indeterminate permit with the experience of other states and countries using fixed-term grants, the Commission was convinced of the superiority of the Massachusetts method. In considering the effect of the fixed-term franchise, the committee says that it "has been productive of dissension, poor service, scandals and unhealthy political action." The committee concludes as follows: "There is probably no possible system productive of only good results and in no respect open to criticism; but, in fairness, the committee found itself forced to conclude that the Massachusetts franchise, which might perhaps not improperly be termed a tenure during good behavior, would in its practical results compare favorably with any."

Under the Massachusetts system, companies are given permits revocable at any time after one year at the pleasure of the municipal authorities, and in recent years subject to the approval also of the State Board of Railroad Commissioners.

This power of revocation, while it has seldom been exercised, has nevertheless been useful in securing on the part of the companies a proper consideration for the changes demanded in the public interest. Its potential power has been great. The few cases of actual revocation have applied to small portions of track and have had as their object merely the abandonment of tracks or the revocation of rights in certain streets. They have not in any sense meant the annulment of an entire franchise.

Washington.—In the city of Washington a revocable franchise has long been used. The Chicago Street Railway Commission of 1900 comments on Washington's experience with this form of grant as follows:

In Washington franchise grants are conferred by act of Congress, and all grants are subject to alteration, amendment or repeal at any time, at the will of Congress. Under the power thus reserved Congress orders such improvements in service as it may deem desirable, and whenever it deems them desirable, and the orders are at once executed without parley or litigation. The overhead trolley was never permitted in Washington. When the underground trolley was shown to be feasible Congress passed an act reading in part as follows: "That the said Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and the same is hereby authorized, empowered and required to equip and operate the lines of its cars * * * with an underground electric system for the propulsion of such cars." Under this order Washington was the first city in the country to secure the underground trolley. Under the reserved power to alter, amend or repeal grants at will Congress has required different companies to make arrangements for issuing transfers from the line of one company to those of another, and it has also required different companies to use certain tracks in common where the public interests would be served by such an arrangement.

Porto Rico and Philippine Islands.—In legislating for Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, Congress has continued the franchise policy that has worked so well in Washington. George C. Sikes, who was the Secretary of the Chicago Street Railway Commission of 1900, has in a more recent article described this legislation as follows:

The Porto Rican Civil Government Act, approved April 12, 1900, was almost immediately modified by a joint resolution approved May 1, 1900, one section of which reads as follows:

"That all franchises, privileges, or concessions granted under section thirty-two of said act shall provide that the same shall be subject to amendment, alteration or repeal; shall forbid the issue of stock or bonds, except in exchange for actual cash or property at a fair valuation, equal in amount to the par value of the stock or bonds issued; shall forbid the declaring of stock or bond dividends; and, in the case of public service corporations shall provide for the effective regulation of the charges thereof, and for the purchase or taking by the public authorities of their property at a fair and reasonable valuation." That section, though so very brief, really embodies the essential features of sound franchise policy. It provides (1) that all grants shall be subject to amendment, alteration, or repeal; (2) that there shall be no overcapitalization; (3) that there shall be a reservation of the right to regulate charges; and (4) that the public authorities shall reserve the right to take over the property of the grantee at a fair and reasonable valuation. If American cities would incorporate similar provisions in all franchises hereafter granted, they would find that the public service corporations would be the source of far less trouble in the future than they have been in the past.

The Philippine Civil Government Act, approved March 2, 1901, although very brief, contains this proviso:

"That all franchises granted under authority hereof shall contain a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same."

The recent grant of permission to the Commercial Cable Company to lay a cable from the mainland of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands, Guam, and the Philippines, contains these provisions, among others:

"That the United States shall at all times have the right to purchase the cable lines, property, and effects of the said company at an appraised value, to be ascertained by disinterested persons, two to be selected by the Postmaster-General, two by the company or concern interested, and the fifth by the four previously selected. That the consent hereby granted shall be subject to any future action by Congress, or by the President, affirming, revoking or modifying, wholly or in part, the said conditions and terms on which this consent is given." (Atlantic Monthly, March, 1903.)

In response to a recent letter inquiring concerning the experience of Porto Rico under the revocable franchise, W. F. Willoughby, chairman of the Committee on Franchises of the Executive Council, writes as follows:

Since the organization of Civil Government 137 franchise ordinances have been passed by the Executive Council. Although many of these relate to small matters, such as water concessions, included among the number of more important franchises are franchises for the construction and operation of steam railroads, trolley lines, construction of piers, etc. I do not believe that this provision—that all franchises shall be subject to amendment, alteration or repeal—has interfered in any material way with the investment of capital in public service enterprises in the Island. Certainly I do not think it has interfered with bona fide undertakings, although it may have had some influence in respect to those cases where promoters are interested in starting an enterprise and disposing of the securities rather than in the actual construction and operation of works.

It has been usual in granting franchises to fix a term of years. No great significance, however, has been attached to this limitation inasmuch as the Joint Resolution of Congress expressly provides that not only shall the ordinance be subject to amendment, alteration or repeal, but that the property can be taken over by the public authorities at any time at a fair and reasonable valuation. The persons requesting franchises, however, desire to have a term fixed as they state it is of assistance to them in financing their enterprises.

Wisconsin.—The Public Utilities Law of Wisconsin, passed in 1907, adopts the indeterminate principle. All franchises hereafter granted in this state must be indeterminate permits revocable only through the purchase of the utility by the municipality. The right of purchase may be exercised at any time. The following is a copy of the principal provisions of the law:

Section 1797m-76. Every license, permit or franchise hereafter granted to any public utility shall have the effect of an indeterminate permit subject to the provisions of this act, and subject to the provision that the municipality in which the major part of its property is situate may purchase the property of such public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public at any time as provided herein, paying therefor just compensation to be determined by the commission and according to the terms and conditions fixed by said commission. Any such municipality is authorized to purchase such property and every such public utility is required to sell such property at the value and according to the terms and conditions determined by the commission as herein provided.

It will be noted that under the Wisconsin plan the municipality cannot, as in Chicago, grant a franchise to a new company on condition that such company purchase the property of the existing company. This is a serious defect. In specific cases municipal ownership will be neither feasible nor desirable and yet service and facilities may be poor and inadequate. A union of independent lines, an extension of tracks or a number of other changes may be demanded. If the city possesses the power to license a new company to take over the property of the existing company there is a remedy outside of municipal operation.

Chicago.—After a peculiarly disagreeable experience Chicago has worked out and adopted an indeterminate plan of more advanced type than that now existing in any other jurisdiction. The franchises of the various street railway lines and extensions had been granted at various times and for various terms. As the time for the expiration of certain of these grants approached, a long and bitter contest ensued. During its continuance the companies made no improvements in their lines and practically no repairs or renewals. Service became so unspeakably bad that a long suffering public came to the belief that municipal ownership and operation was the only remedy. This consummation having been checked by constitutional restrictions on the city's borrowing power, new franchise ordinances upon the indeterminate plan were passed by the city council in February, 1907, and ratified by popular vote in the following April.

As early as 1900, a special Street Railway Commission had made a careful study of the franchise situation in Chicago. The commission was very favorably impressed with the experience of Massachusetts and the city of Washington under the revocable permit. The following is from their report:

Because of the great outlay involved in establishing a street railway system, it is said, the owners of such property ought to have some assurance that their property value will not be destroyed by some hasty act of revocation. And so they ought. But the assurance should be that, if their rights to use the streets be revoked, their property suitable to and used for street railway purposes should be taken off their hands at a fair valuation; not that they should be privileged to remain in undisputed possession of the public streets for a definite period of time, whether they serve the public well or ill.

The Street Railway Commission believes that the definite term grant, whatever its duration, is open to serious objections. It is of opinion that a grant of indefinite duration but subject to termination at any time upon certain conditions, one of which should be the taking of the property of the grantee at a fair valuation, would be productive of much better results. * *

Franchises recently adopted in Chicago and now in force, under which the reorganization, reconstruction and rehabilitation of the entire surface system are going on, apply the indeterminate principle in a more perfected form than has yet been adopted in any other city. The initial term is twenty years. The city has the right of purchase, however, at any time during this term or after its expiration. After the expiration of the initial term, the city may grant the franchise to another company, but, if so, such company is obligated to purchase the property of the former company. If the city exercises its right of purchase before the expiration of the franchise term for any purpose other than direct municipal operation, it is required to pay a bonus of 20 per cent on the agreed price. The city may transfer this right to another company, but any such company must pay the 20 per cent bonus on the agreed price. If, however, a company is organized to operate the railways at a profit that shall not exceed 5 per cent, such company may purchase the property of the existing company without paying the 20 per cent bonus. After the expiration of the initial term, no bonus over the agreed price need be paid by either the city or any new company licensed by the city.

Michigan.—The new Constitution of Michigan recently approved by the voters contains provisions prohibiting the authorities of cities, villages and townships from granting franchises without ratification by popular vote, unless such franchises are revocable. This puts a premium upon the granting of indeterminate franchises in Michigan in all cases where a referendum is deemed undesirable. Naturally all minor grants will hereafter be made in the form of revocable permits, while more important franchises may be made in that form if the companies are willing to accept them, or the authorities do not wish to go to the trouble and expense of taking a referendum.

New York City.—The franchise of the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad Company for that portion of its tunnels under Sixth avenue and Eighth street reserved to the city of New York the right to purchase the property at any time after twenty-five years, and also provides for readjustment of the compensation paid to the city at the end of each twenty-five-year period. This franchise is therefore indeterminate, but lacks a very important feature in that it does not provide for the transfer of the city's right of purchase to another company that might offer a higher rate of compensation or better connections, facilities or service. Among the numerous franchises granted by the State Legislature or the Common Council for street railways in New York City there are a considerable number in which the right to amend or repeal is specifically reserved.

Charter Amendments

Los Angeles City Club Discusses Proposed Changes In City's Organic Law.

The proposed charter amendments were discussed at the Los Angeles City Club luncheon last Saturday. Three speakers were on the program and each took as his topic the amendment or amendments with which he was especially familiar.

Geo. H. Dunlop, former mayor of Hollywood, spoke on "The Municipal Newspaper," as provided by proposed charter amendment No. 15; Purd B. Wright, public librarian, took as his subject, "The Law and the Library"; Lewis R. Works, member of Charter Revision committee, spoke on "Charter Amendments," dealing particularly with the increase of powers of the municipality; increase of salaries; and change of bonding limit.

In the absence of President Finlayson, Vice-President Handley occupied the chair.

Introducing the speakers, Mr. Handley said: Some Greek philosopher, I don't remember who he was, once said that the citizens of a city should fight for their moral rights as strenuously,—he didn't use that word,—as they would fight for their city wall. In other words, that the internal fight was as important as the fight with the enemy without. I think no better thing has happened to our city and to our state and nation than the fact that our citizens are becoming interested in their own matters and are attempting to reconstruct their government to fit modern conditions.

Mr. Dunlop spoke, in part, as follows: Charter amendment No. 15 authorizes the city of Los Angeles, if she so desires, to publish a municipal newspaper. It does not require the city to do so. It merely makes it optional. It authorizes it to publish a newspaper, without any provision of any kind as to what sort of a paper it will publish.

There are a number of cities in the country that publish a little weekly bulletin of some sort, containing weekly items concerning what is going on in the various departments of the city; and three cities, namely, New York, Boston and Philadelphia, publish daily bulletins. But the thought in the minds of those who asked for this amendment to the city charter was nothing of that sort at all. This amendment was asked for by the Good Government organization, the Church Federation, the Central Labor Council and by others, and they were all thinking of one particular kind of a newspaper, which they hoped some day to see Los Angeles publish. What they wanted to see was a paper published daily, giving the general news, but making a specialty of local news, and particularly municipal news; a paper that should be supported as other newspapers are, practically entirely from its advertising receipts; a paper which, like any other branch of the city's business, would be in charge of some commission, as the water department is in charge of the Water Board; a paper whose first function should be to publish the news, particularly local news, impartially.

The time has gone by when the newspapers of the country can influence public opinion to any great extent through their editorial columns. They realize that, and while they go on with their editorial columns, some editors,—I don't know who they are, of course,—have adopted the policy of using their news columns for the purpose of influencing public opinion, either by a failure to state the news or by an incorrect statement of the news. Now, there are papers which endeavor to be fair in the manner in which they present the political news. And there are papers which are malicious in the way in which they print the news. We have both kinds in Los Angeles. But it is not a question whether our papers are good or whether they are bad. The fact remains that in a democracy the distribution of the news is too important a function to be left absolutely in the control of private interests.

If such a paper had any leaning, it would naturally be towards the administration that appointed the commission; and this can be said, the administration is the last voice of the people and it is entitled to be heard. I don't think the paper ought to lean towards the administration. I do think, however, that in a certain way the administration should be heard through the paper; and if the paper leaned that way a little too much, that wouldn't be a serious evil, because everybody in town would be expecting that and would be on his guard against it; whereas there may be secret influences upon a private paper, of which the public has no knowledge and against which it is not on guard.

This is a general outline of the paper. The most novel and the most important feature of it, as we had it in mind when we asked for this amendment, is this: That in every issue one column is set aside for the free use of every political organization in the city that polled three per cent. of the vote at the last election, this column to be filled by its own press agent, and to be subject to no censorship whatever from the general management of the paper, except that it should concern public affairs and be lawful for newspaper publication.

The first result of such a provision is that the paper in its general columns would have to tell the truth. Otherwise, any misstatements would be corrected in one of these independent columns the following day. So I think we may be satisfied that the paper would be impartial.

It is manifest that the paper could not be thrown open to everybody, as that would result in a mass of undigested and immaterial stuff; but our people, in their organized capacity, as the Republican party, or the Democratic party, or the Socialist party, or Good Government organization or any organization that polls a material vote, should have an avenue of reaching the people.

In the amendment as to elections, there is a provision that on an initiative or referendum a statement of 2000 words may be made for or against the proposition. That is all right so far as it goes; but it doesn't begin to be adequate. If we had, however, a daily paper, in which we had every day every element of the community that was sufficiently strong to represent 3 per cent. of the vote of the city represented, we would have to some extent the privileges of the old town meetings where the people came together to discuss questions affecting the welfare of the city.

There is one other feature in connection with this paper, and that is, in addition to these columns set aside for the political organizations, portions of the paper should be set aside for the use of the different public officials; that the mayor or any member of the city council at any time that he wished might have a half a column of the paper. There is apt to be a minority in every council that may wish to be heard. Any minority in the council, or the mayor if he is not working in harmony with the council or if the council is not working in harmony with him, should be entitled to a portion of such a paper in order that the public might have the facts concerning their municipal affairs brought to them as seen from all sides.

The amendment certainly is an important one and merits, in my opinion, your friendly consideration.

Following is the substance of Mr. Wright's address:

When I came to your city a few months ago, one of the first things said to me by the Library Board was that the city charter revision committee had been appointed and was in session, and for me to tell them what I wanted to take out the stumbling blocks that I found or ask the commission to help take them out.

The most important one was that of the civil service end of it. I asked this: that the heads of the departments be placed somewhat in the same relation as the head of it; that they be asked to put their shoulders against the collars just as hard as he did. The rank and file were not disturbed in any way. I did ask that there be a back door to the civil service proposition; an exit as well as an entrance. The committee replied to that by giving the library board the same authority that it gave other departments; that is, the trial of its own people.

Section 89c is a new section, giving the library board authority to invest any surplus for specific purposes. For instance, Los Angeles hasn't done much for itself in the library way. There have been numerous attempts to do it. Last year the present library board saved a certain amount of money. This year they are striving to save a little bit more; and that that money might be saved for a definite, specific purpose they asked authority to invest this saving, under very strict restrictions, for certain specific purposes—for the purpose of grounds and buildings or permanent improvements.

Now I want to give you broadly my position on civil service as applied to the library. And that I may not be accused of allowing local conditions to govern my position at all, I have a bound volume of the Library Journal of 1906, which contains a discussion of the proposition and a little note by me, which I will read. Particularly, my claim is, that the library being an educational institution, should be treated identically as the schools are.

"A short study of this problem, rather superficial possibly, leads me to suspect that much of the trouble experienced under a general municipal civil service scheme has been caused by the attempt to make the questions of too general a nature; that insufficient credit has been given for personality, or adaptability of the person for the work to be done; that training, expert possibly, was not recognized as it should be, thus handicapping the specialist; and, finally, that lack of power to discharge, or discipline, except after tedious trial, forced the retention of people who had lost their usefulness, or, for different causes, had become a serious detriment to the department. A power or protecting clause or body behind which one may hide is always taken advantage of by the disorganizer, the lazily inclined, and those with lack of energy and ambition, and the vicious. In any work which has to do with serving women, as the library, the question of the trial of an employee, under a general civil service commission, may become a grave one. A recent case in point in the library world will illustrate this: Repeated charges were made by well-known, truthful women against a male employee, which in case of a business house, would have resulted in his immediate discharge. The library officials were powerless, because, under the civil service code, charges must be made in writing and complainants were compelled to appear in person before a public court and subject themselves to examination on the witness stand by lawyers. It will be readily understood that under certain circumstances women would certainly cease using the library, or that department of it, or bear the insults in silence."

There are experts in my business just as there are in any business that is worth while. If we want an expert we want the best obtainable. We are not in a position to go after them in the right way. I have spoken to two of the best in the United States, and asked them if they were open for a proposition to come to this city. Their answer invariably has been that they have good positions and don't know what conditions are here. Now, there are ways and ways out of this business, but I am asking the broad way that the heads of the departments—the people who are getting up on the salary list, be placed just as I am. I am not under civil service. I never was and I never asked to be. I ask that they be put up in line just as I am. Am I unfair in asking that?

I want to be in a position to get for you—it is not for me, you understand—the best service that is obtainable. There is not any spoils in any public library that is not under civil service any more than there is spoils where it is. Whether under civil service or not it does reward efficiency, personality and interest in the work.

Mr. Works said: A municipal corporation, a city, is a corporation just like any other, and it can, like other corporations, perform no functions except such as it is expressly authorized

MAIN 3340 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
SPRING ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER
PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL
FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS
Delivered within the old city boundary lines.
Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.
Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191
Los Angeles, Cal.

to perform by the law of its creation or by amendments thereto or by such other laws as may be brought into force through any kind of means.

The City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, is not only like other corporations so far as the law affecting corporations generally is concerned, but it is, like other corporations in the sense that it ought to be operated in the same way and ought, in large measure, to have the same powers as other corporations.

The charter amendment committee realized that this was the trend of popular belief with reference to municipal corporations at the present time, and in following out that belief they have endeavored by the amendments that they have proposed to the city charter along the line of powers to place the City of Los Angeles in such a position that it may carry on its affairs as a vast business corporation and that it effectively may compete with those private business corporations along the lines of the ownership of public utilities or other things with which it naturally comes in contact.

Mr. Works here read from the proposed charter amendments subdivision 4, of section 2, which will give the city vastly increased powers as a corporation, and designates much more specifically than the old charter the businesses in which the city may engage.

In the long list of powers, which the amendment gives, there are, of course, some that, under the law, inherently belong to a municipal corporation. But it is best to have those things expressed and laid down in the city's organic law; and it is with that idea in view that all of those have been included in that section, even though some of them do belong inherently to the corporation. But there are some of them which do not naturally belong to municipal corporations and which are extensions of the law. I refer to municipal lodging houses and tenement houses; and also to municipal farms, work farms and detention homes. In the provision for the creation and maintenance of those institutions there lies a power which ought to operate vastly to the good of the administration of justice and the correction of the criminals in the city of Los Angeles.

The powers of the city are especially extended in all of those matters that relate to the operation and control of public utilities; not only the municipally owned public utilities, but with reference to the regulation of privately owned public utilities; and especially with reference to the right to condemn and to acquire title, by purchase, lease or in other ways, of those privately owned public utilities; and I desire to refer to those amendments as also indicating along what general lines the committee has been at work.

Subdivision 8 under that same section 2, provides "for supplying surplus water, gas or electricity, belonging to the city, or the surplus product of any public utility conducted or operated by the city, to other municipal corporations, and to consumers and users outside of the city limits."

Subdivision 9 confers quite an extensive and somewhat unusual power upon the City of Los Angeles. Under that section we will have power to operate steamship lines to the Orient or any other part of the world, if we desire to do it; also railroad lines to any part of the United States or Mexico or anywhere else that railroad lines will go.

Here is another power that is somewhat unusual: "To acquire, hold and own stock in any corporation, owning, controlling or operating any street or interurban railway situated in whole or in part within the limits of the city."

Now, if it isn't convenient for the city to acquire a railroad line absolutely, or to operate that public utility absolutely, the power is given here to the city to acquire a majority of the stock and to operate the concern through that majority of stock, just like vast railroad lines are now operated by the majority holders of the stock in them. In other words, there is another instance of the desire of the committee to put the city in the position that it can carry on ordinary business institutions in the ordinary business way, just as other corporations may.

The next section to which I desire to refer is section 223, and I desire to say to you in connection with the mention of this section, that probably ninety-nine out of one hundred of the objections that are being urged to these charter amendments or to any part of them are being urged because of the objections that exist among the managers and owners of these vast public utility corporations against this particular section.

There are various objections to these charter amendments that are being urged by the laboring class as well. The labor organizations have objected to several of these amendments, and I believe that those objections have really been brought up at the instance of the upper class, on the plutocratic side, who represent these corporations and who are spreading about these fancied objections to the charter amendments in order to get both ends of the people, —that is, the upper and the lower classes,—to work against the middle; or, as the saying is in gambling terms, they are working both ends against the middle, in order to defeat these charter amendments, with especial reference to section 223.

That section means that, so far as the distribution of water or anything with reference to the service of the water in the city is concerned, the general law obtains and the only limitation as to the indebtedness as to those two things,—that is, water and sewers,—is the limitation that is imposed by the general law; which is that the bonded indebtedness cannot be more than 15% of the assessed valuation of the city. Aside from that, the section expressly provides that the other indebtedness of the city must not exceed $5,000,000. It doesn't make any difference whether you vote the bond limit up to the full 15% for water or sewer purposes or not, you are forbidden to extend all of the other indebtedness of any kind or character of the city, when added together, beyond the sum of five million dollars.

Now, we are looking forward to a vast amount of power being brought here in connection with the bringing to our doors of the Owens River water, and when you come to the question of the power, being naturally distinct from the distribution of the water and the operating of sewers, you are limited to the five million expenditure. You can't go beyond that. And not only are you limited by that amount, but you are limited by the indebtedness within that amount that may have been incurred for any other purpose; and, hence, if you have three million dollars of indebtedness, then you would have but two millions that could be used for power purposes when you get the electricity here. And if you have any other sum closer up to the five millions, you have still a narrower margin to build the power houses and transmission lines that you will have to construct for the purpose of using this power when it is brought down to you. And so these corporations very naturally have great objection to this section which is proposed by the charter revision committee, because it is designed to get around that limitation and place the city in a position where it can obtain that power for the people

Instead of the limitation of $5,000,000 that is now placed upon the bonded indebtedness, there is a provision in Section 223 limiting the general indebtedness to three per cent. of the assessed value. At the present time the right to distribution of power lies within the five million dollar limitation. Under this amendment it is not placed within the three per cent. limitation which takes the place of that five million limitation; but it is lifted up into the other bonded indebtedness which may extend as far as 12 per centum of the assessed valuation. In other words, it is put exactly in the same category as the water and the sewer questions are now placed. You will see that that will operate as a most effective thing and it is really a most necessary thing to be adopted, in order to extend the powers and the rights and privileges of the city and of its inhabitants with reference to this power that is to come in connection with the Owens River water.

Salary Amendment

In carrying out the assault that is being made upon these charter amendments, there are one or two objections that are being dwelt upon more vigorously than any others; and I desire briefly to refer to those. One of those objections is as to the raising of salaries of city officials. That objection has been quite strenuously urged in certain directions. Some of the labor organizations of the city have objected to the raises. I have been somewhat familiar with the operation of affairs over at the City Hall. I was in the city attorney's office as one of the deputies for a couple of years, and I know the kind of work the men over at that building had to carry on, and I know the outside talent they have to meet in carrying on their work, and I know that their salaries ought to be vastly increased; and I also know that one of the evil tendencies in governmental affairs in this country is the tendency of the people to keep down salaries. The people are absolutely foolish, if you will pardon the expression, as to the salaries of their public officials. They will spend millions of dollars in vast public improvements. They will put large sums of money out in various directions, and at the same time they will expect to employ men to carry on those institutions and the things that are dearest to their hearts upon salaries that no man in any private business would think of getting men of the requisite caliber for.

The present salary list that obtains in the city of Los Angeles was fixed in the charter amendments of 1903, which is almost ten years ago. Now, you all know how this city has increased in importance before the world, and how it has increased in population, and how it has increased in the desire to bring about these vast ventures that have been put on in the last eight or ten years. The city has more than doubled in population in that time.

The mayor now receives $3600 a year; and it is proposed to increase it to $5,000. Now, that is not nearly enough and the only reason the charter revision committee kept it down to $5,000 was because they feared the people, in this very foolish attitude which they assume towards the salaries of their officials, would not allow him a larger salary.

It is proposed to raise the salaries of the councilmen from $1200 per year to $2400 per year. One of the principal assaults is made against this raise. Now, I find that the city councilmen give practically their entire time to the city's business. They undertake, I think, all of them, to carry on some other business, but their other businesses are so paralyzed by the length of time that they spend in the performance of their duties as councilmen that it might just as well be said that they are not carrying on any other business at all. In addition to the work they do in the day time, which most greatly interferes with their private affairs, they are constantly at work at night. They hold night sessions not only in the council, but in committee meetings, and that is a branch of the work that is not generally understood, the amount of time they have to give to committee work.

I believe all of these increases ought to be allowed and that they are really being objected to in a large measure at least upon the theory that there is a desire abroad to defeat these entire charter amendments, very largely for the purpose of defeating section 223.

Why He Stopped

They had been engaged only a week. He had kissed her fully forty times that evening. When he stopped the tears came into her eyes, and she said:

"Dearest, you have ceased to love me."

"No, I haven't," he replied, "but I must breathe."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Exquisite Revenge

Author—I see you gave Blinks an important part in this play. I thought you were not good friends.

Manager—That's all right. He gets mobbed in the last act by a bunch of supers.

"But that's all stage-play."

"Not this time. I have selected these supers from among his creditors.—Life.

In a historical tragedy there are always two heroes, one in the play, and the other in the box office.—Fliegende Blaetter.

LOS ANGELES LIMITED

Three Days To Chicago

This palatial train leaves Los Angeles daily at 10:30 a. m. and arrives at Chicago third day at 11:30 a. m. A solid train of electric lighted sleepers, dining and observation cars, to Chicago and also a sleeper to Denver, closely connecting with St. Louis and Colorado Limited for Kansas City and St. Louis. Particulars at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. 680 Market St., San Francisco, etc., about going east via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and North Western

The New Order of Things

(Continued from page 8)

If I have correctly read the bill, it certainly makes a serious abridgment of personal liberty possible, and partly or wholly clears the way for one school of medicine to secure a practical monopoly of the business of supervising the health of school children.

The bill (assembly bill 984) authorizes and directs the establishment of a system of health and development, with an examining staff and other employes. Under its provisions every city medical director would have the power to gather about him a large staff of medical experts with salaries fixed by the board of education. Fifty-eight county boards would be established, with city boards even more numerous. Provision is also made for "special classes of schools," with trained staffs of experts and almost unlimited demand for public funds. All these county and city boards would be under the general supervision of a State Director of Health and Development to be appointed by the governor, to serve four years and to draw a salary of $4,000 a year. The establishment of the local boards would be permissible in cities of the sixth class and under, but mandatory in the larger cities.

I believe the bill to be framed, possibly unintentionally, so as to permit of a monopolization of the business of the supervision of the physical development and health of school children by physicians of the allopathic, or "regular," school of medicine. Prof. Leslie of Los Angeles, author of the bill, who has been here for something like a month lobbying for it, undoubtedly is sincere in his desire to accomplish something for the physical upbuilding and safeguarding of school children; but I believe he has overlooked the real danger therein.

The Real Danger

The board of regents of the university of the state of California and the several boards of trustees of the state normal schools are authorized and directed to "organize their courses of instruction in this field of education, and give adequate training in practical work to teachers and experts." The bill goes on:

"The examination herein specified shall be conducted in the public schools of the state and in state educational institutions only by health development examining staffs and their assistants holding health and development certificates as herein authorized."

The University of California, which undoubtedly will be the main source of supply for experts in this work, maintains two medical schools, both of which are schools of allopathy.

I quote again from the bill: "An effective follow-up-service which shall bring about effective co-operation between parents, teachers and school authorities in meeting the demands of health, growth and efficiency of pupils, students and teachers, shall be maintained by the educational boards herein specified. Said follow-up-service shall be conducted by examining staffs assisted by trained nurses and social service workers."

Here we have, then, a system founded upon a cornerstone laid by a higher educational system which recognizes one school of medicine. Here we have the publication of the banns of a politico-medical union. Here we have the inauguration of a system of state medicine which is as repugnant to the spirit of American institutions as state religion. With five or six or more different recognized schools of medicine, each jealous of its own development, is there any sound reason why any one particular school, regular or irregular, should be placed in the ascendant in matters of health supervision? Why should a child whose parents are partial to homeopathy, or hydropthy, or naturopathy or any other "pathy" be compelled to submit to examination by a physician in whom such parents have little or no confidence, with an effective follow-up-service and the moral pressure incident thereto in the wake of the examination and report?

It is evident that if the service proposed in this bill is to be effective a uniform method must prevail, and the uniform method would inevitably be the method advocated by the dominant medical school in California. This means medical monopoly, and I don't believe the people of California or any other state, in this age of personal liberty, want anything of the kind, with all due respect to Prof. Leslie. Sanitation, quarantine and inspection is right and proper, but the "follow-up" idea is unthinkable, in my humble judgment.

A Step Toward Arbitration

The Weinstock bill providing for the establishment of a board of inquiry to investigate strikes and lockouts is meeting with some opposition on the part of labor represented at Sacramento, although the labor leaders here freely confess that they see in Colonel Weinstock one of the best friends they have found in the ranks of employers. Colonel Weinstock has devoted years to the study of economic conditions in the various countries where labor problems exist, and his bill (senate bill 918, introduced by Senator Boynton) is the logical outcome of his research.

It provides, briefly, for the organization of a board which shall have authority to investigate and report upon labor troubles in which there is a possibility of strike or lockout. Until such investigation shall have been made and reported upon, employes are forbidden to walk out on strike and employers are forbidden to institute lock-out proceedings. As soon as the report is filed, the strike or lock-out may be declared.

The one big trouble in the past has been that the third party to a strike or lock-out—the people—has rarely been considered by the two parties falsely regarded as being the only ones directly concerned. Not infrequently, especially in the case of labor troubles affecting public utiilty corporations, the public has been the chief sufferer. This particular bill affects none but public utility corporations, in the broad meaning of the term. Inasmuch as the public is vitally concerned, it is argued by the advocates of the measure that the public should know something, officially, of the causes leading up to the troubles and the merits of the movement generally.

It is true, as the labor opponents of the bill contend, that a long drawn out investigation might result disastrously to the employes, by reason of the fact that by such procedure the employer might be be able to collect a sufficient number of men to continue his business in the event of a strike, and then, when the time limit had expired and he might legally declare a lock-out or the employes might legally strike, either declare such lock-out or tell his employes to go ahead and strike and be hanged.

But it is extremely unlikely that such a thing should come to pass more than once. If, under such a law, a board of inquiry should go to the extreme of allowing an investigation to drag along unnecessarily and thus give a great advantage to an employing corporation, say a street railroad company, an outraged public would instantly repeal the law by invoking the initiative. Under normal conditions such a law as this would be of incalculable benefit in the adjustment of labor disputes. It is worth a try-out.

Employers' Liability

While on the subject of labor troubles I am reminded of Senator Roseberry's employers' liability bill, which probably will be put upon the statute books this session. It is not a drastic measure as compared with some laws, but it is strong enough to suit sane and reasonable laboring men. The first section of the bill gives a clue to the character of the whole measure:

"In any action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained within this state by an employe while engaged in the line of his duty or the course of his employment as such, or for death resulting from personal injury so sustained, in which recovery is sought upon the ground of want of ordinary or reasonable care of the employer, or of any officer, agent or servant of the employer, the fact that such employe may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery therein where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross, in comparison, but the damages may be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employe, and it shall be conclusively presumed that such employe was not guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employe contributed to such employe's injury; and it shall not be a defense:

"1. That the employe either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the hazard complained of.

"2. That the injury or death was caused in whole or in part by the want of ordinary or reasonable care of a fellow servant."

This is the doctrine enunciated in the federal statute.

Public Utilities

The public utilities commission amendment probably will be so amended as to eliminate municipality owned public utilities from the rate-making provision. This will enable cities operating under freeholders' charters to run their own utilities—such, in Los Angeles, as the water department, including the power plants; the harbor accessories, the proposed municipal terminal railway, etc.

Anti-Delirium Tremens Bill

Dr. Butler—our own Dr. E. M. Butler, who now adorns the seat once occupied by Walter R. Leeds, for which innumerable thanks, ye electors of the seventieth district—is taking daily exercise for the purpose of getting in first-class fighting trim. He is preparing to put a great big crimp into the advertisers and carriers of advertising of "Every lump is a cancer"; "Have you a lame back! That's impending death through the untold agonies of kidney disease"; "Are you chilly when you're cold? Watch out for the goblin of senile dementia"; etc., etc., unspeakably and unceasingly.

In other words, Dr. Butler has a bill, which he believes he can pass, and which, when law, will relieve the readers of the newspapers, and of one particularly offensive newspaper in Los Angeles, Sunday edition, health department, to be more specific, of the necessity of undergoing the horrors of having waved before their eyes, in their search for news, those quack medical advertisements which, with their accompanying illustrations, sometimes give the people the delirium tremens.

If any of you, people of California, have grown tired and disgusted with the flaunting of these indecent, suggestive and nerve-destroying quack advertisements, want to see the Butler bill placed on the statute books, I would suggest that you write him a line of encouragement. He has a good bill, but it sometimes requires moral suasion from the outside to get even a good bill through a good legislature.

Political Table Talk

(Continued from page 4)

and all. What became of his unpublished junk The Watchman does not know. Half a generation or more ago The Watchman was shown an uncompleted map, as big as an ordinary cottage window, perhaps, that was said to have cost the state $100,000. It was mounted on cardboard and stood against a wall in a San Francisco office, but what became of it deponent knoweth not. Perhaps nothing. The point The Watchman desires to make is that California has needed an engineering department of first quality every day since Ham Hall and his job were cut off, along some time toward the end of the 80's, and a part of its duty should have been to supervise the construction of every state building, to pass upon the plans and specifications of every county building and bridge and otherwise to aid the inexpert representatives of local government to meet expert architects, engineers and contractors on terms of equality. The mistake of abolishing the state engineering department thirty years or so ago saved dimes, but cost dollars.

Supervisors Averse to Being Supervised

But the proposal to require all plans for public buildings to be submitted to a state engineering department for supervision and approval, before contracts are let, would raise fifty-eight storm centers of protest in California if not more. Nobody likes being supervised less than a supervisor and it would require a "bully fight" to get such a measure through the legislature. The Watchman is old enough to hark back, if not as far as the oldest inhabitant, at least far enough to view life with a good bit of perspective. Among his tribulations of long ago were two years devoted to the organization and deliberations of the State Association of Irrigation Districts. One of the good things this association tried to do was to procure the creation of a state engineering department, one of the duties of which was to pass upon and approve or condemn irrigation projects then being formed, not a few of them for the purpose of voting and selling bonds rather than for irrigating land. How these questionable districts did kick! They swamped the legislature with protesting letters and telegrams and succeeded in killing the supervisory plan. Poso district in Kern county was one of the most vigorous protestants. It was able to take care of its own interests and wanted no supervising bureaucratic state official to tangle it up with redtape. Its irrigation works are not yet built and its bondholders are still whistling for their principal and interest. A part of the works of this district lay above a certain gorge that had to be crossed with a flume. When they came to construct it it was found that the end of that flume was some ten feet lower than the ditch that was to carry it on and the water refused to climb that ladder in order to reach the ditch that reached the district. The engineer had blundered and, inasmuch as there was no one to pass upon his work except a board of five farmers to whom it was all Greek anyhow, the district was stumped. For the want of supervision the whole district system floundered in despondency and repudiation for twenty years to the impairment of the state's reputation and credit, the holding back of development, the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars in invested capital, and poverty and misery without end. Desperately does the taxpayer need to have "The Man Who Knows," stand betwixt him and those who mean well but do not know and those who know well but mean ill.

Resurrection of the Irrigation District The importance of a strong and supervisory state department of engineering is emphasized by the fact that the irrigation district system shows signs of coming to life again. California needs to be irrigated. Private enterprise has not found transportation of water, at so much per, as profitable as carrying commodities. In alluvial districts water seeps and in seeping it benefits the land through which the ditches run whether paid for or not. Besides, the district idea is eternally right. It is cooperative in the highest sense, but it is not well adapted to carrying on irrigation enterprises of large dimensions for the reason that the directors, being ordinary farmers, are called upon to pass upon engineering enterprises of the first magnitude and to handle investments that presuppose financial skill. These were the limitations that wrecked the district system and kept them wrecked for twenty years. The legislature has just done what it could to throw about irrigation district bonds every guaranty short of state responsibility for their payment, but whoso visits the graves of the hopes of those who invested in such securities will ask more than this before taking such bonds at par. The least the state can do is to supervise the plans for every such project and subject every constructive contract to expert review before the district becomes bound by its terms. The legality of the proceedings should be affirmed by the attorney general and the feasibility of the enterprise by the state engineer. Fortunately for the rehabilitation of the department of state engineering we have in office a governor who can be relied on to do the right thing if the legislature will give him power to do it and his administration will consummate few reforms more devoutly to be desired than the establishment of a state engineering department on a broad and liberal basis with plenary powers as to supervision of the expenditures of public moneys on constructive enterprises.

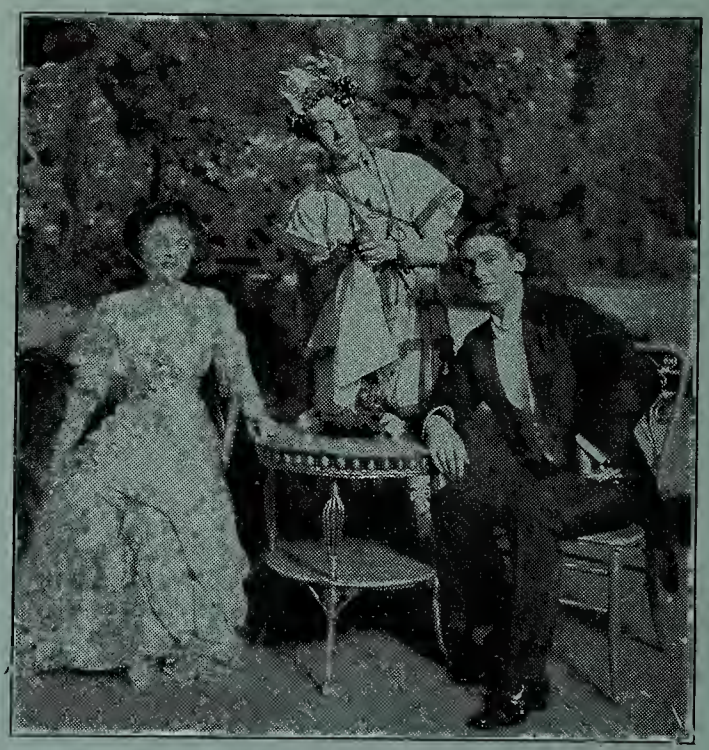
THE TROUBLES OF A PAVEMENT

They took a little gravel
And they took a little tar
With varius ingredients
Imported from afar;
They hammered it and rolled it,
And when they went away
They said they had a pavement
That would last for many a day.
But they came back with picks and smote it
To lay a water main;
And then they called the workmen
To put it back again.
To run a railway cable
They took it up once more;
And they put it back again,
Just where it was before.
They took it up for conduit
To run the telephone;
And then they put it back again
As hard as any stone.
They took it up for wires
To feed the 'lectric light,
And then they put it back again,
Which was no more than right.
Oh, the pavement's full of furrows,
There are patches everywhere:
You'd like to ride upon it,
But it's seldom that you dare.
It's a very handsome pavement,
A credit to the town;
They's always diggin' of it up
Or puttin' of it down.
—Washington (D. C.) Star.

Amusements

"Savage and Refined"

Henry W. Savage has the reputation of sending to the coast the most finished production emanating from New York City. Moreover, he lives up to his reputation. It is especially true in "The Merry Widow," which he has sent here annually for three or four consecutive years.



The production which came back to us this time was as fresh and complete as was the first. One dramatic critic said that it had ninety-eight per cent of its old charm, but had you never seen "The Widow," no doubt you would have declared that it was the best light opera you had ever witnessed.

It was with some foreboding that we heard the announcement that Charles Meakins was to play the part of Danilo, the prince. But he made good. His singing was not quite up to that of George Damarel but his dancing, which is the chief requirement of the man who plays the part, was equal to that of the former master. Mable Wilber, who has been seen here before in the part of "The Widow," like good wine, has improved with time. Her part is exquisitely done and the spirit of the performance that both of them gave placed their share in the operetta on a par with the first night on "The Great White Way."

Other members of the company, many of whom had been seen here before, do their share to make Mr. Savage keep his reputation of sending out to this coast high class productions.

"The Merry Widow" is without doubt the leading light opera of our time, and after four years of suecess it promises to dance on merrily for many years to come.

J. L. B.

SCENE FROM "THE ARCADIANS" MASON OPERA HOUSE, NEXT WEEK

Old Masters, Leopards, Acrobats

The feature of the very entertaining Orpheum bill this week is the act known as "Maxim's Models." In this act nine famous paintings are simulated by living models posed against copies of the backgrounds of the pictures themselves, and the costuming and light effects are so well handled that exclamations of delight are won from the audience at each successive disclosure. "The Sirens" (Thuman) and "Waiting for the Boatman" (Moran) are particularly effective. "The Spirit of '76" (Williard) appeals greatly to the enthusiasm of "those present."

Another act which alone would be worth the price of admission is the skit "Motoring," produced by Harry Tate's English company. It is a hugely ridiculous affair, not a bit less laughable because it has been seen on the local boards before.

The sleek, subtle leopards which perform interesting tricks under the whip of Mme. Vallecita, are fascinating to watch. They do some stunts which are really remarkable accomplishments for felines.

Porter J. White and company appear in an overwrought playlet of marital inconstancy and tricky lawyers, entitled "The Visitor."

Hugh Lloyd continues his remarkable aerial turns.

Arthur Borani and Annie Nevaro are amusing with their freak acrobatics. Some of their twists are splendidly difficult, and besides, Borani has a little dog that is a whole show in himself.

The Victoria Four, a quartette of spick and span dandies, are fairly entertaining. L. B.

Mason

"The Girl in the Taxi" rolled into Los Angeles this week, after a run across the country which is said to have been something of a sensation. The vehicle, when it reached here was somewhat delapidated, however, and while drawing big crowds failed to score as heavily as might have been expected.

The music in parts is very catchy and while affording a pleasant evening there is nothing about "The Girl in the Taxi" which marks it worthy of more than a passing notice. If you believe that the purpose of the theater is merely to amuse, then this production was a success, but if the theater is to give us our light popular music and cause the audience to think just a little bit, in such a contest the "taxi" would break down before it had finished the first lap.

The play is exceedingly light, has some good music and at times furnishes complications and even fun.

J. L. B.

Coming Attractions

Frederick Warde, supported by a company of players, will reveal the beauties of Shakespeare at Hamburger's Majestic theatre for the week beginning Sunday night, during which he will give a revival of Shakespeare's greatest tragedy, "Julius Caesar."

Mr. Warde has been absent from the stage just long enough to make the public anxious to see him again. He is an authority on Shakespeare, and one of the most delightful readers of classic poetry that ever appeared on the stage.

"Julius Caesar" always has been the most popular of the Shakespearean plays. This story of the greatest murder in the history of the world is familiar to every student and reader of history. It contains so much sentiment, philosophy, poetry and action that it appeals more to the general theater-going public than any of the great bard's other plays. Mr. Warde has been identified for years with the character of Marc Antony, but on this occasion will be seen as the noble Brutus. Ernest C. Warde, youngest son of the tragedian, will appear as the "lean and hungry Cassius."

Heading the Orpheum list next week comes Fannie Ward, the English comedienne, in a sketch called "An Unlucky Star," with a company of players. The name of the sketch is its greatest joke, for of all players today, Miss Ward is one of the luckiest. With a great many dollars in her own right, a London town house, with gowns and furs and diamonds in plenty, she still prefers the life of the stage for that of society, and prefers travels to staying at any of her many homes.

Another in the new bill will be Frank Tinney, who says he is a "revelation in burnt cork," and to whom reports attribute a big hit. Tinney is original, unique in his methods, full of fun and has a brand of humor all his own.

Amy Butler, the tiny comedienne, comes with her "big" quartette. Amy is a diminutive person in stature, but in comedy, she has a high place. Her "boys" make her appear even smaller, but in combination, all five put forth a fine artiele of song, patter and fun.

The Reed brothers have one of those acrobatic acts which are always welcome. They are not strangers here.

Holding over from last week are "Motoring," that gale of automobile fun, Mme. Vallecita and her leopard act, Maxim's picture studies, and John Neff and Carrie Starr.

At the Mason on Monday, March 6, for one week, Charles Frohman will present the fantastical musical comedy, "The Arcadians." Mark Ambient and A. M. Thompson wrote the book, and the music is by Lionel Monckton and Howard Talbot, who wrote the music of "Our Miss Gibbs." The plot deals with the adventures of a London restaurant keeper, who takes a trip in an airship and lands in "Arcadia," where Truth, Beauty and Simplicity form the reigning trilogy. Having told the Arcadians of the untruthful propensities of his home town, they wash him in the Well of Truth and send him back with two of their most famous beauties to reform London. He arrives in time to attend the Askwood races, and there meets his wife, who does not recog-size Jim in his simple Arcadian habiliments, and he is invited by her to his own restaurant, where, telling a lie, he reverts at once into his original and prosaic self.

With such a story interpreted by a company of one hundred, including Gilbert Childs, Johnny Osborne, Marie Shields, Moya Mannering, Ruth Thorpe, Alice Russon, Vernon Davidson and other favorites, and staged with the artistic lavishness that marks the production, it is promised that "The Arcadians" will prove a treat for the ear and eye.

"The City," by Clyde Fitch, is the next play to be given its first stock presentation at the Burbank. Miss Susanne Willa will make her first appearance as ingenue of the Burbank company, and will play the same part in "The City" as she did with the traveling company that appeared at the Majestic earlier this season. The story is the chronicle of the Rand family. The elder Rand has made a fortune in business in a small town, but has resisted all the appeals of his family to move to New York. He dies suddenly, and, relieved of his restraint, the family goes to the big city and develops social and political ambitions. The Rands are followed by their family skeleton, in the form of an illegitimate and degenerate son of the elder Rand, who knows he has a hold on them but does not know its source. He proved a bar to Rand's political career and finally there develops a domestic tragedy the utter terribleness of which has seldom been approached by the modern dramatists, or even by the ruthless Greeks.

Music

What power there is in a smile! That is, the kind of a smile that comes from the heart and is not merely a facial contortion. Last Tuesday evening in Simpson Auditorium, Allessandro Bonci saw his beaming, wholehearted smile reflected in the countenance of every individual in the capacity crowd which had gathered to hear him. This cordial relation between singer and audience found expression as the program progressed in the most enthusiastic applause, and if all the encores had received a response there would have been more extras than the regular numbers.

Not content with hand-clapping the enthusiasm found vent in shouts of "Bravo!", stamping of feet and in other unconventional demonstrations.

Especially tumultous applause greeted Signor Bonci's greatest effort of the evening, the "Boheme" Aria, "Che gelida Manina." This beautiful aria was given with such human tenderness, such melting sweetness in the pianissimo and such a fine appreciation of dramatac values, as well as with such perfection of vocalization as made it a perfect achievement from every point of view.

Next to this number Bonci's greatest artistic success was in Debussy's "Romance." Debussy is a composer little understood by the general public, and that this famous tenor presented him in a manner acceptable to his audience, showed his own perfect appreciation of what the composer wished to convey.

Program numbers which proved particularly popular, some by their familiar beauty and others by their worth and splendid presentation were Schubert's "Hark! the Lark" and "To Sylvia," Godard's "Embarquez-vous" and the two MacDowell songs. One revelled in the pure and beautiful tone production shown in Bizet's "Vieille Chauson," and in the first two songs on the program.

Bonci gave a second concert under the management of Mr. Behymer and the Los Angeles City Teachers' Club, Thursday evening in the same place.

M. R. T.

The final arrangements for the Busoni appearances have been completed and the pianist will appear here in two concerts on Tuesday night, March 14th and Friday night, March 17th. The time of Busoni is so taken up that he can appear but four times in all California; two of them in San Francisco and an equal number of dates for Los Angeles. The terms are said to be the highest ever paid any pianist outside of Paderewski.

The date of Bruce Gordon Kingsley's organ recital has been changed from March 10th to March 24th at which time he will play the Auditorium organ, the first of a series of organ recitals arranged for this spring at popular prices. At the opening, he will be assisted by Mr. Bierlich, violinist, and Miss Lilly Dorn, soprano, with Gertrude Ross presiding at the piano for ensemble numbers.

On Thursday, March 9th, at Cumnock Hall, Edith Hains-Kuester, composer and pianist of New York, and Roland Paul, tenor, will present a joint recital, Mr. Paul singing several songs composed by Mrs. Kuester, she playing the accompaniment on the piano.

BUSSONI, PIANIST, SIMPSON AUDITORIUM, MARCH 14-17

Their Verdict

"Fetch the body," ordered the foreman of a Texas coroner's jury.

The body was laid before them. The jury made a careful examination and questioned the attending surgeon.

"Whar was he shot?"

"Square through the heart."

"Dead in the center of the heart."

"Right in the center."

"Who shot him?"

"Jake Daniels."

A dozen witnesses declared that Jake fired the shot, and Jake himself admitted it. The jury consulted softly for some time.

'Well, gentlemen of the jury," said the coroner, "what's your verdict?"

"Waal, Jedge," answered the foreman, "we've come to the conclusion that Jake Daniels is the dandiest shot in these parts—and don't forget it."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Jester's Bells

Accepted

Poet—"Will you accept this poem at your regular rates?"

Editor—"I guess so—it appears to contain nothing objectionable. Go to the advertising department and ask them what the rates are. How many times do you wish it inserted?—Cleveland Leader.

Quite Enough

"Oh, sir, will you please come at once. There's three brutes jumping on a poor organ-grinder."

"Is he a big organ-grinder?" queried the old gentleman calmly.

"No, no, sir, quite a little man. Oh, come at once, or it will be too late!"

"I don't see why I should interfere," replied the old gentleman. "If he's a small man the three men don't need any help."—Tit-Bits.

Catalogued

Two women on a train, seated together, held each a covered basket. From one a faint shuffling noise proceeded, while from the other came, now and then, an indignant purr.

The conductor came by.

"Dogs ain't allowed on this train," said he.

"This is a cat!" protested the owner of the purring basket.

"Makes no difference—dogs ain't allowed," repeated this stolid logician.

"But I get off, too?" inquired the other woman. "I have a turtle in this basket."

"No, ma'am; turtles is insec's, but cats is dogs," he told her—Short Stories.

Another Reason

"Do you think the Panama Canal ought to be fortified?"

"Certainly," replied the artistic girl. "A few fortifications will make the postcard pictures of it ever so much more quaint and attractive."—Washington Star.

A Success

Byker—I attended a successful slight-of-hand performance last night.

Pyker—Really?

Byker—Yes. I lent a conjurer a counterfeit half-crown, and he gave me back a good one.—Tit-Bits.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
233 S. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

MASON OPERA HOUSE W. T. WYATT
Broadway bet. 1st and 2d Sts. Manager
Week Commencing Monday, March 6th; Matinee Saturday.
Special Ladies' Matinee Wednesday. Prices 50c, 75c, $1.00.
CHARLES FROHMAN Presents the Sensational Musical Comedy Triumph,
"THE ARCADIANS"
With Its Wonderful Cast and Company. Stunning Show Girls of Classic Beauty. Prices—50c to $2.00.
Coming—FRANCIS WILSON. Seats Now on Sale.

MOROSCO'S BURBANK THEATER Main Street
Los Angeles' Leading Stock Company Near Sixth
Beginning Next Week There Will Be Matinees Every Thursday
First Stock Presentation of Clyde Fitch's Masterpiece
"THE CITY"
Prices 25, 50, 75c. Matinees Sunday, Thursday, Saturday, 10, 25, 50c.

HAMBURGER'S MAJESTIC THEATER Broadway
Los Angeles' Leading Playhouse. Oliver Morosco, Mgr. Near Ninth
Beginning Sunday Night March Fifth
FREDERICK WARDE The Distinguished Tragedian, and a Notable Company, Presents
Shakespeare's Greatest Tragedy
JULIUS CAESAR
Nights and Sat. Mat. 50c to $1.50. Popular Wed. Mat. best seats $1.00.
Coming—GERTRUDE ELLIOTT in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow."

ORPHEUM THEATRE VAUDEVILLE Spring St., Bet. 2d & 3d, Los Angeles, Cal.
Mat. Every Day Both Phones 1447 Mats. 10, 25, 50c. Night, 10, 25, 50, 75c
Beginning Monday Matinee March 6
FANNIE WARD & CO. "An Unlucky Star"
FRANK TINNEY "Revelation in Burnt Cork"
AMY BUTLER And Her Quartette
REED BROTHERS Acrobats
"MOTORING" Harry Tate's Comedians
MME. VALLECITA And Her Leopards
MAXIM'S MODELS Paintings Reproduced
NEFF & STARR The Brainstorm Comedians
ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES

CHAMOUNY APARTMENTS

Northeast Cor. W. 11th and Grand View Streets
Opposite BEAUTIFUL PALM PLACE

MOST ATTRACTIVE APARTMENT HOUSE IN LOS ANGELES

Contains large private balconies leading from all rooms. Extra services provided such as the washing of dishes, etc. Apartments for rent by the month or will lease for definite term. Prices $65.00 per month and up. Includes all general expenses.

NOW READY FOR OCCUPANCY. ELEGANTLY FURNISHED. Telephone 55203; Wilshire 1958

MRS. N. WILLIAMS ANDERSON, Manager

LAST WEEK WE ASKED YOU TO HELP US

in making this paper an established success by getting some of these blanks signed. Many of the good friends of of the Progressive Movement in California did so, which was thoroughly appreciated.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK
A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY
LOS ANGELES and SAN FRANCISCO

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 1018 Phelan Bldg., San Francisco, or 311 E. 4th St. Los Angeles.

DID YOU

If not, wont you kindly render the good cause a real service by doing it NOW———— ?

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK
A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Cal State Library 12-31-10

Vol. X. No. 11 | Los Angeles and San Francisco, March 11, 1911 | 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Three Dollars Per Head

CHICAGO RECENTLY WENT through a hot primary campaign for city offices, final choice to be made by and by at an election. To educate the vote and then get it out cost an average of $3 for every vote polled, just for this preliminary skirmish. The cost was too much and the burden upon the willing ones was too heavy. What is wanted is a way to make the fellow who shirks his franchise duties pay the cost of educating the voter who votes. The accomplishment of this should be one of the next things taken up.

The Social Message of the Church

ZEST HAS LATELY BEEN COMMUNICATED to religious circles in the bay district by the presence for a few weeks of Doctor Aked, pastor of what is known as the Rockefeller church in New York, mainly because John D. passes the plate. In an interview Dr. Aked is reported as declaring that, "The church that has no social message has no excuse for existence," and that, "You cannot save the individual if you don't save the city and state." Save them from what, Dr. Aked? From the Rockefellers and Calhouns, the Morgans and Ryans? If so, jesso, and we do not know which coast needs your gospel most.

What Will the Democrats Do?

IT IS UP TO THE DEMOCRATS. They now have the first chance that has come to them in two decades. Will they take that chance and make the most of it, or will they dig up the bones of Jefferson and Jackson and hold an old-time wake? Will they forget those ancient shades, and the things that fitted their time but do not fit our own, to stand for things that fit our time however they might have fitted theirs? Hitherto we have counted on the Democrats to "queer" themselves by doing the wrong thing at the right time, and never had they a righter time for doing a wrong thing than they will have on or about All Fool's Day. If they make the welkin ring with harrangues in favor of tariff for revenue only, with plenty of accent on the "only," their name will be "Dennis" for twenty years more. Is it in them to be statesmen, or must they be time-serving politicians for ever? God give them neither genius nor gift of tongues, but only the saving grace of common sense.

True Proletarians

IN THE "I WON'T WORKS," with whom Fresno has lately been at loggerheads, we find the true, American proletarians, discontent, radicalism, fanaticism, homelessness, houselessness, hopelessness and all. If Marx and Engel were right the I. W. W.'s are the consummation of the capitalistic system and, when it has wrought its perfect work, all society will be made up of such as these on the one hand and the Rockefellers, Elkinses, Carnegies, Fricks and Harrimans on the other. Inviting prospect isn't it! The question at issue is, shall we leave these "forces" blindly to work out their unintelligent worst for mankind or shall we take them in hand, modify them, train them and consciously ordain that they restore that equality of opportunity which promises enough for all who will try and room to spare with all artificial barriers burned away. It is up to us to prevent Socialism by making Capitalism lead to something better.

Has the President Broken Loose?

THERE IS NO MAN of whom the American people so want to think well of as William Howard Taft. Elected a progressive he had no sooner taken office than he consorted with the reactionaries, estranged himself from the progressives and "took program" rather than prescribed it. Has he broken loose? It looks like it. The standpatters were against Canadian reciprocity. He is for it. They sought to bluff him out of his position. He not only called their bluff but fixed the date of the extra session to suit the Democrats and not the Republicans. Has he broken with his party, too? Is he going it alone? Is he balking or bucking or merely being president and making his appeal directly to the American people, as he should have done from the first. His redemption to political salvation now rests upon his ability to sense the will of the people and enforce it, party or no party. Signs and portents indicate that, at last, he is striving to do exactly that thing, the thing that made Roosevelt famous.

Bars Down or Up?

THE LEGISLATURE seemed on the eve of letting in the graduates of anything called a law school to practice at the bar without an examination, thought better of it and concluded to let none in save graduates of Hastings. Why Hastings, a second rate school at best? Had not the bar associations of California abdicated all their proper functions, including that of turning their rascals out, the matter of admission to the bar might be turned over to them as to the British Inns of Court. The courts perform that service perfunctorily and not all of the justices are as competent to examine as to a knowledge of law as of politics. The need is for a state board of law examiners, nominated by bench and bar and appointed by the governor, examinations to be held regularly, openly and searchingly for the protection of business and the elevation to a profession of an occupation that has come to be a trade.

Will Ruef Come Through?

SHUNTED TO PRISON WALLS at last, with time to think over, will Abe Ruef "take his medicine" in silence or will he throw himself upon the mercy of the state and come through with the whole miserable story of graft, extenuating nothing, sparing none? That is the question. It is in him to shuffle and haggle, wriggle and twist, but is it in him to take punishment with fortitude, shielding others to his own harm? Much credit is due Attorney General Webb for daring to beard the supreme court in its lair. Although the court did the rightest of acts for the wrongest of reasons the act will serve the ends of justice passing well, provided that the Attorney General follow up his initial victory by taking out of the hands of District Attorney Fickert what is left of the graft cases and prosecuting them to final determination. Will he do it? If not will the governor order him to do it? The full story of Ruef, told from a broken and contrite heart, would, alone, be worth more to justice, almost, than the conviction of Calhoun and the rest in that it would so fasten upon successful scoundrelism the taint of guilt that it would not out for three generations. That would be a punishment the sting of which no balm would relieve, no bragadocio ward away or help to live down; that, more than stripes and prisons, is the vindication of the law. Will Ruef come through?

THE RECALL OF BALLINGER

It has come at last—the long expected retirement of Ballinger. For two years he has hung like a mill-stone around the neck of the gasping, struggling administration. It is known that great influence from his own wing of the party, the reactionary, "old guard" element, was brought to bear on him before the campaign began last summer to induce him to resign, and it is believed that he offered to go if the president would indicate his wish to that effect, but that no such desire was ever expressed. With the exception possibly of Aldrich and his special interest tariff, Ballinger was the chief cause of the overwhelming defeat that came upon the regular republican organization last November. The party, the people of the nation and the president himself are all well rid of him, although it is evident Mr .Taft does not appreciate his good fortune.

The appointment of Walter L. Fisher to succeed him deserves the very highest commendation. He is the very antithesis of Ballinger in his devotion to the general interest as against the interest of a favored few. The sentiment of partisanship is absolutely lacking in him, as his entire political life has been spent in teaching the people of Chicago to elect men solely on their personal merit. His appointment by Taft is an amazing thing, for he has been one of the active leaders of the progressive movement in the middle west, and at the time Charles R. Crane of Chicago was appointed minister to China, and then suddenly and mysteriously removed, Walter Fisher denounced this administration in most unequivocal language.

The letter of President Taft in which he accepts the secretary's resignation is not to his credit either as a gentleman, or a party leader, or as chief executive of a dignified nation. It is another of those amazing mistakes that have marked his unhappy career in the White House, the worst perhaps of the whole series, if we except the Norton letter on patronage. With the most intemperate and unlicensed choice of word and phrase, the president seems to be trying to indict the whole American people. Among those who took part in this "unscrupulous conspiracy" and this "malicious and unprincipled plan," who resorted to the "meanest methods including corruption" were numbers of men who have held or are still holding some of the highest public positions, writers and publicists of the most notable order, lawyers of eminence, and millions, literally millions, of intelligent American citizens, before whom all the evidence was laid in detail and who returned a verdict of guilty. Guilty of what? Of anything indictable or impeachable. No. That was never charged. What then? Of entertaining views and opinions with respect to the destiny and disposal of the nation's remainder lands and other resources that were not in harmony with the purposes of the great body of the people. The situation is exactly analogous to those for which the recall is designed. There is no national recall, but there is a national public sentiment, and Ballinger and his principal have at last come to know its powerful and pitiless force.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK
A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

LOS ANGELES, 311 East Fourth St.
SAN FRANCISCO, 1018 Phelan Building.

Published in LOS ANGELES Every Saturday

Subscription Price $1.00 a Year, in Advance.
Single Copies 5 Cents at News Stands.

A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing
C. D. WILLARD } Editors

C. H. RANDALL, Manager

TRUSTEES
Harris Weinstock, San Francisco.
Selah Chamberlain, San Francisco.
W. F. Chandler, Fresno.
M. Lissner, Los Angeles.
E. A. Dickson, Los Angeles.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Application made for entry for THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK in the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, as second-class mail matter.

OUR NEW MANAGER

With this issue Charles H Randall assumes the management of the California Outlook. The trustees of the Outlook feel particularly fortunate in securing the services of one so well qualified for a position that has so much to do with the ultimate success of this publication. Mr. Randall is not alone a practical newspaper man but a thorough progressive! He has for years been one of the leaders in the reform movement in Los Angeles. He is a member of the present Legislature, being Assemblyman from the 74th Assembly District, comprising portions of the city and of the county of Los Angeles. Immediately upon adjournment of the legislature he will enter actively upon his duties in connection with this publication, and we feel assured will make of it, in a little while, the established success that the cause it represents so richly deserves.

Trustees, California Outlook.

FRANK FLINT THAT WAS

It is sad to write of the dead, but it is sadder yet sometimes to write of those who have passed away and yet continue in physical existence. In the last two years the people of California have looked on and beheld the complete disintegration of the promising political career of Frank P. Flint of Los Angeles, senator from this state. To those who knew and esteemed him as a man, irrespective of politics—as did most of his fellow-townsmen—there is something almost appalling in the thoroughness and rapidity of his downfall. And he has been from the beginning the architect of his own ruin. No one has attacked or defamed him. The whole story is to be found in his official acts as senator.

We are warned that we must not expect to gather grapes from thorns nor figs from thistles. Here was one who as a man was in every way agreeable, clever, trustworthy and sincere. He ranked high in his profession, and in local matters had shown the best quality of citizenship. He had held public office with great credit to himself and his party. His record in politics at the time of his election as senator was that of every man who had gained high position in republican councils, viz.: that he kept peace with the Southern Pacific company and worked in with the state machine. Yet his influence within the party seemed to be good, for he often stood out against bad nominations and fought iniquitous laws. The real test was coming, however, on his election as senator; and when he returned to Los Angeles after the legislature had chosen him and announced openly in speeches and interviews that he owed his election to Walter Parker, it was the preface to a career of which the vote for Lorimer and the vote against direct choice of senators by the people form the logical closing chapters.

For a time his very frankness stood him in good stead. Why should he not admit what every human being of any political judgment knew to be true? There were even those who contended that Flint had a purpose in throwing this fact in the people's face. Indeed, whether he meant it or not, he certainly performed a service of deep political import when he made public his obligation to the Southern Pacific. Those words and the hand of Governor Gillett on the shoulder of Abe Ruef brought the lesson home to every freeman in the state.

A Southern Pacific senator? Well, we were used to them, with the possible exceptions of Stephen M. White and Thomas R. Bard, we had known no other kind for thirty years or more. We knew that he would play the game according to the rules, take good care of our local interests, see that we got plenty of protection on California products, and obey the wishes of the people, except where they conflicted with the orders of the big corporation.

And during the first four years of his term all went well between the senator and his constituency. No issues arose in which the line was distinctly drawn. He voted for railway rate regulation, but that was easy, for before the vote was cast he knew the measure was sure to win. In those days majorities were so large that things were, so to speak, settled out of court, and the final vote was a mere formality. And the public was not wise then to the significance of votes in committee and on amendments and subsidiary motions, whereby measures were quietly ruined or smothered. There was a little flurry about a mistake in a harbor bill which might have delivered the west basin of Wilmington to the railroad, but that was all explained—and corrected; and there was also the sudden removal of Fries from San Pedro to Washington in the midst of his gallant fight against corporate domination; but we did not lay that up against the senator—not all of us at least.

Then came the extra session of 1909; to revise the tariff. And now we began to see our senator in a new light, as an open and avowed member of the Aldrich special interest syndicate. As one schedule after another went to vote, and in the hundred or more calling of the ayes and nays, there were just two senators who invariably voted as Aldrich did. These were Flint of California and Smoot of Utah. There are peculiar reasons why Smoot, the Mormon, dares not speak above a whisper in the presence of the Organization, but what was there to make a slave out of Flint? Lemons? Why, every senator in the syndicate was leading around his own sacred cow, but they all —even Penrose, the cheap Philadelphia boss, and Depew, the sorry joke of New York—voted against Aldrich on many points.

Great was the enthusiasm over the lemon tariff, until the railroad gobbled it up; and then the people stopped to think.

Through the whole of the next session, from December, 1909, to June, 1910, the insurgents and the progressive democrats of the senate fought to give us a postal savings bank that was not a mere bluff, to establish a bona-fide commerce court and to make the interstate commerce act effective, to protect the lives of railway employes and to save public lands from private spoliation. And from time to time, as this program proceeded, papers like Collier's and La Follette's and Success, watching the votes in committees and on amendments and motions to smother, gave us the name of Senator Flint as one of Aldrich's closest lieutenants, always on the reactionary side, always against the people's interest. There was no longer a shadow of doubt as to where he stood.

Then came the primaries and Senator Flint, very wisely, refused to stand for reelection. He declared that it would cost any man who made a proper canvass $100,000. What his idea was of a proper canvas will always remain a mystery for the man who was finally chosen senator spent less than $1000 on his campaign, and was not backed by any corporation.

The short and astonishing session of 1910-11 is fresh in the memory of all of us. Flint voted for the ship subsidy, he was against reciprocity, he voted no on the election of senators by the people and he voted yes on the seating of Lorimer who bought his way into the senate. It is not strange that he was willing to whitewash Lorimer as he had been one of the committee that performed a similar service for Ballinger.

Senator Flint's only newspaper support in the southern part of the state, where his political strength once lay, is the Los Angeles Times, which will stand for anybody that is reactionary. But even the Times was so ashamed of his vote on Lorimer that it suppressed the list of ayes and nays in its telegrams from Washington, and it failed to run in its Sacramento dispatch any reference to the action of the assembly condemning him.

Senator Flint did not return home last summer, but paid a visit to Europe. Now he has been appointed on Aldrich's monetary commission by Vice-President Sherman, a position with the same pay as a senator, which may last a year or two. It it understood that he will then take up the practice of law in New York, where he will, beyond doubt, enjoy a high degree of success.

There you have the story. And even yet there are in Los Angeles scores of good men who are dazed by these proceedings and do not understand them.

For Frank Flint, the man, Los Angeles will have always a pleasant welcome, with the latch string out. But the picture of Frank Flint, once a senator from California, will be turned with its face to the wall.

C. D. W.

SELF, BROTHER & COMPANY

"The existing order," explained a Socialist, "is splendidly exemplified in the saying, 'Everybody for himself, the Devil take the hindermost,' but we Socialists propose to so amend that proverb as to make it read, 'Everybody for his brother, the Devil take those who will not stand for it.'"

The ideals of a people may not prove as puissant in forming their history as the evolutionary forces heaven planted within them or as that economic pressure which hedges them about, but they are important and the amendment above suggested by the Socialist is well advised. Nevertheless, there should be an amendment to the amendment to make the legend read something like this: "Everybody for Self, Brother and Company, the Devil take himself to that bourn from whence no traveler returns," the "company" standing for stranger peoples outside our national gens. The world has no further need for a devil of any description.

But let us not quarrel over-much with what has brought us thus far, for there was no progress in the world of man until someone said of something: "This is mine, touch it at your peril, if you wish the like go and make one for yourself as I made this." I do not call the spirit selfishness. I prefer to call it self-helpfulness and I find it at least a mainspring of human achievement. He is but an idle dreamer who, in constructing any theory of human society, fails of giving to Self the primacy as an every-day incentive to productive effort. It is said to be possible to sweep the city of London in thirty minutes, by each householder sweeping in front of his own door, and I am sure that it cannot be swept quicker or better by each householder sweeping in front of his neighbor's door instead of his own. Self has brought us far, so far that we now know pretty nearly what we want.

Let us see if this be not so.

The Standard Oil Company is one of the most stupendously splendid industrial and commercial mechanisms the world has seen since Joseph went down into Egypt and put Pharaoh onto the scheme of cornering the corn market. By the way, herein was the early piety of John D. Rockefeller signally rewarded. There can be no doubt that in the sagacity of Joseph he found the germinal ideal by which he has ordered his life. It was simplicity itself. It consisted merely in cornering corn when it could be bought below the cost of production and holding it until it could be sold at the price of the confiscation of the farms that had produced it, a line of conduct from which the Standard Oil Company has not deviated. The genius of Rockefeller consisted in gathering about him strong Pharaohs who could husband the capital with which to do the cornering.

But the Standard Oil Company has exactly what every department of human industry needs to have—capital enough to do the cornering, facilities for transportation, storage capacities and selling agencies. Only one thing it lacks: the remembrance that the consumers of its products are not enemies to be exploited, but brothers to be served and that all members of the "Company" are to be supplied as cheaply as possible rather than for all that the traffic will bear.

The Huntington and Harriman concept of a unification of the transportation system of the entire country into a single management was splendid. It ought to come to pass. Superfluous roads should be taken up and put down where needed, the commerce of the nation needs to be massed at strategic points for forwarding along lines of least resistance by a single guiding hand, not, however, to take as increment the cream of the industry of a continent for the behoof of idle spenders bent on vainglorious squandering. Again, "Brother & Company," have been swallowed and cheated by "Self" the senior member of the firm.

The anthracite coal products of Pennsylvania are infinitely better handled than they were under the old competitive system before "Grace of God" Baer and his associates reduced them to subjection. Then there were feasts and famines in the coal market. Now there is a steady, economical, conserving famine. Again "Brother & Company" are exploited by "Self," the faithless member of the partnership.

Consider our cold storage system, and the beef combine. There is nothing finer up to the point where prices are fixed. The fault is that prices are not fixed with reference to justice to "Brother," or "Company," but to enable "Self" to prepare and dispose of that quantity which can be made to yield the largest possible profit.

As inevitably as Pharaoh became the sole proprietor (barring the privileged priests), of all Egypt, and the people of Egypt became his servants, so must our modern financial Pharaohs, if present tendencies go on unhindered and uncontrolled, take to themselves and their descendents and assigns the ownership of all America and make the American people their servants. All the things these people are doing are Right Things save one—the price fixing. All the work of organization and systematization needs to go on to perfection, but except that Pharaoh's profit of a fifth be reduced to a twentieth or near it, the end of middle-class independent proprietorship is as certain as anything human.

We have entered upon the policy of control of "Self" in the interests of "Brother & Company," but not upon the elimination of Self from the firm. As my colleague intimated a fortnight ago this may involve a revolution in our form of government and profound changes in the ideals which men hold, but we shall try the remedy to a finality. If it fail there will be nothing for it but the socialization of all productive wealth, the dissolution of the copartnership of "Self, Brother & Company," by the dropping of Self from the firm. After that, Everybody for his brother and the Devil take those who will not stand for it."

A. J. P.

* * *

PRESS COMMENT

"The automobile is a tool of civilization," says a motor journal. Or weapon?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Match Trust in surrendering its patent on sesquisulfid matches points a lesson to other monopolies which is more luminous than its product.—New York World.

Express companies lowering rates at every little progressive movement has a meaning of its own.—Omaha News.

The Treasury Department has decided to print more dollar bills. It appears to be the unanimous opinion that they are needed.—Chicago Record-Herald.

They Are Staying With Their Job A fortnight since The Watchman became fearful that pressure of home interests might tempt our legislators to quit before they got through, adjourn and go home. His uneasiness was unwarranted. Nate Coghlan did not get a second to his motion to fix the day of adjournment and the good work in hand will go on until it is finished. Of course not all the legislating can be done that will sometime have to be done and it will be well for this legislature to leave something for the next legislature to do. Opportunity must be given the people as a whole to catch up with what will be done by this session. From the first The Watchman has expected that the fortieth, rather than the thirty-ninth, session would prove the history-making session. Governor Johnson and his progressive associates need two years of good, hard thinking, of observation and of public discussion to pave the way for the more radical legislation. It gives joy to The Watchman to see a legislature "up and a coming," but he does not wish to see one riding ahead of the hounds. There is just a wee bit of danger of that this time.

Commissions or Commissioners There ran a proverb in the days of The Watchman's childhood to this effect: 'One boy is a boy, two boys are half a boy and three boys are no boy at all," and the same holds measurably true with regard to commissions. A man is only a boy of larger growth and, if he be a politician, he is not unlikely to do as much "fooling" after being grown up as before. When responsibility is divided among three men opportunity is given for shirking, and how the members of a commission of three will squirm and wriggle to put the responsibility on to one of the other fellows! If, however, there is no one to whom the "buck" can be passed no effort will be made to pass it and responsibility will be shouldered without a shuffle. In planning to remodel the present board of prison politicians this fact should be heeded by our legislators. The suggestion of former Senator Belshaw that a constitutional amendment be submitted to the people replacing the present prison board with a board of three, who shall have charge of the prisons and reform schools, will be an improvement on the present system, but not that improvement which may as well be had as not. What is needed to give that arm of the state service the snap, efficiency and responsibility it needs is a state department of prisons and reformatories with a general superintendent at the head and an office force organized by him. This will give us some trained men with power to act and inability to shirk and if we can find one man big enough to be governor he can find one big enough to be a superintendent of prisons and reformatories. While we are remodeling the prison system why not do it right?

A Private Protest The Watchman wishes to file a private protest against selling the State Normal school grounds in Los Angeles or giving them to Los Angeles. He has fought this idea at every opportunity for more than six years in the belief that the day is not far distant when the state will need that admirable plot of ground for its own use. The state should not eternally rent, but should own its court buildings and, unless the state is meantime divided (and The Watchman finds a growing tendency north of Tehachapi to be reconciled to that ultimate eventuality, a stately state building should adorn that exceptionally attractive site in which to house state courts and commissions that will have to be maintained in Los Angeles for the convenience of the southern portion of the state. That is a good piece of property for the state to hold on to whatever becomes of the normal school.

"Pernicious Abstractions" That is what Lincoln called those inconsequential subjects for debate such as whether "states lately in rebellion" were ever out of the union or had always been in it, secession to the contrary notwithstanding. It was plain enough to his practical mind that there had been changed relations of some sort between the states of the union and the business in hand was to reconstruct those relations in some practical way however the theory of it might stand. In opposing Senate Bill No. 918 the representatives of labor indulged themselves in some of those "pernicious abstractions" so convenient as subject matter for debate, but almost wholly inconsequential when the purpose is to solve, in some practical way, some difficult social problem.

Here is one of those "pernicious abstractions" laid down by Mr. Walter Macarthur, one of the sanest, ablest and fairest of the champions of the cause of labor: "The right to personal liberty is inherent, inalienable, absolute," "in all circumstances other than those of military necessity," which simply isn't so. Mr. Ruef is being deprived of his liberty without the smallest military necessity. Mr. Macarthur has an undoubted personal right to proceed up or down Market street in San Francisco at his own pleasure, but if he wishes to do so in company with the entire membership of the "International Seamen's Union of America," he will have to arrange for the parade with the chief of police who, for a reason which seems to him good, may refuse the exercise of that liberty altogether. The liberty of every person is bounded on every side by the liberties of every other person and every right we have as individuals is subject to qualification, limitation or denial in so far as insistance upon them may work wrong to society in the large. As to all the provisions incorporated in Senate Bill No. 918 The Watchman is not advised, but the principle of it was sound in that it affirmed the right of society, upon its own behalf, to interfere whenever wager of battle has been tendered by either labor or capital until the cause of the trouble may be inquired into and, if possible, adjudicated. Mr. Macarthur has a right to settle any personal difference he may have with any other person in his own way, provided that such settlement does not involve a breach of the peace. There his right ends and the right of society to interfere on its own behalf begins. The same holds as true with the whole International Seamen's Union as with Mr. Macarthur.

Personal Liberty vs. Public Interest One more "pernicious abstraction": "Personal liberty and public interest are in this matter synonymous, interchangeable and inseparable." They are not. They are no more so than the public interest and the right of private contract by which the courts, until lately, held that no law could be enacted which would prevent women contracting to work sixteen or more hours a day. Thanks chiefly to Mr. Brandeis the supreme court of the United States, and of several progressive states, have held that the personal liberty of women is subject to the public interest in preserving an unimpaired power for motherhood. In truth there is not a right under the sun, not even that of life, that is not subordinate to the well-being of the species. The trouble is that both labor and capital want a free field, no favor and a chance to fight out their difficulties man fashion without regard to public interest. Society cannot allow this with bodies of men any more than it can with two individual men. The question of freedom or slavery of labor or capital is not involved, but only the question of the establishment of justice between men and men as well as between man and man. The Watchman ventures the hope that Mr. Harris Weinstock will not be discouraged by his temporary defeat. However his bill may be as to detail it is sound in principle and society must travel that way or resolve itself into chaos. The contentions of the champions of labor in this contest had no more to commend them to the common sense of mankind than those of the supreme courts of Illinois and Massachusetts which, that they might nullify the ten hour law as to women, harked back to a dictum of Blackstone which affirmed that there could be no public interest, not even that of power for unimpaired motherhood, so important as the preservation of the right of private contract. To be as "mossbacky" as those courts is a reproach to our modern labor leadership.

Adieu to the Mortgage Tax The decision of Attorney General Webb, that no mortgages are to be assessed this year, probably marks the last of the taxation of mortgages after more than thirty years of disappointing experience. And yet, in principle, the taxation of mortgages as a property interest in the mortgaged property was absolutely sound. The only trouble was that in the application of that principle there was vexation, difficulty and injustice to the borrower, who may only propose while the lender disposes. But the difficulties encountered and injustices inflicted in the attempt to enforce the mortgage tax were inconsequential compared with the fiasco of imposing and collecting taxes upon personal property. The principle is all right, the application of it all wrong, and the attempt to tax personal property should be abandoned. With the abandonment of the tax on personal property should go the imposition of taxes upon improvements on real estate. The Watchman is not a single taxer, for he believes in tariff taxes for their own sake and in corporation taxes and taxes on incomes and inheritances as being well grounded in public policy, but so much of the single tax idea as appertains to taking for the benefit of all of us a share of that unearned increment which all of us create, is sound in principle, not difficult of application and should become a part of the taxation policy of all our cities and counties. A good beginning has been made in California in the system of reforming taxation, but it is only a beginning. There is need to push ahead with discussion and education until justice is done and a feasible policy of taxation has been worked out.

Chas. F. Curry Out for Mayor Of course it was not thinkable that Charles F. Curry would undertake to live without an office. And why should he? He has many aptitudes for a public life and his mental capacity no one will question. He has but one serious fault and it is that he founds his political fortunes entirely upon patronage. That is the one instrument he knows how to use to the one end he seeks. If he could ever get out from under the shadow of that obsession there are few men in the state who could or would serve more efficiently or unselfishly than Curry, but that one culpability mars all that he does and all that he is. Nevertheless, he is out for mayor of San Francisco and a pretty fight we shall see. McCarthy is not likely to step aside without a tug-of-war and McCarthy is strong where Curry is strong,—in the ranks of labor, in the Royal Arch, the tenderloin, in the ancient order of bartenders. McCarthy is a marplot. San Francisco shivers when McCarthy goes to Washington to represent the

(Continued on Page 15)

PASADENA'S MUNICIPAL LIGHTING PLANT

How that City Secured the Lowest Electric Lighting Rates in the United States

By C. W. KOINER, General Manager Municipal Lighting Works Department, Pasadena, Cal.

In casting about for relief from what the citizens considered high rates and poor service, Pasadena was forced to install a light and power plant in order that they might have good service and electric energy at a reasonable price.

Bonds were voted to the amount of $125,000.00 and a direct tax of $52,332.35 was levied. With this sum the plant was begun and completed to the extent that the funds would allow. It was found that this sum was not sufficient to install a complete street lighting system so an additional bond issue of $50,000.00 was authorized by the people and later, another issue of $150,000.00 was authorized for the purpose of furnishing electrical energy for commercial light and power,—the last bonds having been voted seven to one in favor of extending the Municipal Lighting System.

At the time of the last bond issue, it was only intended to supply electrical energy to about 2250 consumers. It was not the purpose of the city to run the company with which it was entering into competition, out of the field. The city's desire was to establish a reasonable rate, to properly light the streets and to furnish all commercial users with electrical energy who desired to take of the city. At that time, the Southern California Edison company offered to purchase the city's lighting system and give a maximum base rate of 9 cents per K. W. H. for commercial light and reduce the street lighting ten per cent. After careful analysis, this offer did not prove attractive and the council courteously declined same and the officers of the Southern California Edison company were waited upon with a view of the city purchasing their overhead system and with a further view of purchasing power at wholesale rates from them, provided it could be purchased at a rate lower than it would cost the city to generate it. The company declined the proposition and the city continued to construct and complete its system over the entire city.

The city took over its street lighting July 1, 1907, and began to furnish commercial service October 1, 1908. It was estimated that the city could charge the following rates for street lighting, which was 60 per cent less than it had been paying for incandescent lamps and 20 per cent less for street arcs:

	Per month
Arcs	$5.00
40 c. p. Tungstens	1.00
60 c. p. Tungstens	1.50
80 c. p. Tungstens	2.00
Cluster posts per K. W. H.	.03

The following scale of rates was established for commercial light and power, which was 33 per cent less than the maximum base rate which consumers had been paying:

Light

	Per K. W. H.
First 100 K. W. H.	$ .08
Next 900 K. W. H.	.07
Next 4000 K. W. H.	.06
Over 5000 K. W. H.	.05

Minimum rate, $.80.

Power

	Per K. W. H.
First 100 K. W. H.	$ .04
Next 900 K. W. H.	.03½
Next 4000 K. W. H.	.03
Over 5000 K. W. H.	.02½

Minimum rate $1.00 per H. P.

Prior to the agitation for a municipal plant, the opposition's base rate was 15 cents per K. W. H., and just before the installation of the municipal plant, they dropped the price to 12½ cents. From this rate, there was no discount given until a consumer had used 666 K. W. H. in one month. The distributing system was extended to all parts of the city, even in sections where the citizens had never had service and could not get it unless they built their own lines or paid a bonus to the private company which was supposed to serve the community.

As referred to above, it was not the intention of the city to try to exterminate its competitor, however, as soon as the city began to take commercial service along its lines, the opposition company started to make it unprofitable for the city. Flat rates were offered and ridiculously low rates were made for the express purpose of preventing the city from obtaining the amount of business it started out to secure. In order to prevent discrimination, the city passed an ordinance that all current sold must be sold at meter rates and the rates published and filed with the city clerk, thus putting all users on an equal basis. The Southern California Edison company then established the following rates:

C. W. KOINER

Light

	Per K. W. H.
First 100 K. W. H.	$ .05
Next 400 K. W. H.	.04¾
Next 500 K. W. H.	.04½
Next 1000 K. W. H.	.03¾
Over 2000 K. W. H.	.02¾

The city found that it could establish a maximum base rate of 7 cents which it did, and continued to furnish light and power at these rates until the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1910.

Near the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, the city plant showed up so favorably in earnings that it was decided to reduce the maximum base rate to 5 cents and thus put all consumers on an equal basis. The following schedule of rates was therefore established and went into effect September 1, 1910; these rates being 58 per cent below that charged at the inauguration of the Municipal Lighting System:

Light

	Per K. W. H.
First 100 K. W. H.	$ .05
Next 400 K. W. H.	.04½
Next 500 K. W. H.	.04
Next 1000 K. W. H.	.03½
Over 2000 K. W. H.	.03

Minimum charge $.75.

Power

	Per K. W. H.
First 100 K. W. H.	$ .04
Next 400 K. W. H.	.024
Next 1000 K. W. H.	.02
Next 3500 K. W. H.	.019
Over 5000 K. W. H.	.0175
(When used between 5 p. m. and 10 p. m.)
Over 5000 K. W. H	.015
(Not used between 5 p. m. and 10 p. m.)
Over 10000 K. W. H.	.015

Minimum charge $1.00 per kilowatt capacity of meter.

The Southern California Edison company established a base rate of 4 cents per K. W. H. at this time.

It was estimated that with 4000 consumers out of a possible 6200, the city could earn sufficient to retire all outstanding bonds as they became due and pay interest on same and have left 3 per cent for depreciation (the proper allowance for depreciation being 5 per cent). With all things considered, a campaign was inaugurated for new business. A municipal light league was organized for the specific purpose of fostering the municipal light plant and securing additional consumers. Many volunteer solicitors among the citizens went out and secured business from their neighbors with very satisfactory results; the city having at this time 3725 consumers.

The annual report for fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, showed that the plant had earned:

Gross Receipts	$74,935.32
Operating Expense	38,629.41
Net Receipts	$36,305.91

This was over ten per cent on the total amount invested in the plant and was ample to cover all proper charges against the plaint, including depreciation.

In addition to the showing made by the plant, credit for the large sum saved to the citizens of Pasadena by reason of the reduction in rates, must be taken into consideration. The sum that this saving represents is between $90,000 and $100,000 per annum. This is based on a very conservative estimate and is increasing at the rate of fifteen to twenty per cent per annum. This estimate is based on the actual amount of business done by the opposition company during the year of 1907.

Since the last annual report, a semi-annual report has been made covering the period from July 1, 1910, to January 1, 1911; during 4 months of this period the maximum base rate was 5 cents per K. W. H. This report, which will give average results for the year, shows:

Six months' gross receipts	$48,079.31
Six months' operating expenses	24,512.35
Six months' net receipts	$23,566.96

The net receipts as here shown are at the rate of approximately 10 per cent on the investment in the plant and are sufficient to cover all proper charges against it, even at the low rate of 5 cents per K. W. H. and in spite of the fact that the business is divided over the territory, the city having approximately 65 per cent of the entire business in the city of Pasadena and generating electrical energy by means of a steam plant with crude oil as a fuel. The report further shows that the gross business has increased 53 per cent over the same period of last year and the net receipts have increased 56 per cent.

In reviewing the partial history of this municipal enterprise, those who are not acquainted with actual conditions as they existed in Pasadena will not be able to quite appreciate the accomplishment of the city in bringing this enterprise up to its present state.

In addition to making the plant self sustaining from its earnings at the very low rates charged, the city is saving annually more than $100,000 by reason of the difference in rates.

The system and service are extended to all parts of the city where formerly citizens had to pay for the extension of pole lines when they were just out of reach and the policy was to make the people pay a bonus for these extensions.

The streets are now illuminated practically throughout the city with more than three times the light furnished prior to the establishment of the municipal plant and the city is effecting a saving of $14,000 per annum on its street lighting, as compared with the old rates paid.

The city has proved that it is now able to regulate the price of one of the necessaries of the modern community and thus secure a rate which would never have been possible except through the medium of its own lighting plant. It enjoys a source of independence in this connection which is gratifying to any municipality that is so favored.

PORK AND BEANS

Mr. Hiram Johnson, governor-elect of California, ready to urge the short ballot, with a group of intelligent short ballot advocates in control of his party machinery to back him up, thirsting for further knowledge regarding the idea—Mr. Hiram Johnson, we say, while in New York City in December, hunted up that lofty pigeon hole which is our office and walked in and inquired genially for the secretary or assistant secretary. Did we welcome him eagerly, dine him, cigar him, draw from him at first hand the story of the short ballot movement in California, and fill him with enthusiasm and ideals regarding his marvelous opportunity to clear away the whole infamous jungle of California politics?

Alas—no!

We were obliviously munching certain noon-day pork and beans a block away. His long and cordial memorandum we found when we returned. And although we did our prettiest, we never got in touch with him there after.

Pork and beans!—Short Ballot Bulletin.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Department Conducted by Charles Dwight Willard

Women and Good Government: Seattle uses the non-partisan direct primary plan for eliminating all candidates except two for each office. About two weeks after the women of Seattle had shown what they thought of Mayor Hiram Gill, they had a chance in a direct primary to show what they thought of his friends and supporters. Nine councilmen were to be nominated, which gave eighteen places to be filled. There were about 40 nominees, of whom nine were of the Gill party, and nine were of the party that had nominated and elected Dilling in the recall episode. Not only were all the nine Dilling men chosen by good majorities, but six of the Gill people failed to qualify even as second choice. The remaining three, while they managed to scrape through and get on the primary ticket have no chance of election. It was universally admitted that the women did it, and it is evidently a permanent reorganization of the city on a good government basis.

Plain Language by the Court: When Mayor Gill of Seattle was trying to get the federal court to head off the operation of the recall, and his lawyers were putting up an elaborate argument for an injunction, the judge dismissed the complaint with these words: "We must not hunt for obscure reasons to thwart the will of the people." Verily, it is a refreshing utterance, and it describes to a dot the performance that is going on everywhere in the courts: the cooking up of elaborate and fantastic reasons why plain justice should not be done, why the guilty should not be punished, why the will of the people should not be carried out, why law should not be obeyed. And judges frequently become so fascinated with the ingenuity of the argument that they forget what the people put them there for, and do just the opposite of their duty.

Step Lively, There! Wm. G. McAdoo, the builder, organizer and operator of the Hudson River tunnel and subway system, has given specific orders to his conductors, guards and gate keepers that they are never to use the phrase "step lively." By the way, this expression has lately found a footing among the conductors and motormen of the Los Angeles street car system. Mr. McAdoo's warning might well be used by the railway managers here on the coast. The order to "step lively" is impertinent and totally unnecessary. People climb on board the car as rapidly as they can anyway. Nobody loiters purposely. On the other hand the admonition "step forward, please," is unavoidable. Mr. McAdoo's idea is to please the public, and the success he has achieved thus far has made him one of the most popular men in New York.

Wichita Booms Again: Twenty-five years ago Wichita, Kansas, suddenly sprang into public notice with a boom almost as fierce as that of Los Angeles at the same time. It was apparently destined to be the Chicago of the Kansas region. Then it was forgotten for a score of years. Now it is again on the rising wave. It is a prosperous city of 55,000 population and from the rate at which it is putting in municipal improvements evidently has abundant confidence in its own future. During 1910 it built nearly 13 miles of asphalt paving, 4 miles of bitulithic, and three miles of brick, a total of twenty miles of permanent paving at a cost of over a million. Also 33 miles of sidewalk and 23 miles of sewers. This record would do credit to a city twice as large.

Over-crowding Cars: Minneapolis is considering an ordinance requiring street cars to bear a sign stating the exact number of passengers they are to carry, which is the number that can be seated plus half as many more. When any conductor admits more than the limit he will be fined $50. There is great difference of opinion as to how this will work out. The advocates of the ordinance claim that it will force the railways to put on more cars, while others contend that the people will be more inconvenienced than aided by the law. Bion J Arnold, the Chicago street railway expert, recently gave his opinion that there is no method to prevent overcrowding in street cars that the American public will tolerate.

Race Problem and Property: Birmingham, Alabama, and Richmond, Virginia, have followed the example of Baltimore with ordinances that forbid further mixing of the races in selecting homes. Under these laws a colored man cannot hereafter move into a house in a block where the majority of the houses are occupied by white people, nor vice versa. There is some question as to the constitutionality of such laws, but there is a very pronounced sentiment in their favor which is not restricted to the whites alone. A great deal of ill-feeling and some serious rows and fights have grown out of colored people getting into white neighborhoods, and it seems to be best for all concerned that the races should be kept apart, each in its own section.

Exchange of Telephone Service: The legislature is considering a law which requires public utility companies to exchange service for the benefit of subscribers for a reasonable compensation. It is intended to apply particularly to telephone service, and would hit the situation in many California cities to the people's great advantage. In Los Angeles the field is pretty evenly divided between the companies, and an exchange between the two systems would receive a large amount of custom. For some unknown reason the companies are unwilling to establish such an arrangement, and it needs some such law as this to bring them to terms. In the long run the companies themselves will be benefited.

Asking for Powers: The city government of Milwaukee has sent up to the state legislature of Wisconsin a long list of measures it desires to have passed, for the purpose of extending the powers of the city to accomplish reforms, and changes that this Socialist administration desires. Among them is the power to purchase real estate and rent and sell buildings. The city, if this power is granted, will undertake to provide housing for people of small means. Also the city will operate lodging houses, maintain lavatories, run municipal loan bureaus, manufacture plumbing apparatus and do plumbing and make and sell ice. A municipal savings bank is one feature of the plan.

New York State Reads: New York state ten years ago set aside fifty millions to be drawn upon as needed for road construction. It has used thus far $22,000,000 with which it has built 2200 miles. There are good practical roads, for the most part macadamized, between all the larger cities of the state. The road from New York to Buffalo is 487 miles long. The commissioners report that during the ten years the cost of labor has increased 25 per cent while its efficiency has decreased. They also say that the use of reinforced concrete as against stone for bridges and culverts has made a saving in their work of a million dollars.

Filthy Street Car Straps: New Haven, Connecticut, is the first American city, so far as we are aware, to get rid of the disgustingly dirty street car strap. Leather absorbs dirt and prespiration and cannot be cleaned. People with skin diseases hang upon the straps and leave contagion behind them. In many European cities the straps have been abolished, and their place is taken by clean varnished sticks. In New Haven iron rings, painted white, are used, and they are kept clean. In course of time this custom will spread all over the country.

The Poor Pay: George K. Holmes estimates that out of every dollar paid by the consumer for food, the farmer gets 53 cents, the railroads 7 cents and the middle man 40 cents. That is the general average. But he adds that if the consumer is very poor his dollar brings him only half the amount of nutrition that he would get if he were well-to-do—that is to say, the poor, because of their poverty, are uneconomical buyers and always get the worst of it.

Ticket-of-Leave-Prisoners: The mayor of Russellville, Alabama, has developed a new plan for saving prison expenses. He accepts citizens' bonds for the prisoners' good behavior and allows them to go home at night while working out their fines on the streets. This saves the expense of guards and board for the prisoners. It would seem, however, that a man who could be trusted that far might better be put on probation and be allowed to work for the support of his family.

Small City Slums: The shape that the housing problem takes in the small cities is that of preventing the slum from getting a foothold. When a big city tackles the housing problem it is compelled to put a great amount of energy into rooting out slums already in existence. Prevention is much easier than correction. The big cities of the future are now most of them small cities, and if their health and building authorities keep awake to their job, slums will never be allowed a start.

Town Criers: The chief civic organization of Providence, Rhode Island, calls itself the Town Criers, and their motto is to cry for what they want until they get it. Providence is a town where there is plenty to cry for, beginning with clean politics. It has been so long under the absolute control of a boss that its people have almost forgotten this is a republic. And yet most of them would be very glad to reelect Aldrich at the end of his term, if he would consent to go back to the senate.

Coordinating City Departments: Denver has adopted a plan of a general monthly gathering of all the heads of departments, together with the mayor and council, for a discussion of city work. In Kansas City, the mayor has appointed a cabinet consisting of all the principal city officers, and they gather every Monday morning in his office to talk things over. The purpose in each case is to secure better coordination among the departments.

Punishment fer Honest Courage: The Pittsburg Index is authority for the statement that A. Leo. Weil, who, as head of the Voters' League, led the prosecution of the grafters, was dropped from his position as counsel for one of the leading banks of Pittsburg. Mr. Weil himself says that the bank people found fault with him for getting into the affair.

System of City Automobiles: The various departments of St. Louis, other than the police and fire, have 15 automobiles which are kept at a city garage. They are all plainly marked so they cannot be used for joy riding, and they are checked in and out, and every trip accounted for on daily cards that go with each machine.

Two Years Water Supply: The Spring Valley Water Company claims to have added over two billion gallons of water to the supply in its reservoir through the January storms, making a total that will supply San Francisco's needs for two years. This claim of an adequate supply is not admitted by everybody, however.

The Pure Milk Problem: The New York state legislature is considering a law to take the milk regulation out of the hands of city authorities and vest it in a state board. Milk does not, as a rule, originate inside of cities, and the city control is hence limited and unsatisfactory.

In Memoriam: The Municipal Art society of New York city has presented the police department with two beautiful bronze tablets, which are to be put up in the police station and to bear the names of all police officers whose lives are sacrificed in the city's service.

WE ARE NOW LOCATED IN OUR OWN NEW BUILDING

446-448 So. Broadway

Steinway, Kranich & Bach, Sohmer, Kurtzmann, Jewett & Laffargue Pianos.

Cecilian Player Pianos.

GEO. J. BIRKEL COMPANY

Los Angeles, Cal.

SENATORIAL SKITS

Number 5

By The Onlooker

LE'S LET HEWITT
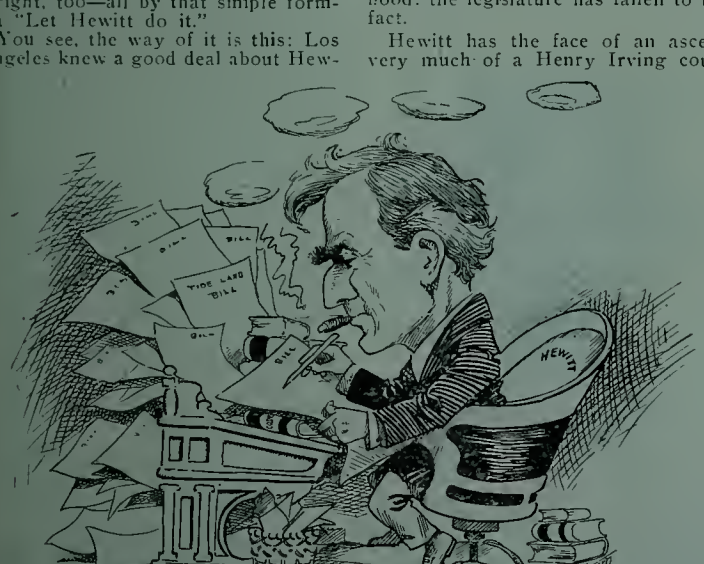
DO IT

Lest is a chaste and polished verse rhyme, rhythm and reason coordinated and compressed into one simple but comprehensive gem of poesy. We are only a modest scribe, but we confidently submit this extemporaneous ass not to the candid consideration of our critics, and delicately ask them to opine if it be not the real hot stuff, the simple pure chile con carne of song.

There is but one mistake to mar its silver-toned perfection, one broken chord to halt the heavenly lute: the gentleman's name is not "Le's let," but Leslie. However, that is only a trifle; let it pass. The substance is the thing, and here we may expand the sentiment of our song and do no violence to the whitest-browed divinity of truth.

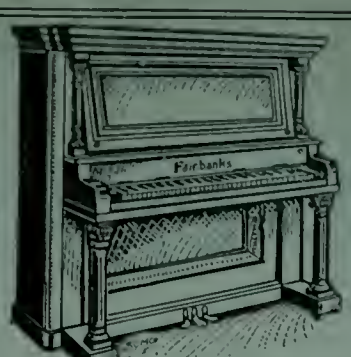
The fact is, it is getting to be a habit at Sacramento: Hewitt does it, so they let Hewitt do it, just to make sure it will be done. It's a great game, and as easy as not. You ease your conscience and the thing is done—right, too—all by that simple formula "Let Hewitt do it."



You see, the way of it is this: Los Angeles knew a good deal about Hewitt, but the rest of the state had no perceptible dents in it where the name of Hewitt had struck. Down Los Angeles way they had an inkling that the municipal corporation had such a human chattel on its inventory of possession. In fact, whenever, the city got itself into a legal hole, somebody rushed around and snaked Hewett out from a heap of law books and a warm nest of legal-cap notes, and asked him what to do about it. And Hewitt, after chewing on the badly damaged end of his cigar for a few moments, would allow that the proper procedure was about so-and-so. After which that procedure went, and Hewitt went also—back into his hole. For be it known, that what L. Hewitt, of L. A., doesn't know about the laws governing municipalities wouldn't grease the skillet for one batch of buckwheats.

Hewitt's real name is Dig, Grind and Grubb, et al. He is just that fond of hard work that there is only one thing he loves better, and that is the lock of iron grey hair that sticks out over his forehead like the comb of Chanteeler. They do say that a lonely grave in the San Fernando valley marks the last resting place of all that was mortal of the one barber who dared try to remove that trade-marked ornament.

But work is Hewitt's long suit, longer than his hair, and he is a tolerable reformer at that, even for the present styles in legislators. Hewitt eats work, walks work, smokes work, sleeps work. And his mind is as clear as a bell. When he comes out of one of his intellectual orgies of investigation, he has got his subject down as orderly as the book of Euclid and as simple as the senators who thought Hurd's trust-bust law had a chance.



So what more natural than that a man who likes work, actually likes it, you understand, should find himself accommodated on every hand. I'll bet a Blue Book against an old straw hat that Hewitt finds his fellow senators the most accommodating folks he ever saw. The generous way in which so many of them have turned over to him their little problems and embarrassing questions must fill Hewitt's heart to overflowing with a wild and poignant joy. Los Angeles no longer has a monopoly of the knowledge that a glutton for work is in the neighborhood: the legislature has fallen to the fact.

Hewitt has the face of an ascete, very much of a Henry Irving countenance; as one might say, a sort of cross between a hatchet face and a winter Pearmain (sp.?) on a frosty morning with the sun just coming up. It is chock full of intelligence and character.

When that face looms up over his desk, and his not very powerful voice emits itself from his grim mouth, there is no rapt attention on the part of the gallery. But those senators who really want to know what's what about a bill, especially a bill's author, have formed the habit of sitting up when Hewitt speaks. They know he knows, and that he will tell it minus all rhetorical ornaments.

Don't ever expect Hewitt to be the Big Noise. But at the next session, if you ask those who know, for the name of the Busiest Brains in the senate, you will hear them murmuring the refrain we indited at the beginning hereof, "Let Hewitt do it." He's making that reputation fast at this session.

The Fairbanks Piano

Almost everyone in Southern California appreciates the sterling quality of this splendid piano. Not the highest or the lowest priced instrument—just a good, durable, reliable and always satisfactory piano of moderate price—yet an instrument worthy of a place in the finest drawing-room. Style H. Y., price $350. Easy terms.

Southern California Music Co.

"The House of Musical Quality"

332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

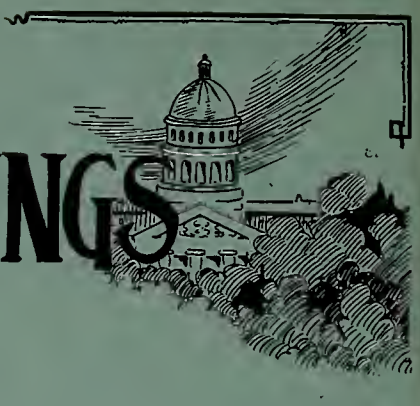
SOMETHING GOOD MEN SHOULD SEE

We wish every citizen of California could visit Sacramento during the present session of the legislature, and especially do we wish those citizens, who have heretofor been humiliated by having to witness the methods of the Southern Pacific in producing legislation for the state, could have this pleasure.

The citizen who now calls upon the legislators at Sacramento sees a lot of honest men giving the best there is in them in intelligent, honest and earnest effort to serve the people who sent them to the statehouse as their representatives. Of course, there are a few exceptions among the old holdovers who cannot forget that they owe their present positions to the power of the Southern Pacific machine as it existed in this state two years ago. The visitor, and especially he who has heretofore been familiar with California legislatures and has seen the influence on legislation exercised by Walter Parker, Jere Burke and other lieutenants of Mr. Herrin, pretty soon becomes cognizant of the fact that none of these gentlemen are now within the confines of the capital city. And a little later he becomes conscious of an atmosphere pervading both houses of the legislature which would make it impossible for these whilom directors of legislation in California to exist in its influence. And the fact that they have not dared show their faces in Sacramento is probably accounted for by the further fact that any measure that has upon its garments the smell of Southern Pacific influence is immediately marked for slaughter by the honest men who serve the people of the state in this legislature. And then when the visitor has become thoroughly saturated with the spirit of honest, patriotic effort which dominates the legislature, if he will go down to the governor's office and call upon that gentleman, he will again see such an embodiment of virile, manly, fearless and forceful patriotic statesmanship as will warm the cockles of his heart. The impression made upon an honest man who talks to Governor Johnson is that he fully comprehends and realizes the fact that all the great powers embodied in the office of chief executive of this state were given him by the people to be used for their benefit. And, like Mr. Roosevelt, if he finds that one of the powers of his position is the influencing of legislation which he deems wholesome and necessary to the public good, he does not hesitate a moment to use that particular power of his place.

The thing that appears to be most burdensome to the chief executive and the legislature is that they find themselves confronted with the necessity of doing, in one session, work in the people's interest which should have been performed by the various legislatures of the last quarter of a century, but which having been neglected by them, is now insistent in its demands upon the present state government for attention.

We venture to say that this is the only time in the history of the state for the past thirty years when the patriotic citizen could wish that the time provided by law and custom for the sessions of the legislature might be doubled or trebled, for heretofore such a citizen has been most happy when the legislators that he was acquainted with have adjourned and left some possible evil act undone.—Los Angeles Herald.



RECALL OF JUDGES

Which sovereign is the more rational and the safer one—the sovereign people (who have never yet in any election demanded as much as was due them), or the little sovereign on the bench who has opportunity and temptation galore to play the tyrant, and who, alas, many a time and oft, while offering his "Hail, Master" and kiss of reverence for the letter of the "law," has made merchandise of human rights, private and public, and as a public servant has betrayed his trust by construing the law to suit the wish of those who possess great power and sit in high places? In the possibility of such a scandal, as that of insulting a judge, more to be dreaded than the treason we now see almost daily in judicial assaults on political self-government by rulings from the bench that are intended to exalt the sanctity of privileged interests (miscalled "vested rights"), and set them above the common, natural rights of men? And which is the likelier soil to yield a harvest of miscarried justice. A people planning larger freedom, a people demanding courts that shall be responsible to them? Or an autocratic judiciary that assumes to be master of the people and superior to their laws, that shows a growing readiness to trample upon them and is held in check only by a minimum responsibility? What do we mean by government of the people, by the people and for the people, if the judge is not to be responsible to the people—the servant responsible to his employer?—Walter H. Beecher, in Citizens Bulletin, Cincinnati.

"I hardly knew your father today," said the district visitor pleasantly to the little girl. "He's cut his beard off again. That's three times since a year ago." The little girl explained: "It ain't father done it. Father likes his beard on. But muvver's stuffin' the sofa."—London Chronicle.

THE NEW ORDER OF THINGS

BY THE DOOR-KEEPER

Sacramento, March 7.—While several of the most desirable reform measures thus far have either been passed by the legislature or have been whipped into shape for final action by the committees having them in charge, some of the most zealous progressives are deploring the fact that little has been done to forward the State Board of Control bill since it left the assembly. This measure, if it become law, will make impossible in the future many of the extravagances which have characterized previous administrations.

It provides for close scrutiny and supervision of the purchasing and accounts of the state boards and institutions, by a state board to be appointed governor. Under the present system each department and state institution is responsible to itself alone in the matter of the purchase of supplies, the making of contracts for work and all other business. There is practically no check upon them. The bill referred to does away with the State Board of Examiners, which has little authority under the law. It establishes a central purchasing and supervising body, with power to inquire carefully into every contract which any department or institution is about to enter and to exercise the veto if, in its opinion, any of the funds of the state are in the way of being wasted. It will be a most effective instrument in preventing graft of all kinds in connection with the expenditure of state moneys for material or work.

This bill, introduced in the lower house by Assemblyman Benedict, passed that branch of the legislature Feb. 1, two days later was transmitted to the senate, and Feb. 6 was referred to the Senate Committee on Judiciary. For a month it has reposed in that committee, and its friends are beginning to fear an effort is being made to prevent its consideration upon the floor until the last days of the session, in the hope that it may finally go into the left-over waste basket. Unless it be reported this week, it hardly can receive the consideration that so important a measure deserves.

Reform in Criminal Procedure

The adoption by the senate of the Boynton constitutional amendment providing that five-sixths of a jury may render a verdict in certain criminal cases has been characterized by its opponents as revolutionary. I agree with them—it is revolutionary. So are the Initiative and Referendum. So is the Recall. So are several other measures about to be written into the organic or statutory laws of the state. This is an age of political revolution. We need the sort of revolution provided by the senate from Butte.

The Boynton amendment provides, in brief, that in civil actions three-fourths of a jury and in criminal action five-sixths of a jury may render a verdict, except that in all criminal actions where the penalty provided by law is death or life imprisonment, or where the offense was committed before the adoption of the amendment, the verdict must be unanimous.

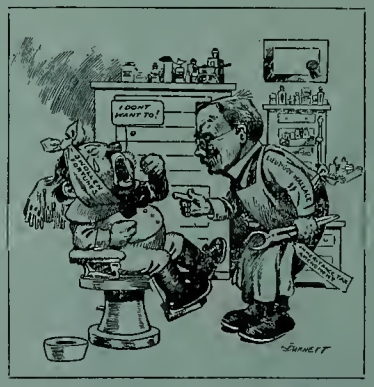
In the course of the debate over this measure, Senator Boynton demonstrated that its application would work to the interest of the poor rather than the rich. He made the statement that so far as he had been able to learn, but one newspaper in California opposed its adoption. Senator Larkins expressed the conviction that the reason there were so many law-breakers was to be found in the fact that criminals had found it was growing extremely difficult for prosecutors to secure convictions under a system requiring a unanimous verdict.

A glance at the senatorial opposition to this reform, long demanded by the people, is interesting. Twenty-nine senators voted for it. Nine voted against it. They were Beban, Bryant, Cassidy, Finn and Wolfe of San Francisco, Hurd of Los Angeles, Juilliard of Santa Rosa, Tyrrell of Alameda and Wright of San Diego.

Another constitutional amendment proposed by Senator Boynton, adopted by the senate and favorably reported in the assembly provides that no judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted in any criminal case on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless, after examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The adoption of these two amendments at the polls will greatly expedite criminal practice and have a deterrent effect upon that class of criminals who hitherto have believed that they might prosecute their traffic with little prospect of legal punisbment.

Another important measure which has passed the senate and is now in the Assembly Judiciary Committee is theRoseberry bill, giving to the state and the defendant in a criminal case fifteen peremptory challenges each instead of ten and twenty respectively, as under the existing statute. This bill, if it become law, will place the prosecution on an equal basis with the defense. The chief complaint regarding the status of defendants under the present law is that they enjoy the advantage of almost unlimited power in the rejection of jurors in every way to give them fair trials.



With these reforms in effect prior to the bringing of the actions in the San Francisco graft cases perhaps justice would not have traveled so far from the beaten path.

Fight on the Short Ballot

The "short ballot" received scant courtesy at the hands of the Senate Judiciary Committee the other evening, in spite of the fact that it is an administration measure. The sentiment in favor of this reform is growing in all quarters of the country. It is bound to come in time, and it has been expected that the progressives of California, having set a pace for other states in many matters of procedure toward plans for better government, would naturally take kindly to the plan to eliminate from the printed ballot names of candidates for almost purely administrative offices. But all of the men who call themselves progressives are not in line for this reform.

The orjginal plan has undergone some modifications to suit legislators who doubted the wisdom of placing on the appointive list the names of any officers entailing discretionary power. As the measure now stands, it provides that the secretary of state, treasurer, surveyor-general, superintendent of public instruction and clerk of the supreme court shall be appointive, leaving the attorney-general and controller to be elected as checks upon executive action.

When the measure came before the judiciary committee two votes were taken. Upon the motion that it be sent back to the senate with the recommendation that it "do pass," the

Los Angeles Herald

"MIGHT HURT A LITTLE, BUT YOU'D BETTER HAVE IT OUT"

first vote was: Ayes—Burnett, Campbell, Hewitt; noes—Caminetti, Estudillo, Juilliard, Larkins, Martinelli, Wright.

So surprising was the result that the friends of the measure were prompted to move for a call of the committee, which was granted, and every lawyer in the senate who could be found was brought to the meeting. The vote following the call of the committee showed as follows: Ayes—Burnett, Campbell, Cartwright, Gates, Hewitt, Roseberry, Thompson, Tyrrell—8. Noes—Caminetti, Curtin, Estudillo, Juilliard, Larkins, Martinelli, Shanahan, Wolfe, Wright, Stetson—10.

Those who have been favoring this particular nature of ballot reform expected nothing, naturally, of Wolfe, Wright or Juilliard, but some disappointment over the attitude of Stetson, Estudillo and Larkins has been expressed. In spite of the refusal of the committee to report favorably upon the amendment it may pull through in the senate. There will be a fight for it, at any rate.

Taken on Faith

Admitting that they could not comprehend the intent of the Curtin bill under which, if it become law, the change in the state's scheme of taxation goes into effect, several senators voted for the measure. Nobody but Curtin seems to know the exact intent of the bill—that is to say, nobody in particular is willing to undertake to explain just how the measure will work out in its application; and the explanations offered by the author are as Sanscrit to the average legislator. They have taken it on faith.

There may be a statewide howl some of these days because the members of the legislature allowed this bill to become law. It may be that various constituents of various legislators will take their representatives to task for having voted for the bill without understanding its intent. But they should do nothing of the kind. For did not the people themselves declare at the polls last November that in their judgment Constitutional Amendment No. 1, as the new tax scheme was labeled on the ballot, was all right? Did not the big banks in San Francisco, Los Angeles and elsewhere pay thousands of dollars in advertising to the voters the fact that the amendment was perfectly satisfactory to them? Did no other corporations make a fight for it? All this being true, did not the people get just the information they were seeking—the information that the big banks and the big corporations were all in favor of a bill affecting the taxation of themselves? And did the people, the common people, fall to to the scheme? They did. They willingly voted into the state constitution an amendment vitally affecting the very life of government—taxation—knowing all the big corporations were for it.

There seems to be nothing further to add. Yes, one little sentence, addressed to the prospective kickers: Blame yourselves for having made possible the enactment of the Curtain bill. if you find it to be framed in the interests of the corporations; take the credit yourself, on the other hand, if the scheme works to your satisfaction—for your representatives have simply followed your lead.

The bill is now before the assembly. Perhaps the members of that branch of the legislature are possessed of more keen analytical minds than are to be found in the senate, but I think not.

The Scheme

Franklin Hichborn has made a study of the Curtin measure, and here is his summary of the situation, as found in the Sacramento Bee:

There were many good things about that amendment which were not particularly well understood when it was before the public last fall for ratification, but which are very well understood now. For example, we heard little then about operative and non-operative property of corporations. Now we understand quite well, that under the terms of the amendment, the affected corporations are exempted from all taxation on operative property. We find, too, that the amendment does not clearly define operative property. An attempt at such definition is made in Senate Bill 13. But everybody

(Continued on Page 15)

The Passing of the Social Hell-Gate

By Dana W. Bartlett

Dana W. Bartlett was born in Bangor, Maine, in 1860, but by education he is a thorough westerner. Graduating from Iowa College at Grinnell, he established the first school in the great mining camp at Park City, Utah. Deciding to enter the ministry, he spent two years at Yale and one year at Chicago, preaching during vacations on the frontier and in mining camps. He was called to a difficult work in the tenement district of St. Louis; then to a regular pastorate in Salt Lake City, from which place he came to Los Angeles about fifteen years ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett and five daughters have lived during these years on Vignes street, carrying on social service work in the Bethlehem Institute, an institution widely known for its humanitarian, preventive and constructive work.

Mr. Bartlett believes that it will be possible to eliminate the slum in this city, and as a constructive idealist is moving step by step toward this ideal.

In the first non-partisan campaign he was candidate for the council from the old eighth ward. Mayor Alexander appointed him on the housing commission, and as chairman of the city planning committee. He is author of "The Better City" and a new book, "The Better Country," off the press next week. Mr. Bartlett conducts an up-town theatre service on Sunday afternoon, discussing important social problems.—Editor.

Years ago mighty submerged rocks formed obstructions to commerce in the entrance to New York harbor. Many ships were wrecked and others were forced to turn back because too heavily laden for the shallow passage. Engineers were secured who tunneled under the river and filled the chambers with dynamite. After the explosion which tore the rocks asunder the greatest ships afloat were able to pass in and out of the harbor with perfect safety.

The news columns have told of the passing of the hell-gate of the lakes. A great ridge of rock ran perilously near the surface in the lower Detroit River, impeding navigation and limiting the commerce between the great lakes. A great engineering work is now in progress, costing $8,000,000, blasting and dredging the river for a distance of eight miles, thus providing for the safety of lake commerce for all time.

Great as are these undertakings, there are still greater ones, for social engineers are busy blasting out many of the Hell-Gates that impede human progress.

Let us notice some of the rocks which have been blasted or else are now being honeycombed with chambers to be filled with social dynamite to be exploded later by the people, who have waited long for the opportunity.

The greatest wreckage has been caused through the existence of commercialized vice as seen in the brothel, the gambling joint, the race-track, the prize-fight and the saloon. In these cases the extent of the wreckage comes not so much from the vice per se as from the fact that the vices have been organized and promoted for the purpose of money making.

Men are not naturally bad. While heredity plays some part, environment and education are the real formative forces in the lives of men. The school of the street, the membership in the gang, will start to ruin the youth of the bluest blood. The evil following bad environment, bad companionship, and the cultivation of bad appetites makes the commercializing of vice the greater evil. Most human beings will enjoy the good and the pure unless enticed, urged or taught to desire the evil and the impure. Remove the opportunity for making money from any form of vice and the evil of it will slowly disappear. The open brothel is largely patronized because of the zealous work of the cadets and recruiters, and the contagion of suggestion through the soliciting of the women who are forced to earn money for their masters. The race-track and the prize-fight became a trust whose chief business was to rob rather than to amuse the people. The saloon became, not a place where social drinks were served, but rather the headquarters for bad politics and vicious plottings. In order to control the City Hall big business has used commercialized vice to win political campaigns.

But the people awakened and demanded new tools, and in every city and state the connection between commercialized vice and the city hall is being broken, and big business is being deprived of its opportunity to exploit bad business for its own aggrandizement and the moral ruin of many men.

REV. DANA W. BARTLETT

The tenement and the slum exist not because men are naturally vicious and desire to live in such congested unhealthy regions, but it is the old question of exploitation. A six-story front and rear tenement means exorbitant profit. Limited court space, narrow air shafts and dark rooms increase the rental but help to fill the Potter's Field. Like commercialized vice, the people are saying that the slum must go. It is unnecessary, costly and destructive of health and home life. When Los Angeles has a million people it will be a city without a slum and another Hell-Gate will have been exploded.

Let us be optimists and believe that the new tools of a new day in the hands of an aroused people will destroy all of the jagged rocks in the way of human progress.

Commercialized vice is a menace to the country not alone because it encourages immorality between the sexes but because of the opportunity offered for the spread of the great Red Plague, which is slowly undermining the manhood and womanhood of the nation. President David Starr Jordan, in urging immediate action against this terrible evil, says: "There is no more important matter to come before civilized nations than that of the absolute extermination of the Red Light districts of our cities. This is not a question of morals, primarily. It is that of self-protection of civilization itself. Practically every prostitute, the world over, male or female, is the victim of one or the other or both of two slow-maturing diseases. These maladies constitute the Red Plague, terrible to men, horrible beyond suggestion to women and children. The vilest of these two diseases may be communicated through towels, drinking cups and the like to people wholly innocent. With the one, children may be infected at birth. The other is the chief cause of blindness, of sterility, and of many other ills.

"Thus far the only safety in dealing with the plague is to abolish the plague spots, to destroy the centers of infection. To deal with the Red Plague we must destroy the houses of prostitution and send their inmates to the hospital. To abolish these houses, the only sure way is to attack their owners. To punish the inmates serves no purpose. These live in eternal torment already. It is understood that the present Iowa law against houses of illfame, whereby the owner of such houses is held immediately and rigidly responsible, has proved effective."

If the government deems it wise to spend millions of dollars in the suppression of diseases in plants and animals, has not the time come when the people of this land ought to give attention to the awful wreckage of human life and character from the communication of venereal diseases? To check the spread of this Red Plague Mr. Wyllie introduced at Sacramento a bill now before the committee on public morals, known as assembly bill 1014, which is based on the successful abatement and injunction law of Iowa. This is an act to enjoin and abate houses of lewdness, assignation and prostitution, to declare the same to be nuisances, to enjoin the person or persons who conduct or maintain the same, and the owner or agent of any building used for such purpose.

This law, if passed, will strike one more blow at commercialized vice, which for the sake of the dollar operates to destroy public morals, debauch public officials, and spread diseases worse than leprosy or the black plague.

Bad business found another opportunity for coining money from the vices of mankind in the race-track and the prize-fight. The innocent amusements of racing horses at the county fair and of the sparring match in the athletic hall having fallen into the hands of those who were intent upon gaining the people's money at any cost, these were used to develop in the followers of the sport a love of gambling which soon developed into a passion that ruled and ruined. The poor dupes gambled their hard earnings even though they knew that the odds were all in favor of the promoters. Loss at the ring-side or race track led many a young man to rob or to commit forgery that he might have the money to risk again with the hope of making good. Too often this led the way to the penitentiary or the suicide's grave. That this kind of business would be outlawed as soon as the public could be informed of the extent of its evil influence, has been evident to social workers for many years. State after state has passed laws against these forms of commercialized vice, until now but few states remain which are so corrupt politically that the promoters of this form of amusement are still allowed to rob their youth of money and reputation.

Thanks to the progressives in our present legislature, California has at last outlawed the race track and driven the bookmakers for all time far beyond her borders. The members of the legislative committee on public morals should have their names written large in the history of California.

Perhaps the evil resulting from the commercializing of vice is in no place so evident as in the American saloon. The social instincts of men—the desire for companionship—as well as the appetite for drink has made it possible for the men who were in the business alone for the money which was in it to fasten shackles upon their victims and bind them as their abject slaves. No bond servants of old ever worked more faithfully for their masters than do the victims of the American saloon. This is the indictment against the modern saloon,—it is not a legitimate business in the ordinary sense of the word, for in the long run it robs its patrons and leaves them helpless and a charge upon the public. It robs them of their money, money that ought to have been used for food and clothes, for education and amusement for themselves and their families. It robs them of physical and mental strength and destroys the moral nature so that they more easily fall into ways of crime. The saloon is everywhere the recruiting station for the jail, the hospital and the almshouse, all of which are heavy charges upon the public treasury. A recent investigation in an eastern city of twenty-five rounders during a period of eleven years showed that this group of drunkards, the product of the saloon, had cost that city during that time $16,000, and the men themselves were no longer of economic value to the state.

The saloon is labor's greatest enemy, robbing the ranks of some of

MAIN 3540 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING
ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY
SPRING ST. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
HF
Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC.)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS
Los Angeles, Cal.

its brightest workers, but above all furnishing a method by which organized labor may be exploited to its own undoing. Does not always Big Business make use of Bad Business for its own aggrandizements? This is becoming so evident that legitimate business men, together with laboring men, are joining with reformers in an effort to blast out the social Hell-Gate known as the American saloon. This effort is more determined because it became more and more evident that Big Business was making use of commercialized vice to win political campaigns that it might control the city hall, the courthouse and the capital, by means of corruptible officials easily controlled by the "higher-ups." The first ten years of the new century were years of muckraking, laying bare corruption, turning the spotlight upon the bribe-giver as well as the bribe-taker, the vote-buyer as well as the seller, showing the connection between Wall street and the brothel, the palatial office of the trust and the sawdust ring and the gambling hell. This revealed a condition seemingly hopeless.

The slum is another Hell-Gate in the way of moral progress. Every city has been content to exist half good and half bad. Partly aware that the slum was controlling politics, the citizens were not aroused sufficiently to seek a remedy for the evil. How few people are awake to the horrible conditions existing in the less favored sections of the city? They do not realize the fearful social cost of maintaining the slum, which is the home of sin in its reeking and revolting form—sins of the scarlet woman, of the inebriate, of the law-breaker; sins of the wrecked and ruined sons of a common Father. In this school of crime are to be found the children; the half-clad, underfed beginnings of life, quite sure to follow in the sinful way.

But such conditions are unnecessary as well as harmful. That the slum ought to go is no new thought, but that the slum must go is a decision slowly forming in the minds of those who are beginning to see the way out.

If poverty was necessary then might we be ever content with palliative measures, but all students of economic conditions are saying today that poverty is preventable.

The payment of a living wage, the elimination of much of the hard labor of women and children, the housing of all the people in model sanitary dwellings, these are some of the constructive ways by which dire poverty may be driven from city life. When employers of labor realize that safety devices in factories will save the breadwinner from accident and possible death, then will dependents be saved from the fearful drop into pauperism. When city and nation are willing to spend annually the cost of two dreadnaughts in the checking of social disease, then will the hospital and the asylum be robbed of many inmates and the community will receive the added values from the earnings of strong and ablebodied men. We thought that social and civic problems were all moral problems to be solved by the preacher and the teacher, but are they not fundamentally economic problems?

The greed that exploits for gain, that debauches the morals and wrecks the lives and ruins the health that dollars may be gained, in the building of the better city this is to be reckoned with more than the innate desire to do evil on the part of the individual. The call of the day is none the less for workers for individual improvement but also for workers who understand the causes of human misery and are able to apply the remedy.

Social Hell-Gates have long existed but new methods of social mining are constantly being discovered. Let us be optimists and believe that the new tools of a new day in the hands of an aroused people will destroy all of the jagged rocks in the way of human progress.

Inter-Telephone Exchange

At the request of the Los Angeles utilities board, Senator Hewitt has introduced a bill that will allow municipalities to compel rival public utility companies dealing in the same service, to exchange with one another for the benefit of patrons, at a reasonable cost.

This is intended particularly to apply to telephone companies. Over a year ago the utilities commission was petitioned by the Municipal league to suggest to the two telephone companies doing business in Los Angeles that they establish an intercompany exchange, and for a reasonable fee, say 5 or possibly 10 cents,, that they give a subscriber a chance to speak with a subscrbeir on the other line.

The board put in the request, but got no satisfaction. The companies piled up a great many reasons why it could not be done and should not be done. These reasons are all very interesting, but none of them were sound, except the one that they did not wish to do it. The board made a thorough investigation and became satisfied that such an arrangement was entirely feasible and to the public advantage and also that it would do the companies no harm.

It is not easy to see why the companies should have been so violently opposed to the plan. It was not intended to ask any service from them for which anything less than full and fair compensation should be awarded. The business would be very nearly analogous to that of "long distance." An intercompany bureau would be established for which the subscriber would ask when he called up central. When he had gotton this bureau—just as he now gets "long distance"—he would ask for the desired number on the other wire, and it would be secured and given to him. It would not involve any physical difficulties of a serious character. For that matter, it is constantly done now. In the big commercial houses where an exchange telephone girl manages both outfits, and where the switchboards are near enough together so that the cables to which jacks are attached will reach across, it is no trick at all to plug in from one system to the other.

It must not be supposed that with a 5 or 10 cent intercompany charge people will make any great amount of use of the plan. In the average household there will be only two or three such calls a month. In many, cases now neighboring families have an arrangement, one taking the Home and the other the Sunset, and they exchange use of the machines, and sometimes even signal calls. Often this constitutes a profound nuisance, and it is a loss of business to these companies. The particular cases, however, where the lack of inter change system constitutes a veritable hardship is in homes where there is no other system telephone within reachable distance, and it is a matter of serious importance to get some one on the other line—a doctor, for example. One may not want the other line often, and yet want it very badly at times.

Evidently the companies are afraid that the establishment of this connection would result in many telephones being thrown out in places where people keep both lines. Possibly there might be some cases of that sort, but most people who keep two telephones do so because one will not carry the volume of business they have to transact. If there be examples, and we know that there are some, of people who are compelled to keep two phones when they have work for but one, merely because there are two systems in existence, then they are entitled to this relief, and it is the city's business to give it to them. It is short-sighted policy for the companies to object to an improvement that tends to do away with waste. The people should be just to these companies, and should be willing that they earn a fair living; but the companies should clear the way for just legislation on rates by removing all grounds for complaint at unnecessary duplication.—Charles D. Willard, in the Los Angeles Express.

Plato on the Farm

"The author of genius," said William Dean Howell at a dinner, "expresses the thoughts of his time. He speaks out those things that his generation has all along been thinking—but thinking silently, and, perhaps, a little mistily.

"An author of transcendent genius speaks the thought of all time. For example—one summer at Sunapee I loaned a volume of Plato to a lean, shrewd farmer. When the volume was returned I said:

"'Well, how did you like Plato?'

"'Fust rate,' the farmer answered. 'I see he's got some of my ideas.'"—Cincinnati Times-Star.

He Had Hopes

Mrs. Slowboy—How is my son getting along at school, professor?

Professor—I have great hopes of him, madam—great hopes. He's the laziest boy I ever saw.

Mrs. Slowboy—Then why do you say you have great hopes of him?

Professor—Because if he ever begins to study he's too lazy to stop.—Chicago News.

"He has a grudge against the plain people." "As to why?" "Says they wear so many rubbers that it forces up the price of tires."—Washington Herald.

"Your own baby, if you have one," advertised the enterprising photographer, "can be enlarged, tinted, and framed for $9.75 per dozen."—Metropolitan Magazine.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway — 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.

White Wash Goods

COMPLETENESS is the word that best describes the condition of our assortment of fine white goods. This season sheer, diaphanous fabrics are first choice, prominent among which are:

Voiles, and Francaise Marquisettes

We are showing exclusive ideas of our own importation, which include plain and embroidered effects.

Prices range from 50c to $2.50 yard. Our collection of new white goods also embraces a fine line of staple styles at popular prices.

Los Angeles, Cal.

MOST ATTRACTIVE APARTMENT HOUSE IN LOS ANGELES

Contains large private balconies leading from all rooms. Extra services provided such as the washing of dishes, etc. Apartments for rent by the month or will lease for definite term. Prices $65.00 per month and up. includes all general expenses.

ELEGANTLY FURNISHED

MRS. N. WILLIAMS ANDERSON, Manager.

The Alien Ownership Problem

Acting Consul General of Japan Replys to A. M. Drew.

San Francisco, Cal, Feb 16, 1911.
Editors The California Outlook,
Los Angeles

Gentlemen: My attention has been directed to a communication over the signature of Hon. A. M. Drew, of Fresno, which appears in your issue of the 11th instant, and deals with the subject of alien ownership of land. I have no controversy of any kind with Mr. Drew, for whose opinions and for whose personality I entertain the greatest respect, I venture to ask the privilege of correcting certain erroneous impressions which I fear the public may gather from his statements.

In alluding to the acquisition of agricultural lands in this state by Japanese, the impression is given that such lands, in large quantities, are passing into the possession of my countrymen. From all the facts which I have been able to obtain—and after a very careful investigation of the subject—I find that the total land holdings of Japanese in California aggregate something less than 11,000 acres, which figures agree substantially with the special report of Labor Commissioner Mackenzie, published in May last.

With regard to the question of land ownership by aliens in Japan, which has been urged as a reason why the Japanese should not be accorded the right to hold land in this country, it may be proper to state that conditions have changed somewhat since the interview of two years ago, held by Mr. Drew with Vice Consul Takahashi. At that time the Japanese law did not extend the right of land ownership in fee simple to aliens, but it permitted, and still permits, of liberal leasing privileges which, under many conditions, practically amount to the same thing.

With a view to greater liberality in this respect, a law was passed by the Japanese Parliament and duly promulgated under date of April 13, 1910, which aims to level all distinctions between natives and foreigners in the matter of holding lands.

Article I of this law reads as follows:

"Foreigners domiciled or resident in Japan nd foreign juridical persons registered therein shall enjoy the right of ownership in land, provided always that in the countries to which they belong such right is extended to Japanese subjects and Japanese juridical persons; and provided further, in cast of foreign juridical persons, that they shall obtain permission of the Minister for Home Affairs in acquiring such ownership. The foregoing provisions shall apply only to foreigners and foreign juridical persons belonging to the countries to be designated by Imperial Ordinance."

It will be observed that the ultimate purpose of the Japanese Government is to extend the privilege of holding land to the citizens and subjects of all countries which grant similar rights to the subjects of Japan. While this new law has not as yet become operative, nor can become so until the countries entitled to enjoy it are designated by imperial ordinance, it may be sufficient to show that the Imperial Government is endeavoring to adjust the question along liberal lines and in harmony with the practices of enlightened nations.

Not doubting that it is your desire to place all the facts bearing upon this important matter before your readers, I beg to remain

Very truly yours,
Thatsuzo Nagai,
Acting Consul General of Japan.

THE PUBLIC SHOULD OWN ALL NATURAL MONOPOLIES

The recent consolidation of the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Bell Telephone Company was a long step toward complete monopoly of telegraph and telephone service in this country. And now the Western Union has acquired control of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, with four submarine cables between this country and Europe. This gives the Western Union six ocean cables. Its only remaining competitors are the Commercial Cable Company and the Postal Telegraph Company, both Mackay-Bennett concerns.

Clarence H. Mackay recently declared these two competitive companies would not sell out to the Western Union, remarking that if their competition should cease the public would be obliged to choose between monopoly and Government ownership.

The telephone and telegraph naturally tend to consolidation and monopoly, with the result that the public must pay more for their service than it is worth. For the very reason that they are natural monopolies, they should be owned and operated by the Government, as in numerous if not most European countries. They are properly branches of the postal service, as in England, where the telegraph rates are much lower than in America.

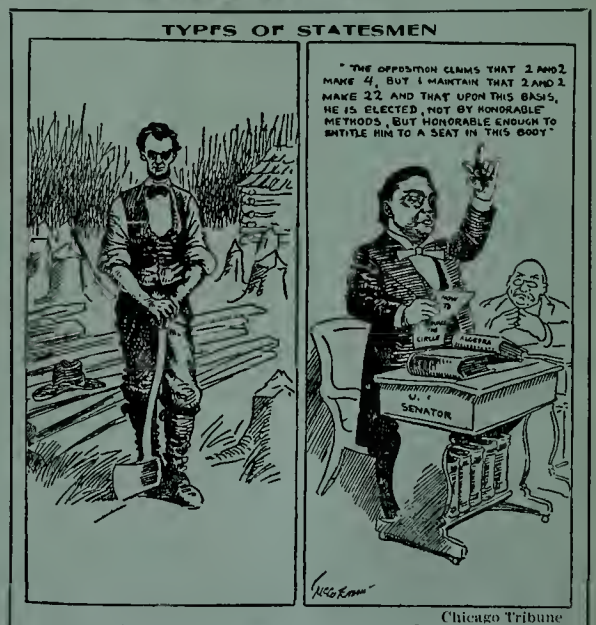
There is great difference between a Government service, extended and operated solely with the view to public benefit, and a private monopoly managed exclusively for private profit and charging "all the traffic will bear."

The Western Union has made vast profits on the capital actually invested, because of the high rates charged for messages. A Government service could probably cut the present rates by one half and yet operate the lines at a profit.—Sacramento Bee.

That Reform Not Necessary

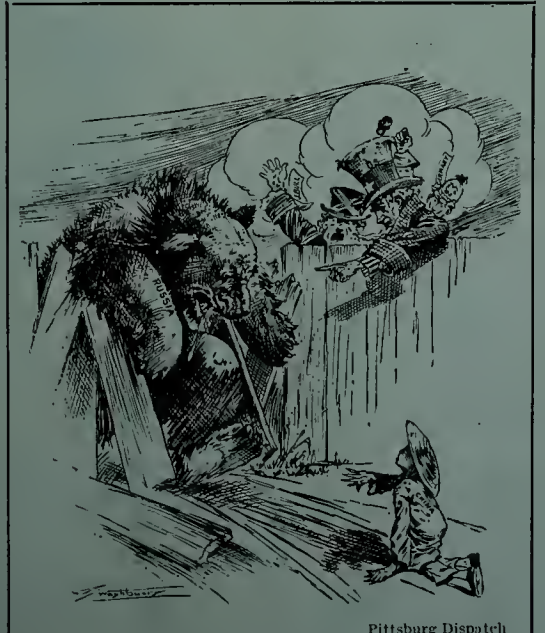
"What you want to do is to have that mud hole in the road fixed," said the visitor.

"That goes to show," replied Farmer Corntossel, "how little you reformers understand local conditions. I've purty nigh paid off a mortgage with the money I made haulin' automobiles out o' that mud hole."—The Christian Register.



Mrs. Cobb—Was the grocer's boy impudent to you again when you telephoned your order this morning? Cook—Yes, Mrs. Cobb, he was that; but I fixed him this time. I sez, "Who the —— do you think you're talkin' too? This is Mrs. Cobb."—Life.

TIMELY PEN TOPICS



Baltimore American

HAVING TROUBLE GETTING THE CORK OUT

Chicago Tribune

THE RAIL SPLITTER THE HAIR SPLIETER

Pittsburg Dispatch

CHORUS—"SAY YOU, WATCH YOURSELF!"

Philadelphia Press

EARLY GARDENING

How Boston Got 80-Cent Gas

The Sliding Scale Method of Regulating Public Service Corporations

An Address Delivered Before the National Municipal League by EDWARD N. WRIGHTINGTON, Boston, Vice-President Boston Consolidated Gas Company

The service provided by our public utilities is usually furnished under one of four systems:

1. By means of a single private company without public regulation and control.
2. By two private companies operating in competition with each other.
3. By the municipality through actual ownership.
4. By a private company under public regulation and control.

Under the first system it might at first thought be assumed that there is no restriction whatever upon excessive charges as there is neither actual competition nor public regulation to limit the returns of the company.

As a matter of fact, however, although some companies have established unnecessarily high prices under these conditions, almost all of them have been satisfied with reasonable profits. These companies have realized that the good will of the public is their principal asset, and that low prices will in crease business, and, acting from motives of intelligent self-interest, have maintained reasonable charges to the public for the service which they furnish.

At the same time there has been a growing sentiment among the public that such opportunities as have been offered these companies for excessive profits, even if not exercised, are a source of some danger.

Fallacy of Competition

One of the first remedies advanced is that of competition. To the unthinking and inexperienced the theory is plausible enough. Competition in mercantile lines of business leads to reduced prices, why not with public service companies? One reason is because of the duplicate investment required for the competing company. The fixed charges of a public service company are a much greater proportion of the total expenses than is the case with most other lines of business.

Although reductions in price may at first result from the competition the investments are comparatively so large that sooner or later the two companies must come to some understanding and one company purchases or consolidates with the other. In the end the public is forced to pay the fixed charges on both investments. This payment takes the form either of increased prices, or delay in reducing prices. We need only point to the history of such experiments to prove that such is the almost inevitable result.

Municipal Ownership

Municipal ownership was also at one time a popular theory. More recent experience has, however, demonstrated its fallacy, and the agitation for public ownersip is distinctly on the wane. Even eliminating the frequent dishonesty and inevitable extravagance of public ownership, the income derived from charges to the public for service must be practically the same as under private ownership. The municipal plant is subject to the same expenses of manufacture and of distribution as the private plant. Taxes lost by the city are equivalent to taxes paid by the private company. Depreciation, although often ignored by the municipal authorities, goes on just the same as with private ownership.

The rate of return on the necessary investments by the city must always carry more than the ordinary interest rates at which the city bonds are placed, as municipalities are subject to practically the same business risks as are private companies.

But such ideal conditions of operation by municipalities are, in the nature of things, practically impossible of realization. The municipality can not demand the services of the best men as managers of the public undertakings on account of the uncertainties of continuous employment through change in political control. The demands of political patronage lead to the employment of inexperienced, and, oftentimes, unnecessary employes.

Graft and dishonesty are not necessary for the failure of public ownership. Municipalities are notoriously inefficient in conducting their ordinary business even when administered honestly, consequently we are not surprised to find that in those instances in this country where their activities have been extended to public service undertakings, they have inevitably led to failure.

Regulation

Regulation and control of a private company by public authority, if fairly and intelligently exercised, provide a means of adjusting and differences regarding rates and quality of service. There is some danger in such authority assuming administrative functions and hampering the proper conduct of the business, and, where rate-making powers are given, of restricting the return on the investment to such narrow limits that capital becomes timid and the development of the business is retarded. The net earnings should not be reduced to the point at which confiscation of property might be claimed by the company, as a fair return on the amount of investment would just escape confiscation. In the long run the most satisfactory results will be secured by a policy which allows considerable freedom to the company so long as an undue burden is not placed upon the public by reason of excessive charges. One disadvantage of this system of regulation is that such extreme power is liable to abuse and much depends upon the personal element. Moreover, when the returns are fixed at a definite amount there is no incentive on the part of the company to introduce economies or improvements in the service.

Those who do not find in the four systems of regulations mentioned above a satisfactory solution of the problems involved in the relations of public utilities with the public, have been recently attracted to a method long employed in England, but having only one example in this country, namely, in Boston.

This method has been applied specifically to the gas companies and is called the "sliding scale."

The principle of the "sliding scale" is as follows:

The "Sliding Scale"

A standard price of gas is established and a standard rate of dividends. Both the price and the rate of dividends are fixed on such a basis as to secure an adequate return on the money invested in the business. For every reduction in the price the company is allowed to increase correspondingly the rate of dividends which may be paid.

In Boston the standard price for gas was fixed by an act of the legislature at 90 cents per thousand cubic feet. The standard rate of dividends was fixed at 7 per cent. For every reduction of 5 cents in the price of gas the company may, during the following year, increase the dividend rate 1 per cent.

The act provides a reserve fund for emergencies which may be set aside each year up to 1 per cent of the capital, until the fund becomes equal to 5 per cent of the capital stock. If an excess is earned above the amount provided in the reserve fund such excess is to be paid to the towns in which gas is sold in proportion to the miles of main in each.

Issues of additional stock are to be valued by the board of gas and electric light commissioners. Before the new shares are offered to the stockholders of the company, they shall be offered for sale by public auction, and no bid is to be accepted for less than the price fixed. Any stock not sold at auction is to be offered at the fixed price to the stockholders. Any stock so offered and not sold shall again be offered for sale at public auction. If the new stock to be issued does not exceed 4 per cent of the existing capital stock of the company, it may be sold at auction without being first offered to the stockholders, provided it is not sold at less than par.

After ten years' time upon the petition of the company, or upon the petition of the mayor, or selectmen of the cities and towns in which the company is supplying gas, the board of gas and electric light commissioners shall have the authority to lower or raise the standard price to such extent as may justly be required by reason of greater or less burdens which may be imposed upon the company by reason of improved methods in the art of manufaccture, by reason of changes in the price of material and labor, or by reason of changes in other conditions affecting the general cost of manufacture or distribution of gas.

Since the passage of this act the price of gas has been twice reduced, on July 1, 1906 to 85 cents, and on July 1, 1907, to 80 cents. At the same time the rate of dividends has been increased from 7 per cent to 9 per cent. For the year ending June 30, 1907, the first year in which the "sliding scale" was put into effect, the sales were about three and three-quarter billion. The reduction of five cents that year amounted to about $190,000, while the extra 1 per cent of dividends which were allowed amounted to about $150,000.

Results of Boston's Experience

During the year ending June 30, 1908, sales were about four billion, and the additional reduction at that time, together with the previous reduction mentioned above, resulted in a saving to the public of about $400,000. The company received an extra 1 per cent in dividends, making the rate 9 per cent, or an increase in the total amount of about $300,000 per year for the stockholders.

In this connection it may be mentioned that the various companies which went to make up what is known as the Boston Consolidated Gas company, were consolidated on June 15, 1905, and between that time and the date that the "sliding scale" went into effect, the new consolidated company reduced its price of gas 10 cents per thousand feet, so that the

The Provident Will make liberal loans on improved property or for building purposes payable in installments. Call and see us about it.

Provident

Mutual Building Loan Association

Cor. 6th & Hill, Sts. Los Angeles J. M. Hunter Mgr

[illegible] between June 15, 1905, and [illegible] 1907, received a reduction in [illegible] 24 cents per thousand cubic [illegible] reduction being brought about by the consolidation and the [illegible] scale."

The sales for the year ending June [illegible] 1910, were four billion, four hundred [illegible] million cubic feet, and the saving [illegible] this amount to the public at the present price as compared with the [illegible] in June, 1905, was about $800,000. It is evident that the proportion of the profits given to the public is increasing and will increase more rapidly than the amount of the profits given to the company.

It should also be stated that although the actual book value of the property represented by the investments of the company amounts to nearly $25,000,000, the capitalization is only about $15,000,000. Consequently a dividend of 9 per cent on the capital of about $15,000,000 is equivalent to about 5½ per cent on the actual book value of the properties.

The public is interested primarily in low prices and good service. The amount of dividends paid to the stockholders of the company does not interest the public unless such payments prevent them from getting low prices.

When the payment of extra dividends is not only prohibited unless reductions in the price are made, but increases in the rate of dividend are actually offered as a reward for reduced prices, then the public joins willingly in the partnership.

With the incentive of increased dividends before them as a result of the display of special energy and ability in conducting the business, managers of such undertakings will use every effort to introduce economies and to increase sales in order that the price may be reduced and the dividends increased. The public will receive the benefit of this increased effort in lower prices.

As far as the public is concerned, nothing but praise is heard of the application of the sliding scale in Boston, as would naturally be expected when their share of the profits has actually been greater than that of the company. Besides the reductions in price which have resulted, it is believed that the partnership with the public which this act creates develops that mutual goodwill and confidence which are essential in the relations of all public service corporations with the public.

Strain of Work

"'Ere, Bill, wot's the matter? You're lookin' worried."

"Work—nothing but work from mornin' till night."

"'Ow long have you been at it?"

"I begin tomorrow."—Tit-Bits.

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER

PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL

FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS

Delivered within the old city boundary lines.

Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.

Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191
Los Angeles, Cal.

The Lockport Plan

A New Development in Commission Government—A "City Manager," Like Private Corporations

The Board of Trade of Lockport, N. Y., is proposing an Optional Third Class Cities Law applicable to all the cities of the state under 50,000 population. In the explanatory pamphlet (obtainable for a stamp from Wm. A. Dickenson, secretary, at Lockport) the law is described as "The Board of Directors Plan" and is explained as follows:

"The power is all lodged in a council or five aldermen elected at large on no-partisan ballots for a term of four years subject to recall after six months. Nomination by petition, or by cash deposit returnable if candidate gets a specified proportion of the votes. Double election except for candidates who get a majority at the first election. The alderman receiving the highest vote is chairman and takes the honorary title of mayor but has no veto power. No other elective officers, except county supervisors. The initiative and referendum are provided for.

"The council hires a city manager who in turn appoints all other city employes subject to existing civil service rules. He is responsible to the council for all the work of the city, except the schools. He prepares the annual budget, an annual corporate stock budget, sits with the council as its secretary and is responsible for the preparation of its business and the execution of its ordinances and resolutions.

"The chief improvement in this act over previous commission plans is the creation of this city manager, thus completing the resemblance of the plan to the private business corporation with its well demonstrated capacity for efficiency. This gives the highly desirable single-headed executive in place of the five-headed western system where each member of the "commission" or council becomes head of a city department. It disposes of the confusion of responsibility inherent in the western plan where the board as a whole is responsible for all departments and each commissioner is also responsible for his own.

"This improved plan also frees the people from the necessity of trying to gauge the fitness of candidates to do executive and technical work as department heads. The people can elect true representatives, labor men for example, men who are typical leaders of numerically-important elements of the population and as they will only direct policies and will not personally execute them, the efficiency of the departments is less likely to be interfered with. Likewise the departments will not be subject to demoralization by needless changes of their chief executives, nor will they be at the mercy of the ignorance of some man who is elected on, say, a franchise issue, and finds himself obliged to learn and direct the details of city finance or street paving.

"The list of available candidates is widened immensely by the fact that the commissioners (aldermen) are not to be obliged to abandon private careers for what may be but a single term of office at the head of an unfamiliar and perhaps uncongenial department. They simply represent the people, at the city hall, with power to review, criticize, question and direct the work of the city manager, who is their creature. Those are conditions which will be attractive to the ablest brains in the community regardless of the small salary.

"This plan cannot be criticised as over-concentration of power, since it divides the power much more evenly than the present governments wherein the Mayor alone often holds over half of the total power of the city.

"The basic merit of the commission plan and the one that is responsible for its unquestioned success is that it is a workable form of democracy. It can be operated easily by the people without the aid of political machines, which under the old form are an indispensable arm of the government. The Short Ballot—only five to elect, all of them independent—is the gist of the plan."

This development of an appointive chief executive will be attacked by some provincials, no doubt, as an unheard-of innovation. The plan, however, has been almost universal on the European Continent and elsewhere for a hundred years. Staunton, Va., has had such a city manager for some years and reports that it is highly successful. Roswell, New Mexico, also has a manager.

Bill—What is Gill's favorite cereal? Jill—Wild oats, I guess.—Yonkers Statesman.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
332 So. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

183rd MONTHLY REPORT

Los Angeles Investment Co.

March 1, 1911

RESOURCES
Balance due on houses being sold on monthly installments, mortgages, secured loans and houses under construction	$2,822,586.89
Building Material Co. stock, including two lumber yards, lumber and planing mills, warehouses, shops, factories, wagons, etc.	164,740.00
Stock in "Home Makers"	41,127.00
Stock in Globe Savings Bank at par (market value $95,000)	63,300.00
Stock in City & County Bank	12,500.00
Real Estate (market value $2,545,620)	2,236,318.93
Fixtures	5,743.33
Cash on hand	170,707.00
	$5,517,023.15

LIABILITIES
Dividends payable (uncalled for)	$ 4,803.85
Gold Notes	58,300.00
Home Certificates and Mortgages on property purchased (not a legal liability)	163,395.36	226,499.21
NET ASSETS:
Capital Stock paid in cash	2,108,171.00
Reserve (Surplus and Undivided Profits)	3,182,352.94	5,290,523.94
		$5,517,023.15

No Unpaid Bills.

THE CITY AND THE POWER COMPANIES

Freeeedings at Les Angeles City Club Luncheon—Committee Appointed to Nominate Officers—Communieation from Board of Governors

The relation of the city to the power companies in the matter of the distribution of the city's electrical energy was discussed at the weekly luncheon of the Los Angeles City Club last Saturday. Mayor Alexander occupied the chair and introduced as the speakers of the day, E. F. Scattergood, engineer in charge of the electric light and power development on the Owens River Aqueduct; and Lorin A. Handley, city clerk of Los Angeles.

The secretary of the club read a communication from the Board of Governors as follows:

To the Members of the City Club:

The City Club of Los Angeles occupies a unique position, for while there are many other organizations with a similar object none attempts to attain it in the same way.

The City Club has been aptly styled the "clearing house of public opinion." Provided a man has a sincere desire to lend a hand in the city's political, social and economic conditions, he is eligible for membership, and men of all shades of opinion attend its meetings, consider subjects of interest, exchange views, and inform themselves generally. Its object has been to arouse to a sense of civic duty and activity those citizens who through lack of knowledge of actual conditions have taken little or no part in public affairs rather than to direct such activities. A place for the formation of opinion rather than for taking action.

This having a common ground for men possessing similar aims, but using a great variety of methods, so different as not infrequently to prove contradictory, is of the utmost value in effecting a working co-operation for the public good. Freedom from the necessity of committing themselves for or against matters under discussion has been, and will continue to be one of the surest ways of the club's guaranteeing the permanency of these conditions.

Convinced that the passing of many resolutions will tend to change the character of the meetings, to lessen the influence of the club, and possibly jeopardize its greatest usefulness, the Board of Governors recommends, and strongly urges that this generally be discouraged. In justice to itself and the community at large which attaches considerable importance to any action of the club, there should also be opportunity for due deliberation on such resolutions as may be presented. The policy of the Board of Governors will therefore except in cases of special urgency, be to defer action on all resolutions for one week from the date of their presentation.

E. F. Scattergood explained the situation in regard to the straw vote, which was taken last Monday, and argued strongly in favor of municipal ownership.

Mr. Scattergood spoke, in part, as follows:

"In order to give a definite idea as to values in the light and power business I will repeat my statement of last October at the public meeting, to the effect that an investment of approximately six and one-half millions would provide a distributing system throughout the present city and a generating system sufficient in capacity for the total present street lighting and commercial light and power business, excluding railway power, and for several years increase; and that with an amount equal to the said present business the city could establish a six-cent base rate and show $700,000 per annum of surplus earnings in excess of interest, depreciation and sinking fund. This would utilize but one-sixth of the total Aqueduct power, and the future benefits would increase in proportion to the amount developed and utilized.

"Any proposition to sell the power to the companies for resale would necessarily mean a reduction in the benefits to the city and its inhabitants of several hundred thousand dollars per year on the present amount of business, and increasing with the business. This is due to differences in organization; to the profit necessarily allowed a private company and to the impossibility of determining exact values in working out such an agreement. In accordance with the companies' statements to the City Council and the above estimate this difference would have been over $400,000 for the year 1909.

"It has been suggested, that perhaps the best thing to be done would be to develop to the extent of something like two and a quarter million dollars and have a million and a quarter for a partial distributing system, covering a considerable part of the city, with the idea of extending that system as we find it convenient. The benefits would be rapidly increased, of course, with an extension of that distributing system. The reason for putting so much in development is that there are certain hydraulic works which must be built there in order to pass the water for aqueduct purposes and in order to develop any power; that money to the extent of a million dollars or somewhat more must be spent whether we develop any power or distribute any power or not, in order that the aqueduct work might go on. Otherwise, several hundred thousand dollars—between three and four—would have to be spent in temporary work for aqueduct purposes."

Mr. Southwick:—"May I ask this question: It was suggested that if the business was so conducted that a $700,000 profit was made in one year, a base rate might be fixed at six cents. Suppose the rate was fixed so that practically no profit would be gained during the year, would that make the base rate lower—perhaps five cents? What base rate would that probably give us?"

Mr. Scattergood:—"A little below five, according to that statement."

Prof. Handley spoke, in part, as follows:

"There are several reasons why Los Angeles should distribute her own power. If there was no other reason, the fact that municipal regulation of utility corporations has been a failure is sufficient. We have no more hope today of successfully regulating, in a just way, public utility corporations than we had some years ago. We have changed forms. We have bettered some conditions. But, on the whole, we are confronted with the same grave problems today that we had before us five years ago. And the only way for a great city like this to escape those problems, in justice to all, is to take over those concerns and let the people run them for themselves.

"Another reason why the city of Los Angeles should distribute that power, and an important reason, is that it is cheaper to the consumer. Under any circumstances a municipality, using any natural means, coal or oil, or building their plants on a river, if they have water enough in it to turn the wheels and generate the power, would be justified in developing that utility for its citizenship. But how much more, when this people create the river that will turn the wheels to generate that power, should they distribute it to their own citizenship. They not only generate the power, but they generate the source of the power.

Government Should Protect the People

"I consider it to be one of the chiefest functions of modern government that that government should prevent the accumulated power of aggregate wealth from tyrannizing over and robbing the man who must earn his bread by the toil of his hands and the sweat of his brow. And with the distrust that exists between the people as a whole and these great corporations, there is no other possible way to restore business and confidence but to make the people the stockholders of the great corporations.

"Another reason why the city should distribute that power is that we might advance the business interests of this city.

"Anyone familiar with the private corporation knows that it is going to make all the profit it can. But let this city let the world know that here is the cheapest power that can be obtained, and see the factories build in our city. They move from one field to the other as it is exhausted, and why shouldn't they be attracted to our city if we can furnish them the cheapest energy to be found in this country?

"This cry of hurting business is all nonsense. You can bring more business to this city in ten years by offering that power to factories than you can ever hope to have come here under private corporations. And I, for one, believe that that power should be sold to the consumers in this city at the minimum rate, for it is best for all concerned.

Makes for a Better Citizenship

There is one more reason that I would advance, and that is this, and it is worthy of the most serious consideration: It makes better citizens. And that needs no comment. If you take all of the great concerns out of the hands of the people; if you give them no interest in those great affairs, you can't expect that they are going to take much interest in the government. But let them become stockholders direct in the power plants; let them know that it is their plant; let them know that it is their interest; that they have some hope and something to expect for themselves and for future generations; and you stir up their ambition and their patriotism to attempt to do their duty then to the state."

SENATE STANDARDS

The rule is unsound and unworthy which declares that where a Senator obtains his seat by corruption in part he is still entitled to his credentials if he has secured enough untainted votes to elect. In equity, fraud in any part of a transaction vitiates the whole. It is almost impossible to bring home to any candidate proof of his personal knowledge of corruption. In all the carnival of corruption growing out of Clark's candidacy in Montana, it was not proved to the satisfaction of the Senate that Clark himself had knowledge. When he resigned, he was about to be unseated, ostensibly on the ground that he had violated the law of Montana in spending more than $1,000 for the legitimate expenses of his election. Clark himself had admitted spending over $200,000 "legitimately." Clark was really unseated because his agents had attempted to bribe the Supreme Court of Montana in proceedings growing out of his purchase of the legislature. One judge testified to an offer of $100,000 made to him. Another testified to a similar attempt to corrupt the court. The public clamor which followed was too much for even the Senate. The Lorimer story is much like that of Clark. It is childish to pretend that the money used in Illinois was not used either by Lorimer or by powerful influences which expected to profit by his votes in the Senate. It was a case of pouring water into a dry pump to start it flowing.—Collier's.

Merchant (to widow)—I am willing to buy your husband's working business and good-will for $5,000.

Widow—Well, but I happen to be part of the working business.

Merchant—Then I'll take only the good-will.—Fliegende Blaetter.

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspeet. Redueed Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.
Los Angeles, Cal.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS

MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES

Los Angeles, Cal.

Three-Story Brick
WAREHOUSE
For
LEASE or SALE
BUILDING 100x140
LOT 168x168
Southern Pacific Switeh
FRANK HERON
301 Grant Bldg.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall
DENTIST
Offiee: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806
Los Angeles, Cal.

The New Order of Things

(Continued from Page 8)

analyzes that out of the muddle thus created, the courts will finally furnish the definition of operative property, which the amendment does not contain, and which the legislature cannot provide by mere enactment.

In the meantime, the interested corporations are moving very cleverly to have embraced within the definition of "operative property" everything from coal oil cans to water sheds.

But the definition of operative property is a matter for future surprises and thrills. What immediately concerns the legislature, the governor—and finally the people of California—is the question of getting in enough revenue under the new scheme of taxation to meet the expenses of the state government after June 1 next. By generous estimates of income, and pruning the out-go down to the murmur—cutting, for example, special appropriations aggregating $18,500,000 asked for, down to $3,000,000—the state's ledger for the next fiscal year has been made to balance on paper.

But that balance is forced. It includes $1,500,000 to be received from franchise taxes. The estimate is a matter of pure guess. At first the guess was $600,000; then, for the sake of the balance boosted to $900,000; and later boost puts it at $1,500,000. If that $1,500,000 does not come in, there will be a $1,500,000 deficit in the state treasury for the coming fiscal year.

It is a curious fact that possessors of franchises are not hastening up to the counter to pay in that important $1,500,000. Some 30,000 possessors of such franchises in the politest, most ladylike way imaginable, have been asked to do so. The character of their answers divides them into three classes:

(1) The largest class, which smiles but fails to respond.

(2) The second largest class, which grins and tells the petitioning state officials to go to that place where blankets are popularly supposed to be unnecessary.

(3) A comparatively unimportant balance, which signifies a willingness to pay.

In the meantime, the hope of securing that $1,500,000 from franchise tax, or anything like $1,500,000 reaches the vanishing point. As the franchise tax vanishes, the coming deficit in the state treasury developes into an alarming reality.

Two Ways Out

It can be met in two ways:

(1) The per centage tax on the gross earnings of the corporations may be increased.

(2) An ad valorem tax may be levied on the property of the citizens of the state.

The present legislature could increase the gross earnings tax on corporations. But here again comes the guess element of the situation. None can tell what the deficit is to be; none can take oath that a deficit will result. The poor, misused corporations would protest against guess-work increase in their taxes. Frankly, such protest would be reasonable enough. For the legislature to say to the corporations, we guess that your taxes are not high enough, and we guess that we must raise them to such and such, would scarcely appeal to business sense or to common sense.

The legislature must fall back upon the alternative of providing the machinery for levying a tax upon the entire people, should the threatened deficit occur. Such machinery should be provided in the Enabling Act under which the new scheme of taxation goes into effect—in Senate Bill 13, to be exact. But Senate Bill 13 provides no such machinery. The embarrassed gentlemen who are wrestling with this little understood problem regard that astonishing fact with consternation. And yet, hoping that Senator John Curtin knows what they hope he knows, the senators passed Senate Bill 13 without a dissenting vote.

Other Curious Features

Senate Bill 13 has other features of such great interest that the intelligent taxpayer with a lot of time on his hands would find profit in its study. One example of interesting suggestion will suffice.

The constitutional amendment which provides for the change in the scheme of taxation, and upon which the senate bill is based, provides that the tax paid on gross earnings of the affected corporations "shall be in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, state, county and municipal, upon the property and business of such companies, etc." In Senate Bill 13, the words and business are added.

What is the effect of the addition of these two words? Precisely the same as the including of the holdings of the corporations in the "operative property" list. It relieves the corporations from local taxation; it frees them from liability for business licenses imposed in many cities. The constitutional amendment makes no such provision. Senate Bill 13 alone provides it.

It is estimated that San Francisco alone will lose approximately $50,000 a year by such a provision, and that the corporations will be that amount in pocket.

Wallace, the Square Dealer

Lest we forget: Lieutenant-Governor Wallace, with clammy facetiousness referred to by a Los Angeles daily as "former councilman" Wallace, is making about the best presiding officer California has had. It is true that he is not invariably as acute, when tricks are being attempted, as some of the more experienced and less fair parliamentarians who sometimes sit in his chair for a few moments, but he has demonstrated to the satisfaction of every member of the senate, even his political enemies, that he intends to give every member a square deal.

This, of course, is something of an innovation in the California senate, which accounts for the inability of certain members to appreciate the new order. So long has the majority been accustomed to see its presiding officer rule, on every possible occasion, with bias and prejudice, that it is hard for the remnant of the old regime to realize that a fair gavel wielder is really in the chair at last.

A Swan Song

Clyde Bishop's "state song" bill has become a swan song bill. It sleepeth in a senate committee, and no chin music can awaken it.

The bill was a farce from the start, and how the assembly came to pass it up to the senate is one of those mysteries that is not easy of solution. It accomplished one thing, however—it gave the song some cheap advertising. The state was compelled to go to the expense and trouble of having the entire song printed, and copies of it were in tremendous demand as long as they lasted. The words were not bad, but the music thereto—well, the song, as a state institution, is enjoying its long sleep, so there is no use of my trying to pose as the genuine article among musical critics.

"What are you really going to swear off this year?" "My taxes."—Baltimore American.

Political Table Talk

(Continued from Page 4)

cry Curry cuts a comely figure wherever the people may put him, in select social circles, in a hotel lobby, in front of a bar, a church pew, no matter where He acquits himself with dignity and eclat All who care for the respectabilities of the mayor's function will be for Curry and not for McCarthy. Otherwise there is not much room for choice between them. The interests that espoused the cause of McCarthy can deal as readily with Curry. The city will be governed little better or little worse under one than other. The question before San Francisco is: If these two men divide the worser element between them why may not the better element put up a really first class citizen and elect him?

Men to Handle the State's Millions The Watchman cannot close his week's budget without commending Governor Johnson for his soundness of judgment in selecting the commissioners who are to handle the $5,000,000 to be contributed by the state to the Panama-Pacific exposition. These men are Matthew I. Sullivan, Chester H. Rowell, Marshall Stimson, Robert C. Rogers, the governor himself being the fifth man and chairman of the committee. Not a dollar of that money will be misapplied. We have to know that the men of San Francisco who have been conspicuously active in furthering this enterprise, are the men who were conspicuously inactive in bringing successful rascality to punishment, and some of them were some of the successful rascals, or were in open and avowed sympathy with them, in their efforts to defeat justice. Hence the precautions taken by the president, by the legislature and governor of California, to see to it that, so far as the general interest is concerned, faith with the public shall be preserved. The danger is not so much that these funds, or any of them, shall be stolen outright, although there is danger of graft in every contract, but that the fair shall be so located as to give special interests an opportunity to derive special advantages in the value of millions that should go to the advantage of the public. The Watchman does not know what power this commission may have, legally and directly or morally and indirectly, but it will be incumbent upon them to use their uttermost endeavors to prevent the conversion of this enterprise, for which all pay, into a private snap for the further enrichment of a few inside personalities already richer than men ought to be. Whatever is of permanent value should accrue to San Francisco and to none other. San Francisco needs all the good of it that the traffic will bear.

Beggar—Please help me to recover my child.

Lady—Is your child lost?

Beggar—No, mum, but his clothes are worn out.—Boston Transcript.

OUTING SUITS

Time is at hand when the Outing Suit becomes very desirable.

We make suits to measure for men and women of Govt. Khaki, Fustian Cloth and Corduroy. A card will bring you a nicely illustrated catalogue postpaid.

The Wm. H. Hoegee Co. Inc.

138-142 So. Main St.,

Los Angeles

Home 10087 Main 8447

Residence Burglary Insurance

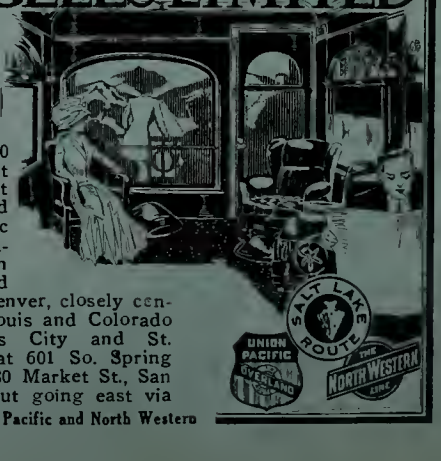
Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?

Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.

Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.



R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY

200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.

Home Phone 40444 Los Angeles, Cal. Sunset Phone M. 7096

LOS ANGELES LIMITED

Three Days To Chicago

This palatial train leaves Los Angeles daily at 10:30 a. m. and arrives at Chicago third day at 11:30 a. m. A solid train of electric lighted sleepers, dining and observation cars, to Chicago and also a sleeper to Denver, closely connecting with St. Louis and Colorado Limited for Kansas City and St. Louis. Particulars at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. 680 Market St., San Francisco, etc., about going east via

Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and North Western

AN UNUSUAL OFFER

The California Outlook, $1.00 Per Year

(The Great Progressive State Weekly)

AND

The Los Angeles Express, $3.00 Per Year

(The Great Progressive Daily of the Southwest)

Total Value $4.00 Per Year

Both for the Price of One

$3.00 Per Year in Advance

Send in your order now for one or both

This Coupon for The Los Angeles Express and The California Outlook

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Please send me the LOS ANGELES EXPRESS and THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK for one year, for which find $3 enclosed. (Check currency or money order.)

Name .....

Street Address .....

City .....

Date 1911

This Coupon for The California Outlook alone

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Los Angeles and San Francisco

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name .....

Street Address .....

City .....

Date 1911

Mail to 1018 Phelan Bldg., San Francisco, or 311 E. 4th St., Los Angeles.

IN THIS ISSUE "Nationalism and the Judiciary" By Theodore Roosevelt

CALIFORNIA STATE

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Vol. X. No. 12 Los Angeles and San Francisco, March 18, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Culver in Los Angeles Express.

THE DOLLAR AS MEASURE OF DUTY

It has long been notorious that the Republic of Mexico is a republic in name only; that it is an autocracy and a tyranny, its elections carried by bayonet charges, its justice made a commodity, its rights of citizenship a mockery and its system of education a myth on paper; that rights of property, except to the privileged, are not in esse, that only the rich are prosperous and the influential secure; that the Yaquis are sold into an exterminating slavery and that peonage, medieval as to time and hopeless as to results, characterizes the industry of the country. And yet it was not until dollars appeared to be in danger that a single American soldier was started toward the Mexican frontier or that our nation, or any other, made representations to the court of Diaz, than which the locale of his government is nothing less. Doubtless the dollars of investing nations must and will be protected, but what flattering unction might we Americans not have taken to our souls had our Uncle Sam been moved, long since, to some sort of action out of consideration for liberty and justice, enlightenment and law, in the dusky pseudo-republics to the south of us, of which the Republic of Mexico is only some better than the worst.

A. J. P.

✣ ✣ ✣

A DIPLOMATIC DISAVOWAL

It is not always that the heart can be worn upon the sleeve. There are times and occasions when mental reservations comport with common sense. Therefore it was fitting that government officials and leading periodicals aver with unction that nothing could be farther from the American mind than Canadian annexation. All the same no American should ever set eyes on the map of the continent of North America without affirming in his heart that, so the God of Nations being pleased, the time shall some day come when this republic of ours shall be ocean-bound with not an alien flag to vex it from Porto Rico to the Aleutes and from Baffin to the Big Ditch, not by force of arms, but by making our family of millions so happy, so content, so justly governed and freely prosperous that our near-by neighbors will gravitate toward us as naturally and willingly as ever swain fell a victim to the graces of womanhood. We can, at present, best advance that cause by attending to our own knitting, but to lose sight of it were an impiety and a treason.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE RARITY OF PENITENCE

It was in accordance with the fitness of things that the term "penitentiary" gave place to "state prison," for in a state prison nothing is so rare as downright penitence for wrong-doing. In thirteen years of experience in Charlestown (Mass.) prison for long-termers the warden had not detected among murderers (he had had hundreds in his charge) a single instance of genuine contrition for crime committed however atrocious. Convicts are sorry for themselves and early come to feel that they have been punished enough, but true penitence is as rare among them as true grandeur of character. And Abe Ruef seems to afford no exception to the rule. He avers that his conscience is clear, feels that he has done no wrong but is the victim of an unfortunate turn in the wheel of fortune. As the months and years go by, if they do, and the prison atmosphere sinks into his spirit the mind of the man may be transformed, but it is unlikely to be.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK
A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

LOS ANGELES, 311 East Fourth St.
SAN FRANCISCO, 1018 Phelan Building.

Published in LOS ANGELES Every Saturday

Subscription Price $1.00 a Year, in Advance.
Single Copies 5 Cents at News Stands.

A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing
C. D. WILLARD } Editors

C. H. RANDALL, Manager

TRUSTEES
Harris Weinstock, San Francisco.
Selah Chamberlain, San Francisco.
W. F. Chandler, Fresno.
M. Lissner, Los Angeles.
E. A. Dickson, Los Angeles.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Application made for entry for THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK in the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, as second-class mail matter.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE PRESIDENT'S SECRETARIES

Last summer, when the vote in the various state primaries convinced the reactionaries, who then had our President in charge, that there was trouble ahead, the celebrated pussyfoot, Murray Crane of Massachusetts, was, by general consent, delegated to straighten things out. Harmony was to be restored in the party by a series of concessions and compromises, and the President was to be more carefully advised as to his future course. Cannon, who had just finished a noisy and disastrous splurge in Kansas, was to be bottled up. Ballinger was to be allowed gently to fade away, the Insurgent leaders were to be placated by the restoration of their patronage, and, as an earnest of wiser political work at Washington, the President was to be provided with a new secretary, a certain Charles D. Norton of Chicago, who was said to be a wonder.

This interesting program missed fire in a number of places, and as far as the fall elections went the net result was a nit result. Ballinger held on like a limpet; and the amazing fact developed that the Insurgents had other points of interest in the government besides that of getting jobs for their followers. But the new secretary was installed, and he had,—as Dooley says—"his pitchure in all the pa-apers." We were told how he had suddenly grown from a $3 a week errand boy to the manager of an insurance company—or was it only the assistant manager?—at $50,000 a year, or some such trifle. His great condescension in resigning as a captain of industry to become the guiding star of a wabbling administration was abundantly set forth as an example to be followed by the youth of our land. Evidently here was a secretary that would fulfill all the highest traditions that go with that delicate and important form of job—a diplomat, a glad-hander, a whipping boy, a pace-maker, a ready letter-writer, a discourager of hesitancy, fidus Achates, Caleb Balderstone and all the rest of it. The nation fairly held its breath to see what would happen when Mr. Norton should get down to business, secretarying.

It happened almost instantly—the most astounding, incredible and deplorable thing in the way of stupid politics and bad administration of public affairs that has come out of the White House since the days of Andrew Johnson. It was a letter signed by Mr. Norton, this paragon of a secretary, to a man out in Iowa, announcing that the President had reformed and would no longer attempt to play patronage against principle, as he had been doing under the advice of the reactionary leaders, and that, having been caught in the act and hopelessly beaten at the game, he was willing to quit—and would the Insurgents please forgive him and be good hereafter?

Friends and foes of the administration alike stood aghast at the enormity of the blunder. That he should cease the discreditable policy which his association with the lowest and most cynical element of his party had led him into was eminently wise and proper, but that he should lower the great office and make himself personally ridiculous by public confession and by a feeble and half-facetious form of defense, this was far beyond the worst his enemies had expected or his friends feared in him. The break was so magnificent that no one for a moment thought it the work of a mere amateur in blundering. It seemed to have the professional touch that we had come to look for in W. H. Taft. The progressive papers unanimously treated the letter as coming direct from the President, and the reactionary papers none of them denied it. How could they? Anything else involved an assumption that Norton had written the thing on his own hook, without consulting his principal, and such a hideous break as that, on the part of the veriest tyro at the secretary business, was quite unthinkable.

But the story that now passes current among the Washington newspaper correspondents—and in the long run these people generally arrive at the exact truth—is that the President talked over the patronage situation with Norton and expressed his annoyance at the untenable position in which Cannon and the others had placed him, and his wish to get out of the scrape on any kind of reasonable terms; that Norton then suggested that he, the secretary, should write a letter "that would straighten things out," and that the President made no answering comment, wondering, no doubt, as any sane man might wonder, how such a letter could possibly be formulated; that the free-and-easy Mr. Norton took the Presidential silence as warrant for his trying his hand at the Murray Crane line of business. And it was thus that the bull got loose among the administration's choicest Limoges and Satsuma.

But why did not Taft come out with the whole story at the time? Because, respond his admirers, he was too much of a gentleman and a sport to attempt to hide behind a secretary. He would take whatever was coming to him, and take it like a man. Even those who do not admire the President over-much can see reasons enough why he should have kept still. Once the cat was out of the bag, all the explaining in the world could not get it back in. After all, the worst that Norton did was merely to tell the truth—a high crime in diplomacy and in secretarying. The situation was simply hopeless. Once more the President

The Coming of Roosevelt

CALIFORNIA will in a few days be honored by a visit from one who has been very properly described as the first citizen of the world — Theodore Roosevelt. If there be now, in this or any other country, one whose record of achievement in behalf of his fellows, of accomplishing the greatest possible good to the greatest possible number, surpasses that of Roosevelt, let us hear the name. The fastidious may call it idle speculation, and an effort to compare where comparisons are foolish, but we instinctively measure the size of one man by throwing the silhouette of his achievement, plus, if he be still living, his future promise, against the outline of these same things as they appear in others. We look upon the great figures in the arena of today, and consider what they have done: William of Germany, the Pope, Rostand, Lloyd George, Asquith, Kipling, Carnegie, Morgan, Rockefeller, Edison, La Follette, Taft—which one shall we set up for the comparison with this man, who for seven years presided over the destinies of the richest, most powerful and most progressive nation on earth, who swept away old institutions of political evil, who completely changed the national point of view on the most vital issues of business and government, and who, in the face of the revolution he had wrought, was acclaimed, at the end of his service, by all classes of people, and by the leaders of all political factions, as worthy to rank with the very greatest that have occupied the Presidential office.

The past achievement of this First Citizen is written plainly enough on a myriad of pages of the history of his country. Nothing can take that away, not even such vast oceans of abuse and malediction as were hurled at his great predecessors, Washington and Lincoln. But we are a practical people, who stand with our faces toward the future. It is not so much the Roosevelt of the past that we are eager to greet, as it is the Roosevelt of the present and of the time yet to be. Although he no longer holds public office, and may never again serve us in that way, we know that this tremendous store of energy, of clear judgment, of perfect sincerity, and of love for the people is available, while he lives, as a great national asset. We recognize him as a powerful living force for good citizenship in the Republic, wisely directing our thoughts toward the difficult problems that lie in the path, and helping to guide us to a just solution. The nation is facing a crisis in its history as portentous as when the Constitution was adopted or as when secession was met and overthrown. Each time with the hour there came the man. It is to the eternal fame of Theodore Roosevelt that he first aroused the American people to the nature of the struggle that confronted them, and it is to him they will turn for guidance and moral leadership when the lines of battle are drawn.

C. D. W.

---

had locked himself in with the key thrown out of the window.

In due course of time, long enough afterward for the marks of cause and effect to be obliterated, Mr. Norton is allowed to resign. A new secretary comes in—this time without any beating of cymbals—and the ex-captain of industry goes to New York to accept the vice-presidency of a bank.

We find this story of Mr. Norton's sole responsibility for the patronage letter both easy and gratifying to believe. We were loth to part with the very last atom of respect for the President's political judgment, and the letter seemed to leave no option in the matter. The captain of industry, on the other hand, is a being in whose abysmal ignorance and thick-headedness—on everything except his one specialty—we have long believed. The experience comes often to every man of affairs to be absolutely dumbfounded at the small intelligence of some man—not all men, but one here and there—who has achieved great distinction in the field of money making. Because a man makes or is paid $50,000 a year we naturally assume that he has a $50,000 outfit of brains. Well, it is a mistake, for sometimes he has a mental equipment that a $20 a week reporter would look upon with the deepest scorn. In these days the money-maker is usually a specialist, and the specialist is of narrow view. A secretary detailed to keep Mr. Taft out of trouble should be made of the broadest possible stuff.

C. D. W.

* * *

THE CHILDREN AND THE THEATER

While there are some people who believe the theater to be a thing of evil and who never enter one, the average American citizen attends the play house frequently and takes his family, if he has one, with him. We who live in the cities have witnessed in the last ten years an extraordinary increase in the number of theaters and in the gross number of people that go to them, an increase that is quite disproportionate to the mere enlargement of the city. In addition to the regular theaters of late there have sprung up great numbers of moving picture shows and other forms of entertainment that one might suppose would draw people away from the theater. As they have not done so, it is evident that the hold of the playhouse on the people is steadily increasing, and that it is to be reckoned with on that basis.

Whatever American parents enjoy they wish their children to enjoy with them, and so it happens that there is now a very large patronage of the theater by children and this also is increasing. It is idle to deplore it. People wish their children to have pleasure, and the child that has once seen a spectacular performance or a vaudeville with animals or dancing or legerdemain, will beg to be taken often. The wise parent is, of course, moderate in this form of indulgence, and will make careful selection of the performance to which the child is taken, but he will yield at times. The real trouble comes in the selection of the performance, for, in spite of the volume and certainty of this patronage, the theater manager makes little effort to cater to it.

In the old days we had at intervals affairs known as "pantomimes" which were gotten up expressly for children. They contained a great deal of rough horse play and "Katzenjammer Kid" tricks that needed expurgation, but they were at least a definite concession to the children. Most of that business has been taken over by the circus. At all events the pantomime is gone. The spectacular and burlesque shows are intended for grown people, and almost invariably contain stuff that a well-regulated family finds objectionable. While the vaudeville contains a turn or two that may be adapted to the edification of children, it contains a great deal more that tires them and is quite unsuitable for their use.

It is to meet this very evident need of innocent theatrical entertainment for the young, the very young, that the "Children's Theater" idea has sprung up in eastern cities and has gradually found its way to this coast. In some of the larger cities one or more theaters have been completely given over to this line of performance. The patronage has been excellent, the chief trouble being to find suitable plays and performers that will satisfy both parents and children. Once in a while there is a stroke of genius like Maude Adams with Barrie's Peter Pan, but that is fairly the event of a life time. Still there is plenty of good material extant, and the demand will create the supply. Many women's clubs have become interested in the movement, and where the patronage is not large enough for a regular children's theater, they have encouraged theatrical managers and dramatic schools to prepare occasional performances.

The theater is a great force, for education or for demoralization, whichever the people demand. While we may be a bit careless as to what we grown-up folk hear and see in the play-house, we are concerned about what is placed before our young people. Possibly a reform, starting at that end of the line, may in time work through to the top.

✣ ✣ ✣

GEN. FORBES' SHARP-SHOOTERS

Vociferous objection to General Forbes' suggestion, that high-school boys over the State be trained to military drill and sharpshooting, is to be anticipated, but suffer not the force of it to sweep sanity off its feet. To know how to march and to shoot is not necessarily to be filled with the mania to fight, rather to the contrary inasmuch as it affords to the mind some inkling of what war is like. These are the things, or some of them, that are to be credited to military training: Instant and unquestioning obedience to properly constituted authority, which the American youth, not so trained, has small chance of learning otherwheres, a deficiency that fills more convict cells with criminals than lust, or greed, or laziness, the saloon influence or evil companions. It sets them up and gives them carriage, teaches them mastery over their own bodies, personal neatness, civility, courage and, in all the activities of life, that if they don't hit the mark they are only marks to be hit. No greater single good can come to the high-school boys of California.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE HAREM-SCARE-'EM SKIRT

We menfolks love our women and so love to see them tidy and neat that we seldom complain of millinery or ladies' tailoring bills, but, in recent years, we have had much to endure. Season by season we have seen our side partners grow hideous and ever more hideous until, hobbled at one end and horribled at the other, nightmares rule the day and jimjams the night. God give us surcease from that sorrow! That fashions eminate from that nether world whose habitues owe their lost estate to the depravities of the male sex we now know to be true, for nothing other than the spirit of malignity born of despair could have conjured those styles which do prevail. Nevertheless we crave mercy, in that the punishment of our sex is greater than we can bear. Therefore, if the harem-scare-'em skirt must come, suffer it, O powers that be, at least to have the compensations of convenience of locomotion and salubrity of health even if it cannot be made to fit!

✣ ✣ ✣

ONE OF THE THINGS THAT GRIND

Nineteen-year-old Marie Elkins lately applied to the courts for an allowance from her father's fortune upon which to live. Request most reasonable! But what, in the eyes of this opening bud of womanhood constitutes a living? Why, $100 per month for maid to help her dress herself and comb her hair, $640 a month for rooms at her hotel, $3,000 a year for motor and horses, $5,000 for dresses, $10,000 for vacation from the arduous duty of keeping alive and $3,000 to $5,000 for balls and parties. Is it any wonder that a cardinal principle of Socialism is that rights of bequest and inheritance shall be cut off, or limited to totems, heirlooms and keepsakes, and that that ism is growing apace the whole world around? Who is doing it? Certainly not the Socialists for they argue as a rabbit runs, ever in a circle. These are the things that grind out their grist for them. Fact!

✣ ✣ ✣

THE RIGHT OF BEQUEST

A grouchy old bachelor in Austria has bequeathed a large fortune to twelve old horses, to be succeeded by other twelve as fast as the first die off and so on forever. The will is to be attacked as not being consonant with sound policy. If money cannot be willed to horses, then why to asses, four legged or two? This raises the whole issue of the right to bequeath and puts in ridiculous light the exaggerated notions as to this right which have heretofore obtained. Inheritances can be permitted only in so far as the public welfare may best be subserved by them. Out of no grave should any dead hand be thrust to misdirect the disposition of any estate, a principle that should immediately and universally be adopted and then dated back far enough to enable it to command that judicial sanction which comes only by and through immemorial usage.

THAT BUNCH

A grabber of much acumen was lately heard to enveigh with great bitterness against "that bunch" now occupying the capitol at Sacramento. There is, he thinks, no telling the evil that will be worked to business interests through the fanatical interference of the present legislature with affairs, and the soul of him yearns for the good old days when a legislature could be induced to lend its aid to a private real estate speculation by a capitol-removal fiasco. Men of that ilk are entitled to a certain measure of commiseration. A campaign for Right Things is so far removed from anything with which they have ever been associated that they find difficulty in understanding how some men can be actuated by any motives other than to "git and git a plenty while you're a gitt'n."

✣ ✣ ✣

NOTHING EASIER

Duncan McKinlay has expressed the conviction that if William Kent expects to have anything to say about the distribution of political patronage in the second congressional district of California he will have to go to the president and re-establish old-time cordial relations, than which nothing can be easier. All the president will have to do will be what Mr. Kent wants to have done, but if His Excellency supposes for one moment that deprivation of patronage will influence William Kent to cease meddling with Tahoe contracts, or deter him from butting in whenever he thinks things are going wrong, then neither the president nor Duncan McKinlay know of what manner of material William Kent is made. He in neither a blue-stocking nor an irreconciliable radical, but he is as good a judge of Right Things as any man in public life and his mind is his own every day in the week.

✣ ✣ ✣

TIE PASSES ONLY

The decision of the supreme court of the United States, that railroads may not exchange chips and whetstones, advertising space and personal service, for transportation will not meet with favor in newspaper offices where space that, seemingly, costs nothing could readily be exchanged for trip passes that, also seemingly, cost the railroads nothing extra inasmuch as they have to run their trains anyhow. But all these exchanges of space for space go very much by favor and imply at least that "negative freindship," on the part of the editor toward the railroad which has tended to tone down editorial utterances if they do not buy silence. When the editor must make his choice between the tie pass, paying his fare and staying at home he will be in a position to deal with public service corporations without conscious or unconscious bias and that will be in line with public policy. As to passes generally those ride free who can best afford to pay their fares while, if all pay as others pay, all may ride the cheaper. It is time to bring all sorts of special privilege to an end.

Timber wolves have been killing and eating people in Alaska, according to a dispatch from Seattle. Between timber wolves and alleged syndicate sharks, the lot of the Alaskan does not seem to be a particularly happy one.—New Orleans Times Democrat.

Our Work Is All Cut Out for Us Those who stand for progressive policies will, when the present Legislature adjourns, find their summer's work all cut out for them, and each man of us will find a man's job awaiting the best there is in him. It is not going to be easy to bring the sentiment of the state fully abreast of the standards set by Legislature and executive, but the work must be done or there will be a slipping back if not a back-sliding. Whatever of argument that influenced legislative or executive action in each given particular must be repeated before all the people, to the end that the people may understand what is proposed as fully as the legislators themselves understood when they voted for or against. Herein the press of the state, and to a very great extent the interior and local press, can be of inestimable value. The papers that the people read (and all that is in all local papers is read even to the display advertisements) must be frank and fair and tell succinctly the things that the people must know before they can vote intelligently on the constitutional amendments proposed, and the likelihood is that there will be many of them. Whoever has a voice must willingly let it be heard on behalf of those measures that he deems meritorious. It is not out of the question that the Governor himself may have to make another of those whirlwind campaigns of his on behalf of measures that ought to be sanctioned at the polls.

Special Amendment Election Is Needed It will not be wise to suffer the proposed constitutional amendments to go over to the next general election. That will be a presidential election and every presidential election absorbs about all the attention that the public mind can give to public affairs. There should be a special amendment election this fall with no other issues to divide attention and we should go at the subjects in hand hammer and tongs. That way they can be decided and decided right. It will cost something to do it, but our Legislature should adopt and put into immediate operation the Oregon system of getting out a pamphlet to be sent to each registered voter containing the proposed constitutional amendments and the arguments for and against each of them, allowing the advocates and opponents space for presenting their views at $50 per page. The campaign of education should be such an one as California has not witnessed. If legislation, or any portion of it, is to be directly taken in hand by the people then the people must be as well instructed in the issues involved as are legislators themselves or government will go awry. We progressives are on the right road, but we must bring the main body up to where the vanguard now is or the vanguard will not be able to hold the strategic positions gained. Let us have these formative issues put up to us all by themselves, good and hard, else that most unfortunate of expressions, "Reform Run Mad," may so impress the public mind as to result in a public pre-judging and misjudging of issues important to the progress of our state and race.

Not As New As Many Suppose Not all the so-called reform measures that this Legislature will put up to the voters of California are as new in principle, however, as they may be in practice, as many suppose. Read this and think it over for a few minutes: "All power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government vested with authority, whether legislative, executive or judicial, are the substitutes and agents of the people and are at all times accountable to them." Very much to the point is it not? Does it not cover and sanction the recall idea to perfection? Note especially the words, "at all times," not at intervals of twelve years, as we in California elect our justices of the appellate courts. Well, this is taken from the constitution of Massachusetts and was put into it and adopted by the people of that state in 1780 and has been held in reverence ever since as stating a basic principle as to ultimate responsibility in that commonwealth. If Massachusetts has not felt called upon to adopt recall measures covering the judiciary it is because public sentiment, the appointive system, life tenure with good behavior and a fortunate exemption of the bench from corporation domination, have made the recall of the judiciary unnecessary and not because there is no warrant for it in the fundamental law of that commonwealth. The Watchman has not favored the incorporation of the recall of the judiciary with the recall of other officers, but wholly for practical and prudential reasons, not on principle, for the recall as applied to the judiciary is as sound in principle as when applied to executive or legislative office, and the warrant for it is much stronger in that the elective term of appellate judges is three times as long as that of governor or other state officers. No end of mischief can be done by an appellate justice who, for twelve years, holds himself responsible, not to the people as their "agent," or "substitute" in administering justice, but to the corporation whose political bureau made him a place on a bench that is disgraced by his presence. California is no stranger to such betrayals of the public interest. While the idea of applying the recall to the judiciary is repugnant to our traditions the principle upon which it rests is as firmly grounded in our foundation principles as any liberty or power the people make bold to cherish, and no effort must be spared to make the voters of California understand that this is true.

A PYGMIE CANNOT STOP A PROGRESSIVE

Sheriffs' Offices Nests for Grafters That sheriffs' offices are nests for petty grafters the country over is a fact that many have marveled at, and yet there is a good psychological reason for it. On the bottom rung of the human ladder is the odd-jobs man, the man who is incapable of sustained effort and works a day and rests two, or works an hour or so in loading a dray, moving a piano, putting furniture into a house or whatever else lasts not too long, and, for the rest of that day, spits and whittles, whittles and spits, happy in wanting little here below. There is no community so small that it does not sustain one or more of such unsteadfast citizens. If one of these develops political acumen and executive capacity above cleaning cuspidors and sweeping saloons, and becomes enterprising enough to hunt for a job at loafing that will pay reasonably well (and will not be too steady even at loafing), such an one generally aspires to be constable or deputy sheriff. Being neither steady nor steadfast such an office gives him what his nature craves, short rushes and long rests, with something going on to stimulate a jaded attention. Such a man cannot endure to work all day at anything all by himself, but to take a convict to prison or an insane person to a hospital is just the kind of a snap such men are looking for and, inasmuch as such jobs are to be had at the sheriff's office and nowhere else, they naturally become hangers-on looking for odd-jobs of that sort which the sheriff has to give. In working in petty grafts they become much more expert than in handling their charges, especially with reference to the insane, who are sick persons and need to be handled with great care and with expert knowledge as to how to handle them. There is not a state in the Union that has not had to fight this species of public nuisance and petty graft and, so far, California has not fought it as successfully as some others. It is time to renew the battle for better methods, and the best method known is for each state hospital to train its own messengers to be sent for persons as soon as committed. This

(Continued on Page 19)

Limitation of Newspaper Power

Los Angeles Sunset Club Paper by C. D. Willard

I remember that twelve or fifteen years ago a member of this club, an ex-newspaper man, gave us a dissertation on the question of whether it was good public policy that any one man in a republic should enjoy the amount of power given by the ownership of a newspaper, and not be subject to any kind of control or authority. There were reasons why that inquiry was pertinent then and it seems to me now that none of those reasons have departed, while a number of new ones have been added.

Whether a man regards the present trend of political affairs from a reactionary or progressive viewpoint, he must admit as a plain matter of fact that our institutions are steadily becoming more democratic, and that more direct power is coming into the hands of the people. Direct legislation, the recall and the direct primary are spreading everywhere, and even though there may be some counter-revolutions, the general tendency toward the exercise of power directly by the voter instead of through delegates and representatives is too clear to admit of any question. This is a changed condition, and one that must be considered in its relation to the newspaper.

Knowledge is power, partly because with the acquirement of knowledge comes the instinct for the exercise of power. One reason for the growth of the democratic sentiment and its ripening into practical laws for the people's rule is the tremendous spread of popular education in our time. General illiteracy ceased with the generation of our fathers, and we have looked on and beheld the average of knowledge rise from mere reading and writing very nearly to the high school plane. As a nation we are feeling our intellectual oats, and all sorts of things are likely to happen to us. But if we are to exercise power thus freely, we must be able to vote intelligently, and to do that we must know the facts, and often the time is so short and events move so thick and fast, that there is only one place from which we can get the facts—and that is the newspaper.

We recognize that public health must be preserved, and we have pure food laws, and regulation of water courses, and a rigid exercise of authority over contagious diseases. We have also some legislation for the protection of public morals. We are properly impressed with the need for preserving the purity of the ballot as to bribery and as to its correct counting. But are we entirely awake to the menace to public welfare in the deception and misleading of voters through false statement of fact in the only source from which they are, as a rule, able to get the information they must have? Under the old system, when we put our affairs blindly into the hands of representatives and political delegates, the issue was not so direct. Now we are brought face to face with it.

Theoretically this is a difficulty that should carry its own remedy; that is to say, if a paper deceives its readers they should logically leave it for a truthful paper, and thus put newspaper honesty at a premium. But there are several reasons why this theory does not work out, and the two principal of these are, first, the existence of the Associated Press, and, second, the peculiar nature of the newspaper business, whereby, as in no other business, success compounds on itself in a geometric ratio.

The Associated Press makes the newspaper business a practical monopoly. In the morning field it takes a Hearst with ten millions of capital and a chain of papers to buck the solid line, and even he is willing to pay big sums to buy franchises when any are obtainable. In the afternoon field there is an open service offered by the Scripps-McRae people, but it is not to be compared with the Associated Press. Thus competition is limited, and in many places scarcely exists at all.

Again, in mercantile lines as a man increases the volume of his business and hence his income, he necessarily increases his expense. There is a slight margin of saving or compound profit, but not much. But in the newspaper business added circulation, which pays for itself in subscriptions, allows the publisher to charge more and more for his advertising space at only an insignificant increase of cost. Given certain profits at 100,000 circulation, the profits at 200,000 are not merely twice as great, but like enough twentyfold. This supplies the publisher with a huge fund that may be used in making his paper so attractive as to hold his subscribers whether he tells them the truth or not. No other business places such a direct premium on rascality. I do not mean to be cynical and say, as some do, that only the lying and sensational papers are successful. I do not believe it. But I challenge any one to show me another line of business than that of newspapering, that is allowed by law, in which one may habitually lie to his customers, adulterate his product to a hideous degree, practice every kind of meanness and injustice toward individuals and show absolute contempt for the public generally, and yet, in spite of all these things, achieve an enormous financial success. And that is not all. Can any one name a line of business that is countenanced by law—other than the newspaper business—in which big money may be made by pandering to the worst and lowest in our frail human nature, the telling of immoral stories, writing obscene headlines, nursing envy, creating hatreds, setting whole communities by the ears, exploiting misfortune and parading vulgarity to the public view? Yes, the theatre has been allowed to do some of these things in a moderate degree; but our police are now censoring theatres and even the nickel moving picture show is reviewed by a committee on morals. Vice is turned to money in many ways and by many people, but chiefly under cover, skulking from the law, and necessarily on a small scale. The newspaper alone is given free rein to debauch morality, to exalt falsehood, to mislead voters and to degrade humanity, and through these horrid practices to pile up huge profits. Why? Why should the publisher be allowed this immunity in the face of grave public peril? Why is he not muck-raked and shown up, and the noisome elements of his business dragged out into the sun? Rest calm and assured. His day in court, in that great and solemn tribunal of public opinion which he has done so much to create, is almost at hand. Individuals may tremble before him, but democracy will not. The problem is intricate, but it is not beyond the reach of law. If monopoly stands in the way, it must be blown up and removed. If legislatures dare not pass laws, then the work must be done by initiative. If private newspapers cannot be made to give us the truth, then municipal or state publications may supply the lack. It is no more difficult to censor an immoral and sensational newspaper than a performance at the theatre. All that is needed is that we should get these matters in proper perspective, and recognize that the doctrine of "let alone" and "private business" does not apply to an enterprise with the gigantic possibilities for good and for harm that are possessed by the modern newspaper. It is a common carrier, a necessity of life, a public utility, a factor of government under the new system, and whether it is to be a boon or a menace to our political and moral development rests with the people themselves to say.

APPLY RECALL TO JUDICIARY

There's such divinity doth hedge about a judge, in some minds, that they think it monstrous to include judges in the proposed amendment providing for the recall of unfaithful, incompetent or corrupt public officials.

Why this should be so we cannot understand. A judge, like any one else elected to public office, is but an employee of the people, and his employer should have the right to discharge him at any time for cause.

We have had judges right here in San Francisco who were known to sell their opinions and decisions like merchandise; yet there was no way of getting rid of them save by impeachment proceedings before a legislature as corrupt as they.

We have had insane judges, too, on the superior bench. There was no way, not even by impeachment proceedings, to retire them. Even if sent to an insane asylum—as one was—he could serve out his term of office.

The Recall would furnish an easy remedy for such evils.

No fear need be entertained, as some seem to think, that the Recall would ever be invoked against an honest, efficient judge, because of some decision which he might render that was distasteful to a few or to even a majority of the people. The sense of fair play is too strong to permit of any such use of the Recall.

Besides, there is such deep-rooted respect for an upright judiciary, that any attempt to recall a judge, save where he has grossly disregarded the rights of the people and perverted the law, would be frowned down.

We, therefore, see no reason whatever why the Recall should not apply to judges as well as to all public officials, from the Governor down.—San Francisco Star.

Sitting on the sofa, his right arm stole about her form. "This," he said, "is what I call making glad waste places."

"Oh, no," she replied; "a waste place is one that has never been cultivated."—Newark Star.

"I should hate to live after all my friends were dead." "I don't blame you. It's always hard to borrow money from strangers."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Philadelphia North American

AT THE BAR

It is significant that when, two days before the Lorimer vote, the Constitutional Amendment providing for the direct election of United States Senators was defeated by a margin of four votes, Senator Lorimer was one of those who voted against the amendment. It is also significant that of the thirty-three Senators to vote against the Constitutional Amendment, only six, of whom three were Republicans and three Democrats, were among those to vote against Mr. Lorimer. The alignment upon the two questions was practically identical. Apparently those Senators who believe that a Senator, elected as was Mr. Lorimer, should remain a member of the Senate, believe that Senators should not be elected by the direct vote of the people.—The Outlook, New York.

SENATORIAL SKITS

Number 6

By The Onlooker

THE BOY BEAUTY OF BUTTE

And now we come to the sad case of the Boy Beauty of Butte. Truly 'tis a dolorous tale, and rends our heart to tell it. Few have guessed the bitter anguish stored within his hidden heart, few have surmised the sufferings hid behind his carefree smile. Only a Luciferian pride could bear him up so blithely in the face of his bitter fate. (Business here of hollow Hamlet laugh—ha! ha! Honestly, gentle stranger to these legislative halls, it's tough enough. Judge for yourselves. Listen:

Suppose, just suppose, this sort of thing happened to you every so often. They all do it—the old ladies, we mean—bless their well-meaning souls! They clasp their hands ecstatically—pause here and candidly confess if you ever saw hands clasped ecstatically—ecstatically and exclaim (they always exclaim):

"Who is that perfectly be-eautiful little boy at that desk in the front row—that little boy with those great big brown eyes. He must belong to that big man who is sitting across the aisle from him. Isn't he just a dear! I'd just love to pat him on the head."

And the Sergeant-at-arms says, "Certainly, madam, I'll bring him if you like," and swoops up to the front desk with a wicked eye, and brings back the victim to "see some of your constituents," and then leaves them face to face to do their own explaining, while he dodges behind a pillar and suffocates with joy.

"Yes, ma'am?" says the victim, with that "I've-never-seen-you-before-but-what-is-it-I-can-do-for-you?" inflection we all know, polite as pie.

And the lady just sits there and blushes and stammers and tries to apologize and gets redder in the face and at last sputters:

"Wh-who are you? We sent for a li-little boy we saw up there."

And the victim, with that winning smile on his face suavely replies:

"Ah, a mistake. Pardon me. My name is Boynton."

Doesn't he do it well? Mistake, indeed! In his heart he knows, he knows, HE knows, as Ohbosh, the Yam would say. (Here repeat business of hollow laugh, with grated teeth—half teacupful—added.) You bet he knows. As Senator Hurd would say—well, never mind what Senator Hurd says.

I can't imagine how you guessed it, but you are right, it is Senator Boynton of whom we speak, Senator Albert E. Boynton, President Pro Tem. of the Senate of the great and grateful State of California (including the Sunny Southland, patent rights reserved), floor leader of the reform Republican majority and otherwise known to fame and to the carking care of his own hosom as Boynton, the Boy Beauty of Butte.

Having thus hurriedly and briefly, even abruptly introduced the subject of our remarks, we shall now proceed as in multiplication to multiply and amplify the subsidiary points. If the Senate of the great State of California were deestrict skule and every day were Friday afternoon at three o'clock, Senator Boynton would invariably be mistaken, when he arises, for Sidney Sawyer just about to repeat "The Boy Stood on the Burning Deck," and a little afraid it was going to drop out from under him. He is the original and sole Little Lord Fauntleroy of the Senate, the only member who looks less than ten years old—so long as you are ten yards away.

Right here, before we become frivolous, is exactly the place to remark that Boynton is exactly not what he looks like. In fact he don't look like it, when you really see him, up close. At that range you will observe that his hair is strongly streaked with gray; that the big brown eyes are full of seriousness and frankness, but full of thoughtfulness and sophistication as well; that the face is the face of a resolute fighter. And it's not illusion this time; stir the animal with a sharp stick and you'll get all you paid for in excitement right away. But get him to smile and you'll see winsomeness herself, charming enough to entice the birds down out of the trees. They don't make 'em more likeable in the shape of manly men than A. E. Boynton.

They like Boynton where he came from—Oroville. They sent him to the Senate four years ago and he brought them back both appropriations and a clean record from a pretty dirty pot of a legislature. His record was more than clean, it was a fighting record fighting for decency. When they asked him to run again last year he said he would if he had no opposition; he had no time to make a campaign. The Republicans said, "You bet." The Democrats added, "We're agreeable." And, bless you, if the Socialists, even, didn't chip in and say, "Go it." Naturally, he went.

And now he's the most important member of the Senate. As President Pro Tem. he holds a beneficial interest in a constitutional life insurance policy on the life of the Governor and of the Lieutenant-Governor. In other words, if they should go to Colorado and never come back, Boynton would be Governor—but they won't. Also, as Pro Tem. he presides when the President is out of the chair. But where he shines is as floor leader of the majority. He holds that mysterious card called the program, so called because the other members dance as it says. He is thus the boss of the Senate, so far as any one man can be boss in a reform legislature.

As a private member, Boynton's notable success at this session is in getting through the railroad full crew bill. Popular misapprehensions seem to surround this measure. The prevalent idea that it requires the train crew of each train to get full is an error. The correct idea is that it requires each train to carry a fixed number of men to operate it under given conditions, a provision full of protection to public and trainmen alike.

But no personal triumphs as a member, no pride of power as a boss, no pomp of place as a second assistant hope of governorship, no popular acclaim in Butte County, no legal conquests in San Francisco, where he practices law—none of these trinkets of the bauble reputation can heal the hurt, assuage the grief or salve the sting that has its birth in the ecstatic exclamation of the well-meaning ladies at ten yards' distance.

CHINESE LIKE SCOTCH BAGPIPES, BUT NO OTHER WESTERN MUSIC

Consul-General S. S. Knabenshue learns, at Tientsin, that the only foreign music the Chinese masses have ever shown any interest in is the skirling of the bagpipes of the Cameron Highlanders, when they were in garrison there a couple of years ago. He therefore advises an Ohio piano concern that the market for their instruments is practically confined to foreign residents. Some few instruments have been sold to wealthy Chinese, but simply as pieces of furniture, there being no teachers of instrumental music for Chinese ladies and no demand for them.

The Vicious Fee System

No better commentary is afforded of the unbusiness-like methods that are legally permissible as the result of past political favoritism and manipulation than this: It is a notorious fact that the sheriff of Los Angeles county reaps in fees and emoluments, in addition to his salary, twenty to thirty thousand dollars per annum—and perhaps more; he only knows, and he won't tell. He takes the position that "public office is a private snap," and declines to give information as to his official income when so requested by leading civic organizations. Isn't it about time that our legislators took drastic action in the matter? Let us pay our officials well, but let us know how much they get—to a cent.

The following editorials further elucidate the matter:

"The state legislature has made so excellent a record in the enactment of measures of progressive reform as to give special strength to the hope that before adjournment it will take appropriate action in correction of the fee system evil. Los Angeles particularly indulges in that hope because the delegation from this county, in senate and assembly, is directly pledged to the accomplishment of that reform and we are unwilling to believe that any member of it can be seduced or cajoled into the violation of that pledge. Los Angeles rightly expects every member of the delegation to do his utmost to abolish the fee system.

"That system is a survival of the period of spoils of politics, of the day in which treasurers kept the public funds in favored banks and pocketed the interest that was paid thereon. The fee system was among the conditions that corrupted administration. Many of those conditions have been reformed out of existence—that system alone, ministering to private greed at the public cost, unaccountably is retained in defiance of sound methods and all principles of good administration. The pleas of its present beneficiaries, seeking a little longer to retain their unwholesome privileges, ought not to weigh with legislators pledged to reform.

"The true principle of compensation of all public officials requires that they be paid a fixed compensation for the performance of their duties. That compensation should bear proper relation to the public service required. Officials should not be underpaid by government and they should not be permitted to overpay themselves by the exercise of the right of taxation, for the right to exact fees for private profit is the right to tax the people for private benefit.

"Not one valid argument has been or can be adduced in support of the fee system. The whole case in defense of its continuance, as presented by its beneficiaries, resolves itself into this single declaration: "We want the money." That offers no reason why they should be allowed to continue to tax the people. This Legislature is pledged in an especial manner to wipe out such abuses of Special Privilege and Private Interest. The fee system represents them in a peculiarly odious form. Abolish it. Provide a fixed and fair compensation for service rendered and so deprive public officials of their right to thrust their hands into the public pocket. Make them take their fingers out and keep them out."—Los Angeles Express.

It is with considerable concern that The Herald has recently noted a disposition on the part of some of the representatives of this county in the legislature to refrain from dealing effectively with the matter of fees for public offices, and especially of the office of sheriff. There is no excuse for the fee system. In the very nature of things it offers a premium to officials to give the public the short end of the transaction. And whether this is the result or not, every consideration of proper business organizations of the county government requires that the compensation of officials should be made specific and certain. The fee system as it applies to county offices should be abolished and every county officer should be put upon a salary. There is no more reason why the sheriff's office should be an exception to this rule than there is why the office of assessor, collector or county clerk should be made an exception. The voters at the last election believed that the candidates for the legislature had pledged themselves to this proper and necessary reform in the laws of our state, and any member of the legislature who does not use his utmost efforts to abolish the antiquated, unbusinesslike and frequently costly fee system as applied to every county office, will, we venture to say, subject himself to the just criticism of his constituents in this county. We trust that when the legislature adjourns no member of that body from the County of Los Angeles can be criticized by his constituents for failing to do everything in his power to correct the evil of the fee system in our county government.—Los Angeles Herald.

In a later editorial the Los Angeles Express says:

"Last Saturday's balance sheet showed that Los Angeles county has on deposit in nearly 100 banks a total of $3,013,870, all of it drawing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

"That interest, received on public moneys, goes into the public treasury. Under the old spoils system it would go into the private pockets of the treasurer and his political creators. Most cities and counties in the Union have reformed that immoral practice, although the spoilsmen in some cases offered great resistance and caused long delays. There is no more reason why any public servant should be permitted to pocket official fees than there is that county treasurers should be allowed to pocket the interest paid on deposits of public money. The fee system is but a wicked authorization of officials to tax the public for private benefit.

"A few officials are strangely still permitted by the law to exercise that power of taxation. The Legislature should reform that abuse. Every Los Angeles legislator is pledged to aid that reform to success. If fees are required to be paid, let them be paid into the public treasury. Establish a fixed compensation for public servants, properly proportioned to the services they render. Not one of them should be permitted to keen the fees they collect. Those fees belong to the people, just as does the interest on the people's money."

Reform Legislation

By United States Senator John D. Works

I regard the present as a critical time in the history of the country and in the affairs of the Republican party. The struggle is on between the "interests" and the people. Predatory wealth is seeking privileges from the nation as well as from the state, county and municipal governments. To secure and hold such privileges these self-seeking interests have entered into the politics of the country. They have, to an alarming extent, degraded our citizenship, corrupted the electors of the country, and polluted our official life, and in some instances the very channels of justice. The corruption of individual voters and the bribery of public officials have become so common as to alarm the sober, thinking people and cause them to tremble for the future of our free institutions.

These conditions have aroused the people to action. They are demanding the right to govern their own country free from the domination of the corporations and their predatory allies. This determination has resulted in a political revolution that may, if the prevailing evils are not overcome within party lines, disrupt the old political parties and bring about an entirely new alignment that will bring face to face the money power and the interests it controls on the one hand, and the people not connected with such organizations on the other; or plutocratic wealth against the common people, common only because they are not overrich and striving to be richer at the expense of the people.

The National Republican Progressive League, as I understand its purposes, is an organization within the Republican party having for its object the reform of the party and its freedom from corporate and boss rule. As a means of accomplishing these results certain reforms are advocated including the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people and direct primaries and the initiative, referendum and recall. Expressions of the people, at elections held in many of the states, have demonstrated the fact most conclusively that they are demanding these reforms. This demand has undoubtedly grown out of the lack of confidence of the people in our representative form of government as now administered. For example, the demand for the election of United States Senators by popular vote is born of the belief that elections by the legislature have been controlled by moneyed interests and polluted by corruption; and the power to legislate by direct vote of the people is demanded because the people have lost confidence in the men that are chosen to make the laws.

Every step taken, every reform of this kind demanded by the people, is the result of corrupt practices and illegal domination in political affairs and in public life. Our representative form of government, rightly and honestly administered, is perhaps as safe, as free, and as independent as any that has yet been devised. But the confidence of the people in such a government has been sadly shaken by the manner in which it has been manipulated, controlled and dominated by selfish interests, seeking their own gain and not the common good. This disposition of the people to condemn and change our form of government is fraught with dangers as well as the possibility of much needed reforms. It is a time that calls for wise statesmanship and the most exalted patriotism.

A republic is defined to be "a state in which the people are the source of power."

The Constitution of the United States provides that "the United States shall guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government."

Therefore this country is a republic and the states are acting under the same form of government. It follows that the source of power in state and nation is in the people. If government by representatives elected by the people, or chosen by other means, as provided by law, is a failure, the people, as the source of power, have the right to so change the form of government as seems requisite to correct the evils. But this is a power that should be exercised with the greatest deliberation and caution. Not only so, but the necessity for a change should be demonstrated beyond reasonable question.

SENATOR JOHN D. WORKS

The experiences of this country, and the evils from which the people have suffered, not only justify, but seem to demand, in the interest of all concerned, that the check upon representative power, and limitation of its abuse, provided for in legislation authorizing the initiative, referendum and recall, should be enforced. These remedies seem absolutely necessary to protect the people from corrupt practices and the control of legislation by and in the interest of powerful corporations and their political servants. But such remedies should be regarded and treated always as extraordinary and to be resorted to only in case of public necessity. There may be danger that the too frequent use of such remedies, especially for frivolous or inadequate causes, would tend to reduce our government to a pure democracy, a result greatly to be deplored.

In the opinion of the writer our representative form of government should be jealously preserved but always with the reserved power in the people to elect, control, govern and restrain the representatives and to rescind their acts, or to act in their stead by direct action of the people when necessity calls for such relief.

Recognizing the primary fact that all power is in the people and that they have, and should be given by law, full and ample power to protect themselves, every caution should be exercised to confine that power, as exercised by direct action of the people as a whole, within reasonable bounds and proper limits, as it may tend to affect our republican and representative form of government. So far, the power to initiate or rescind legislation and recall derelict public officials seems not to have been abused. On the other hand the power has been beneficially exercised. But the tendency undoubtedly is to extend and increase the power, and the temptation to use it too frequently and on unnecessary or improper occasions, will be great.

The future of this kind of legislation depends largely upon the wisdom exercised in its use and the forbearance displayed by the people in confining its use to proper occasions.

The National Republican Progressive League is moving in the right direction. It is assuming great responsibilities also. The leaders who bring about the remedial legislation that the people are justly demanding will be held responsible for its proper limitations and restraints in enactment and enforcement. In the effort to reform conditions the Constitution that has safeguarded the country and the rights and liberties of its people for more than a century should be preserved in its integrity. There is altogether too great a tendency and disposition, at the present day, to override the Constitution or construe it away on the theory that times have changed and a more liberal construction of the fundamental law, making it elastic enough to meet the needs of the people, is imperatively necessary. It is a dangerous doctrine that needs to be carefully guarded against.

Mr. Roosevelt's Program in California

Mr. Roosevelt will arrive in Los Angeles at 10:15 a. m. Tuesday, the 21st. With him will be Mrs. Roosevelt, Miss Ethel Roosevelt, Miss Landon, and Mr. Frank Harper, his private secretary.

A small committee will meet Colonel Roosevelt before he reaches Los Angeles and accompany him to the city.

Mr. Roosevelt will be received at the Santa Fe station in Los Angeles by a general reception committee of representative men of Los Angeles—Mayor Alexander delivering the formal address of welcome.

Mrs. Roosevelt and party will not participate in any public functions. They will dine with Mrs. James A. Garfield at her residence in Pasadena Tuesday evening, and early Wednesday morning will leave for Santa Barbara to be joined there by Col. Roosevelt, Wednesday evening.

After a stop for a few minutes and a brief address at the Y. M. C. A. Building in Los Angeles, Mr. Roosevelt will go to the Hotel Alexandria where, at a noon luncheon, he will be the guest of E. T. Earl.

At three o'clock the public school teachers of Los Angeles and pupils of the higher grades in the high schools will hear a short address by Mr. Roosevelt at Temple Auditorium. That evening Mr. Roosevelt will be the guest of Arthur H. Fleming at dinner in Pasadena where he will meet John Muir and John Burroughs and a few other friends. At 8 p. m. a public lecture under the auspices of the Throop Polytechnic Institute will be delivered at the Maryland Hotel Auditorium, on "A Zoological Trip Through Africa."

Wednesday, March 22nd, Mr. Roosevelt will return to Los Angeles by auto, stopping a few minutes at Occidental College to speak to the faculty and students.

He will be the guest of honor at a Harvard Club luncheon, at the University Club, at noon.

At three o'clock in Temple Auditorium Mr. Roosevelt will deliver the principal address of his stay in Los Angeles, under the auspices of the City Club of Los Angeles. Governor Johnson will be presented by Judge Finlayson, president of the Club, and he, after a brief address, will present Col. Roosevelt.

In the evening the Union League Club will open its new quarters at Second and Hill streets, and Mr. Roosevelt will be present at a banquet planned for this occasion, leaving for San Francisco by the Coast Line at 8 p. m.

Mr. Roosevelt will deliver the Charter Committee address at Berkeley at 10:30 on March 23rd, and spend the rest of the day in Berkeley. On the 24th he speaks at Stanford in the morning, and delivers one of the Earl lectures at Berkeley in the afternoon. On the 25th he delivers another Earl lecture and is the guest of the Harvard Club at dinner. On the 27th another Earl lecture is delivered at Berkeley and Mr. Roosevelt will be the guest of the Commonwealth Club at dinner. And on the 28th he delivers another Earl lecture and a public address. The last Earl lecture is delivered on the 29th.

The remainder of Mr. Roosevelt's engagements in California are private, except that if the Legislature is still in session on April 4th, Mr. Roosevelt will address it at that time.

Residence Burglary Insurance

Would you insure against loss due to Burglars, Sneak Thieves and Servants?

Our Policy covers all losses as well as all damage due to such depredations.

Our Policy won't stop the losses, but one in the house is more "protection" than the whole police department and it indemnifies.

R. A. ROWAN & COMPANY

200 H. W. HELLMAN BLDG., 4TH and SPRING STS.

Home Phone 40444 Los Angeles, Cal. Sunset Phone M. 7096

Nationalism and the Judiciary

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

In The Outlook, New York

An even more appropriate heading for this article would be "Nationalism; and Law, Order and Justice." The first requisite for the welfare of any community is justice; not merely legal justice, but ethical justice, moral justice, the kind of justice meant by the ordinary man when he says that he wishes fair play or a square deal. In order to get this justice it is absolutely necessary that there should be order; and there can be no order unless there is law, and unless the law is rigidly and honestly enforced. Crimes of greed and violence and crimes of greed and cunning must alike be repressed, for it makes no difference what form wrong-doing takes so long as it is wrong-doing; and important though it is to have good legislative and executive officers, it is even more important to have an upright, fearless, and independent judiciary, bent with whole-hearted and intelligent zeal upon serving the interests of all the people.

Justice is based upon law and order, and without law and order there can be no justice. The triumph of disorder and lawlessness is certain in the end to mean not only the undoing of the reputable rich but the undoing of the reputable poor; and indeed the undoing of everybody, reputable or disreputable, for not even scoundrels can permanently flourish in a society in which the conditions have passed a certain degree of anarchy. But it must never be forgotten that law and order are not in themselves ends, but means toward obtaining justice. When order reigned in Warsaw, it meant not justice but the negation of justice. The terrible atrocities of Kishenev were due, primarily, not to lawlessness, but to the fact that those who had the power used it for the destruction of the helpless. The Jew in Russia and the Armenian in Turkey have had to dread cruel oppression at the hands of the exponents of the law quite as much as from violent lawbreakers. Without law and order there can be no permanent justice; but law and order are good only when used to bring about such justice.

Now, the above is an elementary proposition. It is so elementary that it is difficult to controvert. Nevertheless, in practice here in our own country there are multitudes of men who wholly ignore it, and who persist in making a fetish of the instrumentalities for obtaining justice through law and order, instead of treating them on their merits as instruments of greater or less worth. For instance, when a big corporation gets involved in a strike with a big labor union, the corporation at once demands that order be maintained, while the union is apt to protest against any practical steps to maintain order. As a matter of fact, the duty of the government is clear. It should first restore order. So far, the corporation is heartily in favor of government interference, of the use of the collective power of the people. But as soon as order has been restored—that is, as soon as the collective power of the people has been exerted to suppress violence directed against the property or persons of certain members of the community—the heads of the corporation are apt to insist (as in the 1902 coal strike, for instance) that the whole duty of the government is at an end, and that any inquiry into the rights and wrongs of the controversy is an outrage on private initiative, private right and judgment. As a matter of fact, in many such cases the duty of the government has only begun. It should not refrain from restoring and enforcing order because of any protests of the labor people, but neither should it refrain from full inquiry into the facts, and from acting so as to bring about justice, because of any protest on the part of the capitalists. In every such conflict of labor and capital there is a third party in interest, the public; and when the public, through the governmental authorities, has to use the collective power of the people to restore order, that fact is of itself full and complete proof that, even if only for preventing recurrence of disorder, it is its further duty to use the collective power of the people for the purpose of finding out the facts and enforcing justice. Yet the very men who, when the general proposition is enunciated as above, say that it is a mere truism, a mere platitude, violently oppose its application in concrete instances, such as that of the coal strike in 1902.

So it is with the judiciary. In the abstract, very few people will deny that the judge should be the servant of the people, and that in order to be a good servant of the people he must be wise, upright, and independent. But in practice, and when concrete instances are involved, the proposition is apt to be indignantly repudiated—now by people actuated by one set of reasons, now by people actuated by a directly opposite set of reasons, and, moreover, the same men sometimes on successive occasions take both of these two diametrically opposed positions. A judge cannot be a good judge, and therefore he cannot be a good public servant, if he is required to render every decision in accordance with what popular opinion at the moment, with or without reason, may desire. Too often the very men who most loudly praise a judge for being independent so far as pressure by the great special interests is concerned are furious in their denunciation of him when he shows the slightest independence in the face of a gust of mob feeling, or of popular feeling which, though it does not take the mob form, is equally unwise and unjust. And the converse is no less true. That portion of the daily press which is controlled by the special interests, and particularly that portion of the New York City daily press which is responsive to Wall Street sentiment, has come to regard the judiciary as in a special sense the bulwark of property; and inasmuch as the special interests naturally put property rights above popular rights, their representatives in the press make it their particular concern to extol those judges who take the same view. They are therefore very severe in their denunciations of any man who has anything to say in criticism of a judicial decision which favors property rights and is against popular rights. But if the decision is the other way, the same papers and individuals immediately reverse their former attitude and themselves become the most violent and bitter critics of the judge. The very New York papers, for instance, which on most occasions when they treat of this subject insist that any criticism of a judicial decision is subversive of the foundations of law and order and destructive of republican institutions, were the most violent critics of Judge Landis when he inflicted what they regarded as an excessive fine on the Standard Oil Company, and of Judge (now Mayor) Gaynor when they disapproved of his attitude on the five-cent fare bill. Criticism, entirely temperate, of a decision which deprived the United States Government of its Constitutional right to control and regulate interstate commerce, or which deprived the people of the State of New York of the right to regulate the hours of workingmen engaged in unhygienic occupations, was treated as an assault on the foundations of the republic by the same men, who exhausted the resources of vituperation in assailing Judges Landis and Gaynor.

These same men and papers are always prompt to speak with horror of the utterances of labor leaders against the courts. As to certain tirades of labor leaders against the courts, I most cordially agree with them. But the worth of their protests from the standpoint of principle may be gaged by the fact that they pass over in silence utterances such as that of a great railway president, one of the half-dozen biggest financial men in this country, when, a few years ago, in speaking of a court decision, he said: "Decision or no decision, the men who own this stock will do with it as they please. The courts decide a great many things about which they know nothing. This is one of them. No court can run our property." Now capitalist and labor leader alike should be held to the same course of conduct. Both must obey the law; and, on the other hand, each has the right temperately and truthfully to point out where a given interpretation of the law by a given man works injustice.

Of course the trouble in these cases is not in securing theoretical acquiescence in statements of general principles of morality, but in securing practical acquiescence in the attempt to apply these principles to concrete cases. Very few politicians or business men, very few newspaper or magazine editors, would publicly announce their disbelief in the Decalogue; and yet, while it is undoubtedly true that there are plenty of politicians, business men, and newspaper and magazine editors who try their honest best to live up to the Decalogue, it is equally true that there are plenty of all classes who treat either the Eighth or the Ninth Commandments, or both of them, as having no practical application to the facts of daily life. So it is when we come to deal with law, order, and justice. So it is when we come to deal with our judicial system and with the judges themselves. On the one hand, the very men who by their actions seek to degrade the judiciary into the position of a servile register of the popular whim of the moment will cheerfully render lip loyalty to the theory that a judge should be upright and independent. On the other hand, the very men who strive hardest to prevent the judge from being a real popular servant, and who wish, on the contrary, to make him an instrument for defeating the popular will in the interests of a special class, are always loudest in their assertion that they are really championing the cause of popular rights. The men whose patriotism is really rational and sincere, the men who really believe in the just rule of the people, and neither in the selfish rule of a plutocracy nor the selfish rule of a mob, stand as equally opposed to the extremists of both classes. Here, again, the wise men today are those who on this question stood as Lincoln stood toward the questions of his day. It is simple and easy to take a place among extreme fanatics, either of radical reaction or of radical advance, just as it was easy enough in Lincoln's day to be either a Copperhead who demanded that slavery should not be disturbed and declared the war a failure, or an Abolitionist who took the view that John Brown was morally justified in endeavoring to start a slave insurrection and that Lincoln was a time-server whose timidity and indecision were ruining the cause of freedom. But it was an immensely difficult thing actually to work as Lincoln worked, as Oliver P. Morton worked, as the Union men in Kentucky worked, so as ultimately to bring about both the preservation of the Union and the abolition of slavery. We who believe in popular rule, who hold that this government has no justification for its existence unless the well-considered and deliberate purpose of the people is ultimately to prevail, are no less bound to insist that unless the people themselves in the long run desire justice and act with wisdom and self-restraint and self-mastery they will bring themselves to ruin; and therefore we feel that, so far as the wisdom of man can avail, the system should be such as to make the judge ever keep in mind his duty to the public, his duty to act as a representative of the permanent popular will; while it is even more important that the public in its turn should realize that it cannot in the long run receive the highest service unless its servants are independent and fearless and deeply conscientious, no less than possessed of understanding of and sympathy with popular needs and desires.

One of the most admirable features of our constitutional system is the high position which it gives to the judiciary. In no other country in the world have the judges possessed or exercised the enormous influence upon the constitutional and institutional growth of society that they have here exercised. This is particularly true of the national judiciary, and therefore of its head, the Supreme Court. It would be hard to overstate the debt due by the American people to the bench, National and State, and hardest of all to overestimate the debt due to the Supreme Court. The three men to whom, throughout our national history, we as a people owe most are two presidents, Washington and Lincoln, and one chief justice, Marshall. Marshall is the one man whose services to the Nation entitle him to be grouped with the two great presidents, and he owes this to the fortunate fact that not only did he as a man deserve to rank with them as men, but that his office as an office deserved to rank, and did rank, with the great office which they held. The office of chief justice is, under some circumstances, as great an office as that of president, and at all times comes second only to it in importance. And the man who fills that office is, like the president, the representative of all the people, and is entitled to their respect and support. Moreover, I believe it to be true that, taken as a whole, the judges of the country are, and have been, more useful public servants than any other public men. A wise and upright judge can render, and does render, in the long run, rather better service than can be rendered even by the right type of executive or legislative officer; and I believe that we find a larger proportion of men who reach the proper official standard among judges than among the members of any other class of public servants.

Yet, while not merely granting that this is the fact, but insisting upon it, it remains true that the judges are public servants just as other officials are, that they are, or should be, responsible to the public just as other officials are (for it is idle to call a man a servant of the public unless he is responsible to the public), and that therefore there should be criticism of them just as of other officials. In the case of judges it is even more essential than in the case of other public officials that the criticism should be wise and temperate, and, above all, that it should be absolutely truthful. I very seriously question whether, on the whole, we do not suffer in our public life quite as much from unjust assault upon upright public servants as from failure effectively to assault corruption and its exponents. Many newspapers and many magazines, sometimes because they are controlled by the special interests, and quite as often because they are seeking to capitalize sensationalism and to turn to commercial advantage the literature of exposure, have done, and are doing, all they can to degrade public life by practicing every species of reckless sensational and hysterical mendacity at the cost of reputable public servants. It makes not the slightest difference whether this form of falsehood is practiced because the writer is hired, directly or indirectly, by some special interest, or whether he is merely recklessly bent upon gaining money or notoriety by sensational slander; it makes no difference whether he is a cultivated man actuated by sour envy, or a crude fanatic who, in the name of conscience, is willing to perpetrate outrages upon conscience; and, finally, it makes little difference as to what particular class of public servant he assails. The infamy lies in the deed itself. The man who violates the Ninth Commandment and bears false witness against his neighbor stands on as low an ethical plane as the man who violates the Eighth Commandment and steals from that neighbor. To destroy the confidence of the people in the uprightness of upright judges is only a degree worse than to destroy their confidence in the uprightness of any other upright officials. Emphasis, however, must be laid on the uprightness, on the decency, on the ability and willingness to serve the public, so far as the official is concerned, rather than upon the office which he holds. It is impossible adequately to honor the faithful public servant unless we discriminate in the sharpest possible fashion between him and the unfaithful public servant; and all sense of such discrimination, all sense of proportion, is equally lost, whether we confound the honest and the dishonest, the competent and the incompetent, in indiscriminate praise or in indiscriminate abuse.

With judges there should be even more care exercised than ought to be exercised as regards other public men. But there must be criticism. With the judge, as with other public men, it is undoubtedly ruinous to follow the unfortunately prevalent custom of paying heed simply to the debit and not also to the credit side of the account between the public servant and the public. There is altogether too much tendency to pay more attention to punishing than to rewarding public service, altogether too much tendency to omit entirely the sum of the man's good qualities and think only of his mistakes or shortcomings; a tendency which inevitably results in pushing forward weak nonentities simply because the nonentity rarely does anything either good or bad, while the strong man, however good, is sure, if he has had a long career of successful achievement, to have his record of good deeds interspersed with occasional failures and mistakes. Therefore, in all but wholly exceptional cases, the judge, like any other public servant, should be judged by his record as a whole, not by his record on some particular matter. Moreover, in the case of the judge, in those instances where he acts simply as an umpire trying to do justice between individuals, very great caution should be exercised in criticising his decision. In a great many cases of this kind there is certain to be room for wide divergence of opinion as to any decision rendered, and it is therefore necessary to accept from the outset the view that the judge's decision on such questions should not be criticised—unless in a long series of decisions his attitude is such as to create a real presumption of moral or intellectual unfitness for his task.

The case is wholly different when the judge decides what in its essence is not a mere question between individuals but a question affecting fundamental policy. The proper attitude as regards this latter class of cases has been admirably set forth by a justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, the Hon. Cuthbert W. Pound (in commenting on my remarks on the Bakeshop Case):

"Confidence in our courts does not require that their decisions on economic questions shall be regarded as binding rules of political conduct on such questions.

"When Lincoln, in the debates with Douglas, argued that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case, which protected the rights of the slaveholder in the territories, should be set aside by the people at the polls . . . (he was) not assailing decisions of judges on questions of private right, but discussing the action of statesmen on matters of governmental power.

"So long as our courts exercise this power to pass upon the constitutionality of statutes which reflect legislative policy on matters affecting the common good, so long will the principles of government underlying their decisions in such cases be subject to debate."

There spoke the true public servant, the public servant proudly conscious of his own integrity and his own desire and ability to serve the public, and resolute in his refusal to shelter himself, under any plea, from legitimate criticism for his actions when dealing with great public policies which must ultimately be decided by the people. After all, Judge Pound was only emphasizing anew the doctrine laid down by Lincoln in his first inaugural, when he said:

"If the policy of the government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, the instant they are made, in ordinary litigation between parties in personal actions, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their government into the hands of that eminent tribunal. Nor is there in this view any assault upon the court or the judges."

Very worthy people, both lawyers and laymen, have at times advanced the view that there should be no criticism of judges, even when they decide on matters of public policy, because they say that judges have nothing to do with making the law, and merely have to apply it when made. Sometimes the position is taken in even more advanced form, to the effect, namely, that only lawyers are competent to pass criticism upon judges. This latter position has always reminded me of an experience of mine nearly thirty years ago, when I was serving my first term in the New York Legislature. A measure was being voted upon which related to saloons in the city of New York. A new member from that city—himself a saloon-keeper—suddenly rose to a point of order, and with much indignation protested against the fact that there were "men not engaged in the liquor traffic who nevertheless were voting" upon the bill in question! The simplicity of this position appealed to everybody as exquisitely and unconsciously humorous, yet the assumption that only liquor-sellers have a right to express an opinion as to legislation concerning the liquor traffic is fundamentally identical in spirit with the assumption that lawyers have a greater interest than other citizens in the attitude of a judge on great questions of public policy.

There is no need of discussing the question whether or not judges have a right to make law. The simple fact is that by their interpretation they inevitably do make the law in a great number of cases. Therefore it is vital that they should make it aright. In an admirable article on "The National Government," in the "American Law Review," Judge Alfred Spring, an appellate justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, has set forth the proper position of the judiciary towards the Constitution, and incidentally has shown anew what ought to be, but apparently is not, familiar to every man who speaks of the functions of the Supreme Court—the absolute revolution in the Constitution caused by the action of the Supreme Court under Marshall. As Judge Spring points out, the Constitution is not made up of definitions, is not a dictionary, but is couched in general language, and is made for all time and to fit conditions and exigencies as they arise. He says:

"The oracular statement of Carlyle that a written Constitution 'does not march' has met refutation in the advancement of the United States. It has marched to the tune of progress, and with but few changes in its original form. Its onward march has been due to the far-seeing wisdom of its framers in not making it a lexicon of definitions, but vesting power in simple, terse sentences, adaptable to circumstances as they come along."

He shows that all three branches of the National Government have inevitably at different times exercised powers which the founders of the government did not contemplate their exercising. In speaking of the president, he says:

"The language of the Constitution in fixing the status of the president is even more comprehensive than that lodging the judicial power in the Supreme Court. It provides that 'the executive power shall be vested' in the president. A more complete investiture cannot be conceived, and yet, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and for long after, the tremendous energy imparted to the executive department by this all-embracing grant was not realized. Its mastery grew with the growth of the Nation, until today, within the limits of the Constitution, in practical effectual authority it is in alignment with the Congressional branch of the government."

He points out, what ought to be obvious to every one, that the different presidents have construed and have been able to exercise in widely differing manners the powers conferred upon them. The presidency under Jackson and Lincoln was a totally different office from what it was under Buchanan, Pierce and Johnson. Dealing with the Supreme Court, Judge Spring points out that for the first fourteen years of its existence it occupied a position of no importance in the National Government. Jay had resigned the chief-justiceship, and declined reappointment, because he felt that the judiciary was not clothed with any real authority. It was not the adoption of the Constitution nor its administration by some of its founders during the first dozen years of its life which put the Supreme Court in its present position under the Constitution. The Supreme Court itself, for the great benefit of the nation, read its own place into the Constitution, after the lapse of years during which no one, none even of the founders of the Constitution, had dreamed of giving it such a place. It was the appointment of Marshall and the exercise by that great man of his extraordinary personal influence which gave the Supreme Court its great power in our government, and which thereby also gave an enormous impetus to the growth among us of that spirit which made and kept us a nation, a great, free, united people, instead of permitting us to dissolve into a snarl of jangling and contemptible little independent commonwealths, with governments oscillating between the rule of a dictator, the rule of an oligarchy, and the rule of a mob. Those who on abstract grounds insist that the courts never have anything to do with the embodiment of public policy into law ought to pay heed to the simple fact that, under Marshall, the Supreme Court of the United States worked a tremendous revolution, not merely in ordinary law, but in the fundamental Constitutional law of the land. When Marshall was appointed, as Judge Spring has shown, it was usually assumed, when the subject was discussed at all, that Congress, like the English House of

(Continued on Page 19)

Chickering pianos

"Oldest in America
Best in the World"

Is it your desire to own this greatest of pianos? We will arrange terms that will be most convenient for you. Let us tell you of our special Chickering offer. Free Catalogue and Beautiful Brochure on request.

Upright Chickering Pianos, $600 and $650; Grands, $750 up.

Southern California Music Co.

"The House of Musical Quality"

332-334 SOUTH BROADWAY LOS ANGELES

Sacramento, March 4.—The opposition to submission to the people of the judiciary recall proposition in the general recall amendment came to a head in the Assembly the other day. It was a small head—a very small head. To me it looked like a pinhead.

The rebellion was limited to a baker's dozen or so. It was led by Clyde Bishop, the explosive member from Orange county; Milton Schmitt of San Francisco, a pebble in the path of progress; Nate Coghlan of San Francisco, perennial obstructionist; George R. Freeman of Riverside, brother of an attorney for the Los Angeles utility corporation, who has been in Sacramento opposing a number of progressive measures, who, like his brother, has been performing Quixotic service in the lost cause of Reaction. These were weakly supported by such factors as Rosendale, Jones, Brown, Cronin, Crosby, Hall, Stevenot, Griffiths and Walker, and others.

The caucuslet met in Committee Room 120 behind safely locked doors and Coghlan gave out the information that a meeting of the Assembly committee on Public Morals was being held. Its plan of campaign, it subsequently leaked out, was a last desperate attempt to secure re-reference of the amendment, or, failing in this, an effort to divide the question—recall of all election officials excepting the judiciary in one amendment, judiciary recall in another.

There were eighteen obstructionists in that caucuslet, is said. When the melee was over but ten could be found. They were labeled: Bishop, Brown, Coghlan, Cronin, Hall, Crosby, Harlan, Jones, Schmitt and Walker.

Too Much "Regulation"

Senator Boynton has taken a determined stand against the passage of numerous measures amending existing statutes by placing the offenses which are the subjects of these statutes in the category of felonies. These regulatory measures, as a rule, apply to offenses heretofore classified as misdemeanors, punishable by fine or imprisonment in jail. To make these misdemeanors felonies would carry with it the penalty of imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Several bills of this kind have been considered by the present Legislature. For example, a hill handled in the Senate hy Senator Finn made the sale of liquor without a license a felony. Senator Finn, sheriff of San Francisco county and himself identified with the retail liquor business, in defending the bill declared that it was almost impossible to put a stop to the illicit sale of liquor in San Francisco because of the fact that the existing penalty for violation of the law is too light. If made a felony, with a penitentiary term in prospect for offenders, said he, the authorities would have little trouble in putting an end to this particular class of law violations.

"We are going altogether too far in these regulatory measures," declared Senator Boynton, "and if the Legislature continues in this direction a reaction is inevitable. Experience has proven that juries will seldom convict persons accused of minor offenses if conviction means a penitentiary sentence. The passage of such a law, in my opinion, would have an effect directly contrary to that anticipated. The average man will not vote to inflict a penitentiary sentence upon a man accused of an offense of this nature, even if it be found that he undouhtedly is guilty; and on the other hand if the offense is made a misdemeanor by statute, convictions will usually follow."

A dozen or more bills are now before the Legislature lifting minor offenses from the classification of misdemeanors into that of felonies. At this writing it would appear that all or most of them will be defeated.

Blacklisting—Various Styles

In withholding his approval of the "hlacklisting hill," so-called, Governor Johnson directed attention to inconsistencies in the measure that evidently had not appeared to its proponents. The bill provided that no person or corporation should "blacklist or require a letter of relinquishment, or publish or cause to be published, or blacklisted," any employe discharged from or voluntarily leaving his service.

The Governor points out that the provisions of the bill are "vague, uncertain and indefinite." He sought from various sources to obtain information as to the meaning of the term "letter of relinquishment," but no one has been able to supply a definition. "The next inhibition," says the Governor, "is contained in the words that no company, etc., shall 'publish' any employe. The most astute attorneys will be somewhat at a loss accurately to determine what constitutes publication of one individual hy another. It is possible we may accept the legal definition of 'publish' as applied to libel, and it might be held that when a person, firm or corporation is prohibited from publishing an employe, the meaning intended is that nothing shall he uttered or circulated concerning that employe. At any rate, the vagueness of the expression renders it so uncertain as to be of doubtful validity.

"Again, the act makes it an offense for any person (if 'publish' be construed in accordance with its legal significance) to impart to another truthful information concerning a discharged employe with intent to prevent that employe from securing similar employment. I doubt very much if it was the intention of the Legislature to make it a crime for A, who had discharged for theft, or incompetency, or other righteous cause, his employe, to say to B, if B was about to engage that employe, that the employe was dishonest or incompetent.

"There are in the United States many statutes designed to reach blacklisting. In most of those statutes there is a saving clause providing for a truthful declaration respecting a discharged employe. . . . I have no objection to prohibiting blacklisting; but if it is to be done, I wish it accomplished by an act direct, certain and plain in its terms which cannot be defeated by judicial construction, and which would preserve as well the right to make a truthful disclosure of the reasons for the discharge of a dishonest or incompetent employe."

GUARDING THE TREASURY

Prison Discipline

About six weeks ago the Assembly directed its Committee on State Prison and Reformatories, consisting of Gerdes, chairman; Lynch, Cattell, Stevenot, Bishop, Harlan, Cunningham and Telfer, to make an inquiry as to what extent punishment is used in the state prisons of California, and especially as to the extent to which the strait-jacket is used. The investigation has been made and the committee has reported. It shows that at San Quentin there are in use seven different methods of punishment inflicted upon convicts for infraction of the rules of that prison.

The most severe methods employed are "cuffing up" and the use of the strait-iacket. "Cuffing up" is accomplished by causing the convict to stand erect, facing the door of his cell, and extending his hands and forearms through the grating of the cell door, about level with his face. The hands are then fastened together with handcuffs. He is compelled to stand in this position for six consecutive hours, after which he is allowed to rest for six hours, and is then again "cuffed" for six hours. This process is repeated daily during such period as may be prescribed by the warden.

The strait-jacket punishment consists in placing the convict in a jacket made of heavy strong canvas, cut so as to fit the body and shoulders of the wearer, along the edges of which is a row of eyelets. The jacket extends from the throat down to and helow the knees. On the inside are two loops for the prisoner's hands, which rest upon and in front of the upper portion of the legs. The jacket is placed upon the convict, who is then laid upon his face, and the jacket, by means of a quarter-inch rope through the eyelets, is laced upon the body.

The jacket may be laced tight enough to inflict great physical pain, and even death, by impeding breathing, and pressure on the heart and kidneys. The convict is kept in the jackets as long as the warden decrees, in no case exceeding six consecutive hours in any one day. This form of

(Continued on Page 17)

JUDGE MACK

A Man, Big Enough to Help Solve Our Tremendous Transportation Problems, and With a Heart Big Enough to Make Him a Real Friend of the Street Arab

By Clarence H. Matson.

Keen, analytical questions that went straight to the heart of involved problems in transportation mathematics characterized a little man with a big brain who sat on the Federal bench in Los Angeles the past week.

He was Julian W. Mack, for many years a jurist of the Cook County Circuit Court of Chicago, but now one of Mr. Taft's appointees to the newly-created United States Commerce Court.

Two things impressed observers in the lemon rate hearing before Judge Mack last week. One was the intricate problems with which the new court has to deal, and the other was the incisive manner in which Judge Mack went after the answers.

Although he frankly admitted that many of the terms used by the transportation sharps were new to him, Judge Mack grasped them so quickly that he frequently cornered the said sharps on their own preserves.

He has that kind of a mind. He held the Parker fellowship at Harvard for three years following his graduation from that institution in 1887, and he afterwards studied at Berlin and Leipsic. Besides, he has been for years professor of law either in Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., or in the University of Chicago, and in his work on the bench in Chicago he has had a wide range of experience.

But he is big of heart as well as big of mind. That fact made him for three years judge of the juvenile court in Chicago when juvenile courts were new, and he understands the heart of a ragged street urchin as well as he does the mental processes of a railroad statistician.

And it is not at all improbable that he has a deeper regard away down in his kindly heart for the street arab than for the brainy transportation magnates who come before him in his new position. Not that he is at all inconsiderate of the latter, for he is the personification of courtesy and consideration; but philanthropy is a hobby with him, and the aid of the unfortunate is one of his chosen studies.

The list of the charitable organizations with which he is connected reads like a philanthropic directory, and besides these he takes a deep interest in movements for the betterment of civic and municipal affairs. He was formerly president of the National Conference of Jewish Charities, and he is president of the Milk Commission, the League for the Protection of Immigrants, and the Friends of Russian Freedom. Then he is vice-president of the Chicago Children's Hospital Society, and the Society for Social Hygiene. He is on the executive committee of the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy, the Chicago Tuberculosis Institute, and the Juvenile Protection League. Incidentally he is also a director of the Civil Service Association, the Playground Association, and the Associated Jewish Charities.

Just as though this were not enough to keep him busy—in addition to his work on the bench and as a professor of law—he is a member of the American Historical Society, the American Bar Association, and various similar organizations, in addition to a dozen or so clubs.

This illustrates something of the activities of this man whom President Taft has chosen to sit on the great transportation tribunal of the country—the tribunal with which rests the answer as to whether the regulation of railroads by the government is to be a success.

Yet in the midst of all this activity, Judge Mack found time, as juvenile court judge, to go into the personal history and childish ailments, the psychology and mental workings, of each individual of Chicago's child population that was brought before him.

The work of the juvenile court judge, in his estimation, is more than passing on the crimes and misdemeanors of childhood from a mere legal standpoint. It is philanthropic. The judge who deals out justice to the delinquent boy or girl must know humanity. He must understand the well-springs of life from which come the causes of wrong-doing—some of which isn't intended to be wrong at all on the part of the doer. The Juvenile court jurist, says Judge Mack, must become acquainted with the history of each little culprit brought before him, and he must study the psychology of the child. More than that, to be successful, he must inspire the confidence of the little personality he is supposed to punish.

JUDGE JULIAN W. MACK

From work of that sort to passing upon disputes involving many millions of dollars and ferreting out the fine points in transportation questions upon which sometimes hang tremendous issues—this is a far cry. Yet to those who witnessed Judge Mack's conduct of the lemon rate hearing—the first of its kind to come before the newly-created court—he demonstrated his ability to cope with the latter as well as with the first.

Perhaps it isn't so far a cry after all. Possibly the mental processes of the statistician or the traffic magnate are not more difficult to follow than those of the street arab. At any rate, Judge Mack proved his power to grasp in a twinkling the difference between train miles and car miles; why company tonnage is a big factor in determining the cost of moving a revenue freight; and he detected in a moment an error made, after many devious computations, in not charging to passenger traffic a due proportion of the cost of company freight. Just figure on that awhile for yourself.

Judge Mack is a native son of California, although nearly his whole life has been passed east of the Mississippi. He was born in San Francisco in 1866, but his school days were spent in Cincinnati. After his graduation at Harvard and his education abroad, he was admitted to the bar in 1890, and has been a member of the Chicago bar most of the time since.

CALIFORNIA'S BEST FOR BANQUET

(Given in Chicago in Honor of Judge Mack.)

A rich consignment, including a variety of California's boasted products, arrived in Chicago today. As safely and as carefully as any treasure it was brought from the extreme end of a Golden State across the Rockies, eluding highwaymen and bandits, although it undoubtedly would have proved acceptable loot. It was brought on the China and Japan fast mail train, which left San Francisco Monday evening and arrived at the Northwestern station at 9:10 o'clock. Thence it was carried through busy streets to the Union League club where it was left in charge of a sole guardian, the chef.

The final consignees will receive the bounteous gift tomorrow night, when the California Society of Chicago will give a banquet to Judge Julian W. Mack, a former Californian and a past president of the society, in honor of his appointment by President Taft as associate judge of the Commerce court. A dozen cities of the Golden State have contributed that the banquet truly might be a California affair.

A large part of the gift will be presented in this menu:

Cocktail of little California Oysters
California Salmon
California Grown Celery
Golden State Olives
Filet of Beef a la California
California Artichokes
California Spring Chicken, Broiled
Salad of California Fruits and Vegetables
California Champagne
Ice Cream, California Fruit Flavor
Coffee

This will not include all of California's offering to its Chicago sons, however. The Golden State has sent so much of itself that those who sit down to the feast will find themselves in an environment almost entirely of their native state. Before them they will behold huge mounds of California grape fruit, oranges, apples, raisins and prunes. Everywhere their eyes will behold and to them will be wafted the fragrance of the kind of flowers many of them have not enjoyed for a long, long time. There will be masses of California foliage and there will be clusters and heaps of California eucalyptus, violets and lilies.

Judge Charles S. Cutting of the Probate Court will be toastmaster. William Kent, former Chicagoan and United States Congressman-elect from California, will be among the guests.—Chicago Daily News, Feb. 10, 1911.

BEKINS'

Fire-Proof Storage

1335 SOUTH FIGUEROA
And 250 S. BROADWAY

Call and inspect. Reduced Rate Shippers of household goods to and from the East and North.
Los Angeles, Cal.

HIGH CLASS INVESTMENTS

MINES & FARISH
REAL ESTATE AGENTS
353 S. HILL STREET

RESIDENT AND BUSINESS PROPERTIES
Los Angeles, Cal.

The Provident Will make liberal loans on improved property or for building purposes payable in installments. Call and see us about it.

Provident
Mutual Building Loan Association

Cor. 6th & Hill, Sts. Los Angeles J. M. Hunter Mgr.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Latest on Commission Government: The Municipal Journal of February 22 contains an intelligent and comprehensive statement of the exact facts with regard to the growth of the commission system of city government, together with a table of the 112 cities now working under that plan, and a summary of the essential provisions of the charter in each case. It is an interesting and valuable document. An important feature of it is a discussion by Prof. Chas. A. Beard, who edits the "Digest of Short Ballot Charters," which will presently be issued by the Short Ballot Organization, as to what really constitutes a "Commission form of Government," the name having been used miscellaneously by all cities that choose to call the council a commission. Beard holds that the true commission government is one in which only the most imoortant offices are elective, and that very few of those should be filled at any one time, "so as to permit adequate and unconfused public examination of candidates." But we are disposed to agree with the author of the Journal article, anonymous, who thinks this definition "places undue emphasis on the short ballot idea." Then he tries his hand at a definition making it a system "where all the functions of government are lodged in a few officials elected at large." This definition is, however, open to one point of ambiguity. The authority is not lodged in these officials separately but collectively. Therefore let us say: Where all the functions of municipal government are lodged in a small body of officials elected at large. Thus collectively they make up a commission or a body to which all powers are committed by the people (subject always, let us hope, to direct legislation and the recall); severally, they may hold various administrative positions, one being a mayor, one auditor and so forth. The commission system is an attempt to secure a business-like administration of a city government, and while many elements might enter that problem, one is so predominant as to quite overshadow all others and that is that responsibility should be definitely located. That means that authority should be definitely located, which disposes forthwith of the usual scheme of a lot of officers with co-ordinate, unlimited powers, all serving as checks and balances on one another. Of necessity, too, it reduces the number chosen to the smallest possible compass. Of the 112 cities listed under the commission plan, all but 4 have the referendum, and all but 22 have the initiative. The recall appears in 70 of them. The table is in error in not giving San Diego direct legislation and the recall. Out of the whole list of 112 only 8 charters went into operation prior to 1909, which shows how recent has been the movement. Indeed, it is evidently just at its beginning, for several eastern states have either just adopted or are now considering laws that will allow the adoption of the system by their cities.

Aqueduct Tunnel Breaks all Records: Wm. Mulholland, manager of the Los Angeles Owens River Aqueduct and of the city water department, has contributed a number of vital arguments to the question of whether public work can be made as efficient as private. His arguments come in the form of record-smashing in the swiftness and cheaoness of accomplishing standard results. One of his most striking achievements is the 5 mile tunnel through the granite of the Coast Range Mountains, where presently 1000 second feet of water will flow for the supply of Los Angeles and her neighbors. The experts who checked up Mr. Mulholland's figures at the outset of the great enterprise estimated 1680 working days would be required and put the cost at $75.33 per foot. The excavation of the tunnel is now complete, using less than 3½ years of the 5 allowed for the whole work, or 1239 days. The concreting still remains and this will take 8 to 10 months. The cost has thus far run considerably under the estimates, and a saving of over $400,000 has been effected. The average of speed has been 21 feet a day instead of 16 as estimated. In April, 1910, the South Portal crew, under W. C. Ashton, made 604 feet, and in May of that year the North Portal crew made 567 feet. The record for such work was held at Gunnison at 449 feet. About 200 men were employed in the work, and they were paid under a bonus system that greatly increased speed and allowed some of them to earn as high as $150 a month..

Lessons in Good Roads: The Pennsylvania Railway sends out a Good Roads train with lecturers, stereopticon views, pictures, statistics and models of road building and road machinery. It travels about the farming regions from which the railroad draws its tonnage, and does missionary work among the farmers and county officials to stimulate public sentiment and to help in the wise outlay of whatever funds are available. The Pennsylvania figures that good roads in the counties flanking its rails are a distinct asset because they help to bring in tonnage. Since the demonstration train started on its travels it has been found necessary to increase its number of cars and all its equipment, because of the great numbers of people that attended the meet ings.

What Constitutes Sueeess: The mayor of Burlington, Vermont, warns the citizens of that place that they are not to hold their municipal lighting plant in small esteem merely because its orofit last year amounted to only $68. He points out that the city is paying only $65 a year for street lights as against $95, the average price of Massachusetts cities, and that the citizens have saved $40,000 during the year on the lowered price of the light used in their homes. A municipal lighting plant can even lose money, and yet be a success as far as the welfare of a city is concerned.

Proposed Liberal Railway Franchise: Facing the lively possibility of a municipal street car system in Des Moines, the existing company, whose franchise is expired, now proooses a new franchise with a 5-cent fare until the dividends shall reach a certain figure, after which it is to be six tickets for a quarter. The term is to be unlimited, the city having oower to purchase at intervals. There is provision for full publicity and the arbitration of all lahor troubles.

Naticnal Aid to Health Urged: The surgeon general of the Public Health service in a report to Congress urges that the national government go further in co-operation with the states in caring for public health. He contends that the pollution of water courses is one of the most important health issues now before the people, and that in a large number of cases this should be handled by the national government.

Subway Is Profitable: The Public Service Commission of New York City reports that the subway with its one line carried more passengers than the four lines of the elevated. It is estimated that the subway paid the Ryan syndicate (its owners) about 20 per cent in dividends last year. There is great complaint of the ill-treatment of its passengers and the meanness of its equipment. It is resisting regulation by the Utilities Commission.

State Fire Marshal: There is a bill before the Pennsylvania Legislature that puts a tax of one-fourth of one per cent on all the premiums collected by insurance companies, the money to be used to maintain a state fire department with a fire marshal. Investigations will be made into the cause of all fires, and legislation for fire prevention will be kept up to date.

New Commission Cities: The following cities have recently adopted the commission form of government: Pekin, Illinois; Appleton, Wisconsin; Council Grove, Kansas; Greensboro, South Carolina, and Faribault, Minnesota. The plan was rejected in Galesburg, Illinois, by a large majority.

Thumb-printing the Police: After the physical examination of police applicants in New York City, a record is taken of their thumb-prints. The reason for this is that there have been a number of cases of sending substitutes for the mental part of the examination before the civil service.

The Light That Failed: An investigation into the affairs of the street lighting system in Chicago showed that the city was paying $7000 a year for lights that did not exist at all. This seems to have been due not to graft but simply to lack of adequate records.

Municipal Dance in New York: Following the example of Milwaukee, New York is trying the municipal dance as a feature of its park system. Ten recreation center houses have been constructed in its parks, and in one of these a public dance was recently held.

Trouble with Diphtheria: Fitchburg, Massachusetts, will now reorganize its health department. An epidemic of diphtheria managed to get well under way with a total of about 700 cases—most of them light, fortunately.

Infantile Paralysis: While the daily newspapers are telling us that a remedy is in sight for the new disease, infantile paralysis, health authorities are warning peoole that part of the danger of its infection comes from the public drinking-cup.

Work of Utilities Commission: The peoole of Racine, Wisconsin, were paying $1.15 per thousand for gas and they apoealed to the state utilities commission to investigate. The commission did so and ordered the price reduced to a dollar.

Screening Food Products: The health authorities of Jacksonville, Florida, are compelling all dealers in fruits and meats and all bakeries and restaurants to screen their premises thoroughly and exclude all flies.

City Workers Organize: The street sweepers of Pittsburg, 800 in number, have organized a union. They get $2 a day and are asking for an increase to $2.50. Frequently they get only 3 or 4 days work in the week.

Margin of Profit: The annual report of the municipal lighting and power plant of Richmond, Indiana, shows receipts for the year 1910 of $77,341 and operating expenses of $48,649.

Against the Rat: The Board of Health of New Bedford urges the adoption of a building ordinance that will require all future structures to be rat-proof.

The Golden Rule City: Toledo is trying to get legislation passed by the Ohio law-makers that will allow that city to run its own street car system.

Ticket Speculation: The New York Board of Aldermen have passed an ordinance forbidding the sale of theatre tickets on the streets.

In Behalf of Cleanliness: Louisville, Kentucky, has joined the list of cities that are enforcing the spitting ordinance in good earnest.

Cities and Babies: Delos F. Wilcox, in his recent book on American cities, says that a big city is no place for a baby to be born.

College City fer Commission: Jacksonville, Illinois, has adopted the commission form of government.

PURITAS
DISTILLED WATER

PURE
WHOLESOME
HEALTHFUL

FIVE GALLONS, 40 CENTS

Delivered within the old city boundary lines.

Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co.

Phone Home 10053; Sunset Main 8191
Los Angeles, Cal.

Country Life Education Series

Davenport's, Domesticated Animals and Plants.....$1.25
Davenport's, The Principles of Breeding 2.50
Duggar's, Fungous Diseases of Plants 2.00
Hopkins', Soil Fertility and Permanent Agriculture.. 2.25
Lyon and Montgomery's, Examining and Grading of Grains ..... .60
Plumb's, Types and Breeds of Farm Animals 2.00

Any or all of these books will be sent to any address, postage or express prepaid, upon receipt of the price above given.

GINN AND COMPANY
Publishers of High School and College Text Books
717 Market St., San Francisco
252 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

Galloping Through the Capitol

Being as Much as a Tourist Knows After He Has Done It

The Capitol at Sacramento is a large and stately structure, as dear old Baedeker would say, in the classic Graeco-Roman monumental style. (None of our readers know what style that is, any more than we do, so we reckon that bluff won't be called.) A careful survey of it at once discloses the fact that its artless builders put it on hindside to or rear end forward or, to use a classic phrase, obverse reverse. To be explicit, the august portal of this edifice faces on a dinky two by sixteen plot of grass and trees, whereas the rear, which nobody cares a whoop about, faces on a noble park a quarter of a mile long and two city blocks wide. Whether the original architects of the building (it has been altered to fit the prevailing spring styles once or twice) were asleep at the switch when they planned this front, or whether the noble park aforesaid acquired its title of nobility by condemnation and purchase only recently, this historian does not know, but whatever the reason, he feels that a great gain would be made by whirling the whole thing around and making it face front.

We will say this for the architect, however—he has a good eye for proportion. The building is about as pleasing to the eye as one could desire. The longer you look at it, the better it looks.

Once inside the revolving storm door at the reversed entrance, you stand in a large rotunda and face to face with $365 worth of perfectly good marble which has been sculped into a wax-works representation of that first-reader historical romance about Queen Isabella hocking the crown jewels to stake Columbus to three sailing junks and the chance to steal a better navigator's glory. Personally, we wouldn't have advanced the lady five sous on the collateral offered by her in this group. China beads may have been good for junks and glory in those good old days, but no sailor in that fleet would have drawn his pay in our good doubloons on such a "hang-up" as this string of marble pearls.

Just as a tip to the keeper of the Capitol, the good Queen Isabella is going to be treated for trachoma shortly if they don't take that electrical reflector away from the bottom of the group. It appears that the rotunda is like that other rotunda familiarly known as "the inside of a cow," so they put in a group of electric globes, set in a curved tin pan, to throw a strong light on Isabella and Columbus. Whoever did it, however, had a notion that a stage effect was wanted, and so put the lights below the statuary, so that they shine upwards and directly into the queen's eyes. Evidently her nerve is as good as it was 500 years ago—she hasn't blinked yet.

Surrounding this group is a strong brass railing to keep the curious from trying to pinch the jewels before Uncle Ike gets the ticket made out. Leaning upon this railing is an object usually mistaken by tourists like ourselves for another piece of statuary. It is dressed in modern clothes, is also a rotunda—a very rotunda—and wears a large star and a large walrus moustache. The star has the word "Watchman" on it. Personally, we did not have time to try the experiment, but patient people, with an investigating turn of mind, assure us that this object, if observed long enough, will be seen to bat its eyes. A longer wait will be rewarded by seeing a lump in the right jaw disappear and a new lump appear in the left jaw. There is some talk of detailing Professor Reed, of Governor Johnson's office, because he is a university man, to make an exhaustive study of this phenomenon and report what its habits are and what significance, if any, attaches to the word "Watchman." There are suspicions that the object itself is human.

Just at present, the busiest places in the capitol, outside the governor's office, are the two legislative chambers. The Assembly chamber is a large hall, appropriately done in green, as becomes the character of most of its members, the majority of whom are freshly elected from the tall grass every other year. Carping critics, noting the presence in the Assembly as such names as Coghlan, Cronin, Mullaley and Walsh, have suggested that the eolor scheme had some symbolical relation to the Hibernian holiday celebrated yesterday, but this is an error.

The accommodating person who guided us through the Capitol told us that the most absorbing question at this session has been Local Option, most of the Assemblymen absorbing as much as eame their way, the option referring to the privilege of taking it straight or mixed with the chaser, as you please.

We next viewed the Senate chamber. Here the upholstery was all in red, a quiet shade harmonizing admirably with all the furnishings except Senator Tyrrell's hair. Behind the President's desk is a large painting of George Washington standing hy a table holding his hand over his purse pocket, a habit acquired by this portrait, our guide informed us, during some of the ante-reform sessions of the Legislature. On the blank walls right and left from Washington, hang excellent portraits of ex-Lieutenant-Governor Alden Anderson and Warren Porter, each an exact duplicate of the other, so as to give no offence to the friends of either. Some critics have complained that these portraits are not worth $500 apiece, which they cost, but such critics forget the obiect lesson in diplomacy that is thrown in with the pictures.

Over Washington's portrait is a legend which reads:

> Senatoris est Civitatis
> Liberatem Tueri

This also is a relic of past days. We don't know what it means; we always were shy on Greek—but we'll bet it's a lie. We asked the guide and he didn't know. He says he has asked all the Senators and they all referred him to the Secretary of State. Mr. Jordan says it is a sign somebody has removed from the Insectary by mistake. That sounds plausible, and may explain the whole thing.

Time and space forbid further observations on the Capitol right now. We may, however, remark that the monumental classic Graeco-Roman style of architecture was adapted to the Graeco-Roman style of public affairs, whereas we have a hunch that any modern builder of steel-frame office buildings could put it all over that style for the convenience and comfort of modern legislators and state officers. But such a thing as common-sense of that sort in state affairs would be heresy, so of course it is out of the question. What would a state government be without a dome over it? Heavens! The idea!

THE SMOKE PROBLEM

That much has been accomplished in the abatement of the smoke nuisance in Pittsburg, and that further progress may be expected in the future, is the statement made in a report of the Department of Health of that city. The improvement is due to the installation of smoke consumers, or apparatus that insures better combustion, and it is stated that approximately $1,000,000 has been expended in that direction during the past year by local industries. Dealing with the railroads' part in the smoke problem, the report has this to say: "Approximately 500 locomotives are in service daily in and around our Union station. One hundred and ninety regular trains stop at East Liberty every 24 hours. When it is known that one-half of this number (95) must leave the Union station and climb a heavy grade every foot of the way to Wilkinsburg, starting as they must, with a green fire and no opportunity to get up smokeless combustion before leaving the city limits, it will be seen that at least the Pennsylvania Lines east have a problem in engineering, the solution of which will require time and experiment." In summarizing the work of the railroads for the fiscal year covered by this report, we find that the Pennsylvania has kept in service 12 special smoke inspectors; has equipped 57 locomotives with smoke-abating devices; has kept 225 locomotives supplied with low volatile (less smoky) coal; has constantly supplied five locomotives with coke as fuel. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has kept 55 locomotives supplied with coke as fuel while operating within the city limits. —The Citizens' Bulletin, Cincinnati.

"My husband is just awful when he wants to find anything. You never saw a man throw clothes around the way he does." "Where did he learn to be so untidy?" "Why, he was in the New York custom-house for four years."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Blanchard Hall Studio Building
Devoted exclusively to Music, Art, Science. Studios and Halls for all purposes for rent. Largest studio building in the West. For terms and all information apply to
F. W. BLANCHARD
332 So. Broadway, 232 S. Hill St. Los Angeles, Cal.

VILLE DE PARIS
317-325 So. Broadway 314-322 So. Hill Street
A. FUSENOT CO.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Rag Rugs

WHY not brighten up the home at little cost this Spring by adding a few new Rugs. Particular mention is made of our Special Value in 36x72 Rag Rugs at $1.50

With hit and miss centers and plain borders

"The Magic" Electric Suction Cleaner

(Weighs only 10 pounds)

Can be operated by a child. The simplest, lightest, most effective cleaner made. Ask to see it in our rug department (2d floor)

$38.00

MOST ATTRACTIVE APARTMENT HOUSE IN LOS ANGELES
Contains large private balconies leading from all rooms. Extra services provided such as the washing of dishes, etc. Apartments for rent by the month or will lease for definite term. Prices $65.00 per month and up. in cludes all general expenses.
ELEGANTLY FURNISHED
MRS. N. WILLIAMS ANDERSON, Manager.

Transportation Problems in Los Angeles

Theodore B. Comstock Addresses City Club on a Topic of Vital Interest

Transportation problems in relation to city planning was the subject discussed at last Saturday's luncheon of the Los Angeles City Club.

The speaker was Theodore B. Comstock, engineer of the Los Angeles Board of Public Utilities, who has given this subject much thought, and in his speech he gave a comprehensive outline of what might be done to solve the questions of steam and electric traffic which now confront the city.

Mr. Comstock does not favor a union station for Los Angeles; he claims that it is not absolutely necessary and that it would be difficult to induce the different railroads to cooperate in such an undertaking.

Mr. Comstock said, in part:

The movement of persons and packages within a city is the expression of its nervous system in action. For reasons well enough known to you and me, the dominating brain of our traffic system—the nervous system of Los Angeles—has had lodgment in a head, or heads, disconnected from the body politic. This is not an exceptional case, however.

For, with more or less justification in each instance, nearly all the cities of the United States, unlike those of the old world, have builded about pre-arranged routes of transit as skeletons. And now these have become not only their bony framework, but also the arteries for circulation of the life-blood, the ramifications of the nerves and the outlets for muscular activity of the American city. These facts constitute the reason, sometimes used as excuse, for the domination of cities and states by subsidized brains responsible for corporate usurpation of governmental authority.

Lack of coherence and co-ordination of effort is the most vulnerable point we need to guard. But one cannot deeply study any plan for city betterment without reaching the conclusion that it is not an isolated, independent issue to be settled wholly upon its own merits. We must maintain perspective against all projects of whim or caprice or of selfish or narrow interests.

The tendency to generalize without adequate basis of facts, must be well regarded and discounted in our work. We must not fall into the error of trying to overcome evils or to supply needs piecemeal, at least until the efficacy of such method has been clearly demonstrated to be necessary or desirable. In other words, piecemeal construction or destruction can be justified only when each point of attack is itself part and parcel of a connected plan.

While it is essential to know how far and in what ways the needs of future traffic must be regarded in the laying out of city arteries, we must not forget that the interurban and local car lines are essential elements in transportation. We have consequently several more factors in our problem than those which will be of deep concern to the trunk line magnate. In my study of the Los Angeles complex, I find it necessary thus to analyze the needs of the situation in the following manner:

We have: A. Trunk Lines practically engaged in inter-State traffic.

B. Inter-urban Lines, gradually supplanting the suburban business of the members of Class A, and in some respects representing an intermediate group between this and the following class.

C. Intra-Mural Lines (confined to purely local business within the past few weeks only.)

The existing arrangement has some advantages for our purpose over the involved mix-up of a year ago. But it also brings in some new elements of difficulty in planning. To all intents, in first contemplation, the classification herein announced is applicable; but, upon closer inspection, it appears that Classes A and B are in proprietary merger, so far as one main factor is concerned.

Within a few weeks past important steps have been taken by the Board of Public Utilities, looking towards the avoidance of crowded cars on local lines. These measures are not as yet wholly effective, because of temporary obstacles soon to be overcome. With this service duly regulated, some efficient means of taking interurban cars entirely off the streets must be worked out. And in connection with this, the elimination of all grade crossings of railroads of all kinds at

Report of the Condition of

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF LOS ANGELES

At the Close of Business March 7, 1911

RESOURCES			LIABILITIES
Loans and Discounts		$11,983,452.60	Capital Stock Paid In		$1,500,000.00
Overdrafts, Secured and Unsecured		24,857.20	Surplus Fund		300,000.00
U. S. Bonds to Secure Circulation		1,250,000.00	Undivided Profits, Less Expenses and Taxes Paid		2,006,600.17
Bonds to Secure U. S. Deposits		305,000.00	National Bank Notes Outstanding		1,150,000.00
U. S. Bonds on Hand		5,000.00	Due to Other National Banks	$ 1,858,063.78
Bonds, Securities, etc. (bonds only)		962,325.00	Due to State Banks and Bankers	1,388,192.83
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	$2,033,491.19		Due to Trust and Savings Banks	1,330,990.27
Due from State Banks and Bankers	250,022.54		Dividends Unpaid	1,895.00
Due from Approved Reserve Agents	1,021,840.33		Individual Deposits Subject to Check	10,367,692.37
Checks and Other Cash Items	142,950.72		Demand Certificates of Deposit	524,341.39
Exchange for Clearing House	424,833.94		Certified Checks	60,934.41
Notes of Other National Banks	63,930.00		Cashier's Checks Outstanding	405,967.99
Fractional Paper Currency, Nickels and Cents	6,468.04		U. S. Deposits	300,988.47
Lawful money reserve in bank, viz.:			Letters of Credit	86,386.85
Specie	$1,978,486.00		Total Deposits		16,326,453.36
Legal-tender Notes	689,400.00	2,667,886.00	Reserved for Taxes		9,740.00
Cash and Sight Exchange		6,611,432.76
Redemption Fund with U. S. Treasurer		62,500.00
Customers' Liability Under Letters of Credit		83,225.85
Total		$21,292,793.53	Total		$21,292,793.53

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, } ss.
County of Los Angeles, }

I, W. T. S. Hammond, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

W. T. S. HAMMOND, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn before me this 9th day of March, 1911.

W. N. HAMAKER, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest:

J. M. ELLIOTT, W. C. PATTERSON, JNO. P. BURKE, JOHN S. CRAVENS, J. C. DRAKE and M. H. FLINT, Directors.

Statement of the Condition of the

LOS ANGELES TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

Owned by the Stockholders of the First National Bank, at Close of Business March 7, 1911

RESOURCES			LIABILITIES
Loans and Discounts		$ 6,323,370.32	Capital		$ 1,500,000.00
Overdrafts		34,382.42	Surplus and Undivided Profits		934,339.83
Bonds, Securities, etc.		1,766,211.61	Bond Account		150,000.00
Banking House, Furniture and Fixtures		815,340.73	Deposits—Demand	$3,054,847.86
Cash and Sight Exchange		1,731,138.25	Time	5,031,255.64	8,086,103.50
Total		$10,670,443.33	Total		$10,670,443.33

intersections with each other and with other types, as well as with roadways, will have to be accomplished. The local street car service can be accommodated at surface in the streets for a considerable period at least, and this plan will be most satisfactory until it be found impracticable in congested districts.

In Los Angeles a union passenger depot for through travel is not as much a necessity as many suppose, either to the railways or to the traveling public. As an imposing structure, a work of art, an advertisement for the city, a real convenience in transferring from one road to another, it would well repay its cost, perhaps even to the companies in all these respects. But there is here no such transfer from line to line as at Chicago, St. Louis and other interior distributing points. The railroads do not want to join hands in an enterprise of this kind, and the more an engineer studies the matter, the less easy does it become to point out a suitable location adapted to future growth of the city.

Even a tentative decision must be hesitatingly pronounced until after the settlement of the problems connected with the abolishing of grade crossings.

In most of our cities the securing of rapid transit has been the outcome of forced conditions. We are beginning to meet similar issues in Los Angeles, but heretofore we have not been guided markedly by experience elsewhere, except in crude discussion without definite knowledge as a basis. We have been spoiled by the cheap bestowal of franchises and this practice has tended to spoil the applicants, who have come to regard the spoils of our despoiling as a part and parcel of their assets, upon which the donors are expected to pay interest charges in the rates.

In working out a rational plan one year ago, I was led to what appeared to me the simplest and best general scheme for thus concentrating effort from all directions. It has taken a little time to bring out objections and to test the validity and consistency of the whole with its separate parts. It may be too early now to decide if full co-operation of all interests will be enlisted without more or less of adjustment by way of compromise. But I hope and trust that there is good reason for the belief that definite agreement will soon be reached along these general lines. It is very easy to make mistakes by hasty action which will eventually cost enormously for readjustment. It is exceedingly difficult to so forecast the future as to plan wisely and adequately. But this is just what must be done, if we are to get results economically which shall meet the issue squarely.

Freight traffic is the most important and most difficult to provide for, both in reaching correct estimates of future requirements and in overcoming the prejudices connected with present methods and locations of industries where these may have to be changed materially. We are peculiarly fortunate, however, in that our growth has heretofore been less concentric than excentric. This fact, taken in connection with the heretofore exotic character of business and the ever present urgency for rapid human transit, gives good leverage for prying dead-weight obstacles.

There are some selfish commercial reasons for continuing the present main city, in the rough, as the center of development of Greater Los Angeles. But from the outlook of a whole-souled citizen and an unbiased student of affairs, and even from the correct view-point of a rough-riding traffic agent endowed with power to act, the advantages of the existing status are greatly outweighed by other considerations, which will eventually move the center of population much to the south of its 1910 locus at Twelfth and Main streets.

If we aptly provide for just two things in city planning along broad and generous lines, our work is well done. These are facilities for work and for rest. Both are alike the need and the right of every red-blooded human being, but there is or should be a separate place and time for each.

It matters not so much where your business center may lie, if you provide means of rapid transit to and fro. If, for valid, unselfish reasons you have a predilection for any given civic, educational or commercial focus, I shall not trouble you with objections thereto, unless lacking in the element of fitness for the purpose in view. For I can manage your passage both ways between home and office in the shortest practicable time, leaving you to select your living place accordingly.

The main civic center should be at the focus of official business, and if you most arbitrarily select a point for it, official activity will be attracted and cling about it as iron filings to a magnet. It need not be the real commercial center, although it should not be placed wholly outside the zone of commercial movement.

Educational facilities of the lower grades must be distributed in accordance with density of residence of school age. Institutions for higher education, although not independent of localizing influence of similar character, may be more economically and effectively operated in outlying districts.

The minor civic centers, in my opinion, should be located on much the same principles as those which govern the placing of the grade school buildings. In many cases, these will become the civic centers of individual districts.

Trunk line traffic in both passenger and freight service, has been based heretofore almost wholly upon an erroneous theory or edict of the railroads. At any rate, whatever the reasons therefor, the conditions about to control will not longer justify the segregation of all trunk business in two classes, according to the destinations, San Francisco and Los Angeles, withholding local coast deliveries from the category of terminals.

In in short time there will be advantage to travelers and residents in two union passenger depots within the city limits. But these would not be identical in purpose. One, if placed at a central point where all trunk lines might converge, will be convenient, but not necessary, for the people who come and go, simply as an equalizer of distances. As before stated, very little need exists here for the transfer facilities which are usually the most important element of union depots elsewhere.

At the Harbor every consideration of importance emphasizes the need of a combined terminal depot. If we approach the matter from the side of the customs officers, the city officials, the railroads or their patrons, there is no way out of the conclusion that concentration at one point of the land and water transportation routes is clearly indicated by the situation at San Pedro. And, in spite of history, and of the selfish interests of the railways, I firmly believe that the operating corporations will not be slow to confirm the conviction that we cannot stop short of a municipal depot for this class of traffic, as an eventuality. In connection with this, the city must control and operate belt line connections with the various trunk lines. This plan will greatly simplify and facilitate the prompt and economical transfer of passengers in both directions. Without this consummation, the outlook for one who might come in or go out by one line of steamers and transfer to or from a given land route not affiliated directly therewith, would be much like that of a Tantalus attempting to quench thirst at visible supply of water just out of reach.

There is an area which is now adaptable at not excessive cost to a sensible and practicable scheme of city development which will not require extensive changes in the present lay out of streets. It lies where all the trunk and interurban railroad systems now pass or can be brought together with very little outlay for connecting links. A large part of the district is owned or at control of the railroad corporations. There is very much to commend this as a site for a Union passenger station for all classes of travel. Since its adaptation to this purpose became apparent, I have honestly and earnestly endeavored to search out objectionable points. But the more I study the matter, the more convincing are the arguments in favor of the plan.

Now we come to the most fruitful source of congestion and the problem which heretofore has had the least consideration on the side of public necessity and convenience. This is the interurban freight and passenger traffic. By adopting belt lines, now partially constructed, which will bring in freight over outlying suburban routes, to the heart of the industrial district, excluding such traffic, which is now permitted without franchise rights, from the ordinary intramural routes it will not be necessary to depress or elevate those portions of interurban tracks which run parallel with the surface railroads in the industrial area. I firmly believe the city itself must finally assume control of the local distribution of freight. The construction of the municipal railway, if wisely planned as to terminals, will very largely provide the means of accomplishing this purpose in the initial stages. But working out of the problem in detail will require most thoughtful study from capable heads.

While it is now necessary and more or less desirable always, to have local service by surface routes, there is no valid reason for continuing suburban service across any street at grade within the city limits. Even the operating companies are planning to come part way in the direction here indicated, but they cannot be expected to lead the procession much beyond what tallies with their own immediate pecuniary interests. The present terminals are not central for passenger business and decidedly they are not well located for handling this traffic speedily and economically.

If they are to remain where they are, it is imperative that their tracks be depressed or elevated so as not to cross city streets at grade. But the matter is not to be decided by putting the titles "Subway" and "Overhead" in a hat and adopting the one first drawn, as a working basis.

Before or after the actual accomplishment of this rational system of transportation, interurban lines must adopt less clumsy means of embarking and discharging passengers. What may be styled local express stations several blocks apart, will be needed, where patrons can take or leave through trains without covering long distances to and from the terminus, as is now necessary. It is very probable that the conditions herein specified, if they be adopted as the regulative policy of the city authorities, will ere long necessitate the changing of profiles between the main city and the outlying resorts, and this may lead to important re-alignment in certain districts. Roughly speaking, elevation above present grades will then be required, for the most part, South and West of the suggested Union depot. Subways, in general, will be more practicable in some other directions.

All the proposed plans for elevating tracks in the industrial district, while they are feasible as to the tracks themselves, do not adequately provide for absolute safety to life and limb of those who must cross the district. And they usually involve much greater expense in first cost and radical and costly changes in freight distribution, as compared with the scheme herein advocated, which presents another great advantage in the ability to develop the system gradually or even sporadically, if necessary, without serious hindrance to any industry or class.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat

"WHAT A DARLING LITTLE TOY FOR MY CHATELAINE."

Mrs. A.—"Didn't her constant singing in the flat annoy you?"

Mrs. B.—"Not so much as the constant flat in her singing."—Boston Transcript.

The New Order of Things

(Continued from Page 11)

punishment is not inflicted until after examination of the convict by the prison physician.

In 1905, 270 men were punished by the jacket, serving altogether 7,911 hours; in 1906, 223 men, serving 6,072 hours; in 1907, 164 men, serving 1,006½ hours, in 1908, 134 men, serving 929 hours; in 1909, 73 men, serving 279 hours; in 1910, 19 men, serving 39½ hours. In justice to the present warden, it is stated that he has been in charge of the prison since 1907, when the use of the straitjacket was lessened.

Leasing of Public Utilities

The Senate has passed the Burnett bill (Senate Bill 466) enabling cities to lease any public utilities municipally owned or controlled. The bill provides that "the power to acquire and operate any public utility shall include the power to complete, reconstruct, extend, change, enlarge and repair any such public utility acquired, constructed, owned or operated by a municipality."

Under the further terms of the bill, whenever a municipality shall develop an excess of water, light, heat or power over and above the amount necessary for the use of such municipality, it may sell, lease or distribute such excess outside of the corporate limits of the city; but in no event may any such lease be valid for a period of more than fifteen years. All leases are to be let to the highest bidder at public auction.

The municipalization of the Geary street railway in San Francisco and the possibilities therein prompted Senator Burnett to prepare and introduce this bill. At the same time he had in mind the Owens River Aqueduct, which is to supply water and power to Los Angeles and its industries. The fifteen-year limit on leases as provided by this bill marks a distinct advance in legislative action in California.

California Canals—Perhaps

The movement toward the construction of a system of inland canals in California appears about to receive added impetus. Probably before these words are in print the Senate will have placed its stamp of approval upon the Caminetti bill making provision for an investigation into the practicability of "the construction of canals, with dams, locks and other structures" required for their operation, in, along, or adjacent to, the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, their tributaries, and other waterways, and of the canalization thereof, where necessary, and also of the construction of such canals * * * inland in the Sacramento, San Joaquin and Santa Clara valleys, with the view of determining the utility thereof in aid of commerce and navigation."

This is a scheme that has been sleeping in the fertile dome of the earthquake Stentor from Amador for centuries. He has been patiently awaiting a Legislature brave enough to defy the railroad bosses—who of course want no canal competition, either in California or via Panama—and at last he has found one willing, apparently, to spend $2,500 in a preliminary investigation.

Such a system of canals as that proposed by Senator Caminetti would revolutionize commerce in California. That is one reason why the railroads will work as never before to see the present independent Legislature succeeded by one willing to do their bidding.

On the Toboggan

George Van Smith of the San Francisco Call, newspaper bossling of the machine element in the Senate of 1909 which tore the heart out of the direct primary bill of which Van Smith confessed partial parentage, is one of the lonesomest figures on the floor of the Senate this year. In 1909, as chum of Lieutenant-Governor Warren Porter, Senator Wolfe, Senator Leavitt and Senator Wright, four men who led the fight which gave the State the political gargoyle under which the electors marched to victory last August, Van Smith was one of the cockiest, jauntiest figures about the Capitol.

Times have changed. Porter has been relegated to private life; Frank Leavitt has been made the subject of a process of political elimination which is good for the State and bad for the racetrack gamblers; Frank Daroux, gambler and gamblers' lobbyist, hath hides himself on those rare occasions when he visits the Capitol; Jere Burke is a memory only; Wolfe is tolerated—his influence upon the floor gone; and Van Smith and his Call might just as well never be or have been.

The Call having gone to seed, as a factor in state politics, the once debonair Van Smith wanders about with a helpless expression on his face. Nobody pays much, if any, attention to him. Nobody seems to care much what he thinks, what he says, what he writes or what the Call has to say on any subject political. The utter indecency of some of his attacks during the campaign of 1910, his vilification of honored men, his free use of innuendo in the absence of facts as weapons for attacking reputations—all these have combined to "put him in" distinctly bad.

Van Smith is a lamentable case. It is here cited in evidence of the truth of the adage that it is a long lane that hath no turn. He really is to be pitied. I hate to see any young man on the toboggan.

Wallace Onto His Job

Lieutenant-Governor Wallace's handling of the fight to amend the local option bill, led by Senator Juilliard, who represented certain winery interests at the hearing on the bill before the Senate Committee on Public Morals, opened the eyes of the Senate to two things: First, the Lieutenant-Governor will give the people of California a "square deal" so far as it lies within his power to do so. Second, he knows parliamentary practice, thank you, and his own rights as presiding officer.

If ever an effort was made to put a presiding officer in a tight place, Mr. Wallace was the object of such a move on the occasion referred to. Even some of his closest friends trembled for fear that, through the tactics employed by Juilliard, he would be tangled up. But one who has seen the Lieutenant-Governor in many trying positions in a city council knew that he would emerge triumphant—serene, quiet, placid, but with a new scalp in his fist.

Juilliard wanted first to get the Free Conference Committee of the Senate named by the Senate—an unheard of and utterly ridiculous proposal. Failing in this, he wanted the Senate to advise or request its President to name a committee favorable to the contentions of Booze, that the unit in the local option plan be township instead of the county. Knocked out on this proposition also, he next asked that he be permitted personally to make a request along similar lines, which was granted, of course.

The joke in the matter lies in the fact that before this guerrilla warfare was inaugurated by Juilliard, President Wallace had decided whom he would name on the committee, and, knowing his rights in the matter, undoubtedly would have made such appointments regardless of any advisory action on the part of the Senate. Wherein we have evidence to back up our original proposition that he understands his job.

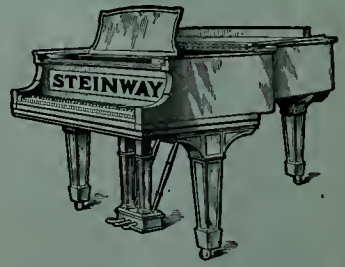
CIVIC EDUCATION THROUGH PUBLIC SCHOOLS

William H. Allen, director of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research, in an address before the annual convention of the Illinois State Teachers' association on "Civic Education Through Public Schools," said:

"No system of moral instruction in schools can offset the antimoral conduct of those schools which neglect the health of school children and school teachers, waste teacher's time, child's opportunity and taxpayers' money, or set a bad example to other public agencies by claiming immunity for mistakes and exemption from criticism. The greatest social settlement work ever conceived is that of the school where principal and teachers are in sympathetic touch with children and their parents. It is a topsy-turvey world, where, as in most American cities, 10 or 50 private citizens are interested in the criminal, the feeble-minded, the indigent and the aged infirm, for every private citizen intelligently interested in public schools. Proper proportions will never be restored until school men and school women assume the responsibility which is theirs for leading their communities—furnishing most of the evidence, a great part of the inspiration and the working centers—in movements classified as social service uplift and civic betterment.

"It is a result, not an accident, that during seven years as president of the United States Theodore Roosevelt did not discover the United States Bureau of Education. It is a result not an accident, that President Taft in his recent message of 22,000 words made no mention of the United States Bureau of Education. It is a result not an accident, that when the leading social workers of the United States set out to further the health of children they first overlooked and then repudiated the United States Bureau of Education. Instead of using an existing agency that was in touch with 500,000 school teachers, 50 state superintendents and hundreds of city superintendents of education, they asked for a new children's bureau.

"It is an anomalous and abnormal situation where Young Men's Christian associations can raise money from religious philanthropists on the plea that they have to do educational work because the public schools break down. It is a defective ideal of both school work and social work where an outside visiting teacher takes the place of the inside teacher who visits her children at home and her children's parents. We have made a fair trial of that ideal of school management which distrusted the general public and believed the safest public was that which knew least and asked fewest questions about schools. That ideal has failed. We must now seek after the ideal outlined by Commissioner Snedden, of Massachusetts, and so practically avowed by Chicago's woman superintendent, where the safest public is seen to be the best informed public, and where every public school gains the citizen support which it seeks and deserves."



The following suggestions were made to local schools wishing to increase their power for civic education:

1. Ask for a state law in medical examination of all children, teachers, janitors, buildings and grounds in all the school districts, public, parochial, private, rural and urban.
2. Teach personal hygiene by relating it to community hygiene.
3. Realize that every parent interested adds a teacher to your staff.
4. Give your newspapers school stories and thus add 25 per cent to efficiency of your teaching staff.
5. Make private agencies supplement school work instead of supplementing their work.
6. Make your schools the center of social settlement work and uplift work in your communities.

WE ARE NOW LOCATED IN OUR OWN NEW BUILDING

446-448 So. Broadway

Steinway, Kranich & Bach, Sohmer, Kurtzmann, Jewett & Lafargue Pianos.

Cecilian Player Pianos.

GEO. J. BIRKEL COMPANY

Los Angeles, Cal.

LOS ANGELES LIMITED

Three Days To Chicago

This palatial train leaves Los Angeles daily at 10:30 a. m. and arrives at Chicago third day at 11:30 a. m. A solid train of electric lighted sleepers, dining and observation cars, to Chicago and also a sleeper to Denver, closely connecting with St. Louis and Colorado Limited for Kansas City and St. Louis. Particulars at 601 So. Spring St., Los Angeles. 680 Market St., San Francisco, etc., about going east via Salt Lake Route, Union Pacific and North Western

Press Comments Pertinent Editorial Extracts From Our State Exchanges

The War Game

The most dramatic thing in the world today is the war game. In piping times of peace, the war drums suddenly sound from one end of the country to the other and the battle flags are unfurled—in play. When the funds of the War Department are at lowest ebb the greatest sudden mobilization of troops in the history of the country is undertaken. Railroads are pouring troops to the Mexican border and orders are that no expense is to be spared. The fighting force of the United States is going in fighting trim—all for maneuvers. Naval vessels are sailing under cover of darkness to cooperate with the land forces—in play war.

Official Washington announces that it is simply maneuvers, and unofficial Washington doesn't believe it.

In the language of Bob Evans, is it a fight or a frolic? The men don't know, the officers don't know, the world doesn't know.

What is it?—Fresno Republican.

Things Are Doing at Saeramento

Governor Johnson continues to make good and he is commanding the attention of the people all over California and in other states. He is admirably sustaining his reputation as a fighter and gets into the thick of things in a way that is truly Rooseveltian. We shall expect him to be off in a few years to Africa or some other foreign jungles in search of recreation if his strenuosity continues. His enthusiasm for accomplishing results has evidently taken hold with the solons at Sacramento to an unusual extent.—Escondido Times-Advocate.

Commission Form of Government Sustained

The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington, sustaining the commission form of city government as embodied in the new charter of Spokane, is applicable in principle to the charters of many other cities in which the same plan is incorporated.

The interesting point was made in the decision that the commission form of government for cities was in substance the same as the familiar form of county government by a Board of Supervisors. * * *

If a county may be efficienty governed by a board, why not a city likewise?—Sacramento Bee.

Gov. Johnson Makes Good All Around

Hiram Johnson has been Governor of California long enough for the people of the state to get his official measure. He has "made good" in the most thorough manner. He may have made mistakes of judgment. But they have been minor ones. On the major legislative propositions that have come up this winter he has assumed attitudes that have appealed to the people as being consistent with his platform planks and campaign declarations. He has made his influence upon the legislators strong and firm. He has had no patience with attempts to juggle legislation against the expressed will of the people. He has hewed to the line himself and has insisted that the representatives of the people in the law-making branch of the government do the same.

His administration thus far has been of distinctive doing. He has been instrumental in bringing about the passage of several notable laws. It must be said that he has a good Legislature with which to work. Progressives are in the majority and they are running things as the people want them run.

Governor Johnson betrays no symptoms of grandstanding. He is doing his duty plainly, practically and effectively, without ostentation. It was feared by some that he would be hot-headed and unduly impulsive as Governor. But he has not been. He has been well-poised, consistent and properly conservative. At the same time he has pushed things with a vim. He has his steam roller and he engineers it with vigor wherever the need arises.

All in all, his administration thus far has been a brilliant success. It promises to be one of the very best the state has ever had. He promised the people to do certain things and to refrain from doing certain other things. He has kept his promise. He acts on the theory that a public pledge is a public trust, to be kept faithfully. His good record will be duly recognized and treasured by the masses of the people whose mandate he is obeying.—Long Beach Press.

Lake Tahoe Grab Dead

Despatches from the East tell us that the Truckee River General Electric Company has withdrawn its request for permission to take water from Lake Tahoe by means of a tunnel in Nevada.

That means, of course, that the President has reconsidered his determination to grant the request and has so notified the corporation.

The President did a good job when he refused to permit California to be robbed of the water of Lake Tahoe, even though it did require a joint resolution of the California Legislature, a protest from Governor Johnson and hard work on the part of Gifford Pinchot, former Secretary of the Interior Garfield, Congressmen Kent and Raker and many other citizens to induce him to change his mind.

For, up to the time the Governor and Legislature of California took a hand in the matter, the President turned a deaf ear to all protests against the scheme—he had apparently made up his mind to sanction it and allow California to be robbed by the corporation and the State of Nevada.

The scheme appears to have originated in the fertile brain of Secretary of the Interior Ballinger, and the President, apparently taking his cue from Ballinger, endorsed it and stubbornly stayed with it in spite of all protests, until the Governor and Legislature of California took a vigorous stand against it.

It is to be hoped that the Tahoe scheme is now so dead that nothing can ever revive it or anything like it. But it will behoove us to be constantly on our guard.—Oakland Enquirer.

No Retreat

"I will not give a quarter of an inch on recall of judiciary," said Gov. Hiram Johnson, when the storm raged around him and even some of his best friends urged him to draw the line at the sacred precincts of the bench.

And he didn't "give!" The Legislature submits the amendment to the people, along with initiative, referendum and woman suffrage.

Oh, we're going some!—San Diego Sun.

Amerieaan Citizenship

Citizenship in the United States, whether the man be the descendant of Irish, German or Scandinavian-American parents, or whether he be of Hebrew extraction, should be one and the same thing. America has no better class of citizens than the sons of Israel; thrifty, industrious, frugal and moral; foremost in the culture of the arts and music; among the leaders of the van of financial and commercial progress; widely known for sobriety and temperance; there is no class in America that is more deserving of the name of American citizens than the great Hebrew people. It is a shame on the Federal government and a stain on the honor of America, that Russia is daily allowed to violate her national pledges to disregard American citizenship. There was a time when this country went to war for the purpose of preserving this dignity. Such a procedure would not be necessary on the part of the United States in this instance. A firm insistence that Russia comply with her treaty obligations and treat American citizenship with the respect and courtesy to which it is entitled would bring about the desired results. The men who have the handling of this matter are derelict in their duty and worthy of the severest censure.—Pomona Times.

A FRIEND IN NEED

Los Angeles Heral

The College Farmer

We make a suggestion to the young man on the farm, who does not want to plod along there, but at the same time is discouraged when he realizes that there are about two lawyers for every case in court and virtually a doctor for every patient. For him there is not much comfort in the frayed advice to strike out with the knowledge that there is always room for a good man on top. Eminence in the practice of any of the older professions can, of course, be attained now as ever; but while there is room for the good man in law and medicine, there is more room for him in scientific agriculture.

Think it over as your mind dwells upon your future. Some of the most important figures in the immediate years to come will be the men who learn all about the components of the soil, and how to retain or restore their productive power; and the men who can fight the diseases of vegetable life with all the scientific skill and certainty of modern medical practice.

If you are going to the university, disabuse your mind of the belief that culture is mainly of the classics. If you have decided not to go because you feel that you are destined for a practical role in life, reconsider, and investigate far enough to ascertain what the college of agriculture can teach you.—Garden Grove News.

The Short Ballot

The short ballot seems to be growing steadily in popularity with our people. After they begin to understand what it means and that it is a long step in the direction of good government and economical administration, the people are in favor of it. Of course they are, why should they not be? The opposition comes from the class of men who in the past have been the means of dragging the state into expensive legislation and providing all forms of offices where the professional office-seeker may receive his big fat salary at the expense of the people. The purpose of the short ballot is to make the secretary of state, the treasurer and attorney-general, as well as those who serve on boards of commission, appointive by the Governor. This seems like radical legislation to some people, but how many of our readers would favor the election of these men were they to constitute the cabinet of the President of the United States? We give the incumbent of the presidential chair the power to select the men that are to be entrusted with the most delicate affairs of the administration. Yet in our states we elect the Governor and give him, in many instances, a lot of machine manufacturing helpers who oppose his purpose time after time and interfere with the measures that are the most desired by the administration, and then if the administration proves to be a failure load the blame upon its head.—San Dimas Eagle.

Boggs—I was surprised to hear that Smith had failed. He always seemed to be very busy in his office?

Woggs—Yes; he spent more time tacking up those inspiring wall mottoes than any other man I ever saw.—Puck.

Political Table Talk

(Continued from Page 5)

course is required, not alone by economy and efficiency, but by consideration for those most unfortunate of mortals—the mentally sick. That these political odd-jobs men should have been powerful under the old order is not surprising, but that they should exert a preventing influence under the new order was not to be expected. They should be turned down hard.

Banking Customs In State Affairs

Among the minor measures before the Legislature few rank higher than the one proposed by Assemblyman Chandler, permitting the state treasurer to adopt banking methods in handling the state's finances. In other words, permitting counties to deposit their state moneys in designated banks to the credit of the state to be checked out by the state in payment of claims due in that vicinity. Why it has ever been any other way is inexplicable except on the ground that public mechanisms are blunt instruments at best. The Watchman craves the pardon of Socialists for suggesting this, to them, unpalatable truth, but truth it is. An elephant can pick up pins to rather better advantage, on the whole, than a state can do business. What a foolish, almost imbecile, thing it was for California, at the one time in the year when all the currency was needed to be in use, to lock up all the cash tax receipts in safes and vaults instead of banking them to be checked out as wanted, and yet that is exactly what was done for fully fifty years. The national government is only less absurd in this regard than state and its "independent treasury" has mainly meant a miserly hoarding of the medium of exchange greatly needed by the people. Controller's warrants should be as good in the open market anywhere in the state as bank checks, but they have not been and the treasurer has been able to pay only in coin. Banking methods applied to state business will not only greatly reduce express charges, but facilitate the transaction of business and convenience those who have business with the state.

Hichborn's History For Nineteen-Eleven

One of the most important forces in the campaign of 1910 was Franklin Hichborn's History of the Legislature of 1909. It held the mirror of that Legislature up so that the whole state saw what Senators and Assemblymen did when they were away from home. That book finished a number of the worst of them once and for all, put others on their good behavior and made the return of still others, who had proved themselves worthy, a mere walk-over. It was a splendid achievement and entitled Hichborn to a state pension for the rest of his life, which, however, he is very unlikely to get. Now what about the Legislature of 1911? Mr. Hichborn did not get back all that his 1909 history cost him in time and money. He needs help on the new one if he is to write it, but the only kind of help he will accept is subscriptions for his book. He wants no private interests at his elbow or special friends to whom he will be obligated. The book will cost $1.50 it gotten out and it will be gotten out if enough subscribe for it to warrant the expenditure of effort and money. Can any reader of The California Outlook do less for his state than to drop Mr. Hichborn a postal card at Sacramento promising to take and pay for a copy of the book when ready? Whoever fails of doing that much for this good cause is but a poor patriot unless he be a pauper.

SOWING WILD OATS UNNECESSARY

"It is perfect nonsense to say that a man must sow his wild oats," declared Dr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, in an address to the local branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at Oakland, Sunday.

"Those who start sowing wild oats keep on sowing them. Not in one case out of a hundred has a young man started on this free and easy path and sobered and taken up the great work of life later on."

"Getting rich is no success; it is a great and inglorious failure," he said. After a man has worn out his fingers getting his hoard together he dies and what he has accumulated he must leave behind him. A man such as this is a fool and blind to the great things of life.

"Life should be taken seriously always. Even the boy and the young man should avoid the inessentials. He should grow, and the only way to grow is to make a concentrated effort to learn the things of life that are worth while.

"Read good books; read history, philosophy and natural sciences. Fiction is worse than useless. For the little excitement you get out of it you are wasting your time. Knowledge gives depth to life and, like a picture, life must have depth if it is to be called successful."

Not an Anniversary

A Philadelphia newspaper reporter, trudging dutifully over his district, observed a crowd hanging about a certain corner downtown and approached a policeman.

"What's the row over there?" the reporter asked.

The policeman grinned. "Nothin'," he replied. "Nothin' but a wooden weddin'."

"A wooden wedding?" The newspaper man pondered and reached for his pencil. "Who is it?"

"Why, it's a wooden weddin'," answered the policeman in a matter-of-fact voice. "It's a couple of Poles gettin' married."—Philadelphia Times.

Nationalism and the Judiciary

(Continued from Page 10)

Commons, could pass upon the validity of its own acts. When the adherents of Jefferson and Madison opposed this proposition, as they did in the Kentucky and Virginia Resolutions, the position they took was that the Legislature of each State was a judge of Constitutional matters at issue between the States and the Nation, and that the States could declare void an Act of Congress. No one at the time thought of turning to the Supreme Court as the arbiter in such a matter, and this although the men who had made the Constitution were administering it. But Marshall, in his first Constitutional opinion, in an argument which, as Chancellor Kent said, approached to the precision and certainty of a mathematical demonstration, held that the Supreme Court possessed in itself the ultimate power to declare whether or not an Act of Congress was void. Nowadays the authority of the Court to decide that an Act of the Legislative Department, whether of the Nation or of any of the States, is repugnant to the Constitution seems self-evident. But no such power was expressly prescribed in the Constitution, and not only Jefferson but Jackson, with an emphasis amounting to violence, denounced Marshall's position and asserted that no such power existed. The reason why Marshall was so great a chief justice, the reason why he was a public servant whose services were of such incalculable value to our people, is to be found in the very fact that he thus read into the Constitution what was necessary in order to make the Constitution march. As Judge Spring points out, Marshall acted in the spirit of Hamilton when the latter said: "A government ought to contain in itself every power requisite to the full accomplishment of the objects committed to its care, and the complete execution of the trust for which it is responsible; free from every other control but a regard to the public good and to the sense of the people." (The italics are my own.) Judge Spring says with wisdom: "This emphatic declaration of Hamilton is as true today as when the infant Nation, after much tribulation, started on its career." There never existed a public man who was less of a demagogue than Hamilton, and yet he thus explicitly recognizes the need of law being in harmony with public opinion.

Now, the briefest consideration of Marshall's public career, and of the attitude of Lincoln as quoted by Judge Cuthbert Pound, is sufficient to show several things. In the first place, it is absolutely necessary that there should be discrimination between, and therefore intelligent criticism of, the judges who by their power of interpretation are the final arbiters in deciding what shall be the law of the land. Men ought not to be classed together for praise or blame because they occupy one kind of public office. The bonds that knit them in popular esteem or popular disfavor should be based, not upon the offices they hold, but upon the way in which they fill these offices. Chief Justice Taney was, I doubt not, in private life as honorable a man as Chief Justice Marshall; but during his long term of service as chief justice his position on certain vital questions represented a resolute effort to undo the work of his mighty predecessor. If, on these positions, one of these two great justices was right, then the other was wrong; if one is entitled to praise, then the other must be blamed. Buchanan and Lincoln do not stand together in the popular eye because both were presidents; on the contrary, they represent antipodal schools of thought. Andrew Johnson and Grant were as far asunder as Washington and Jefferson. There is no more ground for demanding that we refrain from differentiation between, and therefore from criticism of, chief justices than for adopting the same attitude as regards presidents. We must bear in mind the office; but we must also bear in mind the man who fills the office. This is a government of law, but it is also, as every government always has been and always must be, a government of men; for the worth of a law depends as much upon the men who interpret and administer it as upon the men who have enacted it.

ONE RESULT OF TREE PLANTING

There is a town in Sweden by the name of Orson. And Orson is one of the greatest towns in the world.

Of course Orson isn't as big as London, or New York, or Bagdad, or, perhaps, Oshkosh. But Orson has done something that none of the so-called "great" cities of the world has ever done.

Orson has dodged all local taxes—successfully and honestly.

The Orson railway is free to every citizen of the town.

The telephone service is free.

Schools and libraries cost the citizens absolutely nothing.

All because a generation or two ago the patriotic people of Orson planted trees. Orson has a municipal forest that has yielded the town $5,000,000 in the past thirty years.

And the $5,000,000 has paid the running expenses of the town.

Of course there isn't anything to hinder any American town from doing the same thing. But we don't notice any American town doing it. To date Milwaukee seems to be the only American town that has ever thought about it. —Boston Traveler.

Office Hours: 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. Sundays 10 to 12
Phones, Office—Home F 2075, Main 1946.

Dr. G. J. Crandall

DENTIST

Office: Broadway Central Bldg., 424 South Broadway
Suites 805-806
Los Angeles, Cal.

MAIN 3540 CUTS F-1068
AND ILLUSTRATIONS
FOR BOOKLETS, CATALOGS, PAMPHLETS, LABELS, NEWSPAPERS AND ALL OTHER PRINTING PURPOSES.
WRITE FOR PRICES AND SAMPLES
CITIZENS NAT. BANK BUILDING ARISTO ENGRAVING COMPANY 332 MAIN STS. LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

THE MARK OF GOOD CLOTHES
Harris & Frank
Leading Clothiers (INC.)
437-439-441-443 South Spring
Between Fourth and Fifth Streets.
FOR MEN AND BOYS
OUTFITTERS
FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS
Los Angeles, Cal.

FRANKLIN HICHBORN
Santa Clara, Cal.

Please send me, when published, one copy of your "Story of the California Legislature of 1911," for which I agree to pay $1.50 on delivery.

Name _____

Address _____

THIS IS YOUR PAPER

That is, if you are a Progressive. The object of this publication is faithfully to reflect and express the true sentiment of the Progressive movement in state and nation.

It Isn't Published for Profit

It is being financed, until it shall become self-supporting, by a hundred patriotic citizens of California; but it cannot really accomplish this mission without reaching the multitude.

It Needs Circulation to Assure Success

Not a few thousand, as it has at present, mostly in San Francisco, Alameda and Los Angeles counties, but tens of thousands widely circulated in every county and every city and town in the state. We want the greatest circulation of any weekly periodical in California.

You Can Help to Get It. How?

By taking enough personal interest in the matter to secure us a few new subscribers. It will be greatly appreciated and you will be doing a real public service.

Will You? Then Do It Now!

Use this coupon for the Los Angeles Express and The California Outlook. Regular price of the two $4.00 peryear; special offer for both $3.00 per year.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Please send the LOS ANGELES EXPRESS and THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK to the following address for one year, for which find $3 enclosed. (Check, currency or money order.)

Name .....

Street Address .....

City .....

Date.....1911

Mail to 311 E. 4th St., Los Angeles

Use this form for The California Outlook alone

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Los Angeles and San Francisco

Please send me { for one year / until further notice } The California Outlook for which I agree to pay One Dollar per year.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City.....

Date.....1911

Mail to 1018 Phelan Bldg., San Francisco, or 311 E. 4th St., Los Angeles.

In This Issue | Roosevelt's Los Angeles Address

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

Vol. X. No. 13 Los Angeles and San Francisco, March 25, 1911 5 Cents—$1.00 a Year

Cal State Library 12-31-10

The New Nationalism

HIRAM JOHNSON

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

But there is neither east nor [illegible] border nor breed nor birth

When two strong men stand face to face, though they come from the ends of the earth.

—Rudyard Kipling

[illegible] tting off
[illegible]s, and perhaps t[illegible]
[illegible]ft." "But why [illegible]
[illegible]n woolen goods?" cri[illegible]
[illegible]u said yourself. Mr [illegible]

ROOSEVELT AND JOHNSON

The California Outlook offers its readers the portraits of these two striking public characters on the same page, because it finds many points of resemblance between them. Both possess in a high degree the aggressive, persistent, honesty that is essential to civic advance. They have the same clarity of vision on large public issues, the same underlying sincerity and devotion to the interests of the people. If it has fallen to the lot of Roosevelt to work in a larger field than the one given to Johnson, and to deal with matters of broader import, it may nevertheless, be said of Johnson that thus far his career almost exactly parallels that of Roosevelt in the earlier stages of his work. Roosevelt roused the American people to the dangers that were besetting their government as no other president had done, save only Abraham Lincoln; but it is no small achievement that stands to the credit of Hiram Johnson, to wake the civic conscience of the people of California that had slumbered through two generations of voters, and tear loose the strangling grip of a giant political and commercial monopoly. We are perhaps too near to this event to give it its proper perspective. We have seen it happen time and again that the sons recognize the greatness of a man whom their fathers took merely as a matter of course. But for the moment we may at least pay the Governor this honor: That we offer his achievement and the promise of his future career as not unworthy to stand with the greater work and vaster fame of the one who has served as his inspiration and example.

✣ ✣ ✣

WHAT WILL THE PRESIDENT ASK THE DEMOCRATS TO DO?

While there are those who fear that the President, in his mature years, attained golf rather than wisdom, we may be sure that, as he saunters over the links, he is doing some pretty hard thinking over what he shall ask Congress to do when it convenes in extra session. His opportunity to swing the big stick with effect is gone for the rest of his term. That knotted thorn can have few terrors for an opposition party hungry for an issue. A president may thwack his own party with effect, but not the other fellow's. His pervasive smile may prove the President's most effective weapon. Unless signs fail the Democratic cohorts are going to be as much divided between insurgents and standpatters, those who would serve the public and those who would serve the interests, as the Republicans were. If so they can do nothing as a party, not even make a party issue for the presidential election next year. To be sure, efforts are making at pacification and the word "harmony" has been passed from mouth to mouth, but cats also smile before they fight and the new session will not be three days old before fur will be flying in the Democratic camp. No, party is not to count for much in the extra session, but common sense may count for considerable, and to that the President must, in the name of the country, make his appeal. Reciprocity with Canada must be put through, the conservation bills, lost in the shuffle during the short session, must be made right and enacted, the wool schedule revised and Arizona and New Mexico admitted. If the President asks that these things be done the nation will back him and woe to the political faction, whether Democratic or Republican, that fails to meet him more than half way in the doing of them.

THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK

A PROGRESSIVE WEEKLY

LOS ANGELES, 311 East Fourth St.
SAN FRANCISCO, 1018 Phelan Building.

Published in LOS ANGELES Every Saturday

Subscription Price $1.00 a Year, in Advance.
Single Copies 5 Cents at News Stands.

A. J. PILLSBURY } Contributing
C. D. WILLARD } Editors
C. H. RANDALL, Manager

TRUSTEES

Harris Weinstock, San Francisco.
Selah Chamberlain, San Francisco.
W. F. Chandler, Fresno.
M. Lissner, Los Angeles.
E. A. Dickson, Los Angeles.

PACIFIC OUTLOOK entered as second-class matter April 5, 1907, at the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Application made for entry for THE CALIFORNIA OUTLOOK in the postoffice at Los Angeles, California, as second-class mail matter.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE TIMES BIDS FOR SYMPATHY

For some reason the Los Angeles Times has lately sought to renew public interest in the disaster that befell that paper last fall. It has presented a number of articles, editorial and local, on this subject, in which the lost dollars of the owners contend with the passing lives of faithful employees for precedence of emotion. "My daughter, O my ducats!" The question of gas or dynamite is brought up for fresh discussion; and a desperate effort is made to rouse again the sentiment of friendly sympathy that the public felt and openly displayed at the time of the catastrophe.

The Times' motive in attempting this revival of interest is neither obscure nor complex. The prime forces that usually guide its course are two in number: First to make money, and second to injure those that it hates. The disaster has already shown itself highly serviceable to these ends, and we must expect that it will be worked and reworked and then worked again as long as there is an atom of strength left in it.

Besides the fifty thousand dollars set aside by the City Council of Los Angeles to pay for the discovery and prosecution of the dynamiters, and for other expense in connection with the disaster, the people of Los Angeles subscribed $70,000 and the people of San Francisco $10,000 to provide for those dependent upon the twenty-one employees of The Times who perished in the explosion. Had a similar disaster occurred in a mine, or in a packing establishment, or a foundry, the public before putting its hand to its pocket would have asked: "Is not the employing company able to take care of its own?" If the answer had come, as it must in the case of The Times, that it was an enormously rich concern, paying larger dividends, in proportion to investment, than any industrial establishment in this part of the state, dividing half a million dollars a year among a small group of men, most of them already multimillionaires, the answer must inevitably have been, "Let us keep our subscriptions for the many, many places where they will be more needed." But because the employing company was a newspaper publisher which gave it access to general public attention, and because the other papers through chivalry refrained from comment, the bid for sympathy was worked to the limit, and a golden harvest garnered—all of it good money saved for the enormous dividends of the succeeding year; for had the public not subscribed, the paper must, in common decency, have made up the sum from its own exchequer.

The original prosperity of The Times was founded on the self-evident propositions that employers have more money to spend than employees, and that there is more profit in the favor of the powerful than in the gratitude of the weak. Strict adherence to these canny principles had given it high standing with all captains of industry, with big business, the men higher up, the get-rich-quicklies and the free spenders of the great white way of commerce. Its status was that of the hired bully and swashbuckler, who is entitled to protection whenever he gets into trouble. The Times demanded that its patrons make good its loss, and the advertising flowed in, as it always has and always will, so long as the world of business is knit together with selfishness and greed. The day may come when the Los Angeles business community will discover that it is not to its advantage to pour its offerings into the jaws of a reactionary Moloch that stands for the ruin of industrial independence and fair dealing; but it has not come yet. Under such conditions the destruction of The Times' plant, which the public naturally and reasonably connected up with that paper's "fight" with the labor unions, was turned to immediate profit by increased levies on the Los Angeles advertisers.

It was easy enough to make the disaster subserve the other object of The Times' existence: to get even with its enemies. The affair could be used to feed fat a thousand ancient grudges. Anyone who through independence and honesty in politics, or for any business or personal reason, had incurred the enmity of The Times was likely to be charged directly or by innuendo, by name or by recognized nickname, with responsibility for the dynamite outrage. As an example of how far the practice is carried, we may instance an editorial in The Times of March 18th in which the Governor of the State is called a "Red," and it is asserted that the criticisms of The Times uttered in his speech in Los Angeles early in August were the cause of the dynamiting of that paper on the first day of October. An outgiving of that nature will not surprise the people of Los Angeles. They are—we are sorry to record it—long since calloused to the heaping of insults by this paper on honest and patriotic men, who do not chance to be included in the narrow circle of its flunkey admirations. But this must be something of a shock to people in other parts of the State.

The speech of Hiram Johnson to which The Times refers in this frenzied fashion was made several days before the primaries of August 16th. It contains only a few sentences of [illegible] to The Times, or rather to the [illegible] of that paper, but they were [illegible] were alive with the [illegible] 311 E 4th St., Los [illegible]ld be difficult to [illegible]mplete denunciat[illegible]n terms of decent speech, than was conveyed in the candidate's utterance, and many of his supporters feared the effect on the vote so soon to be taken. It seemed incredible that such a violent attack could be made by an outsider on a man who had been for over thirty years one of the most prominent figures in the city without some resentment being shown. The Times was quick to see the point, and called on all its friends to come to the rescue. But the answer of the voters was unmistakable. Hiram Johnson had more votes than all his party opponents put together, and The Times' candidate cut a miserable figure. This was not done by the outraged working people, for they had their own candidate. The verdict came from the Republican party at a whole. Thus when that paper accuses Johnson of causing the dynamite disaster, it is attempting to indict a great majority of the voters of the very city where it lives and makes its money.

The Times' drafts on the sympathy of the people will not be honored. The account is already badly overdrawn.

C. D. W.

✣ ✣ ✣

WHEN GOVERNMENT MUST BE TRUSTED

There are times and occasions when every people must trust their government without being made familiar with all the reasons why. The present is such a time and the troubles in Mexico afford such an occasion. If the President, when he ordered an army corps to the border, knew no more of the business in hand than The People knew, then such mobilization of troops was a fiasco and a folly, but he probably did know more, a very great deal more. To presume otherwise is to presume the President of the United States to be a blundering ass and such a presumption is too violent to be entertained without compulsion. It is possible, but unlikely, that Japan figures behind the scenes. It is likely, but uncertain, that European nations made representations that needful things be done to protect foreign interests peradventure. The President knows. We do not. It is the part of patriotism to give him full benefit of any doubt we find lurking in our minds. One fact, though, we may put into our pipe to smoke on until further notice: We shall not, as a nation, if the crisis comes, be able to uphold the Monroe doctrine and non-intervention, too.

✣ ✣ ✣

RECIPROCITY AND WOOL

We are for reciprocity with Canada, even if it does pinch the farmers near the border a little, and we are for having the tariff considered in all its details by a board of experts; but there is something in the President's program of reciprocity first, and maybe woolen goods and other things later, when the board gets around to it, that distinctly fails to make a hit with us; and if the Democrats choose to make out their own program on these matters, it will cause us no particular grief.

It is not strange that the Insurgents of the Middle West, who are largely of the farming class, regard this arrangement as a "frame-up." "You have asked for a reduction of the tariff," says the President, "so we will begin by cutting off the tariff on food products, and perhaps trimming your profits a bit." "But why not also reduce the tariff on woolen goods?" cries the farmer. "You said yourself, Mr. President, that the Payne-Aldrich schedule was indefensible." "Because," he replies, "the Tariff Board has not yet reported on that. Maybe it will by the regular session. Remember that you Insurgents all wanted the Tariff Board," and then he chuckles.

Very handsome little trap, you see. Plenty of entrance and no exit.

Now it all depends upon whether you regard the tariff as a heaven-born scheme for making the farmer and the laboring man rich beyond the dreams of avarice, or as a distinctly human affair full of blowholes and special-interest tricks, that helps some when it is right, and is robbery and oppression when it is wrong. When a man is on trial he is innocent until he is proven guilty, but when a tax is on trial it is guilty until it is proven innocent. In other words no tax has a right to exist, unless its need can be shown. Prima facie evidence is all against the woolen tax, enough to justify Congress to act without waiting for any report from the Tariff Board. If later that body can make a case for the present high tariff, and prove that it is necessary for every American who wishes to wear a woolen undershirt to pay two prices for it in order that a few factory-owners in New England may become multimillionaires, well and good. We shall be glad to listen to the evidence. In the meantime, heraus mit 'im! Give the farmer who is worried about reciprocity some kind of a run for his money. If he must surrender some of his profit on pork, at least let him have a warmer overcoat next winter. Not the winter of 1914 or '15 but next winter.

C. D. W.

✣ ✣ ✣

SOMETHING BETTER THAN SOCIALISM

A correspondent desires to know what, in the opinion of The California Outlook, would be better than socialism. We can answer harder questions than that. What we have now, with all its faults, is probably preferable to what the Socialists would be able to give us, and, with a land tax that would take so much of the unearned increment as may be needed for the good of all, and such inheritance taxes as would insure the certain return to the common fund of heaped up wealth torn by death from the arms of grabbers, it would be much better than socialism, for socialism implies a far-reaching regulation of society, whereas the greatest good and the highest development are to be looked for from a social order that is free, competitive and fluid. This is not saying that all forms of collective effort are to be shunned, but only that there is a broad distinction between socialistic and socialism. We shall borrow from the first with liberality but we shall not "go the whole hog," no, not on the nation's life.

✣ ✣ ✣

THE DEMORALIZING TIP

Some five or six years ago a large hotel was started in London with the announcement that none of its employees would be allowed to accept tips. Nobody took the matter very seriously except the owner of the hotel. He was in earnest, it seems, and, in course of time, people found it out. No doubt the establishment had other lines of merit; the "no-tipping" idea was in the nature of an extra.

Now we are informed by the London newspaper correspondents that this hotel has achieved such a marked success that its owner has purchased a large site in one of the best districts of the great metropolis where he proposes to erect an enormous new hotel to be run on the same no-tipping plan.

Other things being equal, or anywhere near equal, the no-tipping establishment will beat out all its rivals every time, and that not because people are mean and parsimonious, or care very much for the amount of money involved, but because they hate to be embarrassed and annoyed by the twists and turns of the tipping game, and because, moreover, they prefer to be served by people that maintain their self-respect. Take away a man's self-respect and you have destroyed something of great value in his character, and everybody who comes in contact with him sooner or later feels the lack.

There are three parties to the tip: the employer, the employee and the public. The public generally blames the employee for the existence of this nuisance, and the employer blames the public. The real blame lies with the employer himself. He will assure you that he would rather not have his people take tips, and he may even put up a sign to that effect, but it is usually all a bluff. He knows that if he actually does cut off tips he must pay his people higher wages. Moreover, he has a theory that the public prefers the tip system, because a few of the big spenders, the ostentatious and selfish class, tell him so. Any proprietor that honestly desires to put an end to the practice can do it, not instantly, perhaps, but in a reasonable space of time. He must make his people understand he is in earnest, and must pay them full wages. He must warn his customers of his policy. Then he must unhesitatingly discharge those who violate the rule, and perhaps even request a customer to go elsewhere. A very little of that will do the business, and in most cases the proprietor will make money faster under this system. But few have the courage to go against custom.

Twenty years ago the tipping practice did not interfere seriously with the comfort of travel in this country; but of late, with the amazing increase in the number of the hoggish rich, the man of moderate means who ventures from home will do well to put his sensibilities away in cold storage before he starts. A new breed of servitors has come into existence, fierce, ravenous, lost to all sense of decency, and obedient to no law but that of, How much? This evil is spreading to classes that formerly scorned gratuities, and no one knows any longer where the line is to be drawn. The business is being "run into the ground" with preposterous excesses of all kinds—and all this to the advantage of only one class, the insolent and selfish rich.

The London hotel keeper has pointed the way out. How long will it be before the movement becomes general?

The railroads should also regard Canadian reciprocity with alarm. It would mean lots more freight to haul, and they are already carrying freight at a loss.—Kansas City Star.

Shortage of half a billion gallons of wine does not mean that France will not be able to supply her customers. It only means that California must furnish more wine and France more labels.—Wall Street Journal.

